ON this Day the Competentes, or Candidates of Baptiſm publickly rehearſed the Creed before the Biſhop or Presbyters in the Church, as we learn from the Council of Laodicea [g], which fixes this Rehearſal to the Fifth Day of the Great Week; and from Theodorus Lector [h], who ſays, Timotheus Biſhop of Conſtantinople was the firſt that ordered the Creed to be recited in every Church-Aſſembly, which before was uſed to be repeated only once a Year by the Catechumens on the Paraſceue, or Preparation to our SAVIOUR's Paſſion, when the Biſhop was wont to catechize them.

ON this Day it was cuſtomary for Servants to receive the Communion, as we find in Joannes Moſchus [i], who tells us a remarkable Story of one who laid up the Euchariſt in his Cheſt, which he had brought Home from Church with him τῇ ἁγίᾳ καὶ μεγάλῃ πέμπτῃ, on on this Great and Holy Fifth Day of the Paſſion-Week; under which Name we find it alſo in the Title of one of Chryſoſtom's Sermons upon this Day [k], τῇ ἁγίᾳ καὶ μεγάλῃ πεμπτῇ. The Modern Ritualiſts call it Maundy-Thurſday, Dies Mandati, becauſe on this Day our SAVIOUR waſhed his Diſciples Feet, and gave them Commandment to follow [l] his Example; or becauſe He inſtituted the Sacrament of his Supper upon this Day, commanding his Disciples to do the same in Remembrance of him, as others [m] expound it. But the Pope's Custom of Excommunicating all People and Princes, that are Enemies to the Roman Church, on this Day; and among the rest the King of [n] Spain for invading the Rights of the Church (whom he absolves again without asking any Pardon on Good-Friday;) as it is a grand Ridicule and Mock of Church-Discipline, so it is without all Foundation in the Practice of the Ancient Church.

SECT. 31. Of the Passion-Day, or the Pasch of our LORD'S Crucifixion.

SOME with greater Probability suppose, that such Publick Penitents, as had compleated their Penance for One, Two, Three Years or more, the Lent preceding; (For the Years of Penance were usually reckoned from Easter to Easter;) were absolved on this Day. At least it is certain they were reconciled either this or the Day following. For St. Ambrose [o] says very expressly, That the Day of Relaxation of Penance in the Church, was the Day on which our LORD gave himself for us. Which must mean either the Day on which he was betrayed by Judas; or the Day of his Passion, when He offered himself a Sacrifice for the Sins of Mankind; that is the Parasceue, or Good-Friday, or the Pasch, as it is often called, meaning the Pasch of the Cross, πάσχα σωτήσιμον, in Opposition to the πάσχα ἀναστάσιμον, or Pasch of the Resurrection. Nor was it only particular Absolutions that were granted to Publick Penitents on this Day of the Passion, but a general Absolution or Indulgence was proclaimed to all the People, observing the Day with Fasting, Prayers, and true Contrition or Compunction. As we find in the Fourth Council of Toledo, which makes a Complaint, That in some of the Spanish Churches the Day of the LORD's Passion was not regularly observed: For the Church Doors were shut up, and no Divine Service performed: Wherefore they order [p], that the Mystery of the Cross should be preached on this Day, and that all the People should wait for the Indulgence or Absolution, that being cleansed by the Compunction of Repentance and Remission of Sins, they might worthily celebrate the Venerable Feast of the LORD's Resurrection, and come pure and clean to partake of the Sacrament of his Body and Blood. They farther condemn [q] such as ended their Fast on this Day at the Ninth Hour, and order, That all, except little Children, Old Men, and the Sick, should spend the whole Day in Abstinence and Mourning, and not give over their Fast, ante peractas Indulgentiæ preces, before the Prayers of Absolution were ended. Whence it may be inferred, that this Absolution was at the Close of the Publick Service of this Day, which whoever did not attend, was to be denied the Communion on Easter-Day, because, as the Canon words it, he paid not a due Respect by Abstinence to the Passion of his LORD. Indeed this Day, as we have seen before, was one of those Two great Days which all Christians in general thought themselves obliged strictly to observe: Even they who kept no other Lent, religiously observed these, as the Days on which the Bridegroom was taken from them: And that seems to be the Reason why this Canon treats those with a little more Severity who neglected the Day of our SAVIOUR's Passion, because they contemned the general Custom and Observation of Christians.

SECT. 32. Of the Saturday or Great Sabbath before Easter.

THE Saturday or Sabbath in this Week was commonly known by the Name of the Great Sabbath [r]; as we find it termed in Chrysostom, and others. It had many Peculiarities belonging to it. For this was the only Sabbath throughout the Year that the Greek Churches and some of the Western kept as a Fast. All other Sabbaths even in Lent were observed as Festivals together with the Lord's-Day, as has been shewed several Times before. But this Great Sabbath was observed as a most solemn Fast, which some joyned with the Fast of the preceding Day, and made them both but one continued Fast of Superposition; and they who could not thus joyn both Days together without some Refreshment, yet observed the Saturday with great Strictness, holding out their Fast till after Midnight or Cock-crowing in the Morning. Thus we find it ordered in the Constitutions [s] conformable to the Practice of the Church: Let as many as are able, fast the Friday and the Sabbath throughout, eating nothing till Cock-crowing in the Morning: But if any cannot τὰς δύο συνάπτειν ἐμοῦ, joyn both Days together in one continued Fast, let him however keep the Sabbath a Fast: For the LORD speaking of himself, said, When the Bridegroom shall be taken away from them, in those Days shall they fast. So this Day was kept an universal Fast over the whole Church: And they continued it not only till Evening, but till Cock-crowing in the Morning, which was the supposed Time of our SAVIOUR's Resurrection. The preceding Time of the Night was spent in a Vigil or Pernoctation, when they assembled together to perform all Parts of of Divine Service, Pſalmody, and Reading the Scripture, the Law, the Prophets, and the Goſpel, Praying, and Preaching, and Baptizing ſuch of their Catechumens as preſented themſelves to Baptiſm: All which Acts are particularly mentioned by the Author of the Conſtitutions [t] in his Deſcription of the Paſchal Vigil. The Account of the ſeveral Vigils obſerved in the Church has been given in a former Book [*]: Here I only take Notice of this one, which is the moſt famous of all others, between the Great Sabbath and Eaſter-Day. Of which there is frequent mention made in the ancient Writers, Chryſoſtom [u], Epiphanius [x], Palladius [y], Gregory Nyſſen [z], and many others. Particularly Lactantius and St. Jerom tell us, they obſerved it upon a double Account. This is the Night, ſays Lactantius [a] which we obſerve with a Pernoctation or Watching all the Night for the Advent of our KING and GOD: Of which Night there is a Twofold Reaſon to be given, becauſe on this Night our LORD was raiſed to Life again after his Paſſion; and in the ſame He is expected to return to receive the Kingdom of this World, that is, to come to Judgment. St. Jerom [b] ſays, It was a Tradition among the Jews, That CHRIST would come at Midnight, as he did upon the Egyptians at the Time of the Paſſover: And thence, he thinks, the Apoſtolical Cuſtom came, not to diſmiſs the People on the Paſchal Vigil before Midnight, expecting the Coming of CHRIST: After which Time, preſuming upon Security, they kept the Day a Feſtival. Euſebius [c] ſays, in the Time of Conſtantine this Vigil was kept with great Pomp: For he ſet up lofty Pillars of Wax to burn as Torches all over the City, and Lamps burning in all Places, ſo that the Night ſeemed to out-ſhine the Sun at Noonday. Nazianzen alſo [d] ſpeaks of this Cuſtom of ſetting up Lamps and Torches both in the Churches and their own private Houſes: Which, he ſays, they did as a Prodromus or Fore-runner of that great Light the Sun of Righteouſneſs ariſing on the World on Eaſter-Day. Tertullian intimates, That this Vigil was ſolemnly kept in his Time by all Sorts of People, by Women as well as Men: For writing againſt the Marriage of Chriſtian Women with Heathens, among other Arguments he puts this Queſtion [e] to them, to diſſuade them from ſuch dangerous Engagements: What Unbelieving Husband will be content to let his Wife be abſent from him all Night at the Celebration of the Paſchal Vigil? And it is plain from Socrates, that the Sectaries as well as the Catholicks had this Night in great Veneration: For it was upon one of theſe Paſchal Vigils [f], that the Sabbatians, who were a Subdiviſion of the Novatian Schiſmaticks, were ſeized with a Panick Terror in the Night, that flying in a ſtrange Confuſion through a ſtrait Paſſage from the Place where they were met, they preſſed ſo hard upon one another, that Threeſcore and Ten of them were trodden to Death.

THIS Night was famous above all others for Baptizing of Catechumens; as we learn not only from the general Account given of the ancient Time of Baptizing, as fixed chiefly to the Paſchal Solemnity; but more particularly from thoſe ſad Relations made by Chryſoſtom [g], and Palladius [h] of the Invaſion of Chryſoſtom's Church, and the Aſſaults made upon him, and his Clergy and People, as they were aſſembled together this Night to keep the Paſchal Vigil, and baptize the Catechumens. Where, among other grievous Acts of Hoſtility, they take Notice of this one unparallel'd Inſtance of indecent Cruelty, that the Enemy forced the Women-Catechumens, who were diveſted in order to Baptiſm, to fly away naked, and ſlew many of them in the very Baptiſteries, making the Holy Fonts ſwim with Blood. And yet in this one Night, notwithſtanding the Tumult, Three Thouſand Perſons were baptized; as is particularly noted by Palladius: From whence it is eaſy to conclude, that this Night was a celebrated Time of Baptiſm; and that as the Penitents were reſtored the Day before to the Communion, which they had loſt, ſo on this Day the Catechumens were made complete Chriſtians, and admitted to the Communion which they never had before, and both in order to participate of the Holy Euchariſt on Eaſter-Day. So we have ſeen the whole Practice of the Church from firſt to laſt in relation to the Obſervation of Lent, or the firſt great Anniverſary-Faſt of Forty Days.

CHAP. II.

Of the Faſts of the Four Seaſons; Of Monthly Faſts, and the Original of Ember-Weeks and Rogation-Days.

SECT. 1. The Faſt of March, or the firſt Month, the ſame with the Lent-Faſt.

THE next Anniverſary Faſting-Days were thoſe which were called Jejunia quatuor Temporum, The Faſts of the Four Seaſons of the Year. Theſe were called the Faſts of the Firſt, Fourth, Seventh and Tenth Months, or the Faſts of the Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter, obſerved in March, June, September and December, which were accounted the Beginning of the Four ſeveral Seaſons of the Year. Theſe were at firſt deſigned, not to be the Seaſons of Ordination, but to beg a Bleſſing of GOD upon the ſeveral Seaſons of the Year, or to return Thanks for the Benefits received in each of them, or to exerciſe and purify both Body and Soul in a more particular Manner at the Return of theſe certain Terms of ſtricter Diſcipline and more extraordinary Devotion. One of the firſt that ſpeaks formally of theſe Faſts under the Name and Number of the Four Seaſons, is Pope Leo in his Sermons about the Year 450, in one of which he thus recounts them: The Eccleſiaſtical Faſts are ſo diſtributed through the whole Year, that there is a Law of Abſtinence affixed to all the Four [a] Seaſons. For we keep the Spring-Faſt in Lent, the Summer-Faſt in Pentecoſt, the Autumnal-Faſt in the Seventh Month, and the Winter-Faſt in the Tenth Month. In another Place [b] he ſays, Theſe Faſts are inceſſantly renewed with the Courſe of Days and Times, that the Medicinal Power of them may put us in mind of our Infirmities. Philaſtrius [c] alſo ſpeaks of Four Noted Annual Faſts kept by the Church in the Courſe of the Year: But inſtead of the Faſt of September he puts the Faſt of Epiphany, reckoning them in this Order: The Church celebrates Four Faſts in in the Year; the Firſt before the Nativity, the Second before the Paſch, the Third before Epiphany, and the Fourth in Pentecoſt. So that theſe Four Faſts were not exactly the ſame in the Time of Philaſtrius, that they were in the Time of Pope Leo. The Spring-Faſt, or the Faſt before Eaſter is evidently the Lent-Faſt, of which we have ſpoken before: For as yet there was no particular Week in Lent ſet aſide for Ordinations, to make a diſtinct Faſt of it, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

SECT. 2. The Faſt of Pentecoſt.

THE Faſt of Pentecoſt, which Leo calls the Summer-Faſt, is mentioned alſo by Athanaſius: For in his Apology to Conſtantius [d] he ſays, The People in the Week after the Holy Pentecoſt, having finiſhed their Faſt, went to pray in the Cemetery or Churchyard. The Council of Girone in Spain [e] fixes this to the Week after Pentecoſt, ſo that after the Solemnity of that Feſtival was over, a Three Days Faſt was to be kept on Thurſday, Friday and Saturday, in the Week immediately following. The Second Council of Tours [f] appoints the whole Week after Pentecoſt to be kept an exact Faſt by thoſe of the Monaſtick Life. But whether this was in the Week following Whitſunday, or the Week after that, appears not from thoſe Canons. Neither were theſe Faſts of the Four Seaſons ſo fixed to any certain Week, but that they ſometimes varied a Week or more in their Obſervation, as appears from the Council of Salegunſtade [g], which gives particular Directions how to order and accommodate theſe Variations. And in one of our Engliſh Councils held at Oxford [h] under Stephen Langton, An. 1222, which ſettles the Faſts of the Four Seaſons, it is intimated, That the Faſt of Pentecoſt was differently obſerved by many: For ſome kept it in the Week after the Litanies, or Rogation-Days, and others in the Week of Pentecoſt. Which ſhews, that there was no univerſal Rule or Tradition about this Faſt in the Church.

SECT. 3. The Faſt of the Seventh Month, or the Autumnal Faſt.

THE Faſt of the Seventh Month, or the Autumnal Faſt, is not ſo much as mentioned by Philaſtrius, nor any other Writer that I know of, before Pope Leo. But after him Gelaſius [i] ſpeaks of it as one of the Four ſolemn Times of Ordination, which were always accompanied with Faſting from the Time that they were firſt introduced into the Church: But this was not till after the Time of Pope Leo [k]: For though he often ſpeaks of the Faſt of September, or the Seventh Month, yet he never ſo much as intimates, that it was a ſtated Time of Ordination, but aſſigns other Reaſons for it, becauſe it was fit Men ſhould purge themſelves from Sin at the Return of every various Seaſon of the Year.

SECT. 4. The Advent or Nativity-Faſt, called the Faſt of December, or the Tenth Month.

THE Faſt of December, or the Tenth Month, by ſome called the Advent or Nativity-Faſt, is mentioned by Philaſtrius, as one of the Four ſolemn Faſts of the Church. This Faſt anciently was kept from the Feſtival of St. Martin till Chriſtmas-Day, Three Days in the Week, Mundays, Wedneſdays and Fridays, as we find in the firſt Council of Maſcon, which orders, That it ſhould be obſerved after the Manner of Lent, that the Oblation ſhould not be celebrated on [l] thoſe Days, and that the Canons ſhould be read at this Time, that no one might pretend Ignorance for the Non-Obſervance of them. the Second Council of Tours [m] appoints the Monks to faſt every Day during this Seaſon. But in the Councils of Salegunſtade [n] and Oxford [o], this Faſt is reduced to the Week immediately before Chriſtmas.

SECT. 5. The Faſt at Epiphany.

BESIDES theſe Faſts at the Four Seaſons, Philaſtrius mentions a Faſt before Epiphany, or rather, as has been obſerved before, put it in the Room of the Faſt of September. The Second Council of Tours [p] takes notice of this, and tells us, it was a Faſt of Three Days, and that it was appointed particularly at that Time in Oppoſition to the Heathen Feſtivals, which they were uſed to obſerve with a great deal of Corruption, and licentious Revellings for Three Days together: Which Three Days therefore the Fathers rather choſe to make Days of Abſtinence and private Litanies, to reſtrain the People from running into the extravagant Riots and Exceſſes of the Heathen. So that New-year's-Day, or Circumciſion, was rather kept as a Faſt, than a Feſtival, for ſeveral Ages in the Church. For it appears from the foreſaid Council, that the Kalends of January was included in the Three Days which was called the Epiphany-Faſt.

SECT. 6. Of Monthly Faſts.

IN ſome Places they had alſo Monthly Faſts throughout the Year, except in the Two Months of July and Auguſt. Thus it was in Spain, by an Order of the Council of Eliberis, which orders [q], That extraordinary Faſts ſhould be celebrated every Month, except thoſe Two, becauſe of the Sickneſs of the Seaſon. That theſe were ſomething more than the Ordinary Faſts of Wedneſday and Friday, ſeems evident from the Name that is given them of Faſts of Superpoſition, which in this Place denotes not the Length of the Faſt, but the Newneſs of the Impoſition, as Albaſpinæus obſerves upon the Place; though what Sort of Faſts they were is not very eaſy to determine. If I may be allowed to conjecture in an obſcure Matter, I ſhould conclude this Superpoſition of Faſts, was the Addition of Monday to Wedneſday and Friday, becauſe we find it ſo in one of the French [r] Councils, which ordering the Manner of Faſting in ſeveral Months of the Year for thoſe of the Aſcetick Life, appoints them to faſt three times a Week, viz. on Monday, Wedneſday and Friday, from Pentecoſt till Auguſt; and ſo again for the Months of September, October and November. But Auguſt is excepted, becauſe in this Month every Day almoſt was celebrated as the Feſtival of ſome Martyr [s], with the Manication or Morning-Service proper to a Feſtival. Beſides that, the Council of Eliberis itſelf, in another Canon, [t] introducing the Saturday Faſt into Spain, which before was uſed to be a Feſtival, for that that Reaſon calls it a Faſt of Superpoſition, becauſe it was newly taken into Uſe in Spain, after the Example of the Church of Rome. But if this Conjecture about Monthly and Superpoſitory Faſts be not ſatisfactory, every Reader is at Liberty to judge for himſelf upon better Light and Information.

SECT. 7. The Original of the Four Ember-Weeks, or Ordination-Faſts.

SOME think the Ember-Weeks, or Ordination-Faſts, were the ſame with the Faſts of the Four Seaſons, and therefore commonly take it for granted, that what proves the one, proves the other alſo. But I have formerly had Occaſion to ſhew [*], That for ſeveral Ages there were no certain Times of Ordination ſettled by the Church, but that She ordained Perſons to all Offices and Degrees at any Time, as the Neceſſity of Affairs required. And when the Faſts of the Four Seaſons were firſt inſtituted, they were appointed for other Ends, and not upon the Account of Ordinations: Becauſe the Ordinations in the Church of Rome were ſtill performed in December only, after the Faſts of the Four Seaſons were in Uſe, till Simplicius about the Year 467, added February to December. This is noted by Amalarius Fortunatus [u], as I have ſhewed before: And Mr. Wharton tells us, He found the ſame Remark made by Ivo Carnotenſis in a Manuſcript Book of his Eccleſiaſtical Offices. The Council of Ments in the Time of Charles the Great, mentions the Faſts of the Four Seaſons [y], and fixes them to the firſt Week in March, the ſecond Week in June, the third Week in September, and the Week in December that comes immediately before Chriſtmas-Day: But yet ſays nothing of their being Ember-Weeks, or the Faſts of Ordination. And ſome think Gregory VII, was the firſt that ordered the Ordination-Faſts, and the Faſts of the Four Seaſons, to concurr exactly together; before which Time, as the Seaſons of Ordination were arbitrary and moveable, ſo were the Faſts that depended on them, which were always of Uſe in the Church, though not always fix'd to Four certain Seaſons.

SECT. 8. The Original of the Rogation-Faſt.

ABOUT the Middle of the Fifth Century there was a New Faſt begun in France, by Mamercus Biſhop of Vienna under the Name of the Litany or Rogation-Days, which were the Three Days immediately before Aſcenſion-Day in the Middle of Pentecoſt. The affixing of a Faſt to theſe Days was altogether New, becauſe heretofore the whole Fifty Days of Pentecoſt were one entire Feſtival, and all Faſting and Kneeling were prohibited at this Time, as has been ſhewed [*] in the laſt Book. Supplications or Litanies were in Uſe before upon extraordinary Occaſions, but Mamercus was the firſt that fixed them to theſe Days: And many Churches in the Weſt followed his Example, as Sidonius Apollinaris [z] informs us. But the Spaniſh Churches choſe rather to ſtick by the old Cuſtom of keeping Pentecoſt an entire Feſtival: And therefore the Council of Girone [a] ordered that this Faſt of the Rogation-Days ſhould rather be kept in the Week after Pentecoſt; and appointed another ſuch Litany or Rogation-Faſt to be kept on the Kalends or the firſt of November, which is now become the Feſtival of all Saints, transferred from Trinity-Sunday. The Fifth and Sixth Councils of Toledo [b] appointed another Litany-Faſt to be kept on the Ides or Thirteenth Day of December. And the Seventeenth Council of Toledo, An. 694. made a more General Decree [c], That ſuch Litanies or Rogations ſhould be uſed in every Month throughout the Year. And under this Head of Monthly Faſts, we may conclude that the Rogation-Faſt of Pentecoſt, though not received at firſt, might perhaps come at laſt to be admitted in the Spaniſh Churches: Which yet is not indiſputably certain, becauſe Walafridus Strabo, who lived a whole Age after this Council, obſerves of them [d], that they refuſed to keep any Faſt in Pentecoſt, but put it off till afterwards, becauſe it is written, The Children of the Bride-chamber cannot faſt, ſo long as the Bridegroom is with them. But whether he made this Obſervation of the Spaniſh Church, as it was in his own Time, or as it was in former Times, when the Council of Girone forbad all Faſting in Pentecoſt, is a little doubtful: And therefore I content myſelf with bare hinting the Thing [*] here, and leave it as a Matter under Diſpute, that may admit of farther Enquiry. For the Greek Church, the Thing ſeems more unconteſted, that they never had any Rogation-Faſt in the Time of Pentecoſt. For beſides the Silence of all the ancient Greek Writers about it, Leo Allatius, who was originally a Greek, aſſures us [e], that the preſent Greek Church knows nothing of the three Rogation-Days before Aſcenſion; neither neither have they any ſtated Faſts between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, no not ſo much as the Half-Faſts of Wedneſdays and Fridays, which were obſerved as Stationary Days in all other Parts of the Year. And both he and Gretſer [f] reprove thoſe, who aſcribe the Obſervation of the Rogation-Faſt to them, upon a miſtaken Ground, as if the Word Διακαινήσιμος, which ſignifies the Week after Eaſter, or the Week of Renovation, was to be read, Διακενίσιμος, the Week of Maceration or Faſting, ſuppoſing it to be the Week of the Rogation-Faſt, when indeed there never was any ſuch Faſt in Uſe among them. So that as this Faſt was of no long ſtanding in the Weſtern Church, nor univerſally received there; ſo it is plain, the Eaſtern Church knew nothing of it, but always kept Pentecoſt an entire Feſtival, according to the ancient and general Rule of the Church.

CHAP. III.

Of the Weekly Faſts of Wedneſdays and Fridays, or the Stationary Days of the Ancient Church.

SECT. 1. The Original of theſe Faſts.

THUS far we have conſidered the Annual-Faſts of the Ancient Church, which were kept at their ſtated Times in the Revolution of every Year. Beſide theſe they had their Weekly-Faſts on Wedneſdays and Fridays, called the Stationary Days, and Half-Faſts, and Faſts of the Fourth and Sixth Days of the Week, by the Latins Feria Quarta & Sexta, and by the Greeks Τετὰς and Παρασκευὴ. Theſe are certainly as ancient as the Time of Clemens Alexandrinus and Tertullian. For Clemens [a] deſcribing his Gnoſtick, or Perfect Chriſtian, ſays, He underſtands the Myſtery of the Faſts of the Fourth and Sixth Days, which are called by the Names of Mercury and Venus among the Gentiles. He therefore faſts all his Life from Covetouſneſs and Luſt; meaning, that thoſe were the peculiar Vices of Mercury and Venus among the Heathen. Not long after Tertullian [b] diſputing againſt ſome who were againſt all Religious Obſervation of Times and Seaſons, becauſe of thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Gal. iv. 10. Ye obſerve Days and Months, and Times and Years: He thus refutes them from the Practice and Obſervation of the whole Church: If the Apoſtle has wholly cancelled all Obſervation of Times and Days, and Months and Years, why do we celebrate the Paſch in its Annual Return and Revolution? Why do we ſpend the Fifty Days after in perpetual Joy? Why do we ſet apart the Fourth and Sixth Days of the Week for our Stations, and Paraſceue, or Friday, for our Faſts? In like manner Origen, We have the Forty Days of Lent [c] conſecrated to Faſting: We have the Fourth and Sixth Days of the Week, on which we obſerve our ſolemn Faſts: And Victorinus [d] the Martyr, who lived in the latter End of the Third Century, ſpeaks of both theſe Days as religiouſly obſerved with Faſting, either till Nine a-Clock, that is, Three in the Afternoon, or till Evening, or by a Superpoſition (as they called it) to the next Day. And he particularly tells us, they obſerved Friday as a Stationary Day, becauſe it was the Paſſion of our Lord JESUS CHRIST. Which is alſo noted by Peter Biſhop of Alexandria, who lived in the ſame Age, and died a Martyr a little after in the Diocletian Perſecution. For thus he ſpeaks [e] in one of his Canons: Let no one blame us for obſerving the Fourth Day of the Week, and the Paraſceue, or Day of Preparation, viz. Friday or the Sixth Day, on which Days we have a Rational Appointment to faſt, from ancient Tradition: On the Fourth, becauſe the Jews conſpired to betray our LORD; and on the Preparation, or Sixth Day, becauſe then our LORD ſuffered for us.

of the Apoſtolical Canons [k] and Conſtitutions: But thoſe already alledged are moſt pertinent to ſhew the Antiquity of the Obſervation. Some derive the Original of theſe Faſts from Apoſtolical Inſtitution. So Epiphanius and the Author of the Conſtitutions. Which, as a Learned Perſon rightly obſerves [l], is a good Argument of their Antiquity, ſeeing thoſe Authors could derive them from no other Fountain but Apoſtolical Inſtitution. However St. Auſtin does not carry the Matter ſo high, but rather accounts them an Appointment of the Church upon Reaſons taken out of the Goſpel. This Reaſon, ſays he [m], may be given why the Church faſts chiefly on the Fourth and Sixth Days of the Week, becauſe it appears upon conſidering the Goſpel, that on the Fourth Day, which we commonly call Feria Quarta, the Jews took Counſel to kill our LORD: And on the Sixth Day our LORD ſuffered: For which Reaſon the Sixth Day is rightly appointed a Faſt. Peter Biſhop of Alexandria [n] aſſigns the ſame Reaſon for the Obſervation of theſe Faſts, and ſo does the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, and Victorinus Martyr in the Paſſages already cited. So that whatever Original theſe Faſts had in Point of Time, the Ancients ſeem generally to agree in the Reaſon of their Inſtitution, that they were made Faſts in Regard to our SAVIOUR's being betrayed and crucified on theſe Days, which the Churches thought proper to be kept in perpetual Remembrance by the Return of a Weekly Obſervation.

SECT. 3. How they differed from the Lent-Faſt and all others in Point of Duration.

BUT we are to note, That theſe Faſts being of continual Uſe every Week throughout the Year, except in the Fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, were not kept with that Rigour and Strictneſs which was obſerved in the Time of Lent. For the Lent-Faſt, as has been ſhewed before, commonly held till Evening every Day that it was obſerved: But theſe weekly Faſts ordinarily held no longer than Nine a Clock, that is, Three in the Afternoon, unleſs any choſe voluntarily to protract them till the Evening, or by a Superpoſition (as Victorinus Martyr phraſes it) extended them to the Morning of the next Day. And for this Reaſon they are commonly ſpoken of by the diſtinguiſhing Names of Stationes & Semijejunia, Stations and Half-Faſts; becauſe on theſe Days they continued the Church-Aſſemblies till Three a Clock in the Afternoon, and no longer; whereas a perfect and complete Faſt was never reckoned to end before Evening. Tertullian often ſpeaks of them under theſe covert Appellations, in many Places beſides that already cited. In one Place [o] he ſtiles them Stationum Semijejunia, the Half-Faſts of the Stations. In other Places he diſtinguiſhes Three Sorts of Abſtinence [p] under the Names of Jejunationes, Xerophagiæ, and Stationes. Where by Jejunationes he underſtands the Complete Faſts, which held till Evening; by Xerophagiæ, the abſtaining from Fleſh, and living upon dry Meats; and by Stationes, the Faſts till Nine a Clock. Which he therefore calls [q] Officia recuſati vel reciſi vel retardati pabuli; The Offices of wholly refuſing Meat till Evening; or retrenching it to live upon dry Meats, Bread and Water; or retarding the Meal till Nine a Clock. And again [r], The Bridling of the Appetite, per nullas interdum, vel feras, vel aridas eſcas, either by wholly abſtaining from Meat till Evening, or by deferring the Meal to a late Hour, that is, Three in the Afternoon, or by Abſtaining from Fleſh, and feeding only upon dry Meats, Bread and Water. In all which Diſtinctions any one may plainly diſcern, that the Stations and Half-Faſts are put to denote the Weekly Faſts of Wedneſday and Friday, which among the Catholicks held only till Nine a Clock, though Tertullian and the Montaniſts pleaded ſtifly for having them protracted till the Evening, urging a New Revelation and Authority from the HOLY GHOST for ſuch Impoſition. But the Church kept conſtant to her Ancient Practice, continuing theſe Faſts to Nine a Clock and no longer, as appears from the Account which Epiphanius gives of them in his own Time, ſpeaking of the Cuſtoms of the Catholick Church: On the Fourth [s] and Sixth Days of the Week, ſays he, we continue faſting to the Ninth Hour. And again, On the Fourth and Sixth Days throughout the whole Year, except in the Fifty Days of Pentecoſt, a Faſt is kept in the Holy Catholick Church to the Ninth Hour. And therefore Prudentius deſcribing the Paſſion of Fructuoſus a Spaniſh Biſhop and Martyr, brings him in thus [t] anſwering for himſelf, We keep Faſt to Day, I cannot drink: The Ninth Hour is not yet come. Where he plainly refers to the Hour of the Day, to which theſe Stationary Faſts continued. And in another Place

Place [u], It is now near the Ninth Hour, and the Sun begins to decline: Three Parts of the Day are ſcarce ended, and the Fourth remains. We now offer up our Prayers and receive the Euchariſt, and then we break off our Feſtival and go to our ordinary Refreſhment. In Which Words the Feſtival denotes one of theſe Stationary Days, on which they held Religious Aſſemblies in the Church, offered up their Devotions, received the Euchariſt, and then at Nine a Clock broke up the Aſſembly, and went to their ordinary Meal.

SECT. 4. With what Solemnity they were obſerved.

AND hence we learn, That theſe Stationary-Days were not only obſerved with Faſting, but with Religious Aſſemblies, and ſolemn Devotions in the Church, with receiving the Euchariſt, and the uſual Service of the Lord's-Day in all Particulars, ſave that the Sermon perhaps was omitted, which was never omitted on the Lord's-Day. St. Ambroſe exhorting his Hearers to obſerve the uſual Faſts of the Church, gives a like Account of the Service of theſe Stationary-Days. For the Faſt of Lent, he exhorts them to put off their Meal to the End [x] of the Day, becauſe that was the regular Way of obſerving Lent; but there were many other Days on which they were to come to Church preſently after Noon, and ſing their Hymns, and celebrate the Oblation or Euchariſt, and then their Faſt was ended. In which Words, as he plainly intimates, that the Faſt of the Stationary-Days was ſhorter than that of Lent, ſo he expreſsly affirms, That on thoſe Days they held Religious Aſſemblies at Church in the Afternoon, and there exerciſed themſelves in ſinging of Hymns and receiving the Euchariſt. Which is the ſame Account as is given by Tertullian, St. Baſil and Socrates (as I have had Occaſion to [*] note elſewhere) only with this Difference, that Socrates ſays, At Alexandria they had Sermons on theſe Days, and all the other Service of the Church, but not the Communion; in which that Church was ſingular and differing from the Practice of all other Churches.

SECT. 5. How the Catholicks and Montaniſts diſputed about the Obſervation of them.

HOWEVER, this Difference in this Matter, nor in any other Cuſtoms and Uſages of the like Nature, raiſed no Diſpute in the Catholick Church, becauſe the Things were indifferent in themſelves, and the Church always practiſed them with a juſt Regard to Chriſtian Liberty, having no expreſs Command for them in the Word of GOD. The Church never tied them upon Mens Conſcience as Divine Injunctions, but only as laudable, Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitutions, or at moſt, as Cuſtoms deſcending from ancient Tradition, and (in the Opinion of ſome) from Apoſtolical Practice. Therefore though the greateſt Perſons readily obſerved them (as Socrates obſerves [y] of Theodoſius Junior, That he faſted often, eſpecially upon Wedneſdays and Fridays, which he did with an earneſt Deſire ἄχρως χριστιανίζειν, to live up to the Height of Chriſtian Perfection): yet if Mens Infirmities or Imployments would not ſuffer them to go ſo far as others in the Obſervation of theſe Days, a juſt Allowance was made, and no Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, farther than Admonition, paſſed upon them. The Clergy indeed, Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, and all inferior Orders belonging to the Church, are by ſome Canons [z] obliged to obſerve theſe and other Faſts under Pain of Depoſition and Degradation: And this was thought not unreaſonable, becauſe they had ordinarily no other Imployment but aſſiduouſly to attend the Service of the Church. But even this would not ſatisfy the wild and Enthuſiaſtick Rigor of the Montaniſts. For they extended theſe Faſts from Morning till Evening, and would oblige all Men to obſerve them in the Extent, not as ordinary Uſages and Cuſtoms of the Church, but as neceſſary and indiſpenſable Divine Injunctions, lately given to the World by the New Inſpiration of the HOLY GHOST ſpeaking in their great Prophet Montanus, who as they pretended, had Authority from GOD to give more perfect Laws and Rules of Living to the Church, than any that were delivered by the Apoſtles. This was the Diſpute between them and the Church, as appears from Tertullian's Book, De Jejuniis adverſus Pſychicos, Of Faſting, againſt the Carnal, as he ſlanderouſly and contumelioufly terms the Catholicks, whilſt he wrote againſt the Church in Defence of the new Hypotheſis of the Montaniſts. The Diſpute was not, Whether the Church had an ordinary Power to appoint Days of Faſting proper for her own Edification. For this She always claimed and practiſed, as appears from this whole Account that has been given of her Faſts; and alſo from what Tertullian ſays concerning them: That the Biſhops of the Church [a], beſides the ſtated and ordinary Annual and Weekly Faſts, were wont ſometimes to enjoyn their reſpective Charges to obſerve certain Occaſional Faſts upon emergent Neceſſities of the Church. But the Montaniſts pretended to impoſe their new Faſts as Divine Laws, by ſpecial Direction of the HOLY GHOST. And therefore it was that Apollonius an ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writer, mentioned by Euſebius [b], charged Montanus as ſetting up for a Lawgiver in impoſing Faſts. Which impoſing Faſts by a Law, muſt import his preſuming to command Faſts as of neceſſary Obligation by Divine Precept, and as peculiar Dictates from the new pretended Inſpirations of the HOLY GHOST. For otherwiſe, the Biſhops of the Church would have been chargeable with the ſame Crime; becauſe it is certain they appointed Faſts, both Occaſional and Conſtant, yet with juſt Liberties of Human Laws, for the Benefit and Edification of the Church. And herein, I conceive, conſiſted the true Difference between them. The one had a juſt Authority to make proper Rules about Faſting for Order and Edification, and uſed their Authority only for that End, keeping within their proper Bounds: But the other had no Authority at all, being no Governors or Rulers of the Church, and yet pretended to a Divine Authority to impoſe neceſſary and univerſal Laws of Faſting upon the Church, as by the peculiar Impulſe and Direction of the HOLY GHOST. And upon this they made a Schiſm, and ſet up a new Communion and Conventicles in Oppoſition to the Church, becauſe She would not comply with their pretended Oracles and Inſpirations, which She knew proceeded only from the Spirit of Impoſture.

SECT. 6. How the Wedneſday-Faſt came to be changed to Saturday in the Weſtern Churches.

I HAVE but one Thing more to obſerve concerning theſe Weekly Faſts, which is, the Change that was made of one of them from Wedneſday to Saturday in the Weſtern Churches. In the Eaſtern Church, Saturday or the Sabbath was always obſerved as a Feſtival: And ſo ſome Learned Men think it was originally in the Weſtern Church alſo, as has been ſhewed [*] before in the laſt Book. However, it is certain, that about the Time of the Council of Eliberis, Saturday was made a Faſt in ſome of the Weſtern Churches. For that Council orders it to be obſerved as a Faſt [c] in the Spaniſh Churches. And St. Auſtin [d] acquaints us, That it was kept as a Faſt in his Time at Rome, and ſome other of the Weſtern and African Churches. So that in all theſe Places for ſome Time they kept Three Faſts in the Week by the Superpoſition of Saturday to the other Two. But in Proceſs of Time the Saturday-Faſt grew more into Repute than the Wedneſday, which by Degrees came to be neglected or omitted, till at laſt, as a Learned Perſon [e] has obſerved, in all Churches which embraced the Saturday-Faſt, Wedneſday was wholly laid aſide.

THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BOOK XXII.

Of the Marriage-Rites obſerved in the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

A ſhort Account of the Hereticks who condemned or vilified Marriage anciently, under Pretence of greater Purity and Perfection; and of ſuch alſo as gave Licence to Community of Wives and Fornication.

SECT. 1. Community of Wives firſt taught by Simon Magus.

BEFORE I enter upon the Hiſtory of the Churches Practice in relation to the Holy Offices of Matrimony, and the ſeveral Rites and Uſages obſerved in the Celebration thereof, it will not be amiſs to give a ſhort Account of thoſe Hereticks, who immediately upon the firſt Plantation of the Goſpel ſet themſelves to vilify and contemn Marriage, either by openly condemning it as a Thing unlawful under the Goſpel, upon Pretence that the Goſpel required Purity and Perfection; or by granting Licence for Community of Wives and promiſcuous Fornication. Though GOD had inſtituted Marriage as an honourable State in Man's Innocency; and our SAVIOUR had allowed it as ſuch, reducing it to its primitive Inſtitution; and the Apoſtle had ſaid, That Marriage was honourable in all, and the Bed undefiled: Yet, according to the Spirit's Prediction, there preſently aroſe ſome who departed from the Faith, giving heed to ſeducing Spirits and Doctrines of Devils, forbidding to marry; and others, who taught Men to commit Fornication with Licence and Impunity. This later Doctrine was immediately broached by Simon Magus the Arch-Heretick againſt the Faith. For, as St. Auſtin [a] informs [a] informs us, he taught the deteſtable Impurity of the promiſcuous Uſe of Women. Which is alſo ſignified by Epiphanius [b] and Irenæus, when they ſay, That Simon corrupted venerable Marriage by his Filthineſs in following his own Luſts with Helena his Strumpet. Theodoret [c] gives a more particular Account of his Impiety, telling us the Ground of his Doctrine, how he taught, That the Old Prophets were only the Servants of the Angels who made the World: Upon which Account he encouraged his Followers not to regard them, nor dread the Threatenings of the Law, but as Free, to do whatever they liſted: Becauſe they were to be ſaved not by good Works, but by Grace. And upon the Strength of this Principle, they who were of his Sect, gave themſelves up boldly without Reſtraint to all manner of Luſts and Intemperance, often practiſing Magical Inchantments and Sorcery, as Divine Myſteries, to bring about their amorous Deſigns. All which agrees very well with that ſhort Account which is given by Damaſcen [d] and the Author of the Predeſtinarian Hereſy, publiſhed by Sirmondus [e], who ſay, That Simon taught the promiſcuous Uſe of Women without Diſtinction; and that GOD regarded not Chaſtity, for as much as the World was not made by Him, but by Angels.

SECT. 2. Afterward by Saturnilus and the Nicolaitans, and many others.

ONE of the chief of Simon's Scholars was Saturnilus or Saturninus a Syrian, who confirmed Simon's Impurity, as St. Auſtin ſays [f], and that upon the very ſame Foundation, viz. That GOD did not regard the World, becauſe it was made by certain Angels without his Knowledge, or againſt his Will. Others ſay, he condemned Matrimony and Procreation of Children univerſally, and that he was the firſt that aſſerted openly that Marriage was a Doctrine and Work of the Devil. So Irenæus [g], Epiphanius [h], Theodoret [i], and others after them. Perhaps he might maintain both Opinions, equally injurious to lawful Matrimony. For it has been no unuſual Thing with Men that have ſtifly oppoſed Matrimony, to be more favourable to real Impurity and Fornication.

THE Nicolaitans are ſaid by all Writers to have trod in the Steps of Simon Magus in teaching the Liberty of Fornication. And this is ſuppoſed to be the Doctrine and Deeds of the Nicolaitans condemned in the Revelations. For it is certain there were ſome at that Time who taught Men to commit Fornication, as appears from the Reproof given to the Angel of the Church of Thyatira, Rev. ii. 20. Thou ſuffereſt that Woman Jezabel, who calleth herſelf a Propheteſs, to teach and to ſeduce my Servants to commit Fornication. Which makes ſome Learned Men think, that the Doctrine of Jezabel was the ſame with that of the Nicolaitans, and that they are but different Names of the ſame Perſons. For all Eccleſiaſtical Writers agree, that the Nicolaitans held this Doctrine. Irenæus [k], Tertullian [l], and Epiphanius [m], make Nicolaus, one of the Seven Deacons, to be the Author of it. But others excuſe him, and ſay, it was a Doctrine taken up by thoſe who pretended to be his Followers, grounded upon ſome miſtaken Words of his, which had no ſuch Meaning. So Clemens Alexandrinus [n] more than once apologizes for him: And in like manner Euſebius [o], Theodoret [p], and St. Auſtin [q]. But it is agreed on all Hands, that either he or his Diſciples brought in ſuch a Doctrine, which is condemned as the Doctrine and Deeds of the Nicolaitans in the Revelations. Afterwards it was propagated by Prodicus, the Author of the impure Sect of the Adamites, and by the Carpocratians and Gnoſticks, of whoſe Impurities I need not ſtand to make a particular Narration.

SECT. 3. Hence aroſe the Calumny of the Gentiles againſt the Chriſtians in general, that they practiſed Impurity in their Religious Aſſemblies.

I only obſerve, That from theſe vile Practices of the Sects under the Name of Chriſtians, aroſe that common Charge of the Heathens againſt the Chriſtians in general, That they practiſed Impurities in their Religious Aſſemblies. For ſome of theſe Sects not only made a common Practice of Fornication and Uncleanneſs, but adopted them into the Myſteries of their Religion. Clemens Alexandrinus [r] particularly charges it upon the Carpocratians; and Theodoret [s] upon the Adamites, the Followers of Prodicus, who was a Diſciple of Carpocrates. Epiphanius [t] and St. Auſtin add to theſe the Gnoſticks. Concerning whom St. Auſtin remarks, That as they went by different rent Names in different Parts of the World, ſome called them Borboritæ, Wallowers in the Mire [u], becauſe of their extreme Impurity, which they were ſaid to exerciſe in their Myſteries. And of Carpocrates, the Father of the Carpocratians, he remarks [x] how he taught all manner of Filthineſs and Invention of Evil, ſaying, that this was the only Way to eſcape and paſs ſafe by the Principalities and Powers of the Air, who were pleaſed therewith, that ſo Men might come to the higheſt Heaven. Now theſe were Doctrines of Devils indeed, ſcarce heard of among the Gentiles, that a Man ſhould commit Lewdneſs with his Father's Wife, and that Men ſhould do Evil that Good may come, and that the beſt Way to eſcape the Devil's Power, was to become Slaves to them, and do the Things that pleaſed them. Wherefore the Heathens knowing that ſuch Things, were taught and practiſed among Hereticks, who went under the Name of Chriſtians, made no Diſtinction, but threw the Charge upon all Chriſtians in general; and ſo by Reaſon of their pernicious Ways, (or as ſome Copies read it, 2 Pet. ii. 2. their Laſcivious Ways) the Way of Truth was evil ſpoken of.

SECT. 4. Theſe Doctrines being fetched from the very Dregs of Gentiliſm, and ſcandalous in the Eyes of ſober Heathens.

AND this was done ſo much the more plauſibly and with a better Grace, becauſe there were but few among the Heathen themſelves that allowed ſuch Practices. The Doctrines were fetched by Hereticks from the very Dregs of Gentiliſm, and they were ſcandalous in the Eyes of all Wiſe and Sober Heathens. Some of the more barbarous Nations indeed allowed of Community of Wives, and practiced promiſcuous Adultery. Solinus Polyhiſtor [y] affirms it of the Ethiopians called Garamantes; and Julius Cæſar [z] gives the ſame Account of the Britains: But in all the civilized Part of the World, throughout the whole Roman Empire, we meet with but one Inſtance of it in the Heliopolitans of Phœnicia, among whom by the Law of their Country, Socrates [a] ſays, All Women were common; ſo that no Child knew his own Father, becauſe no Diſtinction was made between Parents and Children. They alſo gave their Virgins to be defiled by all Strangers that came among them. And this Iniquity, eſtabliſhed by a Law, continued among them till Conſtantine abrogated it by a contrary Law, and builded them Churches, and ſettled a Biſhop and Clergy among them, by which means they were converted to Chriſtianity, and brought to the orderly Courſe of the Reſt of Mankind in this Particular, which was always reckoned ſcandalous among the very Gentiles. For Solinus deſcribing the Laſciviouſneſs of the Garamantes, which made that no Child could know his own Father, nor have any Reverence for him, ſays [b], Upon this Account the Garamantes were reckoned a Degenerate People among all Nations; and that not without Reaſon, becauſe they had deſtroyed the Diſcipline of Chaſtity, and by that wicked Cuſtom loſt all Knowledge of Succeſſion among them. 'Tis true indeed, Plato is generally accuſed by the Ancient Writers of the Church for ſaying, that a Community of Wives ought to be eſtabliſhed in his Common-wealth. The Charge is brought againſt him by Theophilus Biſhop of Antioch firſt of all [c]: Then by St. Jerom [d], Chryſoſtom [e], and Theodoret [f]. But if what Clemens Alexandrinus pleads in his Behalf be true, there muſt be ſome Miſtake in the Accuſation. For he ſays [g], Plato did not teach the Community of Wives after they married, but only that the World was like a Theatre, which is common to all Spectators: So Women, before they were married, were any Man's Right that could obtain them; but after they were married, they were every Man's Property, and no longer common. But be this Matter as it will, it is certain the Main Current of the Heathen Laws were againſt ſuch Practices; and therefore it was the more abominable for Hereticks to introduce them into the pureſt of all Religions, which was ſo much a Friend to lawful Marriage, and ſo great an Enemy to all Uncleanneſs.

SECT. 5. Marriage condemned as unlawful by Tatian and the Encratites.

BUT theſe were not the only Hereticks that infeſted the Chriſtian Church upon this Point. There were others who railed at Marriage as ſimply unlawful under the Goſpel, and would have all Men abſtain from it as a Matter of Neceſſity, without which they could not be ſaved. This Doctrine was firſt taught by Saturnilus and Marcion, as Irenæus [h] informs us, but afterwards better known among the Encratites, a Sect begun by Tatian the Scholar of Juſtin Martyr, who after his Maſter's Death divided from the Church upon this and ſome other Points, aſſerting, that Marriage was was no better than Fornication, and therefore all Men ought to abſtain from it: Thereby, ſays our Author, annulling the Primitive Work of GOD, and tacitly accuſing Him who created Man, Male and Female for the Propagation of Mankind. Epiphanius [i] ſpeaking of theſe Encratites, ſays, they taught openly that Marriage was the Work of the Devil. Theodoret [k] ſays the ſame, That they obſerved Celibacy, terming Marriage Fornication, and the lawful joyning of Man and Woman together the Work of the Devil. Which is alſo confirmed by St. Auſtin [l], who adds, That upon this Account they would admit no married Perſon into their Society, whether Male or Female.

SECT. 6. Alſo by the Apoſtolici or Apotactici.

NOT unlike theſe was that other Sect, who called themſelves Apoſtolici, from a vain Pretence of being the only Men who lead their Lives according to the Example of the Apoſtles; and Apotactici, from a Shew of Renouncing the World more than other Men. St. Auſtin ſays, They arrogantly [m] aſſumed theſe Names, becauſe they would not receive into their Communion any who were married, or kept the Poſſeſſion of any Thing in Property to themſelves; and that they allowed no Hope of Salvation to ſuch as uſed either of thoſe Things which they renounced.

SECT. 7. By the Manichees, Severians, and Archontici.

ST Auſtin brings the ſame Charge againſt the Manichees: he ſays, They condemned Marriage [n], and prohibited it as far as they could, forbidding Men to beget Children, for which Marriage was ordained. The Severians and Archonticks ſaid, That Woman was the Work of the Devil, and therefore they that married, fulfilled the Work of the Devil as Epiphanius [o] reports of them. And Clemens Alexandrinus [p] ſpeaking of the ſame Hereticks, or ſome others like them, ſays, They taught, that Marriage was downright Fornication, and that it was delivered by the Devil.

SECT. 8. By the Hieracians, and Euſtathians.

AFTER theſe aroſe up one Hierax, whoſe Diſciples are called Hieracians, who taught with a little more Modeſty, but no leſs erroneouſly, That Marriage was a Thing belonging only to the Old Teſtament, and ſince the Coming of CHRIST it was no longer to have Place; neither could any one in the Married-ſtate obtain the Kingdom of Heaven. So Epiphanius repreſents their Doctrine [q]. And upon this Account St. Auſtin [r] ſays, They admitted none but Monks and Nuns, and ſuch as were unmarried, into their Communion. The ſame Tenets were ſtifly maintained by one Euſtathius, whom Socrates [s] and Sozomen [t] call Biſhop of Sebaſtia, and Valeſius [u] defends them in ſo ſaying, though Baronius [x] labours to prove him to be another Man. However, it is agreed on all Hands, that there was one of this Name, who was ſo great an Admirer of the Monaſtick Life, that for the Sake of it, he condemned all Marriage in general, and taught, That no one that lived in a Married-ſtate could have any Hope in GOD. Upon which, many Women forſook their Husbands, and Husbands their Wives: Many Servants deſerted their Maſters, to joyn with him in this new Way of Living; and many withdrew from the publick Aſſemblies of the Church, and held private Conventicles, upon Pretence, that they could not communicate with the Miniſters of the Church, becauſe they were married Perſons; As the Fathers of the Council of Gangra largely ſet forth his Errors in their Declaration againſt them [y].

SECT. 9. Who were condemned in the Council of Gangra, and thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons.

AND to give ſome Check to his Errors, they uſed their Authority in making ſeveral Canons againſt them, having firſt depoſed the Author. In the firſt Canon they ſay, If any accuſes Marriage, or blames or abhors a Woman, who is otherwiſe faithful and pious, for ſleeping with her Husband, as if upon that Account ſhe could not enter into the Kingdom of GOD, let him be Anathema. The The Fourth Canon is to the ſame Purpoſe, If any one condemn or ſeparate from a married Presbyter, under Pretence that it is unlawful to partake of the Oblation when ſuch a one miniſters, let him be Anathema. The Ninth in like manner, If any one retire from the World, and live a Virgin, or contain, as abominating Marriage, and not for the Excellency and Holineſs of a Virgin-Life, let him be Anathema. The Fourteenth, If any Woman forſake her Husband, minding to turn Recluſe cluſe out of an Abhorrence of Marriage, let her be Anathema. They add in the Cloſe of all, We write not theſe Things to cut off any from the Church of GOD, who are minded to give themſelves to an Aſcetick Life according to the Scriptures, but only thoſe who make ſuch a Life an Occaſion of Pride, to lift themſelves up above thoſe who live in a more plain and ſimple manner, introducing Novelties againſt the Scriptures and the Rules of the Church. We admire Virginity, when accompanied with Humility; and applaud Continency, when attended with Gravity and Piety; and allow of a Retirement from worldly Affairs, when it is done with Humility; but we alſo honour Cohabitation in chaſte Marriage; and in a Word, deſire that all Things may be done in the Church according to the Traditions delivered to us in Scripture, and Rules of the Apoſtles. By the Traditions of the Apoſtles, theſe Fathers might mean, either the Rules about Marriage delivered by the Apoſtles in Scripture, or the Rules given in thoſe which are called the Apoſtolical Canons, which were at that Time of common Uſe in the Church. One of which runs in theſe Terms [z]: If any Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, or any other of the Sacred Roll abſtain from Marriage, or Fleſh, or Wine, not for Exerciſe of an Aſcetick Life, but out of Abhorrence, thereby blaſpheming and calumniating the Workmanſhip of GOD, and forgetting that GOD created all Things very Good, and made Man Male and Female: Let him amend, or elſe be depoſed and caſt out of the Church. And ſo let a Layman be treated likewiſe.

BY all this it is evident, that the Church had a mighty Struggle with thoſe ancient Hereticks, who inveighed bitterly againſt Marriage under the Goſpel-ſtate, and wrought upon many weak Minds to commit great Diſorders, under Pretence of a more refined Way of Living, and fanciful Perfection, which the Goſpel had no where enjoyned as of Neceſſity to Mankind; but only they who were able to receive it, might receive it at their own Liberty and Diſcretion, provided they made their own Liberty no Snare to other Mens Conſciences, nor impoſed a Matter of free Choice, as a neceſſary Obligation upon the reſt of Mankind.

SECT. 10. The Error of the Montaniſts about ſecond Marriages; and of the Novatians alſo.

THE Church had alſo another Conteſt with the Montaniſts about ſecond Marriages. Theodoret [a] ſays, Montanus made Laws to diſſolve Marriage. And the ſame was objected to him by Apollonius, an ancient Writer in Euſebius [b], who oppoſed the new Spirit of Montanus, when he firſt began to appear in the World: This is the Man that teaches the Diſſolution of Marriages, ſays he, in his Charge againſt him: Which ſome later Writers by Miſtake underſtand of his prohibiting Marriage in general, as the Hereticks of whom we have juſt been ſpeaking. Whereas Montanus did not deny the Lawfulneſs of Marriage, but only ſecond Marriages, as is evident from Tertullian, who was the chief Advocate of that Heretick againſt the Church. His Books De Monogamia, & Exhortatio Caſtitatis, were written purpoſely on this Subject: In both which he declaims very heartily indeed againſt ſecond Marriages, as no better than Adultery; but he never gives the leaſt Intimation, that he or any other Montaniſt had the ſame Opinion of the firſt. Nay, he begins his Book of Monogamy with theſe remarkable Words [c], Hereticks take away Marriage, and the Pſychici, or Carnal Men, by whom he means the Catholicks, repeat it: The one marry not ſo much as once, the other marry more than once. But neither is ſuch Continency to be praiſed, becauſe it is heretical; nor ſuch Liberty to be defended, becauſe it is carnal. The one deſtroys the GOD of Marriage, the other confounds him. The one blaſphemes him, the other is luxurious againſt him. But among us, who are deſervedly called ſpiritual, from the Acknowledgment of ſpiritual Gifts, Continency is Religious, and our Liberty obſerved with Modeſty and Moderation, becauſe they both ſtand with the CREATOR. We acknowledge one Matrimony, as we do One GOD. So that it is plain, the Montaniſts ought not to be charged with denying the Lawfulneſs of Marriage in general, which they defended againſt other Hereticks, but only the Liberty of ſecond and third Marriages, which they rejected upon the Pretence of receiving ſome new Revelations from the HOLY GHOST. And therefore when the Ancients ſay, They taught Men to diſſolve Marriage, or forbid Men to marry, they are always to be underſtood as ſpeaking of ſecond Marriages, and not of the firſt, as Epiphanius [d] well explains himſelf, when he writes againſt them.

THE Novatians were in the ſame Sentiments with the Montaniſts, rejecting all from Communion who were twice married. Which we learn not only from Epiphanius [e], and other private Writers againſt them, but alſo from the Rule made in the great Council of Nice concerning them, [f] That when any of the Novatians returned to the Catholick Church, they ſhould be obliged to make Profeſſion in Writing, That they would ſubmit to the Decrees of the Catholick Church, particularly in this, that they would διγάμοις κοινωνεῖν, communicate with Digamiſts, or thoſe that were married a ſecond Time: Which ſhews us both what was the Opinion of the Novatians upon this Point, and what was the general Senſe of the Catholick Church in Oppoſition to it. And if any private Writers have ſpoken any thing harſhly or indecently of ſecond Marriages, their Opinion is not either to be defended or urged as the Sentiment of the Church, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew in a former [*] Book concerning the Diſcipline of the Church, where this Matter is more fully diſcuſſed.

CHAP. II.

Of the Juſt Impediments of Marriage in particular Caſes, ſhewing, What Perſons might, or might not be lawfully joyned together; and of the Times and Seaſons when the Celebration of Marriage was forbidden.

SECT. 1. Chriſtians not to marry with Infidels, or Jews, or Hereticks, or any of a different Religion.

HAVING thus given an Account of the ſeveral Opinions and Practices of Hereticks, derogatory either to Marriage in general, or to the Repetition of it after the Deceaſe of a former Conſort, I now come to ſhew what Reſtraints the Church herſelf laid upon ſome particular Sorts of Perſons, by her Rules prohibiting them to marry, either for ſome Time, or at leaſt not in ſuch Circumſtances as were thought juſt Impediments of Marriage in certain particular Caſes. Of this Nature was the Rule forbidding Chriſtians to marry with Infidels or Heathens, becauſe of the Danger and Scandal that would attend their being joyned ſo unequally with Unbelievers. The Apoſtle leaves the Woman, whoſe Husband is dead, at Liberty to marry to whom ſhe will, only with this Proviſo, That it be in the LORD, 1 Cor. vii. 39. Which the Ancients generally ſo underſtood, as to take it for a Command, that Chriſtians ſhould marry only Chriſtians, and not Infidels, or Perſons of a different Religion. Cyprian [a] in his Book of Teſtimonies out of Scripture, brings this Text and two others out of St. Paul's Epiſtles, to prove that Chriſtians ought not to joyn in Matrimony with the Gentiles. His other Proofs are, 1 Cor. vi. 15. Know ye not that your Bodies are the Members of CHRIST? Shall I then take the Members of CHRIST and make them Members of an Harlot? GOD forbid. And 2 Cor. vi. 14. Be ye not unequally yoked with Unbelievers. And in his Book de Lapſis [b] he complains, That among other Cauſes why GOD ſent that terrible Perſecution upon Chriſtians, one Reaſon was, that many of them had joyned themſelves in Matrimony with Infidels, and proſtituted the Members of CHRIST to the Infidels. In like manner Tertullian [c] before him gives the ſame Senſe of the Words of the Apoſtle. For certainly, ſays he, in preſcribing that the Woman ſhould only marry in the LORD, leſt any Believer ſhould contract Matrimony with an Heathen, he defends the Law of the CREATOR, which every where forbids marrying with thoſe of another Nation, or Heathens of another Religion. So again [d] ſhe that was to marry, was only to marry in the LORD, that is, not to an Heathen, but to a Brother Becauſe the Old Law alſo forbad the Marrying with Strangers. He purſues this Argument at large in his Second Book to his own Wife, where urging firſt the ſame Text of the Apoſtle, he concludes [e], that it is Fornication and Adultery for Chriſtians to joyn in Marriage with Heathens, and that they who do ſo, ought to be caſt out of the Commmunion of the Church. And in another Place he ſays, Chriſtians did not marry [f] with Heathens, for fear they ſhould draw them into Idolatry, which was the firſt Rite that was uſed in celebrating their Marriages. St. Jerom [g] urges the ſame Authorities of the Apoſtle againſt ſuch Marriages: When the Apoſtle

Apoſtle, ſays he, adds, Only in the LORD, he thereby cuts off all making Marriages with the Heathen. Concerning which Sort of Marriages he ſays in another Place, Be ye not unequally yoked with Unbelievers: For what Fellowſhip hath Righteouſneſs with Unrighteouſneſs? And what Communion hath Light with Darkneſs? And what Concord hath CHRIST with Belial? Or what Part hath he that believeth with an Infidel? St. Jerom indeed in another Place laments the Tranſgreſſion of theſe Rules, and ſharply reproves the Tranſgreſſors [h]. Now many Women, ſays he, deſpiſing the Command of the Apoſtle, are married to Heathens, not conſidering that they become Part of that Body, whoſe Ribs they are. The Apoſtle pardons thoſe who were married to Heathens before they believed in CHRIST, but not thoſe, who being Chriſtians, afterward were married to Gentiles: To whom he thus ſpeaks in another Place, Be not unequally yoked with Unbelievers, &c. I am ſenſible, ſays St. Jerom, I ſhall anger and enrage many Matrons, who as they have deſpiſed their LORD (in being married to Heathens) ſo they will rant at me, who am but a Flea and the meaneſt of all Chriſtians. Yet I will ſpeak what I think, and ſay what the Apoſtle has taught me; that they are not on the Side of Righteouſneſs, but Unrighteouſneſs; not of Light but of Darkneſs; not of CHRIST, but of Belial; not Temples of the Living GOD, but Temples and Idols of dead Men. Would you have me ſpeak more plainly, that a Chriſtian Woman ought not to be married to an Heathen? Hear the ſame Apoſtle: The Woman is bound, ſays he, as long as her Huſband liveth: But if her Husband be dead, ſhe is at Liberty to be married to whom ſhe will, only in the LORD: That is, to a Chriſtian. He that allows Second and Third Marriages in the LORD, forbids even a Firſt Marriage with an Heathen. I ſay this, that they who compare Marriage to Virginity, may yet at leaſt underſtand that Digamy and Trigamy, Second and Third Marriages, are far above ſuch Marriages with Heathens. St. Ambroſe is no leſs earneſt in diſſuading all Chriſtians from ingaging in ſuch unequal Marriages, not only with Heathens but Hereticks; pathetically exhorting Parents, who had the chief Hand and Authority in diſpoſing of their Children, to beware of ſuch dangerous Matches. Beware, ſays he [i], O Chriſtian, that thou give not thy Daughter to a Gentile or a Jew: Beware, I ſay, that thou take not a Wife to thee, who is a Gentile, or a Jew, or an Alien, that is, an Heretick, or any one that is a Stranger to the Faith. And again, writing to one Vigilius [k] ſome Inſtructions about the Execution of the Miniſterial Office, he bids him teach the People carefully this one Thing, Not to joyn in Matrimony with Strangers, but with Chriſtian Families. For tho' we read of many People deſtroyed with an heavy Deſtruction for violating the Laws of Hoſpitality; and of dreadful Wars commenced upon Uncleanneſs: Yet there is ſcarce any thing more grievous than marrying with ſtrange Women; which is both an Incentive to Luſt and Diſcord, and the Forge of Sacrilege. For when Marriage ought to be ſanctified with the Sacerdotal Veil and Benediction, how can that be called a Marriage, where there is no Agreement in Faith; when their Prayers ought to be in common, how can there be any mutual conjugal Love, where there is ſuch Diſparity in their Devotion? Many Men by this Means have frequently betrayed their Faith, as the Iſraelites did in the Wilderneſs, when by the Seducement of the Midianitiſh Women they joyned themſelves to Baalpeor. The Author alſo of the Short Notes upon the Epiſtles, under the Name of St. Ambroſe [l] gives the ſame Interpretation of St. Paul's Words, Let the Woman marry only in the LORD: Let her marry without Suſpicion of Uncleanneſs, and let her marry to a Man of her own Religion. This is to marry in the LORD. In like manner Sedulius [m] and Theodoret [n] upon the ſame Place: Let her marry to one of the ſame Faith, to a Godly Man, in Sobriety, and according to the Law. Upon this Account St. Auſtin being ſolicited by one Ruſticus an Heathen, to give his Conſent that his Son might marry a certain Woman that was a Chriſtian, tells him [o], That though it was abſolutely in his Power to give any Virgin in Marriage, yet he could not give a Chriſtian to any but a Chriſtian. This St. Auſtin ſpake according to the known Rules and Practice of the Church. For though he himſelf in his own private Opinion did not think ſuch Marriages ſo clearly and expreſsly forbidden in the New Teſtament, as others did; yet he thought there were probable Reaſons to make it a very doubtful Caſe: And that was enough to deter any one from venturing on it, and alſo ſufficient to oblige the Miniſters of the Church not to give any Encouragement to it, either by Conſenting to ſuch Marriages, or authorizing them in their Miniſtration. Yet if the Queſtion were, Whether ſuch Perſons ſo offending againſt the Rules of the Church, were to be denied either Baptiſm or Communion, he reckons this to be a Matter of ſome Doubt not ſo clearly to be reſolved, as the Queſtion about manifeſt Fornicators and Adulterers. The manifeſt Crimes of Uncleanneſs, ſays he [p], do abſolutely debar Men from Baptiſm, unleſs they be corrected by a Change of Will and Repentance: And in doubtful Caſes, as marrying with Heathens, we are by all Means to endeavour that ſuch Marriages be not contracted. For what need have any Perſons to run their Heads into ſo great Danger in doubtful Matters? But if ſuch Marriages be made, I am not ſure that the Parties concerned ought to be denied Baptiſm in this Caſe as in the former. Indeed the Puniſhment of ſuch Contracts was not always and everywhere the ſame in the Church, though it was agreed on all Hands to prohibit and diſcourage them as dangerous and dubious, or manifeſtly ſinful. Some Canons barely forbid the Thing, without aſſigning any Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment to the Commiſſion of it. So in the Council of Laodicea, one Canon (q) ſays, That they who are of the Church, ought not to give their Children in Marriage promiſcuouſly to Hereticks. And another, That they ought not [r] to marry with all Hereticks indifferently, nor give their Sons or Daughters to them, unleſs they will promiſe to become Chriſtians. The Prohibition in the Third Council of Carthage extends only to the Sons and Daughters of Biſhops and the Clergy [s], that they ſhould not marry with Gentiles, Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, but particularly mentions no others. The Council of Agde [t] runs in the ſame Words with the Council of Laodicea, That none ſhall marry with Hereticks, unleſs they will promiſe to become Catholick Chriſtians. And ſo the Council of Chalcedon [u] forbids the Readers and Singers among the Inferior Clergy to marry either Jew, Gentile, or Heretick, unleſs they would promiſe to embrace the Orthodox Faith: And this is enjoyn'd to the Clergy under Pain of Canonical Cenſure. But the firſt Council of Arles [x] goes a little farther with reſpect to the whole Body of Chriſtians, and orders, That if any Virgins who are Believers, be married to Gentiles, they ſhall for ſome Time be ſeparated from Communion. The Council of Eliberis not only forbids ſuch Marriages [y] in one Canon, for Fear of ſpiritual Adultery, that is Apoſtacy from the Faith; though there was a Pretence, that young Women were ſo numerous, that they could not find Chriſtian Husbands enough for them: But alſo in another Canon [z] orders ſuch Parents as gave their Daughters in Marriage to Jews or Hereticks, to be Five Years caſt out of the Communion of the Church. And a Third Canon [a] orders, That if any Parents married their Daughters to Idol-Prieſts, they ſhould not be received into Communion even at their laſt Hour. The Second Council of Orleance forbids all Chriſtians to marry Jews, becauſe all ſuch Marriages were deemed unlawful: And if any upon Admonition refuſed to diſſolve ſuch Marriages, they were to be denied all Benefit of Communion. Thus ſtood the Diſcipline of the Church at that Time in Reference to all ſuch Marriages. Nor was the Civil Law wanting to confirm the Eccleſiaſtical with its Sanction. For by an Edict publiſhed by Valentinian and Theodoſius, which is twice repeated in the Theodoſian Code [b], and ſtands ſtill as a Law in the Juſtinian Code: If any Jew preſume to marry a Chriſtian Woman, or a Chriſtian takes to Wife a Jewiſh Woman, their Crime is put into the ſame Claſs with Adultery, that is, made a Capital Crime, and not only Relations, but any one has Liberty to accuſe and proſecute them upon ſuch Tranſgreſſion. Conſtantius before this had made it a Capital Crime for a Jew [*] to marry a Chriſtian Woman, but laid no Penalty upon the

the Christian marrying a Jew. But this being thought a Defect by Theodosius, he supplied it by that new Law, which more expressly made it Capital for them both. And so all possible Restraint was laid upon such Marriages that the Civil Power could think of.

SECT. 2. All Christians obliged to acquaint the Church with their Designs of Marriage before they compleated it.

AND to prevent the Inconveniencies attending such unequal Marriages, all Christians were obliged to acquaint the Bishop of the Church beforehand with their Design of Marrying, that if any such Obstacle appeared, they might be dissuaded and diverted from it. Thus Ignatius in his Epistle to Polycarp [d]: It becomes those that marry, and those that are given in Marriage, to take upon them this Yoke with the Consent or Direction of the Bishop, that their Marriage may be according to the Will of GOD, and not their own Lusts. And this is evident from several Passages in Tertullian, who often speaks of taking Advice and Council before-hand about this Matter from the Church. For speaking of some Women who were married to Heathens, he says, He could not [e] but wonder either at their own Petulancy, or the Prevarication and Unfaithfulness of their Counsellors. Intimating, That in this Case they had taken Counsel of others, and not of the Church, who would not have given them Counsel and Consent to have married Heathens. In another Place [g], says he, How shall I sufficiently set forth the Happiness of the Marriage, which the Church brings about by Her Procurement, and the Oblation confirms, and the Angels report it when done, and the FATHER ratifies it. Here, not to dispute at present the Meaning of any Words, the Church's bringing about the Marriage must at least signify its being done by her Advice and Counsel, if not her Ministry and Benediction; which some are unwilling to allow; but of this more by and by. To proceed: Tertullian, when he was turned Montanist, dissuaded all Widows from marrying a second time, and among other Arguments, he urges them with this [h]: With what Face canst thou request such a second Marriage of those who are not allowed themselves to have what thou askest of them; viz. of the Bishop, who is but once married; and of the Presbyters and Deacons, who are in the same State; and of the Widows, whose Society thou hast refused? Here he plainly says, that the whole Church was acquainted with any Persons Intention to marry, who as it were asked Leave of every Order of the Church, even the Widows as well as the Clergy, that if any one had any just Objection against them, as, That they were about to marry an Heathen, or Jew, or Heretick, or one too nearly related, or without Consent of Parents, or any Thing of the like Nature, a timely Intimation might be given of it, and such Marriage be prevented, or at least not be authorized and ratified by the Consent of the Church. This is plainly the Meaning of Petitioning the Church in the Case of Marriage: Not that the Church assumed any arbitrary Power of granting or refusing Marriage to any Persons, but only of disallowing those against whom there lay some just Objection, as this in the first Place of any one's being about to joyn in Matrimony with an Heathen; which, though it might be effected in those Times by other Means, yet it was never to be done by the Agnizing, or Consent, or Ministration of the Church; as appears from the whole Account that has here been given of the Church's Practice in Relation to such Marriages with Heathens.

SECT. 3. Not to marry with Persons of near Alliance, either by Consanguinity or Affinity, to avoid Suspicion of Incest.

ANOTHER Rule of the Church prohibiting certain Persons from joyning together, was, when they were too nearly related to each other, either by Consanguinity or Affinity, which would have made the Marriage Incestuous, by coming within the Degrees prohibited by GOD in Scripture. How far the Christian Morals exceeded the Heathen in this Particular (notwithstanding the false Charge of the Heathens against them for committing Incest in their Religious Assemblies) I have fully shewed in another (*) Place, where I have also noted the Penalties both Ecclesiastical and Civil, that according to the Discipline of those Times were put upon all Incestuous Persons. Here I shall only add a little more particular Account of such Degrees as made Marriage to be deemed Incestuous, and a perfect Nullity, whenever it was so contracted. The Council of Agde gives this Account of them: Concerning Incestuous Conjunctions, say they [i], we we allow them no Pardon, unleſs the offending Parties cure the Adultery by Separation from each other. We reckon Inceſtuous Perſons unworthy of any Name of Marriage, and dreadful to be mentioned. For they are ſuch as theſe: If any one pollutes his Brother's Relict, who was almoſt his own Siſter, by carnal Knowledge: If any one takes to Wife his own Siſter: If any one marries his Step-Mother or Fathers Wife: If any one joyns himſelf to his Coſen-german: If a Man marries any one nearly allied to him by Conſanguinity, or one whom his near Kinſman had married before: If any one marries the Relict or Daughter of his Uncle by the Mother's Side, or the Daughter of his Uncle by his Father's Side, or his Daughter-in-Law, that is, his Wife's Daughter by a former Huſband. All which both heretofore, and now under this Conſtitution we doubt not to be Inceſtuous: And we enjoyn them to abide and pray with the Catechumens, till they make lawful Satisfaction. But we prohibit theſe Things in ſuch Manner for the preſent Time, as not to diſſolve or cancel any thing that has been done before. And they who are forbidden ſuch unlawful Conjunctions, ſhall have Liberty to marry more agreeably to the Law. This Canon is repeated almoſt Word for Word in the Council of Epone [k], only the laſt Clauſe is read negatively, They ſhall not have Liberty to marry again. Which is plainly a Corruption crept into the Text by the Negligence of ſome unskilful Tranſcriber. For in the Second Council of Tours [l] this very Canon of Epone is cited and read in the ſame Manner as it is in the Council of Agde: And the Roman Correctors upon Gratian [m] obſerve, That it is ſo read in the Regiſter of Gregory and the Capitulars of Charles the Great. I only obſerve farther, That whereas the Marriage of Coſen-germans is reckoned Inceſtuous in theſe Canons, it was not ſo in the ancient Laws of the Church, till Theodoſius firſt made it ſo by the Advice of St. Ambroſe: Which Inhibition did not laſt long: For Arcadius revoked it, and Juſtinian revived the old Law by inſerting it into his Code. Of all which I have given a more ample Account in a former [*] Book. What is neceſſary to be added in this Place, is only this farther Remark: That whatever the Church at any Time reckoned to be Inceſt, that was always eſteemed a juſt Impediment of Marriage, and accordingly urged as a lawful Cauſe, why Perſons ſo nearly allied ſhould not come together in Marriage; or if they did, it was a juſt Reaſon to inflict the Cenſures of the Church upon them, till they diſſolved ſuch pretended Marriage by ſeparating from each other.

SECT. 4. Children under Age not to marry without the Conſent of their Parents or Guardians or next Relations.

ANOTHER Reaſon of Inhibition in this Affair was, when Children under Age went about to marry without the Conſent of their Parents or Guardians or next Relations, who in Caſe the Parents were dead, had the Paternal Power and Care of them. The Civil Law was extremely ſevere in this Caſe, not only againſt the Raptors themſelves, who ſtole Young Virgins againſt their Parents Conſent; and all that aided and aſſiſted them therein, who were either to be baniſhed, or burned alive; but alſo againſt the Virgins themſelves, who conſpired in ſuch Matches againſt the Parent's Will; As I have had Occaſion to ſhew heretofore from ſeveral Laws of Conſtantine, Conſtantius, Valentinian and Gratian, mentioned in both the Codes [†]. Now this being the Caſe of the Imperial Laws, the Church was exceeding cautious not to tranſgreſs or incur any Blame upon this Score. Tertullian ſeems to teſtify for his own Time, when he ſays [n], That Children could not rightly and lawfully marry without the Conſent of their earthly Parents, as well as the Approbation of their Father in Heaven. And that the Church allowed no Clandeſtine Marriages: For all ſuch, that were not [o] publickly before-hand profeſſed or notified before the Church, were in Danger of being judged Fornication and Adultery: And they could not be excuſed from Guilt under Pretence of being real Matrimony. St. Auſtin in like manner aſſerts the Power of Parents in this Caſe. For ſpeaking of a Young Virgin, who was a Minor, under the Protection of his Church, to keep her ſafe from all Attempts of making her a Prey to any Raptor, he ſays [p], her Age would not yet permit him him to give, or ſo much as promiſe her to any one, though by her own Conſent: Becauſe ſhe had an Aunt, without conferring with whom he neither could nor ought to do any Thing in the Matter. Beſides, though her Mother did not then appear, yet perhaps hereafter ſhe might appear, and then Nature gave her Will the Preference before all others in diſpoſing of her Daughter, unleſs ſhe were arrived to that Age which gives her a free Liberty and Right to diſpoſe of herſelf. St. Baſil often ſpeaks [q] of ſuch Minors ſtolen and married clandeſtinely without the Parents Conſent: But he ſays ſuch pretended Marriages were not Matrimony, but Fornication; and of no Validity, but Null, unleſs the Parents thought fit to ratify them afterwards by their Conſent: Mean while the Tranſgreſſors were to do the Penance of Harlots and Fornicators in the Church. And there was the more Reaſon both for this Caution antecedent, and ſubſequent Severity, becauſe not only the Civil Law under Chriſtian Emperors, but the old Roman Law under Heathens was very preciſe and ſtrict in this Matter of the Neceſſity of Conſent of Parents to a Lawful Marriage; without which it was reckoned Illegitimate, and the Children ſpurious. Juſtinian has inſerted ſome of the Laws of the Heathen Emperors [r] Severus and Antoninus Caracalla, relating to this Matter, into his Code. And it otherwiſe appears from Apuleius, who alluding to ſeveral Particulars which render a Marriage Null, as being againſt Law, thus brings in Venus inſulting Pyſche for pretending to be married to her Son Cupid: A Marriage with ſo great Diſparity, huddled up privately in a Village without Witneſſes, the Father [s] not conſenting, cannot be thought a Lawful Marriage: And therefore thy Son will be Spurious or a Baſtard. What therefore was thought ſo neceſſary to legitimate a Marriage among the Heathens, was certainly much more ſo among the Chriſtians. And there is no Example, that I know of, to be found of the Churches allowing or approving any Marriage to be lawful, where the Conſent of the Parents, diſpoſing of their Children when under Age, was not had firſt or laſt to the Ratification of it.

Hos enim cenſemus eſſe: Si quis relictam fratris, quæ pene prius ſoror extiterat, carnali conjunctione polluerit: Si quis frater Germanam uxorem duxerit: Si quis novercam duxerit: Si quis Conſobrinæ ſuæ ſe ſociaverit: Si quis Relictæ vel Filiæ Avunculi miſceatur, aut Patrui filiæ, vel Privignæ ſuæ: aut qui ex propria Conſanguinitate aliquam, aut quam Conſanguineus habuit, concubitu polluat, aut duxerit uxorem. Quos omnes & olim, & ſub hac Conſtitutione inceſtas eſſe non dubitamus, & inter Catechumenos manere & orare præcipimus. Quod ita præſenti tempore prohibemus, ut ea quæ ſunt hactenus inſtituta non diſſolvamus. Sane quibus conjunctio illicita interdicitur, habebunt ineundi melioris conjugij libertatem.

THE ſame Power and Right which Parents had over their Children, Maſters had over their Slaves: And for this Reaſon no Slave could marry without the Conſent of his Maſter; or if any did, it was in the Maſter's Power whether he would ratify or reſcind the Marriage. If Slaves, ſays St. Baſil [t], marry without the Conſent of their Maſters, or Children without the Conſent of their Parents; it is not Matrimony, but Fornication, till they ratify it by their Conſent. And again [u], If a Slave marry without the Conſent of of her Maſter, ſhe differs nothing from an Harlot. For Contracts made without the Conſent of thoſe under whoſe Power they are, have no Validity, but are Null.

SECT. 6. Perſons of Superior Rank not to marry Slaves.

ANOTHER Thing required to a Lawful Marriage, was, that there ſhould be ſome Parity of Condition between the contracting Parties. Perſons of a ſuperior Rank might not debaſe themſelves to marry Slaves. The Civil Law requires, that they ſhould be Pares genere & moribus [x], of equal Rank and Condition. By which the Law did not mean, that they ſhould be equal in Fortune, but that there ſhould be no ſuch Diſparity in their Condition as between a Freeman and a Slave; nor any ſuch Diſparity in their Morals, as between an Actreſs and a Senator, or any one of a Liberal aud Ingenuous Education: As the Matter is accurately explained in one of the Laws of Valentinian and Marcian [y] upon this Head. We do not intend her to be judged of a low and abject Condition, who though ſhe be poor, yet is born of Liberal and Ingenuous Parents. And therefore we declare it lawful for Senators, or any others of the higheſt Dignity, to marry Women that are born of Ingenuous Parents, although they be Poor, and that there ſhall be no Diſtinction in this Caſe between Ingenuous Women, and thoſe that are Rich by a great and opulent Fortune. But we account theſe Women only Vile and Abject Perſons, viz. a Slave, or the Daughter of a Slave; a Freed-Woman, or the Daughter of a Freed-Woman; an Actreſs, or the Daughter of an Actreſs; an Inn-keeper, or or the Daughter of an Inn-keeper, or of a Pander, or of a Gladiator, that is, one that was uſed to fight with Men or Wild Beaſts upon the Stage; or any who was wont to ſell Small-Wares publickly in the Market. With ſuch Women as theſe it is juſt to forbid Senators to join in Marriage. Conſtantine [z] had made a Law before to forbid all Senators, and Governours of Provinces, and City-Magiſtrates, and High-Prieſts of Provinces, to marry Slaves, or Freed-Women, or Actreſſes, &c. under Pain of Infamy and Outlawry, and of having their Children Illegitimate and uncapable of ſucceeding to any Part of their Fathers Subſtance or Poſſeſſions. And the better to ſecure Women of Noble Extract from the baſe Attempts of Vile and Abject Men, and thoſe of Infamous Character, the Law provided with great Caution, that no one of an Inferior Condition ſhould ſollicit a Woman of any Noble Family, or try to gain her by corrupting thoſe that were about her by any Clandeſtine Arts, but that her Relations [a] ſhould be conſulted, and all Things be tranſacted publickly in the Preſence of the Nobles, who were not to be ſuppoſed inclinable to give way to any ſuch Fraud in bringing about any ſuch unequal Contract. Nay the Curials or Common Council-Men of any City were expreſsly forbidden by a Law of Conſtantine to marry a Woman that was a Slave, under Pain of the Womans being condemned [b] to the Mines, and the Man himſelf to perpetual Baniſhment, with Confiſcation of all his Moveable Goods and City-Slaves to the Publick, and all his Lands and Country-Slaves to the City of which he was a Member. And there is no doubt, but that what was ſo ſeverely puniſhed in the Civil State, was as duly regarded in the Eccleſiaſtical, that they might not be Acceſſory or aiding to any Illegal Practices, which would have reflected great Diſhonour and Scandal on the Church; though I remember no Eccleſiaſtical Canons expreſsly made againſt them.

SECT. 7. Judges of Provinces not to marry any Provinicial Woman, during the Year of their Adminiſtration.

THERE were alſo ſome Reaſons of State, why a Judge of a Province ſhould not marry any Woman of that Province during the Year of his Adminiſtration. Not becauſe it was below his Dignity, but becauſe he might reaſonably be ſuppoſed, by Virtue of his Power and Superior Influence over all about him, to overawe and terrify a Woman into a Compliance of Marriage againſt her real Inclinations, and not leave her Parents or Guardians at free Liberty to diſpoſe of her at their own Diſcretion. To prevent which Inconveniences and Oppreſſion, Theodoſius made a Law [c], That if any Judge of a Province, who might be a Terror to Parents or Tutors and Guardians, or to Women that might contract Marriage, ſhould betroth a Woman during the Time of his Adminiſtration; if afterward either the Parent or the Woman herſelf ſhould change her Mind, they ſhould be free from the Snare and Puniſhment of the Law, which appoints in that Caſe a Quadruple Reſtitution to be made for Breach of Contract. And this Order extends not only to the Judge himſelf, but to his Children, Grandchildren, Kinſmen, Counſellors, and all his Domeſticks, who might be ſuppoſed to terrify Women into Marriage-Contracts by Virtue of the Judge's Power. Yet if any Woman, that was ſo betrothed, was minded to fulfil the Contract and make good her Eſpouſals after his Adminiſtration was ended, ſhe might lawfully do it. By which it is plain, that this was only a Reſtraint laid upon certain Perſons for a Seaſon, viz. upon Provincial Judges, not to marry any Woman of their own Province during the Year of their Adminiſtration. They were not debarred from marrying any others, but only thoſe of their own Province for the prudent Reaſons which the Law aſſigns.

SECT. 8. Widows not to marry again till Twelve Months after their Husbands Death.

THE Caſe was much the ſame with Widows: They were not reſtrained from Marrying a ſecond Time, but yet they were tied up and limited by Law not to do this till a Year after the Death of their former Husband. This was the Law of the Old Romans, even from the Time of their firſt Founder Romulus. But the Roman Year being then but Ten Months, a Time of the Widow's Mourning was no longer at firſt: Nor was it enlarged for many Ages after, though the Year itſelf was quickly enlarged by Numa to Twelve Months; yet ſtill the Widow's Year was only according to the old Computation. So that whenever we read of a Widow's Mourning a Year after her Husband's Death, it is to be underſtood of the Romulean Year of Ten Months only. And ſo the Matter ſtood till the Time of Theodoſius, who added Two Months to the former Term by an expreſs Law, which runs [d] in theſe Words: If any Woman after the Loſs of her Husband, make haſte to be married to another within the Space of a Year, (for we have added a little Time to the Ten Months, though we think it but a ſmall Term) let her be branded with the Marks of Infamy, and deprived of the Honour and Privileges of a Genteel and Noble Perſon; and let her forfeit whatever Goods ſhe is poſſeſſed of, either by the Right of Eſpouſals, or by the laſt Will and Teſtament of her deceaſed Husband.

SECT. 9. Women not to marry in the Abſence of their Husbands till they were certified of their Death.

IF any Womans Husband went abroad, and continued abſent from her, there was no Time limited for the marrying again, but ſhe muſt wait till ſhe was certified of his Death. Otherwiſe ſhe was reputed guilty of Adultery. So St. Baſil [e]: She whoſe Husband is abſent from Home, if ſhe cohabit with another Man, before ſhe is ſatisfied of his Death, commits Adultery. This was the Caſe of a Soldiers Wife (marrying after the long Abſence of her Husband, yet before ſhe was certified of his Death) as he determines [f] in another Canon: But he reckons her more pardonable than another Woman, becauſe it was more probable that he might be Dead. In theſe Caſes, if the firſt Husband appeared again, he might claim his Wife, and the Second Marriage was Null and of no Effect, as is determined in the Council of Trullo [g], where theſe Canons of St. Baſil are repeated. But the Civil Law allowed a Soldier's Wife to marry [h] after Four Years Expectation.

SECT. 10. Guardians not to marry Orphans in their Minority, till their Guardianſhip was ended.

BY the old Roman Law a Guardian might not marry a Woman to whom he was Guardian: Neither might he give her in Marriage to his own Son. There are ſeveral Laws of Severus, Philip and Valerian [i] in the Juſtinian Code to this Purpoſe. The only Exception then was, when the Guardian did it by the Prince's Licence and particular Reſcript. But Conſtantine determined this Matter with another Diſtinction: Which was, That the Guardian [k] ſhould not marry the Orphan whilſt ſhe was a Minor, and under his Care; but when ſhe was at Age he might marry her, firſt proving, that he had not defiled her in her Minority. But if he had offered any Injury to her before, he was not only debarred from marrying her, but was alſo to be baniſhed, and all his Goods to be confiſcated to the Publick.

SECT. 11. When firſt the Prohibition of ſpiritual Relations marrying one with another, came in.

BY ſome Rules, though not of the firſt and prime Antiquity, certain Degrees of ſpiritual Relations were prohibited from making Marriages one with another. The Thing was firſt thought of by Juſtinian, who made a Law [l], forbidding any Man to marry a Woman for whom he had been Godfather in Baptiſm; becauſe nothing induces a more Paternal Affection, or juſter Prohibition of Marriage, than this Tie by which their Souls are in a divine Manner united together. The Council of Trullo improves this Matter a little farther [m], and forbids the Godfather not only to marry the Infant, but the Mother of the Infant, for whom he was Surety; ordering ſuch as have done ſo, firſt to be ſeparated, and then to do the Penance of Fornicators. The Canon Law afterward extended this Relation to the Baptizer and Baptized, and to the Catechiſt and Catechumen [n], and and I know not what other Degrees of ſpiritual Kindred: And the Popes with the ſame Reaſon might have uſed their Authority to have prohibited all Chriſtians from marrying one with another: Becauſe by Baptiſm and many other Ties they are more undoubtedly ſpiritual Brethren. But Eſtius [o] owns this is too abſurd to be maintained, becauſe it would oblige all Chriſtians either to abſtain from Marriage, or elſe to marry Infidels: And yet he gravely defends all the other extravagant Prohibitions upon the infallible Authority of the Church.

SECT. 12. Whether a Man might marry after a lawful Divorce?

BUT to return to the ancient Church. Many of the Primitive Writers were of Opinion, That the Bond of Matrimony was not diſſolvable by any thing but Death. And therefore they not only condemned Polygamy, or marrying a ſecond Wife while the firſt was living; and marrying after an unlawful Divorce, which was much the ſame Thing with Polygamy in real Eſtimation; but they reckoned it unlawful alſo to marry after a lawful Divorce: Becauſe though there might be Reaſon for a Separation, yet they thought there was no Diſſolution of the Marriage ſo long as both the Parties were living. I ſhall ſay nothing farther here of the Unlawfulneſs of Polygamy, or of marrying again after an unlawful Divorce; becauſe I have had Occaſion heretofore [*] to ſpeak fully of the Laws and Diſcipline of the Church againſt both theſe: But the Prohibition of marrying again after a lawful Divorce is what deſerves a little farther Conſideration.

AND here I obſerve, That the Ancients were divided in their Sentiments upon the Point. Origen was againſt marrying after ſuch a Divorce, yet he ſays [p], There were ſome Biſhops in his Time, who permitted a Woman to marry whilſt her former Husband was living. Which was indeed againſt Scripture, which ſays, The Woman is bound ſo long as her Husband liveth: And, ſhe ſhall be called an Adultereſs, if, whilſt her Husband liveth, ſhe be married to another Man. Yet they did not permit this altogether without Reaſon: For perhaps for the Infirmity of ſuch as could not contain, they tolerated that which was evil, to avoid that which was worſe, though contrary to which that was written from the Beginning. Here it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that thoſe Biſhops who allowed Men and Women to marry after Divorce, did not think it ſimply Evil, though it was ſo in Origen's Opinion. And the ſame is to be ſaid of Conſtantine, who [q] made a Law, That a Man for Three Crimes, Adultery, Sorcery, and Pandery, might lawfully put away his Wife and marry another. For as Gothofred rightly obſerves, in ſaying, that unleſs ſhe was guilty of one of thoſe Three Crimes, he might not marry another, it is plainly implied, that if he proved her guilty of any of the Three, he had Liberty to put her away, and marry another. The Author under the Name of St. Ambroſe was of the ſame Opinion. For expounding thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, A Brother or a Siſter in ſuch a Caſe is not under Bondage, he ſays, If Eſdras [r] caſt out the Infidels, and allowed the Faithful to marry other Wives: How much rather, if an Infidel departs of his own accord, ſhall the believing Woman have Liberty, if ſhe pleaſes, to be married to a Man of her own Religion? And he gives this Reaſon for it: Becauſe an Indignity offered to the Creator diſſolves the Obligation of Matrimony with Reſpect to him who is deſerted, ſo that he is excuſed though he be joined to another; for as much as an Infidel is injurious both to GOD and to Matrimony itſelf by Deſertion. Epiphanius ſpeaks not only his own Senſe, but the Senſe of the Church in his Time. And he ſays plainly, That though the Clergy were prohibited from marrying a Second Wife after the Death of the firſt; yet the People were not only allowed to marry again in ſuch a Caſe, but alſo in Caſe of Divorce [s], if a Separation was made upon the Account of Fornication or Adultery, or any ſuch Criminal Evil, and a Man thereupon was joined to a Second Wife, or a Woman to a Second Husband, the Word of GOD did not condemn them, nor exclude them from the Church nor Eternal Life, but tolerate them becauſe of their Infirmity; not that a Man ſhould have Two Wives at the ſame Time, but that being divorced or ſeparated from the firſt, firſt, he might lawfully be joined to a Second. Petavius freely owns [t], that this is a full Proof in Fact of the Church's Sentiments at that Time: Only he ſays, the Matter was not then fully determined nor ſettled by any General Council. Which is not very Material to the preſent Enquiry; which is not about the Determinations of the Councils of Florence or Trent, but about the Senſe and Practice of the Ancient Church. Now what Epiphanius obſerves concerning the Toleration of ſuch Marriages in the Church without any Check of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, is farther confirmed even from the Council of Arles, and St. Auſtin, though they were of a different Opinion from Epiphanius as to the Senſe of Scripture. They thought Men were forbidden to marry again after Divorce whilſt the Wife was living: But they did not think this ſo clearly revealed, as to make it an high Crime and juſt Matter of Excommunication, like other plain Caſes of Adultery. The Council [u] orders, That ſuch Men ſhall be dealt with and adviſed, as much as might be, not to marry a ſecond Wife, while the former, that was divorced for Adultery, was living: But they ſay not a Word of any Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure to be paſſed upon them, if they did otherwiſe. And St. Auſtin confeſſes [x], There was a very great Difference to be made between ſuch as put away their Wives for Adultery, and married again, and ſuch as did ſo upon other Reaſons: For the Queſtion, Whether he who without Doubt has Liberty to put away his Wife for Adultery, be to be reckoned an Adulterer if he marries again; is a Matter ſo obſcurely reſolved in Scripture, that a Man may be ſuppoſed to err venially about it. And therefore he concludes, That all that the Miniſtry has to do in this Caſe, is only to perſuade Men not to engage in ſuch Marriages: But if they will marry notwithſtanding the contrary Advice that is given them, he will not venture to ſay, that ſuch Men ought therefore to be kept out of the Church. St. Auſtin was fully perſuaded in his own Mind, that ſuch Marriages after Divorce were unlawful. For he often [z] repeats it in his Works, and uſes what Arguments he could to diſſuade Men from them; not ſcrupling to declare his Opinion of them, as ſuſpicious and doubtful Marriages, that might ſtand charged with Adultery. But then, he no where intimates, that the Church either did or ought to treat Perſons ſo marrying as She did other Adulterers (whoſe Adultery was more indiſputable) either by diſſolving the Marriage, or bringing the Perſons under Excommunication and Publick Penance in the Church: But rather declares the Error of ſuch Perſons to be venial, becauſe it was not ſo expreſsly condemned in Scripture. And thus much Eſtius [a] owns, only he ſays, It was not then condemned by any general Council. There is one Inſtance indeed given by St. Jerom [b] of a Woman doing Publick Penance in the Church for marrying a Second Husband after ſhe had divorced herſelf from the firſt upon the Account of his Adultery, and his other intolerable Practices. But this was a Voluntary Act of her own, and not done till after the Death of her Second Huſband: The Church did not impoſe this Penance on her, whilſt her Husband was living, nor yet when he was dead; but ſhe choſe it of her own Accord, and ſubmitted to it without Compulſion. Had there been any General Law then in the Church, either to diſſolve ſuch Marriages, or bring the Parties to Publick Penance, no doubt the Biſhop of Rome would have called upon them both whilſt the Husband was living, to have complied with the Rule and the Diſcipline of the Church: But this not being done, ſeems to be an Argument, that then it was not the Cuſtom of the Roman Church to inflict any Publick Cenſures upon ſuch as married again after a lawful Divorce, but only to uſe what Arguments ſhe could to diſſuade Men and Women from ſuch Marriages till the former Husband or Wife were dead: Or elſe, if they did engage in them, to exhort them to repent of ſuch Engagements, as Crimes prohibited by the Apoſtle. Which St. Jerom himſelf [c] does with no ſmall Vehemence, according to his Manner, telling a Woman who had ſo married a Second Husband, that ſhe was an Adultereſs for ſo doing, and that ſhe ought not to receive the Communion till ſhe repented of her Crime. By which I ſuppoſe he

he means her Obligations to Private Repentance, and not any ſolemn Penance impoſed by the Publick Diſcipline of the Church. Yet in the Spaniſh Church before this Time there ſeems to have been ſomething of Publick Diſcipline exerciſed againſt ſuch Perſons, eſpecially Women, joining in Second Marriages whilſt the firſt Husband was living. For in the Council of Eliberis [d] there is a Canon which orders, That if a Woman who is a Believer, put away an Adulterous Husband, who is alſo a Believer, and go about to marry another, ſhe ſhall firſt de diſſuaded from it: But if notwithſtanding that, ſhe does marry, ſhe ſhall not receive the Communion till her firſt Husband be dead, unleſs the Neceſſity of Sickneſs require it to be given her. But as this was but a Canon of a Private Council, ſo here are ſeveral Exceptions and Abatements in it. Firſt it only reſpects Women, and not Men. Then again it only relates to Women that were Believers, and not Catechumens, who by the next Canon are allowed notwithſtanding to be admitted to Baptiſm, as St. Auſtin alſo determined. Thirdly, The Husband alſo that was deſerted, muſt be a Believer: For the Caſe is otherwiſe, if he was an Heathen. Laſtly, ſhe is allowed the Communion at the Point of Death, though ſhe never relinquiſhed the Second Huſband. So that as yet the Prohibition was not Univerſal upon many Accounts. Afterwards we find in one of the Laws of Honorius, That if a Woman [e] could prove her Reaſon weighty and ſufficient for a Divorce, ſhe might not only retain her Dowry and the Donations of her Eſpouſals, but alſo within Five Years have Liberty to marry again. And a Man, if he could prove his Reaſons for Divorce weighty againſt his Wife, might not only retain her Dowry and Gifts of Eſpouſal, but have Liberty to marry another Wife whenever he pleaſed. Or if they were only light Faults, and not high Crimes, that he had to alledge againſt his Wife, he was to leave her her Dowry, but might reclaim any Eſpouſal Gifts, and have Liberty to marry another Wife after Two Years. But if a Man put away his Wife for no Reaſons at all, but only his own Moroſeneſs, he was condemned to live in perpetual Celibacy for his Inſolent Divorce, and the Woman had Liberty within a Year to be married to another Man. And there are ſeveral Laws of Theodoſius Junior and Valentinian III, and Anaſtaſius in the Juſtinian Code [f], which grant the ſame Liberty of marrying after lawful Divorces. But theſe Laws are not altogether approved by the Writers of the Church in thoſe Times. For as we have heard St. Auſtin and St. Jerom expreſs their Diſlike before, ſo we may find the ſame in Chryſoſtom [g], and Ambroſe [h], and Pope Innocent [i] and other Writers of that Age, who reckon the Laws of the State too looſe and favourable to ſuch as married after Divorce. Which ſerves only to confirm the Obſervation which I made at firſt, That the Ancients were divided upon this Point, and treated it only as a Problematical Queſtion, though the Council of Trent has ſince turned it into an Article of Faith [k], and damned all thoſe that came not into her Sentiments about it. And in her Sentence, to note this by the by, ſhe has alſo condemned ſome of her own Popes and Councils of later Ages, which Gratian has recorded. Pope Zachary [l] allows a Woman, whoſe Husband had committed Inceſt with her Siſter, to put him away, and marry to whom ſhe would in the LORD. And Gregory III. allows a Man to put away his Wife for Infirmity [m] and marry another. The Council of Tribur [n] ſays, If a Son commits Inceſt with his Mother in Law, the Father may put her away, and marry another, if he pleaſes. And the Council of Vermeriæ (which in ſome Copies of Gratian is falſly called the Council of Eliberis) ſays [o], If a Woman take Counſel with others to compaſs the Death of her Husband, he may diſmiſs her for the Attempt, and marry another, if he pleaſes. So that the new Legiſlators at Trent were as much at Variance with their own Canon-Law, as they were with the ancient Fathers upon this Subject.

SECT. 13. Whether an Adulterer might marry an Adultereſs, whom he had defiled, after the Death of her Husband?

NOR are the Roman Caſuiſts better agreed with the Ancients upon another Queſtion relating to the Impediments of Marriage, viz. Whether an Adulterer may marry another Man's Wife after the Death of her Husband, having been guilty of Adultery with her, whilſt her former Husband was living: The Modern Canoniſts commonly reſolve this in the Negative. The Council

Council of Tribur in Germany, which was held in the Year 895, under Pope Formosus, proposes a famous Case of a Man who defiled another Man's Wife, and swore he would marry her after her Husband's Death: The Council peremptorily [p] determines this to be unlawful: We anathematize such a Marriage, and forbid it to all Christians. It is not lawful therefore, nor agreeable to the Christian Religion, that any one should use her in Matrimony, whom he had before defiled by Adultery. Peter Lombard [q] and Gratian [r] cite other Authorities of Pope Leo and the Council of Althæum to this Purpose: And the Modern Canonists commonly stand to their Determination [s], only making some nice Distinctions to reconcile these Canons to better Authorities of the Ancients. For the Ancients in this Matter were of another Opinion. St. Austin [t] resolves the Question in the Affirmative, universally and without Distinction, That when a Woman's Husband was dead, to whom she was truly married, she might become the true and lawful Wife of another, with whom before she had committed Adultery. And again [u], It is manifest, that they who at first joyn wickedly together in Concubinage, may afterwards by changing their Wills make a just and honest Marriage together. And therefore the Council of Eliberis determined [x], That though a Woman, who left her Husband, and lived adulterously with another, should not communicate so long as her Husband was living; yet she might after his Death, because then she became the lawful Wife of him, with whom before she had only lived in Adultery. Albaspiny [y] in his Notes upon this Canon makes this candid Remark: In those Times you may observe, that Matrimony might stand firm and valid between Adulterers, who had to do with one another whilst the true and lawful Husband was living: Which now is so prohibited, that a Woman even after the Death of her Husband cannot make a true and lawful Marriage with her Adulterer, but only by the Dispensation of the Pope. Which is a plain and ingenuous Confession of the Difference between the Ancient and Modern Way of Resolving this Question; and perhaps tacitly intimates the true Reason of inventing so many new Impediments in the Business of Matrimony, that the Pope might have it in his Power to grant frequent Dispensations. All that the ancient Canons required in this particular Case, was only that the Criminals should perform a just and satisfactory Penance for their former Adultery, but they never forbad them to marry, nor dissolved the Marriage, if it was contracted regularly after the Death of the former Husband, without any other Impediment to hinder or disannul it. As appears from another Canon of the Council of Eliberis, which orders [z], That if a Widow commit Adultery with a Man, and afterward take him for her Husband, she shall do Five Years Penance, and then be reconciled to the Communion, or by the Communion: But if she leaves him, and marries any other, she shall not have the Communion even at her last Hour. Where it is observable, that the Council is so far from prohibiting or disannulling the Marriage of an Adultereſs with her Adulterer, that they oblige her to keep him for her Husband, and take no other, under Pain of being refused the Communion even at the Hour of Death. Which is abundantly sufficient to shew us the Sense of the Ancients upon this Point, that they never reckoned it needed a Dispensation to bring Adulterers into a lawful Marriage, though this has been the current Practice of the Roman Court now for many Ages.

SECT. 14. The Celebration of Marriage forbidden in Lent.

I HAVE but one Thing more to observe concerning the ancient Prohibitions of Marriage; and that relates to the Time or Season in which it might or might not be regularly celebrated. The most ancient Prohibition that we meet with of this Kind, is, that of the Council of Laodicea, which forbids [a] all Marriages as well as Birth-Days to be celebrated in Lent. And this is the only Prohibition in Point of Time that we meet with in any of the Genuine Records of those early Ages. Peter Lombard [b] and Gratian [c] cite a Canon out of the Council of Lerida, An. 524, which forbids Marriages not only in Lent, but Three Weeks before the Festival of St. John Baptist, and from the Beginning of Advent to Epiphany; ordering likewise likewiſe all Marriages that are made in theſe Intervals to be annulled. But there is no ſuch Canon now extant in the Tomes of the Councils, which makes it ſuſpicious, that it is ſome Canon of a much later Date than the Council that is pretended. Martin Bracarenſis lived ſome Time after the Council of Lerida, and in his Collection of Canons which he publiſhed, An. 572, in the Council of Lugo, he takes Notice of the Prohibition made at Laodicea, but not of the pretended one at Lerida [d], nor of any other. Which is a farther Argument, that as yet there was no Prohibition of marrying but only in Lent known in Spain, when the Biſhop of Braga made his Collection of Canons for the Uſe of the Spaniſh Church. Pope Nicholas I, lived about the Year 860: And he alſo [e] takes Notice of the Prohibition of Marriage in Lent, but mentions no other Seaſon. Yet Mr. Selden [f] ſays, The Council of Aquiſgranum, or Aix la Chapelle, held An. 836, under the Emperor Lewis I, forbids Marriages to be celebrated on the Lord's-Day, by a new Injunction: Which I do not find in the Place by him quoted. However the Council of Salegunſtade, An. 1022, under Benedict VIII, and the Emperor Henry II, made an Order [g], That no Chriſtians ſhould marry from Advent to the Octaves of Epiphany, nor between Septuageſima Sunday and the Octaves of Eaſter, nor in Fourteen Days before the Feſtival of St. John Baptiſt, nor upon Faſt-Days, nor the Vigils of the ſolemn Feſtivals. And from that Time, as Mr. Selden ſhews at large, theſe were prohibited Times of Marriage in moſt Churches. The Learned Reader, who would ſee farther into this Matter, together with the Practice of the French and Engliſh Churches in the following Ages, may conſult the Elaborate Diſcourſe of that Curious Writer. For I muſt return to the Ancient Church.

CHAP. III.

Of the Manner of making Eſpouſals preceding Marriage in the Ancient Church.

SECT. 1. How the Sponſalia or Eſpouſals differed from Marriage.

WHEN Perſons, againſt whom there lay no lawful Impediment, were diſpoſed to joyn in Matrimony with each other, they were obliged to go through certain Preliminaries appointed by Cuſtom or Law, before they could ordinarily compleat the Marriage, or regularly come together. Theſe went by the general Name of Sponſalia, Eſpouſals or Betrothing. This differed from Marriage, as an Obligation or Contract antecedent to a future Marriage, may be ſuppoſed to differ from Marriage actually ſolemnized and compleated. And there were ſeveral diſtinct Ceremonies proper and peculiar to each. For which Reaſon (though they be by ſome Writers confounded) I chuſe to ſpeak ſeparately of them here, as the ancient Law, which either appointed or confirmed them, always does, giving them diſtinct Titles in both the Codes. For there we find one Title, De Sponſalibus & Donationibus ante Nuptias, Of Eſpouſals and Gifts before [a] Marriage: And another, De Nuptiis [b] Of Marriage itſelf. To give a ſummary Account of the Ceremonies obſerved in each of theſe: We may obſerve firſt of the Eſpouſals, That they conſiſted chiefly in a mutual Contract or Agreement between the Parties concerning their future Marriage, to be performed within a certain limited Time: Which Contract was confirmed by certain Gifts or Donations, called Arræ & Arrabones, the Earneſt of Marriage; as alſo by a Ring, a Kiſs, a Dowry, a Writing or Inſtrument of Dowry, with a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes to atteſt it. After which there was no receding from the Contract, or Refuſal to be made of Marriage, without great Penalties and Forfeitures in Law, and incurring many times the higheſt Cenſures of the Church. Theſe were the preparatory Ceremonies, or Harbingers and Forerunners of the future Marriage, which were generally obſerved by Obligation of the Roman Laws, though not all of equal Neceſſity to all manner of Perſons: For the Law made ſome Diſtinctions, and allowed of Diſpenſations in ſome of theſe Points to certain Orders of Men in ſome particular Caſes. As to the Marriage itſelf, Cuſtom generally prevailed to have it ſolemnized by the Miniſters of the Church; though as the State of the Roman Empire then ſtood, this was not abſolutely neceſſary by any Law; nor were thoſe Marriages annulled that were performed otherwiſe. But when it was done by the Miniſters

SECT. 2. Free Conſent of Parties neceſſary in Eſpouſals.

I BEGIN with the Ceremonies obſerved in Eſpouſals. Where firſt of all there was neceſſary a free Conſent of the Parties contracting. This was the old Roman Law, called Lex Papia & Julia, confirmed by Diocletian, and inſerted by Juſtinian into his Code [c]. The Diſcipline of the Laws does not permit, that a Son ſhould be compelled to marry a Wife againſt his Will. And therefore though Parents had a Right to diſpoſe of their Children in Marriage, and Children could not legally marry without their Conſent, as is expreſſed in the ſame Law, as has been fully ſhewed [*] before: Yet Children had an equal Right to diſpoſe of themſelves, and ought not to be compelled by their Parents to make any Contract abſolutely againſt their own Inclinations. If a Virgin was betrothed by the Conſent of a Father [d] or a Mother, or a Guardian before ſhe was Ten Years old, in that Caſe ſhe might ſtill refuſe to compleat the Marriage without any Quadruple Forfeiture (which the Law required for Breach of Contract in other Caſes) either to be exacted of her or her Parents: Becauſe ſhe was not yet of Age to give any Conſent to an Eſpouſal: As Gothofred ſhews out of Dio and the ancient Laws. If ſhe was above Ten, and not yet full Twelve Years old, when ſhe was betrothed by her Parents, and afterward refuſed to compleat the Marriage, her Parents might be amerced, but not the Virgin; becauſe ſhe was not yet of Age and Ripeneſs of Judgment to give her free Conſent to ſuch a Contract. If ſhe was above Twelve Years old, when ſhe made the Contract, ſhe was liable to be amerced Quadruple by Law for not compleating the Marriage according to the Eſpouſal-Contract. But then ſhe had a juſt Action of Recovery of whatever ſhe forfeited, againſt a Mother or a Tutor or a Guardian, if ſhe could prove that ſhe was compelled by Force to give her Aſſent to the Acceptance of the Arræ, or Donations made to her upon the Eſpouſal. And for the ſame Reaſon, as I have ſhewed [†] before, any Woman who entred into an Eſpouſal-Contract with a Governor of a Province during the Year of his Adminiſtration, was at perfect Liberty, when the Year was ended, whether ſhe would fulfil the Contracts, and marry him or not: Becauſe it was preſumed, that he being in ſupereminent Authority and Power, might over-awe a Woman, and terrify her into an Eſpouſal againſt her Will and real Inclination. Such provident Care did the ancient Law take to ſecure the Liberty of ſuch as entred into Eſpouſal-Contracts, that nothing of this Kind ſhould ſtand firm, but what was voluntarily agreed upon by the free Conſent of each contracting Party, without any Force or Violence of any Kind intervening to compel them.

SECT. 3. The Contract of Eſpouſals uſually teſtified by Gifts, called Arræ, or Donationes Sponſalitiæ, which were ſometimes mutually given and received both by the Man and Woman.

WHEN the Contract was thus made, it was uſual for the Man to beſtow certain Gifts on the Woman, as Tokens and Pledges of the Eſpouſal: And ſometimes, but not ſo commonly, the Woman made Preſents to the Man upon the ſame Account. Theſe are ſometimes called Sponſalia, Eſpouſals, and ſometimes Sponſalitiæ Donationes, Eſpouſal-Gifts, and Arræ & Pignora, Earneſts and Pledges of future Marriage: Becauſe the giving and receiving them was a Confirmation of the Contract, and an Obligation on the Parties to take each other for Man and Wife, unleſs ſome legal Reaſon gave them Liberty to do otherwiſe. Theſe were commonly given by the Men, as I ſaid, and ſometimes by the Women, tho' but rarely, as is noted in one of the Laws of Conſtantine, which orders [e], That if the Woman give any Thing to the Man upon the Title of Eſpouſal (which is a Thing that ſeldom happens) in Caſe either the Man or the Woman chanced to die before the Marriage was compleated, the whole Dominion and Property of whatever ſhe gave ſhould return to her, if ſhe ſurvived, or elſe to her Heirs and Succeſſors. And the Caſe was much the ſame with the Donations made by the Man to the Woman, upon the Death of either Party ty before Marriage: Only with this Difference, That if the Man confirmed this Donation by the Intervention of the ſolemn Kiſs (of which Ceremony more by and by) then in Caſe of Death the Donation was to be divided between the Survivor and the Heirs of the deceaſed Party: But if the Ceremony of the Kiſs was not ſuperadded, the whole Donation was to be reſtored, in Caſe either Party died, either to the Donor himſelf ſurviving, or to his Heirs and Suceſſors. Though by a former Law [f] of Conſtantine, the Donations both of the Man and Woman were exactly upon the ſame Foot, and both to be reſtored in Caſe of Death without any Diſtinction.

SECT. 4. Theſe Donations to be entred into Publick Acts, and ſet upon Record.

To make theſe Donations more firm and ſure, it was required that they ſhould be entred into Publick Acts, and ſet upon Record, as well to aſcertain them againſt the Accidents of Death, as againſt the Falſeneſs and Perfidiouſneſs of either Party. This is expreſsly provided in one of the Laws of Conſtantine [g], That no Donation between Man and Woman in the Buſineſs of Eſpouſals ſhould be of any Force, unleſs it was teſtified by a Publick Act. But this afterward received ſome Limitations. For Conſtantine himſelf by another Law [h] made an Exception in the Caſe of Minors: That if any Eſpouſal-Gifts were given to Women that contracted and married under Age, they ſhould not be revoked upon Pretence that they were not entred into Publick Acts. And this was confirmed by another Law of Theodoſius Junior [i] referring to it; who alſo added another Exception, That if the Donation did not exceed the Sum of Two Hundred Shillings, there ſhould be no Neceſſity to have it recorded to make it firm. Juſtinian [k] extended this Exception farther to the Sum of Three Hundred Shillings, and at laſt to Five Hundred [l], to be aſcertained to the Woman, if given to her upon Eſpouſal, without any farther Inſinuation, as the Law terms it, or entring into Publick Acts and Monuments, to make it ſecure in Law from all Reclaiming.

TOGETHER with theſe Eſpouſal-Gifts, or as a Part of them, it was uſual for the Man to give the Woman a Ring, as a farther Token and Teſtimony of the Contract. This was an Innocent Ceremony uſed by the Romans before the Times of Chriſtianity [m], and in ſome Meaſure admitted by the Jews: Whence it was adopted among the Chriſtian Rites of Eſpouſal without any Oppoſition or Contradiction: I ſay, the Rites of Eſpouſal: For that it was uſed in the Solemnity of Marriage itſelf originally, does not ſo evidently appear: Though ſome who confound the Rites of Eſpouſal with thoſe of Marriage, bring the Evidences of the former, as Proofs of the later Cuſtom. That the Ring was uſed in Eſpouſals, and not in the Solemnity of Marriage itſelf, in the Time of Pope Nicolas, An. 860. ſeems pretty evident from the diſtinct Account which he gives of the Ceremonies uſed in the Roman Church, firſt in Eſpouſals, and then in the Solemnity of Marriage, which he plainly ſpeaks of as diſtinct Things. With us [n], ſays he, after the Eſpouſals, which are a Promiſe of future Marriage, the Marriage-Covenants are celebrated, with the Conſent of thoſe who have contracted, and of thoſe in whoſe Power they are. Then he deſcribes diſtinctly the Ceremonies peculiar to each. In the Eſpouſals the Man firſt preſents the Woman, whom he betrothes, with the Arræ or Eſpouſal-Gifts; and among theſe he puts a Ring upon her Finger; then he delivers the Dowry agreed upon by both Parties, in Writing before Witneſſes invited on both Sides to atteſt the Agreement. Thus far the Eſpouſals. After this, either preſently, or in ſome convenient Time following, that nothing might be done before the Time appointed by Law, they are both brought to the Nuptial Solemnity. Where firſt of all they are placed in the Church, to offer their Oblations by the Hands of the Chriſtians Prieſt: And then they receive the Bendedic-tion and the Celeſtial Veil: And after this go-ing out of the Church they wear Crowns or Garlands upon their Heads, which are kept in the Church for that Purpoſe. Here we have the Ceremonies of Eſpouſals, and the Cere-monies of Marriage diſtinctly deſcribed: And among the Ceremonies of Eſpouſals we find the Ring, but not mentioned again in the Ce-remonies of Marriage: Which makes it pro-bable, that it was then only a Ceremony of the former, and not of the later. And thus it was uſed among the Ancient Chriſtians, in their Eſpouſals, as an Arra or Earneſt of their future Marriage, but not in the Solemnity of Marriage itſelf, as far as we can learn from any Accounts that are given of it. St. Am-broſe ſpeaks of it, but only amongſt the Rites of Eſpouſal, and not of Marriage. For de-ſcribing the Behaviour of St. Agnes the Virgin, when the Governor of Rome courting her offered her the Eſpouſal-Gifts, he brings her in [o] thus replying, Depart from me, Thou Sollicitor to Sin: For I am already prevented by another Lover, who has beſtowed upon me much better Ornaments, and betrothed me with the Ring of his Faith, being far more Noble both in Birth and Dignity: Meaning CHRIST to whom ſhe was eſpouſed ſpiri-tually by the Profeſſion of Virginity. And before him Tertullian [p] ſpeaks of the Annu-lus Pronubus, or Ring of Eſpouſals before Mar-riage; inveighing againſt the Heathens for having degenerated from the Inſtitutions of their Anceſtors, which taught Women Mo-deſty and Sobriety, when they knew no other Uſe of Gold but upon one of their Fingers, which their Spouſe adorned with the Ring of Eſpouſals. He does not expreſsly ſay, That the Ring was uſed by Chriſtians, but he ſpeaks of it as a laudable Ceremony, that might be uſed by any, and was actually uſed by the Heathens in their Eſpouſals. And in another Place [q] he ſays, It was innocently uſed in their Eſpouſals: And therefore a Chriſtian might lawfully be preſent either at the Eſ-pouſals, or the Marriages of the Heathens, as at any other private and common Solem-nity, of giving a Youth the Toga Virilis, the Habit of a Man, or giving a Slave a new Name at his Manumiſſion: For all theſe Things were pure and clean of their own Nature; and neither the Ring in Eſpouſals, nor the joyning of a Man and Woman in Marriage deſcended originally from an Honour of an Idol. Clemens Alexandrinus is cited by Mr. Sel-den himſelf [r] as any Evidence of the Anti-quity of the Uſe of the Ring in Eſpouſals among Chriſtians. He ſays the Ring is giv-en her, not as an Ornament, but as a Seal, to ſignify the Woman's Duty in preſerving the Goods of her Huſband, becauſe the Care of the Houſe belongs to her.

SECT. 6. And by a ſolemn Kiſs, and joyning of Hands.

ANOTHER Ceremony uſed in Eſpouſals ſometimes, was the ſolemn Kiſs, which the Man gave to the Woman in Confirmation of the Contract. This was a known Rite uſed among Chriſti-ans in their Sacred and Religious Offices, to teſtify their Cordial Love and Union and Friendſhip one with another, of which I have ſpoken in another Place [*]. Therefore Con-ſtantine in one of his Laws [s] made it a Cere-mony of Eſpouſals, being as proper for this Act as any other. And he laid ſome Streſs upon it. For if a Man betrothed a Woman by the Intervention of the Kiſs, then if ei-ther Party died before Marriage, the Heirs of the Deceaſed Party were intituled to Half the Donations, and the Survivor to the other Half: But if the Contract was made without the Intervention of the ſolemn Kiſs, then upon the Death of either Party before Marriage, the Whole of the Eſpouſal-Gifts was to be reſtored to the Donor or his Heirs at Law. And this was made a ſtanding Law by Juſtinian, who [t] inſerted it into his Code. This Ceremony was an Ancient Rite uſed by the Heathens, together with joyning of Hands, in their Eſpouſals: As we learn from Tertullian, who ſays [u], Virgins came veiled to the Men, when they made their Eſpou-ſals by a Kiſs and joyning of their Right Hands together; which was the firſt Reſig-nation of their Virgin-Baſhfulneſs, when they joyned both in Body and Spirit with a Man. Now theſe Ceremonies, being Innocent in themſelves, ſeem to have been adopted by Chriſtians

Christians with other such Customs into their Espousals, who never scrupled any Innocent Rites because they had been used by Heathens, except such as naturally tended to defile them with some unavoidable Stain of Idolatry and Superstition.

SECT. 7. And by settling of a Dowry in Writing.

ANOTHER Part of the Espousals was the Husband's settling a Dowry upon the Woman, to which she should be intituled after his Death. There are several Laws in both the Codes relating to this Matter [x], and containing Abundance of Law-Cases, which are not proper to be inserted in this Discourse. I only observe Two Things: First, That the Stipulation or Promise of a Dowry was so usual, that one of the Councils of Arles, mentioned by Gratian [y], has a Canon that orders, That no Marriage should be made without a Dowry, but that there should be something more or less promised according to Mens Ability. Secondly, This Stipulation was commonly made in Writing or Publick Instruments under Hand and Seal: Whence the Civil Law so often speaks of the Instrumenta Dotalia, the Instruments of Dowry, that were ordinarily required in Marriage-Contracts. And in Allusion to these, Asterius Amasenus [z] dissuadiug Men from Divorce, asks them, How they could rescind and cancel their Covenants of Marriage? What Covenants do you think I mean? Those wherein the Dowry is written signed with your own Hand, and sealed with your own Seal? These are strong and firm enough indeed: But I carry my Meaning a little higher, to the Words of Adam: This is Flesh of my Flesh, and Bone of my Bone: She shall be called Woman. This is a plain Allusion to the then known Custom of making Instruments of Dowry before Marriage, and confirming them with their Hand and Seal, to give them legal Strength and Obligation.

SECT. 8. And by transacting the whole Affair before a competent Number of Witnesses.

TO make the whole Business of Espousals not only the more solemn, but also the more firm and sure, it was usual to transact the whole Affair publickly before a competent Number of chosen Witnesses, that is, in the Presence of the Friends of each Party, to avoid chiefly clandestine Contracts. I know not whether the Law specified any certain Number, otherwise then calling it Frequentia [a] & Fides Amicorum, the Presence and Testimony of Friends: But Custom seems to have determined it to the Number of Ten: As appears from a noted Passage in St. Ambrose [b], where speaking to a Virgin, that had fallen from her Virgin-state, he thus argues with her: If any Woman, who before Ten Witnesses has made Espousals, and is joyned in Marriage with a mortal Man, cannot without great Danger commit Adultery; How do you think will it be, when a spiritual Marriage, that is made before innumerable Witnesses of the Church, and before the Angels, the heavenly Host, is broken by Adultery? This gives us evidently to understand, that then the common Practice was to celebrate both Espousals and Marriage at least before Ten Witnesses to attest them.

SECT. 9. How far the Obligation of Espousals extended.

NOW when the Contract of future Marriage was thus settled by Espousals, it was not lawful for either Party to joyn in Marriage with any other, under very severe Penalties (which both the Civil and Ecclesiastical Law inflicted) unless the Time of Marriage was fraudulently protracted beyond Two Years. which was the Time limited for the Duration of Espousals. Augustus Cæsar by those famous Laws, called the Julian and Papian Laws, had so restrained the Time of Espousals, as that if a Man did did not consummate the Marriage within Two Years, he could reap no Benefit from his Espousals. But whereas Soldiers, who were absent upon publick Affairs, might seem to require a longer Time, Constantine by one of his Laws limited them to Two Years also. So that if a Woman, who was espoused to a Soldier, had waited Two Years, and the Marriage was not compleated [c], she was then at Liberty to marry to any other, because then it was not her Fault, but the Man's, who protracted the Marriage beyond the Time which the Law appointed. But if a Father or a Mother or a Tutor or a Guardian, or any other Relation, who had betrothed a Virgin to a Soldier, should afterward before the two Years were expired, give her in Marriage to any other, he should be liable to be banished, as guilty guilty of a perfidious Breach of Contract. By another Law [d] he alſo appointed, That if a Man who had eſpouſed a Woman, ſhould afterward refuſe to marry her, upon any frivolous Pretence that he did not like her Morals, or her Pedigree, or ſtarted any other ſuch trifling Objection, the Woman might retain whatever Gifts he had made her upon Eſpouſal, and recover of him whatever more he had promiſed her upon the ſame Score, though it was yet actually remaining in his own Poſſeſſion. And on the other hand, If the Woman who was eſpouſed at full Age, that is, when ſhe was Twelve Years old, refuſed to make good her Contract; or her Parents or Guardians would not permit her to do it; or if a Widow, who was of Age to make her own Eſpouſal-Contract, afterward fled from it: then they were not only to forfeit all their Eſpouſal-Gifts, but alſo to be amerced Quadruple for their Falſeneſs and Breach of Contract. As appears from ſeveral Laws [e] of Theodoſius and Honorius, which intimate alſo, that this was the old Julian and Papian Law of the Roman Empire from the Time of Auguſtus. And though Leo and Anthemius a little moderated this Penalty, yet they did not quite take it away, but only reduced it from Quadruple to double, and ſo Juſtinian [f] left it as the ſtanding Law of the Empire in his Code. The Eccleſiaſtical Law was no leſs ſevere againſt all ſuch Perfidiouſneſs in Eſpouſal Contracts. For the Council of Eliberis orders [g], That if any Parents broke the Faith of Eſpouſals, they ſhould for their Crime be kept back Three Years from the Communion. And if either the Man or the Woman, who were eſpouſed, were guilty of the ſame Crime, they ſhould undergo the ſame Puniſhment. It was farther appointed by the Council of Ancyra [h], That if any one ſtole a Woman that was eſpouſed to another, ſhe ſhould be taken from him, and reſtored to the former who had before eſpouſed her, although the Raptor had committed a Rape and done Violence to her. And the Council of Trullo [i] determines it to be downright Adultery for a Man to marry a Woman that was betrothed to another, during the Life of him who had eſpouſed her. Siricius [k] ſays, It was a ſacrilegious Act for a Man to marry a Woman that was before eſpouſed to another; becauſe it was a violating the Benediction which the Prieſt had given to the Woman eſpouſed in order to her future Marriage. By which we are given farther to underſtand, that a Miniſterial Benediction was ſometimes uſed in Eſpouſals, as well as Marriage, though they were then ſeparate Acts from one another. But the Obligation of Eſpouſals is not to be extended farther than the Law required, which in ſeveral Caſes admitted of juſt Limitations and Exceptions; as in Caſe a Parent diſpoſed of a Child in Eſpouſals before ſhe was Ten Years old; or at any other Age againſt her own free Choice and Conſent; or in Caſe a Judge of a Province made Eſpouſals with a Provincial-Woman during the Year of his Adminiſtration; or any other Man protracted the Time of Marriage beyond the Two Years which was limited by Law for the Duration of Eſpouſals. In all theſe Caſes, Eſpouſals became void, and it was no Crime not to fulfil them, becauſe the Laws themſelves only made them obligatory with ſuch Proviſions and Reſtrictions.

SECT. 10. Whether they were ſimply and abſolutely neceſſary to precede a juſt and legal Marriage?

THERE remains one Queſtion more to be reſolved concerning Eſpouſals, that is, Whether in Whole or in Part the Ceremony of Eſpouſals was ſimply and abſolutely neceſſary to go before a Marriage, to make it juſt and legal? Theſe are two very different Queſtions, Whether it be neceſſary to obſerve an Eſpouſal-Contract? And, Whether it be neceſſary to make ſuch a Contract at all before Marriage, in order to make the Marriage legal? And as in the firſt Queſtion the Law made the Obligation preciſely neceſſary, except in Caſes otherwiſe by Law determined: So in the ſecond Queſtion it laid no general Obligation upon Men at all to make formal Eſpouſals before Marriage, but only upon ſome certain Orders of Men, for the Dignity and Conveniency of their Order. This appears plainly from a Law of Theodoſius Junior, wherein he allows the Legality of Marriage without any of the Ceremonies of Eſpouſal preceding. If the Inſtruments of Donation, or the Inſtruments [l] of Dowry be wanting, or the Nuptial Pomp, or other Celebrities of Marriage, let no one reckon upon that account that the Marriage is not good, which is otherwiſe rightly made; or that Children born in ſuch a Marriage are not to be eſteemed Legitimate;

if the Marriage be celebrated between Perſons of equal Rank, without any legal Impediment, with the Conſent of both Parties, and the Teſtimony and Approbation of Friends. Here, as Gothofred obſerves, Four Things are preciſely required to a legal Marriage. Firſt, Equality of Condition: A Perſon of Liberal Fortune was not to marry a Slave, or one of Vile and Infamous Character. 2. No legal Impediment muſt prohibit their uniting: A Chriſtian muſt not marry an Infidel or Jew, nor one of his near Kindred, nor a Provincial Judge a Woman of his own Province in the Time of his Adminiſtration: Becauſe theſe were Things prohibited by the Law. 3. There muſt be free Conſent of both Parties, without which no Marriage was valid or firm. 4. There muſt be Conſent of Parents and a ſufficient Number of Friends to atteſt the Fact and prevent Clandeſtine Marriage. Theſe Things being obſerved, there was no Neceſſity of a preceding Eſpouſal, or any of the Ceremonies and Formalities of it, to make the Marriage good in Law; all Neceſſaries being thus provided in the Act of Marriage itſelf, as it is now with us at this Day, among whom the Formality of Eſpouſals is in great Meaſure laid aſide. And thus the Matter continued from the Time of Theodoſius to Juſtinian, who thought it reaſonable to make a little Exception to the former Law. For in one of his Novels (made after his Code, which has the former Law of Theodoſius in the ſame Terms) he afterward made a Diſtinction [m] betwixt the Nobles and thoſe of Inferior Order. The greater Dignities, and Senators, and Men in high Stations were not to marry without firſt ſettling the Dowry and Antenuptial Donation, and all other Ceremonies which became great Names. But the better Sort of Military Men, and Tradeſmen, and Men of Honourable Profeſſion, might if they pleaſed, marry without Inſtruments of Donation and Dowry: Yet not altogether without Stipulation of Dowry and Evidence of their Marriage. For they were to go to a Church, and there before the Defenſor of the Church make publick Profeſſion of their Marriage: And he taking Three or Four of the moſt Reverend of the Clergy of the Church, ſhall draw a publick Atteſtation, ſhewing, That in ſuch an Indiction, and in ſuch a Month, on ſuch a Day of the Month, in ſuch a Year of our Reign, when ſuch an one was Conſul, ſuch a Man and ſuch a Woman came before him in that Church, and were joyned together in Matrimony. And if both of them, or either of them, are minded to carry away with them a Copy of ſuch Atteſtation, the Defenſor of the Church and the other Three ſhall make one for them and ſubſcribe it. However that be, the Defenſor ſhall lay up the Original Atteſtation in the Archives of the Church; that it may be a Muniment to all; and they ſhall not be reputed to have come together with Nuptial Affection, unleſs this be done, and the Matter be ſo witneſſed with Letters Teſtimonial. When this is ſo done, both the Marriage and the Off-ſpring ſhall be reputed Legitimate. This is the Order to be obſerved, where there is no Inſtrument of Dowry or of Antenuptial Donation. For the Teſtimony of bare Witneſſes without Writing is ſuſpicious. This was the Order for Perſons of a Middle Rank and Condition to avoid Clandeſtine Marriages. Then the Law goes on for Perſons of the loweſt Rank and Poorer Condition, that is, Husbandmen and common Soldiers, who were occupied in Tilling the Land and War, and were ſuppoſed to be ignorant of Civil Cauſes or the Law; their Marriage is declared Legitimate, though they came together only before Witneſſes without any Inſtrument in Writing at all. Yea, if ſuch an one took a Woman for his Wife upon Oath [n], touching the Holy Goſpels, whether in the Church or out of the Church, the Marriage was Legitimate, if the Woman could make legal Proof that ſhe was ſo married to him; and ſhe might claim a Fourth Part of his Subſtance, though ſhe had no Inſtrument of Dowry to ſhew for it. I have tranſcribed this long Paſſage of Juſtinian, both becauſe it ſhews in general the different Ways of Marrying, that were then allowed by the Civil Law, and alſo in particular that there was no abſolute Neceſſity of the preceding Formality of Antenuptial Inſtruments of Dowry or Donation to make a Marriage firm and valid in all Caſes. And by this we may fairly underſtand and interpret that difficult Canon of the firſt Council of Toledo [o], which orders, That a Man who has not a Wife, but only a Concubine inſtead of a Wife, ſhall not be rejected from the Communion, provided he be content to be joyned to one Woman only, whether Concubine or Wife, as he pleaſes. For before the Matter was fully ſettled by theſe Laws of Theodoſius and Juſtinian, a Woman that was married to a Man without Antenuptial Inſtruments of Dowry and Donation, and other Formalities of the Law was not called a Wife, but only a Concubine, in the Language of the Law: But in the Eccleſiaſtical ſenſe ſhe ſhe was reputed a true Wife, becauſe ſhe bound herſelf by Marriage-Contract to be Juſt and True to one Man, though they joyned together without the preceding Formalities of Antenuptial Eſpouſal, which the Law then required: And therefore the Fathers at Toledo made no Diſtinction between a Wife and a Concubine, as to what concerned the Diſcipline of the Church; provided the Woman, whom the Law called a Concubine, was in Reality a Wife by Marriage-Contract; though ſhe wanted the Formality of Eſpouſal, which was then required in the Civil Law, but afterwards relaxed in ſome Caſes by the Edicts of Theodoſius and Juſtinian, as I have here ſhewed, after the Time of the Council of Toledo. And thus much for the Laws and Rules concerning Eſpouſals before Marriage: I now come to the Rites and Ceremonies of Marriage itſelf.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Manner of Celebrating Marriage in the Ancient Church.

SECT. 1. The Solemnities of Marriage between Chriſtians uſually celebrated by the Miniſters of the Church from the Beginning.

HERE the firſt Queſtions will be, By whom the Ceremonies and Solemnities of Marriage were anciently performed? And whether the Benediction of a Miniſter was neceſſary, as in after-Ages, to make a Marriage Firm and Good according to the Laws of Church and State? To anſwer theſe Queſtions aright we muſt permiſe ſome neceſſary Diſtinctions: 1. Between Marriages made among Chriſtians one with another, and Marriages made between Chriſtians and Infidels, Jews, Heathens, and Hereticks. 2. Between Marriages made according to the Tenor and Direction of the Laws, and Marriages made againſt them. 3. Between Diſapproving of the undue Manner of a Marriage, and Declaring it abſolutely no Marriage, or utterly Null and Void. Now if the Queſtion be firſt concerning Chriſtians marrying one with another, By whom the Solemnity of Marriage was performed? By a Miniſter of the Church, or by any other? I anſwer, That it is moſt probable, that in Fact for the firſt Three Hundred Years the Solemnities of Marriage were uſually performed by the Miniſters of the Church. But Secondly, if Chriſtians happened to marry with Jews, or Heathens, or Hereticks (as they ſometimes did) then as the Church did altogether diſcourage ſuch Marriages, ſo it is probable that the Miniſters of the Church never had any Hand or Concern in ſolemnizing them. But Thirdly, whilſt the Roman Laws allowed ſuch Marriages, it was not in the Power of the Church to reverſe or annul them, but only to puniſh the Delinquents by her Cenſures. Only in ſuch Caſes as the Laws prohibited, as all Inceſtuous Marriages; and Childrens Marrying againſt the Conſent of their Parents, which the Roman Laws not only prohibited, but many Times annulled: I ſay, in ſuch Caſes the Church could go a little farther, being warranted by the Laws of the State, as well as the Laws of GOD to declare ſuch Marriages Void. 4. Though the Church diſapproved of any undue manner of Marriage that the State forbad; as marrying without Eſpouſals and Inſtruments of Dowry, whilſt the Civil Law was againſt it: Yet ſhe did not proceed ſo far, as to declare ſuch Marriages abſolutely no Marriages, or utterly Null and Void. Concerning the Three laſt Points there are no Diſputes worth mentioning among Learned Men. But concerning the firſt Point a great Diſpute is raiſed by Mr. Selden: For he will by no Means allow [a], that it was the General Practice among Chriſtians, when they made Marriages one with another, to have the Marriage ſolemnized by a Miniſter of the Church. He owns, it was ſometimes ſo done by the Choice of the Contracting Parties, or their Parents inclining to it; but he aſſerts, they were under no Obligation of Law ſo to do, nor did any General Cuſtom prevail to give it ſo much as the Title of a General Practice. But Mr. Selden in this is contradicted by eminent Men of his own Profeſſion. He himſelf owns that Dionyſius Gothofred [b] and Hotoman are againſt him in Point of Law: And Jacobus Gothofred, the famous Commentator upon the Theodoſian Code, is againſt him in Point of Practice. The former Gothofred [c] and Hotoman [d] are of Opinion, that the Words Vota Nuptiarum in one of Juſtinian's Laws, means the Celebration of Marriage by the Clergy: The other Gothofred thinks the Paſſage hardly expreſs enough to be a full Proof of the Matter. But then he is clear againſt Mr. Selden in Point of Practice. For he ſays the ancient Church in general, and the African Churches in particular were ever wont to celebrate Marriages by the ſolemn lemn Benediction of the Clergy. And he gives very good Proofs [e] of his Aſſertion. His firſt Evidences are from Tertullian, who in one Place [f] has theſe remarkable Words: How can I ſufficiently ſet forth the Happineſs of that Marriage which the Church makes or conciliates, and the Oblation confirms, and the Benediction ſeals, and the Angels report, and the Father ratifies. In which Words, Gothofred [g] ſays, the Church is ſaid to conciliate the Marriage, becauſe in thoſe Times Men commonly asked Wives of the Eccleſiaſticks, and conſulted them about their Marriage, and the Profeſſion of Marriage was made before them, and finally the Eccleſiaſticks gave Wives by their Benediction. He adds, That Tertullian in this Place alludes to the Five Rites of the Gentiles uſed in their Marriages: 1. The Proxenetæ or Conciliators of Marriage. 2. The Offering of the Kiſs and Eſpouſal-Donations. 3. The Obſignation of the Inſtruments. 4. The Teſtimony and Preſence of Witneſſes and Friends. 5. And laſtly, the Conſent of Parents in the Marriage of their Children. To which Tertullian oppoſes as many Things intervening in a Chriſtian Marriage, viz. 1. The Conciliation of the Church or the Eccleſiaſticks. 2. The Oblation of Prayers (I add, perhaps alſo the Oblation of the Euchariſt, which commonly went together.) 3. The Obligation made by the Benediction of the Eccleſiaſticks. 4. The Renunciation, Faith and Teſtimony of the Angels; and 5. The Ratihabition or Confirmation of our FATHER who is in Heaven. A Second Paſſage alledged by Gothofred out of Tertullian is, where he ſpeaks of Clandeſtine Marriages, ſaying [h], Among us ſecret Marriages, that is, ſuch as are not publickly profeſſed before the Church, are in Danger of being condemned as Fornication and Adultery. And in another Place, ſpeaking of ſecond Marriages, and diſſuading all Perſons from them, he ſays [i], How canſt thou ask ſuch a Marriage of thoſe, who cannot themſelves have what thou askeſt of them? For the Biſhop, the Presbyters, and the Deacons, and the Widows of the Church, whoſe Society thou rejecteſt, are all Monogamiſts, or but once married. Yet they will give Huſbands and Wives as they do Morſels, that is, to every one that asks, and joyn you together in the Virgin-Church, the only Spouſe of One CHRIST. Mr. Selden excepts againſt this Paſſage, as making the Widows have the ſame Concern in the Marriage as the Miniſters: But that is a plain Miſtake: For the Widows might be concerned in giving their Conſent and Approbation, which Tertullian calls the Conciliation of Marriage; but the Miniſters were concerned farther in giving the Benediction alſo. This Benediction is ſpoken of likewiſe by St. Ambroſe, as the Cuſtom of the Italick Churches in his Time: For, ſays he [k] when Marriage ought to be ſanctified by the ſacerdotal Veil and Benediction, how can that be called a Marriage, where there is no Agreement in the Faith? Gothofred thinks alſo that the ſame Cuſtom may be deduced out of thoſe Words of Ignatius [l], It becomes both Men and Women when they marry, to make the Union μὴ γνώμης τῆ ἐπισκόπε, with the Will and Direction of the Biſhop, that the Marriage may be according to the LORD, and not merely according to the Inſtigation of their own Luſts. And farther from what Gregory Nazianzen ſays [m] of the Marriage of Olympias, That a great Number of Biſhops were preſent at the Solemnity, and that he himſelf was preſent in Heart and Will, celebrating the Feſtival, and joyning the Right Hands of the Young Couple together, and both of them to the Hand of GOD. Where joyning of them to the Hand of GOD, is plainly but another Expreſſion for the Benediction. This is farther evident [n] from the Fourth Council of Carthage, which orders, That both the Man and Woman that are to be bleſſed by the Prieſt, ſhould be preſented by their Parents, or by their Paranymphi, Bridemen, who ſtood in the Stead of their Parents. Thus far the Evidences produced by Gothofred. To which we may add that of St. Auſtin, Auſtin, who lived at the Time of the Council of Carthage, where he tells us, It was in the Biſhop's Power abſolutely to give [o] Women in Marriage, but they could not give them to Men that were Heathens. The Benediction is not here expreſsly mentioned, but conſidering the whole Affair was in the Biſhop's Power, the Benediction may eaſily be inferred from it. And Poſſidius in his Life makes expreſs mention of it. For he ſays, It was St. Auſtin's Opinion, which he learned from the Inſtitutes of St. Ambroſe, That a Prieſt indeed ought not to be a Sollicitor for Marriage in making Matches beween Men and Women: But when they themſelves [p] had agreed upon the Matter, then at their joynt Requeſt he ought to be preſent, either to confirm their Agreement, or give it the Benediction. In like manner St. Chryſoſtom inveighing againſt the laſcivious and diabolical Pomps which ſome uſed at their Marriages, he ſays [q], they ought rather to teach the Virgin Modeſty in the Entrance upon Marriage, and to call for the Prieſt, and by Prayer and Benediction, tye the Knot of Unity in Marriage; that the Husband's Love might increaſe, and the Wife's Chaſtity might be improved; that the Works of Vertue might enter into the Houſe by all that was then done, and the Wiles and Works of the Devil be caſt out. This is a plain Account of what that Father deſired, and what was Practiſed by the better Sort of Chriſtians in ſuch Solemnities. Siricius Biſhop of Rome lived about the ſame Time with St. Chryſoſtom and St. Auſtin, and he particularly mentions the Benediction of the Prieſt as uſed in Marriage, giving it as a Reaſon [r], why a Woman that is eſpouſed to a Man, ought not to be married to any other, becauſe among Chriſtians it was reckoned a Sort of Sacrilege to violate the Benediction which was given by the Prieſt to a Woman upon her Eſpouſal. And after him Pope Hormiſdas, who lived about the Year 520, a little before the Time of Juſtinian, made a Decree [s], That no one ſhould make a clandeſtine Marriage, but receiving the Benediction of the Prieſt, ſhould marry publickly in the LORD. Theſe Evidences are abundantly ſufficient to ſhew what was the general Practice of Chriſtians in this Matter from the very firſt Ages.

SECT. 2. In what Caſes it might happen to be otherwiſe.

AND as to any Exceptions that may be alledged againſt ſuch an univerſal Practice, they are of little Moment. Some Marriages indeed, notwithſtanding all the Care and Advice of the Church, were made between Chriſtians and Heathens: And in that Caſe, the Miniſters of the Church could have no Hand in the Marriage, nor give any Benediction to it, becauſe it was directly contrary to the Rules of the Church, that any Chriſtian ſhould marry an Heathen. Again, ſome Canons diſcouraged, though they did not abſolutely forbid ſecond and third Marriages after the Death of a firſt Wife or Husband, and forbid any Presbyter to be preſent at them. The Council of Neocæſarea [t] has a Canon to this Purpoſe: No Preſbyter ſhall be preſent at the Marriage-Feaſt of thoſe that marry twice: For a Digamiſt requires Penance. How then ſhall a Presbyter by his Preſence at ſuch Feaſts give Conſent to ſuch Marriages? And if he might give no Conſent to them by his Preſence, much leſs might he authorize them by his ſolemn Benediction. Peter Martyr [u] and the Gloſs upon Gratian [x] underſtand this Canon as forbidding the Clergy to have any Concern in the Marriage of proper Polygamiſts, or ſuch as married a ſecond Wife whilſt the firſt was living: Which is no more than all the Clergy are prohibited at this Day: For Polygamy may not now be authorized by Sacerdotal Benediction. But if we take the Canon in the common Senſe of marrying a ſecond Wife after the firſt was dead, and ſuppoſe the Clergy forbidden to give the Benediction to ſuch Marriages: Yet this was but a Canon of a particular Council, which never much prevailed. For we are ſure in Fact, that ſecond Marriages had generally Sacerdotal Benediction, as well as the firſt: And therefore whatever might happen upon the Strength of that Canon, could be no great Exception to the general Practice. But that which gave the greateſt Liberty to marry without Sacerdotal Benediction, was the Allowance which the Laws of the Empire granted to other Ways of marrying beſides that of ſolemnizing Marriage by the Benediction of the Clergy. For tho' this had no great Effect for the firſt Three hundred Years, whilſt the Laws continued tinued Heathen: (for then the Generality of Christians were no more disposed to marry without the Benediction of the Bishop or some of the Clergy, than they were inclined to end their Civil Controversies any other Ways than by the Bishop's Arbitration and Decision:) Yet afterwards, when the Laws became Christian, and no Immediate Provision was made to oblige Men universally to solemnize Marriage by the Benediction of the Clergy; but other Ways were still allowed as sufficient to make a Marriage good in Law without it; Men began to fall off from the ancient Practice, some for one Reason and some for another, till by Degrees the Primitive Way of Marrying among Christians came to be much dishonoured and neglected.

SECT. 3. How the Primitive Practice was revived, when it came to be neglected.

THIS made some of the more zealous Emperors, who about the Eighth and Ninth Centuries were a little inclined to correct and reform some Abuses, which the Corruption of the Times had brought in upon the Discipline of the Church, to look upon this Neglect of Marrying without Sacerdotal Benediction as an Abuse among the rest, and a Deviation from the more ancient laudable Practice. Hereupon they set themselves to revive the Primitive Custom, and make some more effectual Provision than had hitherto been done, by more express and general Laws to establish and confirm it. Charles the Great enacted a Law in the West about the Year 780, wherein he ordered, That no Marriage [y] should be celebrated any other Ways but by Blessing with Sacerdotal Prayers and Oblations: And whatever Marriages were performed otherwise, should not be accounted true Marriages, but Adultery, Concubinage, or Fornication. And about the Year 900. [z] Leo Sapiens in the Eastern Empire revived the same ancient Practice, which ever since continued to be the Practice of the Church. Mr. Selden [a] and Gothofred [b] both agree in this, That now the Necessity of Sacerdotal Benediction was established by Law: But they differ in one Point, That Mr. Selden supposes this was the first beginning of the General Practice of making Marriages by Sacerdotal Benediction: Whereas Gothofred thinks, it was only a Reviving of a former ancient general Practice, which for some Ages had been much neglected. And that the Truth lies on Gothofred's Side, the Reader from what has been said will be able very easily to determine.

SECT. 4. Other Ceremonies used in Marriage, as Joyning of Hands and Veiling.

HAVING thus resolved the main Question concerning Sacerdotal Benediction, I now go on with the lesser Ceremonies used in Marriage. Among which we find the Ancient Rite of joyning the Right Hands of the Espousing Parties together. For so we have heard Gregory Nazianzen [c] already representing the Marriage of Olympias, that it was done by joyning the Right Hands of the Young Couple together, and both their Hands to the Hand of GOD. St. Ambrose [d] also takes Notice of the Custom of Veiling, as a Ceremony used in Marriage, when he says, the Christian Marriage ought to be sanctified with the Sacerdotal Veil and Benediction. Tertullian also mentions [e] the Custom of Veiling as used by the Heathens, which he commends, together with the Ceremony of the solemn Kiss and joyning of Hands. But these he speaks of rather as Ceremonies used in Espousals before Marriage: Though we may suppose them to be used in both, since the Latin Name of Marriage, Nuptiæ, is observed by the Roman Antiquaries [f] to have its Name from Obnubere, which signifies to veil or cover.

SECT. 5. Untying the Woman's Hair.

OPTATUS seems to allude to another Ceremony, which I have not yet found expressly mentioned in any other Author: That is, the Woman's loosing or untying her Hair in the Solemnity of Marriage. For writing against the Donatists, who had reconsecrated the Catholick Virgins who before had espoused themselves to CHRIST, he says, Those Virgins, to shew that they had renounced all secular Marriage, had untyed [g] their Hair to a Spiritual Husband, they had already celebrated a Celestial Marriage. Why therefore did ye compel them to untye the Hair again? This seems to allude to some such Custom in secular Marriage: Because he adds, That when Women married a second Time, in the World, this [b] was not used: Which

Which implies, that it was uſed the firſt Time, though omitted in Second Marriages, as many other Ceremonies of Temporal Feſtivity were, viz. Gay Dreſſing, and Crowning, and what naturally followed them, the great Concourſe and Acclamations of the People. But if any one thinks this was not an Alluſion to any Ceremony uſed in ſecular Marriages, but rather a Ceremony actually uſed in Spiritual Marriages of Virgins to CHRIST: Becauſe St. Jerom [i] ſpeaks of their cutting off their Hair in ſome Places, when they renounced the World, and devoted themſelves to CHRIST: I will not ſtand to contend about a Matter both ſmall and obſcure, but go on to that which is more certain in ſecular Marriages, which is our preſent Subject.

SECT. 6. Crowning the new-married Couple with Crowns or Garlands.

WHEN the Sacred Office of Benediction was over, and the married Perſons were ready to depart, it was uſual to crown the Bridegroom and Bride with Crowns or Garlands, the Symbols of Victory. For now it was ſuppoſed they had hitherto ſtriven virtuouſly againſt all manner of Uncleanneſs, and therefore were crowned as Conquerors in their Marriage. St. Chryſoſtom [k] mentions the Ceremony, and gives this Account of it: Crowns are therefore put upon their Heads, as Symbols of Victory, becauſe being invincible they entred the Bride-Chamber without ever having been ſubdued by any Unlawful Pleaſure. So that this Ceremony was uſed as a Mark of Honour and Note of Diſtinction, to reward their Virtue, and put a Difference between them and ſuch as had before addicted themſelves to Fornication and Uncleanneſs. For to what Purpoſe, ſays Chryſoſtom again, ſhould he wear a Crown upon his Head, who had given himſelf up to Harlots, and been ſubdued by Pleaſure? Which ſeems to imply, that Fornicators were denied this Honour, when they came to marry: That being a Part of their Puniſhment among other Acts of Diſcipline in the Church. And upon the ſame Account this Ceremony was ſeldom or never uſed in Second and Third Marriages, becauſe though they were not abſolutely condemned as unlawful, yet they were not reckoned ſo honourable as the firſt. As to the Ceremony in general, Mr. Selden [l] ſays, It is mentioned by Gregory Nyſſen, and Baſil of Seleucia, and Palladius. And it is more than once noted by Sidonius Apollinaris, who ſpeaking of the Marriage of Ricimer, and deſcribing the Pomp of it, ſays, Now the Virgin was delivered into his Hands, now the Bridegroom [m] was honoured with his Crown. And again in his Panegyrick to Anthemius the Emperor, ſpeaking of the ſame Marriage of Ricimer, who married the Emperor's Daughter, he ſays to Ricimer in the Poetical Strain [n], This marriage was procured by your Valour, and the Lawrel Crown gave you the Crown of Myrtle: Alluding to the different Cuſtoms of crowning Warriors with Lawrel and Bridegrooms with Myrtle. This was indeed an old Ceremony uſed in Heathen Marriages; as we learn from Tertullian [o], who reckons it an idolatrous Rite as uſed by them, and therefore ſays Chriſtians did not marry with Heathens, leſt they ſhould draw them to Idolatry, from which their Marriages took their Beginning. But the Ceremony was innocent in its own Nature, and therefore the Chriſtians never made any Scruple to adopt it into the Rites of Marriage which they made among themſelves, becauſe it was a ſignificant Ceremony declaring the Innocency of the Parties joyned together. For which it is ſtill retained among the Greeks, as we learn from Nicetas Biſhop of Heraclea [p] a Modern Greek Writer, and Metrophanes Critopulus [q] and Dr. Smith [r] in his Account of the Greek Church. It is alſo ſpoken of with Approbation by Peter Martyr [s] and other Proteſtant Writers, who commend it as a laudable Ceremony for the Reaſon given by St. Chryſoſtom. And it is ſtill retained among the Helvetians, as Mr. Werndly informs us [t] in his Notes upon the Tigurine Liturgy. But I return to the Ancient Church.

SECT. 7. Carrying the Bride Home to the Bridegroom's Houſe; how far neceſſary in ſome Caſes of Law.

THERE was one Cuſtom more which is not to be reckoned ſo much among the Religious Ceremonies, as to be put into the Account of the Pomp that attended Marriage: And I ſhould not have mentioned it in this Place, but that it was required as neceſſary in ſome Caſes of Law. That is, the Cuſtom of the Woman's being carried by the Husband home to his own Houſe; whence the Phraſe ducere uxorem is ſo commonly uſed on the Man's Part for marrying a Wife; as Nubere is proper on the Woman's Part for being Married, on Accont of the Veiling uſed in marriage, as has been noted before. But I mention it not barely upon this Account, but becauſe in ſome Caſes it was a Condition preciſely required in Law, before a Man could could lay Claim to ſome Privileges belonging to Marriage. As appears from one of the Laws of the Emperor Valens [u] concerning the Tyrones, or Soldiers newly liſted into Military Service. To encourage the ſpeedier Recruiting of the Army, Valens made a Law, That every new Soldier from the Time of his Liſting, or taking the Military Oath, ſhould be free from the Capitation-Tax: And not only ſo, but if he ſerved faithfully Five Years, his Wife alſo ſhould be free from the ſame Tax, provided that after he had married her, he brought her to his own Houſe, and did not leave her in her former Habitation; for if he did ſo, ſhe could not be proved to be his Wife, and therefore ſhould be kept with the Burden of the Tax upon her. Juſtinian [x] made a Law of the ſame Nature for other Caſes: That if any one made a Bargain to give or to do any Thing upon Marriage, whether he called it the Time of Marriage, or named it Marriage itſelf: The Condition ſhould not be interpreted to be fulfilled, till the Feſtivity of Marriage (which comprehended this Ceremony of carrying the Wife to the Houſe of the Husband) was completed. So that it was neceſſary in theſe Caſes for certain Ends and Purpoſes, though otherwiſe the Marriage was ſufficiently perfected without it. Yet it being an ancient Cuſtom, the Pomp of the Marriage was deemed imperfect, till this Ceremony was uſed: As we may gather from that of Sidonius [y], where he ſays, the Pomp of the Marriage was not yet fully compleated, becauſe the New Bride was not yet removed to the Houſe of her Husband.

How far the Marriage-Pomp was allowed or diſallowed by the ancient Fathers.

THIS was an innocent Part of Marriage-Pomp, which was often attended with the Concourſe and Acclamations of the People. Neither was it reckoned any Harm to have a decent Epithalamium, or modeſt Nuptial-Song, or a Feaſt of Joy ſuitable to the Occaſion. But the Feſcennina, or immodeſt Ribaldry, that was ſometimes uſed under the Notion of the Marriage-Pomp, and the Scurrility and Obſcenity of Actors and Mimicks fetched from the Stage, together with the exceſſive Revellings and Dancings, that ſome called innocent Nuptial Mirth and Diverſion, were looked upon as great Abuſes; and accordingly proſcribed and condemned by ſome Canons, and ſeverely inveighed againſt by the Fathers, as Things utterly unbecoming the Modeſty and Gravity of Chriſtian Marriages. The Council of Laodicea ſays [z], Chriſtians ought not at Marriages βαλλίζειν ἢ ὀρχεῖσθαι, to uſe wanton Balls or Dancings, but dine or ſup gravely, as becomes Chriſtians. Some by the Word βαλλίζειν underſtand playing on Cymbals and Dancing to them. So Suidas [a] and Zonaras [b] interpret it. But the Word denotes ſomething more, viz. Toſſing the Hands in a wanton and laſcivious manner: And in that ſenſe there might be good Reaſon to forbid it: Whereas bare Muſick and Dancing without any immodeſt or antick Tricks ſeems hardly a Crime worthy a Canon to forbid it. And if we may judge by Chryſoſtom's ſharp Invective againſt this and other Extravagancies committed at Marriage Feaſts, there muſt be ſomething more extraordinary in them. For ſpeakeng [c] of Iſaac's Marriage with Rebecca, Conſider here, ſays he, how there was no ſatanical Pomp, no Cymbals and Piping and Dancing, no ſatanical Feaſting, no ſcurrilous Buffoonery of filthy Diſcourſe, but all was Gravity, Wiſdom, and Modeſty. Let Huſbands and Wives now imitate theſe. For why ſhould a Husband from the very firſt ſuffer the Ears of his young Spouſe to be filled with Filth from laſcivious and obſcene Songs, and ſuch unſeaſonable Pomp? Know ye not that Youth of itſelf is inclined to Evil? Why do you bring the Myſteries of Venerable Marriage upon the open Stage? You ought to drive away all this Sort, and teach the young Bride Modeſty from the Beginning. So again [d] diſcourſing of the Marriage of Jacob and Leah, You ſee, ſays he, with what Gravity Marriages were anciently celebrated. Hear this all ye that admire ſatanical Pomps, and diſgrace the Honour of Marriage from the very Beginning. Was there here any ſatanical Dancings? Why do you bring ſuch a Plague into your Houſe from the very firſt Moment? Why do you call the Actors from the Stage, and with unſeaſonable Expence wound the Virgin's Chaſtity? It is difficult enough without ſuch Fomentors to moderate the Torrent of youthful Affections: But when theſe Things are added both by Seeing and Hearing, to raiſe a greater Flame, and make the Furnace of the Affections rage more violently, how is it poſſible that the youthful Soul ſhould not be deſtroyed? From all this it is plain, that it was not a ſober Entertainment at a Marriage-Feaſt, nor nor bare Muſick and Dancing, nor a modeſt Nuptial Song, that the Fathers ſo vehemently declaimed againſt as ſatanical Pomps: But it was the obſcene and filthy Songs, the Ribaldry and laſcivious Actions of Mimicks and Buffoons brought from the Stage, joyned with their immodeſt Dancings and other the like Vanities, tending to corrupt youthful Minds both by Seeing and Hearing, which they juſtly inveighed againſt, as unbecoming the Modeſty and Sobriety of Chriſtians. Any other innocent Pomp, or Mirth they freely allowed, denying only ſuch as ſavoured of Lightneſs or Lewdneſs, or Intemperance, which naturally tended, like evil Communications, to corrupt good Manners. And ſo I have done with the Rites and Ceremonies obſerved in the Contracting and Celebrating of Marriage among the ancient Chriſtians. There remains only one Thing behind relating to Marriage, and that is to ſhew how the Bond of Matrimony might in ſome Meaſure be broken and diſſolved by Divorce, and what were reputed juſt and legal Cauſes of Divorce: Of which, becauſe it is a Matter of ſome Moment, I will treat diſtinctly in a particular Chapter.

CHAP. V.

Of Divorces: How far they were allowed or diſallowed by the ancient Chriſtians.

SECT. 1. The Ancients divided about the Senſe of Fornication. Some taking it only for carnal Fornication, and making it the only juſt Cauſe of Divorce.

THE Ancients were not perfectly agreed upon this Queſtion. The Writers of the Church were divided among themſelves, and the Laws of the State differed from both. Our Buſineſs therefore muſt be to explain the Differences of theſe Opinions, and the ſeveral Practices that were founded upon each of them. The Eccleſiaſtical Writers, for the moſt Part agreed in one Thing, That there was no juſt Cauſe of Divorce allowed by CHRIST but only Fornication: But then they differed about the Notion of Fornication: Some took it in the obvious and vulgar Senſe for carnal Fornication only; whilſt others extended its Signification to include ſpiritual Fornication, or Idolatry and Apoſtacy from GOD, which they thought a lawful Cauſe of Divorce as well as the other. And ſome Few thought all other Sins that are equal to Fornication, were included in this Notion of Fornication, and ſo made them to be juſt Cauſes of Divorce alſo. They who thought Fornication or Adultery was to be taken in the proper and literal Senſe, confined the Buſineſs of lawful Divorce to this Cauſe only. Clemens Alexandrinus ſpeaks in general againſt Divorces [a], as they were allowed and commonly practiſed in his Time by the Authority of the Roman Laws, which made it neceſſary in Caſe of Adultery, and warrantable at leaſt in many other Caſes. But Tertullian is more expreſs, ſaying, That the CREATOR allows no Marriage to be diſſolved [b] but only for Adultery. So Chryſoſtom in many Places: CHRIST [c] has left but one Cauſe of Divorce, that is, Adultery. Again, CHRIST [d] has taught us, That all Crimes are to be born with in the Wife beſides Adultery. The Apoſtles, he ſays farther [e], thought it hard and burdenſome that a Man ſhould retain a Woman full of all Wickedneſs, and bear with a furious wild Beaſt in his Houſe: And yet he gave them this Precept, Matth. xix. Whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife, except it be for Fornication, committeth Adultery. And this He repeats in other [f] Places. Lactantius [g] ſeems to have been of the ſame Mind. For he ſays, GOD commanded, That the Wife ſhould never be put away, but when ſhe was overtaken in Adultery: And the Bond of the Conjugal Covenant can never be looſed, except it be when ſhe breaks it; meaning by Falſeneſs to the Marriage-Contract. St. Baſil [h] ſays the ſame, That our LORD forbids Divorce equally both to Man and Woman, ſave only in the Caſe of Fornication. In like manner Aſterius Amaſenus [i]: What GOD hath joyned together, let not Man put aſunder. Hear this ye Huckſters, who change your Wives as ye do your Clothes; who build new Bride-Chambers as often and eaſily as ye do Shops at Fairs; who marry the Portion and the Goods, and make Wives a mere Gain and Merchandize; who for any little Offence preſently write a Bill of Divorce; who leave many Widows alive at once: Know of a Surety, that Marriage cannot be diſſolved by any other Cauſe but Death only or Adultery. St. Jerom underſtands the Precept of CHRIST after the ſame manner [k]: That the Wife is not to be diſmiſſed but only for Fornication. And this was alſo the Opinion of St. Ambroſe.

SECT. 2. Others took it to imply ſpiritual Fornication, that is, Idolatry and Apoſtacy from GOD, and other Crimes of the like Nature.

BUT St. Auſtin and ſome others were of Opinion, That Fornication or Adultery, which our SAVIOUR makes to be the only juſt Cauſe of Divorce, was to be underſtood in a little more extenſive Senſe, ſo as to make it include not only carnal Fornication, but ſpiritual Fornication alſo, that is, Idolatry and Apoſtacy from GOD, and all Crimes of the like Nature. The Fathers of the Fourth Council of Toledo were certainly of this Opinion. For they order [l], That if any Jews were married to Chriſtian Women, they ſhall be admoniſhed by the Biſhop of the Place, That if they deſire to continue with them, they ſhould become Chriſtians. But if upon ſuch Admonition they refuſed, they ſhould be ſeparated: Becauſe an Infidel cannot continue in Matrimonial Conjunction with one that was a Chriſtian. And St. Auſtin for ſome Time was clear in this Opinion. For in his Expoſition of the Sermon upon the Mount [m] he ſays, Idolatry, which the Infidels follow, and all other noxious Superſtition, is Fornication: And the LORD permitted the Wife to be put away for the Cauſe of Fornication. Whence he argues farther, That if Infidelity be Fornication, and Idolatry be Infidelity, and Covetouſneſs be Idolatry, there is no doubt to be made but that Covetouſneſs is alſo Fornication. Whence he likewiſe concludes, That for unlawful Luſts, not only ſuch as are committed by carnal Uncleanneſs with other Men or Women, but alſo for any other Luſts, which make the Soul by the ill Uſe of the Body go aſtray from the Law of GOD, and perniciouſly and abominably corrupt it, a Man may without Crime put away his Wife, and a Wife her Husband, becauſe the LORD excepted the Cauſe of Fornication; which Fornication we are compelled to take in the moſt general and univerſal Senſe. St. Auſtin advances the ſame Notion in many other Places [n]: Yet in his Retractations [o] he ſpeaks a little more doubtfully of this Matter, and ſays, It is a very dark and dubious Queſtion, Whether a Man may put away his Wife for this Sort of Spiritual Fornication; but for carnal Fornication, that he may put her away, is beyond all queſtion. Hence it appears, that this was no very current Doctrine in the Church: And yet there appear ſome Footſteps of it before St. Auſtin. For Hermes Paſtor [p] has the ſame Notion of Fornication: Adultery, ſays he, is not only in thoſe who defile their own Fleſh: But every one commits Adultery, that makes an Idol. Therefore if a Woman ſo commits Adultery, and perſeveres therein without Repentance, depart from her, and live no longer with her: For otherwiſe thou wilt be Partaker of her Sin. And Origen [q] is generally reckoned by Learned Men [r] as an Aſſertor of this Opinion, That if a Woman was guilty of other Crimes equal to, or greater than Fornication; as, if ſhe was a Sorcereſs, or a Murderer of her Children, or the like; that for ſuch Crimes ſhe might be lawfully divorced. But theſe Authorities are not ſufficient to counterballance the former, and therefore I reckon this but a Private Opinion in the Church, for the three firſt Ages.

SECT. 3. This later Opinion from the Time of Conſtantine much countenanced by the Laws of the State. 1ſt. by Conſtantine himſelf.

BUT when Conſtantine came to the Imperial Throne, the Laws of the State all turned this Way, and were made in Favour of Divorce upon other Cauſes beſides that of Carnal Fornication. Women indeed had not immediately in all Reſpects the ſame Privilege as Men: But yet for Three Crimes ſpecified in one of Conſtantine's Laws [s] each Sort were at Liberty to make Divorces. The Man was at at Liberty to give a Bill of Divorce to his Wife, if she was either an Adulteress, or a Sorceress, or a Bawd: And the Woman on the other Hand might give a Bill of Divorce to her Husband, if he was a Murderer, or a Sorcerer, or a Robber of Graves: But for being a Drunkard, or a Gamester, or a Fornicator, she had no Power against him. And here was the great Inequality between the Man and the Woman, that the Man had Liberty by this Law to put away his Wife for Adultery; but the Woman had not the same Privilege against an Adulterous Husband. And this is a Thing frequently complained of by the Ancient Writers, who thought the Man and Woman were upon the same Foot and Right by the Law of GOD, and that a Woman ought to have as much Power to put away a Fornicating Husband, as an Husband to put away a Lewd Wife. And as Gothofred [t] observes, there were some old Roman Laws which made the Privilege equal: As the Rescript of Antonine, mentioned by St. Austin [u], and the Judgment of Ulpian in the Pandects [x]. But notwithstanding these Laws, Custom prevailed on the Men's Side, to give them Licence to dismiss their Wives for Fornication or even any Slight Cause, without allowing the same Privilege to the Woman. As Gothofred there evinces from the Complaints made by Lactantius [y], Gregory Nazianzen [z], Asterius Amasenus [a], Chrysostom [b], Jerom [c] and several others. And Constantine was much inclined to correct these Abuses and Inequality of Privileges in the Matter of Divorce between Men and Women: But in the first Beginnings of Reformation he could not do every Thing as he piously intended: And therefore was in a manner constrained to make this Law with some Inequality to Women, who might be put away for Fornication, though they might not for the same Crime put away their Husbands. But as he in some Measure restrained the great Liberty of Divorcing upon any Occasion, which the Heathen Laws before had allowed Men: So he granted Men Liberty in more Cases to put away their Wives, than had been generally thought consistent before with the strict Interpretation of the Law of CHRIST. For That, as I shewed before, takes the Exception of Fornication or Adultery in the strictest Sence: But Constantine allowed Divorce in Cases that cannot be called Fornication in the strict Sense, but require a much larger Interpretation. And whether he consulted the Christian Bishops at that Time before he made his Law; or whether the Bishops then had that extensive Notion of Fornication including other great Crimes, such as Murder, Sorcery, Sacrilege and the like, as Mr. Selden supposes they had; is what I will not venture to assert, because many in those Times were of a different Opinion.

SECT. 4. Then by Honorius.

HOWEVER it is certain, that the following Emperors trod in the same Steps, still adding more Causes of Divorce to the first Three which Constantine had allowed. For Honorius not only allowed of Divorces both in Men and Women for great Crimes, but also gave Way to Divorces for lesser Faults, only imposing a slight Penalty upon them. For by one of his Laws [d], A Man for great Crimes might put away his Wife, and recover both his Espousal-Gifts and Dowry, and marry again as soon as he pleased: And for lesser Faults he might put her away without any other Punishment than Loss of the Dowry, and Confinement not to marry within Two Years. So that here was plainly permitted a greater Liberty of Divorce than had been allowed by the Law of Constantine before. Which made Asterius Amasenus [e] complain, as we have heard before, that Husbands were mere Hucksters in Marriage; changing their Wives as they did their Clothes; building New Bride-Chambers as often and as easily as they did their Shops at Fairs; Marrying the Portion and the Goods, and making Wives a mere Gain and Merchandize; for any little Offence presently writing a Bill of Divorce, and leaving many Widows alive at once. And Gothofred himself complains [f] that this was the great Blemish of this Age: For it had been more agreeable to the Divine Law, not to have suffered such Divorces at all, rather than to have allowed them only with such slight Penalties put upon them.

SECT. 5. And Theodosius Junior.

BUT Theodosius Junior went yet a little farther in the former Part of his Reign. For he abrogated the two preceding Laws of Constantine and Honorius, and reduced back again into Use the old Roman Laws

Laws about Divorces, by a Novel, An. 439, which runs [g] in theſe Terms: We command that Marriages be contracted by mutual Conſent; but when they are contracted, they ſhall not be diſſolved otherwiſe than by giving a Bill of Divorce. But in giving a Bill of Divorce, and making Enquiry into the Cauſes or Faults proper to be alledged for Divorce, we think it hard to exceed the Rules of the Ancient Laws. Therefore now abrogating thoſe Conſtitutions, which command heavy Penalties to be laid upon Huſbands or Wives diſſolving Marriage, we by this Conſtitution appoint, that Divorces, and Faults alledged as Reaſons of Divorce, and the Puniſhments of ſuch Faults, be reduced to the Ancient Laws and the Anſwers of the Prudent. But this Abrogation of thoſe two former Laws, as Mr. Selden [h] obſerves, was doubtleſs diſpleaſing to very many, as ſeeming to introduce again the Licentiouſneſs of old Paganiſm in the Matter of Divorces, and to permit them to be made for any Fault or Crime whatſoever. Therefore within a few Years Theodoſius himſelf revoked this Conſtitution, making another Law, An. 449. wherein he ſpecified more particularly the Cauſes for which either Man or Woman might lawfully give a Bill of Divorce [i]. If any Woman found her Husband to be an Adulterer, or a Murderer, or Sorcerer, or attempting any Thing againſt the Government, or guilty of Perjury; or could prove him a Robber of Graves, or a Robber of Churches, or guilty of Robbery upon the High-way, or a Receiver or Encourager of Robbers, or guilty of Plagiary or Man-ſtealing; or that he aſſociated openly in her Sight with lewd Women; or that he inſidiouſly made Attempt upon her Life by Poiſon or Sword or any other Way; or that he beat her with Stripes contrary to the Dignity of Freeborn Women; In all theſe Caſes ſhe had Liberty to right herſelf by a Bill of Divorce, and make her Separation good againſt him at the Law. In like manner if the Husband could prove his Wife to an Adultereſs, or a Sorcereſs, or a Murderer, or Plagiary, or a Robber of Graves, or a Robber of Churches, or an Harbourer of Robbers; or that ſhe feaſted with Strangers againſt his Knowledge or his Will; or that ſhe lodged out all Night without any Juſt and Probable Cauſe againſt his Conſent; or that ſhe frequented the Games of the Cirque, or the Theatre, or the Place where the Gladiators or Fencers uſed to fight, againſt his Prohibition; or that ſhe made Attempts upon his Life by Poiſon or Sword or any other way; or was Partaker with any that conſpired againſt the Government; or guilty of any Falſe Witneſs or Perjury; or laid bold Hands upon her Husband: In all theſe Caſes the Man had equal Liberty to give his Wife a Bill of Divorce, and make his Action good againſt her at the Law. But if the Woman divorced herſelf without any of the foreſaid Reaſons, ſhe was to forfeit her Dowry and Eſpouſal-Gifts, and to remain Five Years without marrying again. And if ſhe pretended to marry within that Time, ſhe was to be reputed Infamous, and her Marriage to be reckoned as nothing. But if ſhe rightly proved her Cauſe, ſhe was to recover her Dowry and Antenuptial Gifts, and had Liberty to marry again within a Year. And if the Man made good his Action againſt the Woman, he might retain the Dowry and Eſpouſal-Gifts, and marry again as ſoon as he pleaſed.

SECT. 6. And Valentinian III.

NOT long after Valentinian III, publiſhed a Novel, wherein aboliſhing the old Roman Practice of making Divorces without any other Cauſe but mere Conſent of both Parties (Which though forbidden by Conſtantine, was crept into Uſe again) he reflects upon the firſt Novel of Theodoſius, which alſo permitted ſuch Divorces by mutual Conſent; and ordered, that the Decrees [k] of Conſtantius (or rather Conſtantine, for ſo it ſhould be read) concerning the Diſſolution of Marriage ſhould be obſerved, permitting none to diſſolve their Marriage barely by mutual Conſent.

SECT. 7. And Anaſtaſius.

YET notwithſtanding this, Anaſtaſius about the Year 497. brought in that antiquated Practice again. For though he commended the laſt Conſtitution of Theodoſius Junior as an excellent Law, yet he relaxed the Force of it in this one Point; Ordering [l] that if a Divorce was made by Mutual Conſent of the Man and Woman, without alledging any of thoſe Cauſes againſt each other that are mentioned in Theodoſius's Law, the Divorce ſhould be allowed; and the Woman ſhould not be obliged to wait Five Years before before she married (as some former Laws directed) but after one Year was expired, she should have free Liberty to marry as she pleased a second Time.

SECT. 8. And Justinian.

THUS stood the Business of Divorces in the Civil Law to the Time of Justinian, An. 528, when by a new Decree [m] of his own he not only confirmed all the Causes of Divorce that had been declared legal by the long Constitution of Theodosius, but added one more to them which had never been mentioned before, viz. The Case of Imbecillity in the Man; whom the Wife after Two Years for this Reason might put away by a Bill of Divorce. And this he again repeats in one of his Novels [n], only with this Difference, that instead of Two Years, there should be allowed Three. In another Law [o] he adds to all the former Causes of Divorce these that follow; viz. If the Wife industriously use Means to cause Abortion; or be so lewd and luxurious, as to go into a Common Bath with Men; or endeavour, when she is in Matrimony, to be married to another Man. But he hereby cancelled and abolished all such ancient Laws as allowed of Divorce for light and trivial Causes. He repeats the same Causes of Divorce in other Novels, and adds to them some other Cases. As if a Man or Woman was minded to betake themselves to a Monastick Life, they might then give a Bill of Divorce without alledging any other Cause of Separation [p]. Which was a new Law of Justinian's: For this was never allowed as a just Cause of Divorce before. He allowed also that a Bill of Divorce might be given in Case either Party was a long Time detained in Captivity. Which Sort of Divorces were said to be made cum Bona Gratia [q], not for any Crime, but as it is called, for other reasonable Causes. Thus stood the Matter of Divorces in the Time of Justinian, when the Civil Law was fully revived and settled in the Roman Empire. What new Laws or Alterations were afterward made by the other Princes either in the East or West to the Time of the Reformation, the Reader that pleases may see in Mr. Selden [r], who carries the History down to the last Ages: But this is beyond the Limits of the present Discourse, which is designed only to account for the Practice of the Church or State in the Primitive Ages.

The End of the Twenty Second BOOK.

THE PREFACE TO THE TENTH VOLUME.

WHEN I had finiſhed theſe two Volumes, and compleated the Whole Work that I intended, and ſent it to the Preſs, hoping to give myſelf a little Reſt and Vacation from hard Labour; I was immediately called to a new Work by a Book that was ſent me, bearing the Title of, Eccleſiæ Primitivæ Notitia, or a Summary of Chriſtian Antiquities. To which is prefixed, An Index Hæreticus, containing a ſhort Account of All the Principal Hereſies ſince the Riſe of Chriſtianity; and ſubjoyned, A Brief Account of the Eight firſt General Councils, dedicated to the venerable Society for Propagating the Goſpel in Foreign Parts, by A. Blackamore, in Two Volumes 8°. Lond. 1722. I confeſs, I was very much ſurprized at firſt with the Title and Epiſtle Dedicatory, thinking it to be ſome New Work, that had done ſome mighty Thing, either in correcting my Miſtakes, or ſupplying my Deficiencies, after Twenty Years hard Labour in compiling my Origines for the Uſe of the Church. But as ſoon as I looked into the Preface, and a little into the Book itſelf, I found it to be only a Tranſcript of ſome Part of my Origines, under the Notion of an Epitome, though no ſuch Thing is ſaid in the Title-Page. This ſeems to be an Art of the Gentleman, and the Ten Bookſellers that are in Combination with him, to render my Books unuſeful, and his own more valuable, as containing all I have ſaid and ſomething more at a leſs Price; Which, he ſays, will be of Uſe to thoſe Poor Clergymen and others, whoſe Genius and Inclination lies towards Antiquity, but are not able to purchaſe my Books for the Dearneſs of them. But the Gentleman impoſes very much upon Poor Readers in ſaying this, upon two Accounts: Firſt, In pretending pretending that he gives them an Epitome of my Whole Work, when yet there were two Volumes ſtill behind, which he could have no Opportunity to epitomize, becauſe they were not printed. He ſays indeed in his Preface, That I had happily compleated my Whole Work in Eight Volumes, and gives it an higher Commendation and Elogium, than perhaps it really deſerves: But where he learned, that I had finiſhed my Work in Eight Volumes, I cannot underſtand: I am ſure I had advertized the Readers, and him among the reſt, That I intended Two Volumes more, which now I give them to compleat my Deſign. So that this Gentleman deceives his Poor Brethren, when he pretends to give them an Epitome of the Whole, when it is only in Part; and he muſt put them to the Charge of another Volume to make even his Epitome compleat. But ſecondly, If this Gentleman was ſo concerned for his Poor Brethren, why did he make his Epitome ſo large? The Subſtance of my Books for the Uſe of ſuch Men might be brought into much leſs Compaſs: There needed no Authorities to have been cited for their Uſe, who have no Books to examine and compare them; but they might have reſted upon the Authority of the Compiler; whoſe Authority they may more decently and honeſtly uſe upon any Occaſion, than the Authority of Fathers and Councils, which our Author, with me, very well ſuppoſes they have no Opportunity to ſee. And farther, if our Author meant to gratify his Poor Brethren at an eaſy Rate, why did he clog his Epitome, both before and behind, with Two long Diſcourſes of his own? Sure this was not to make it Cheaper, but to put them to more Expence, in being obliged to buy his Diſcourſes, if they were minded to read any Thing of mine. The fair Way of Epitomizing, had been to have given an Abſtract of my Books by themſelves, and printed his own ſeparate from them: This had been more for the Intereſt of his Indigent Readers, and I believe he will find, it would have been more for the Intereſt of his Bookſellers: I know not what Authority he or his Bookſellers had to reprint my Books in Effect, which are my Property by Law. But I argue not with him at preſent upon that Point. If he had done it in a genteel Way, by asking Leave, and under Direction, he ſhould have had my Leave and Encouragement alſo. Or, if he had done it Uſefully, ſo as truly to anſwer the End he pretends, even without Leave, he ſhould have had my Pardon. But now, he has defeated his own Deſign, both by Unneceſſary and Hurtful Additions of his own, which will not only incommode and incumber his Books, but render them Dangerous and Pernicious to unwary Readers, unleſs timely antidoted and corrected by ſome more skilful Hand. For which Reaſon, ſince they are ſent into the World together with an Abſtract of my Antiquities, I have thought it juſt both to the World, and myſelf to make ſome proper Animadverſions on them. I freely own, That a juſt and authentick Account of Ancient and Modern Sects and Hereſies, done by a Learned and Judicious Hand, would be a very Uſeful Work: And it is what has been long wanted, and long deſired by many Learned Men, who obſerve the Failings of the common Hereſiologiſts on all Sides: But I cannot ſee what an Account of Modern Hereſies has to do with the Antiquities of the Church, or how the Knowledge of Modern Sectaries can help to explain the ancient Uſages and Practices of the Catholicks in former Ages. For which Reaſon our Author might have drop'd that Part of his Work without any Detriment, to have made his Book the Cheaper. But whether it was proper or improper to clog his Work with any Account of Hereſies ancient or modern; what had been done in either Kind, ſhould have been done with Care and Judgment, and ſomething of Exactneſs, which, after all the Compliments he paſſes on my Work, I cannot ſay of his, and I am heartily ſorry that in Juſtice to the World I cannot do it. For ſome of his Accounts are very trifling and jejune, and ſuch as give no Light or Information to a Reader: Others are very falſe and injurious to Great Men, whom he makes Hereticks, when they were really the great Defenders of the Catholick Faith: And his whole Account is very imperfect, omitting ſome of the moſt Conſiderable Sects and Errors, whilſt his Title-Page pretends to be an Account of All the Principal Hereſies ſince the Riſe of Chriſtianity. I love not to cenſure any Man without Reaſon, and therefore I will give ſome evident Proof of each Particular I lay to his Charge: Only premiſing one Thing, which I believe will make the Grammarians ſmile: The running Title of his Treatiſe is, Index Hæreticus, which in Engliſh is not what he calls it, An Account of Hereſies; but, An Heretical Index. Which I believe he did not intend ſhould be its Character: But if we ſoften the meaning of the Word, Heretical, and take it only for erroneous; however ominous it be, it is a very juſt Character indeed. For beſides its other Faults, it is very erroneous in the Characters he gives of very Great and Orthodox and Eminent Saints of GOD, who in his Account are ſome of the worſt of Hereticks. I will make good in Order the ſeveral Charges I bring againſt him.

1. SOME of his Accounts are very trifling and jejune, and ſuch as give no Light or Information to a Reader. In ſpeaking of the Hypſiſtarians, all that he ſays of them, is only this: "That they were Maintainers of "an Hereſy in the Fourth Century, made up of Judaiſm and Paganiſm." Now what is a Reader the wiſer for all this? This Character, being in ſuch General Terms only, would ſerve at leaſt Twenty Hereſies, and a Reader would not know how to diſtinguiſh them, ſeeing no particular Opinions or Practices of Jews or Gentiles are here aſcribed to the Hypſiſtarians, whereby to diſcern them from other Hereticks that mixed Judaiſm and Paganiſm in one common Religion. He ſays in his Preface, One of the chief Reaſons for drawing up his Index Hæreticus was, becauſe in my Books I had only touched lightly and in tranſitu upon Hereſies, as they made for my Purpoſe, without giving any perfect Deſcription of them. Which is very true. But why then did not he give a perfect Deſcription of thoſe Hypſiſtarians, or at leaſt a more perfect one than I had done? He could not be ignorant, whilſt he was epitomizing my Books, that I had given a pretty good Deſcription of them, Book XVI. Chap. 6. n. 2. p. 306. Vol. VII. where I ſay, They called themſelves Hypſiſtarians, that is, Worſhippers of the Moſt High GOD, whom they worſhipped, as the Jews did, only in One Perſon; and they obſerved their Sabbaths, and uſed Diſtinction of Meats, clean and unclean, though they did not regard Circumciſion, as Gregory Nazianzen, whoſe Father was once of this Sect, gives the Account of them. This is ſome Account of them, if it be not a perfect one. Why then did he not give the ſame, or a better Account of them, or at leaſt refer his Reader to my Book, or his own Epitome, p. 335. where he tranſcribes my Account of them? The Gentleman was in haſte when he wrote his Index, and could not ſtand to do Juſtice neither to me nor his Readers. I could add ſomething more concerning theſe Hypſiſtarians out of Gregory Nyſſen, Heſychius and Suidas; but it will be time enough to do that, if I live to give the Reader an Epitome of my own with ſome Additions. I only remark here, That there is no Notice taken of theſe Hypſiſtarians in Epiphanius, Theodoret, Philaſtrius, or St. Auſtin, or any other of the common Hereſiologiſts; and that they who ſpeak of them, ſay nothing of their Paganiſm, however our Author came to blunder upon it.

HIS Account of the Cælicolæ is much ſuch another as the former: "Cælicolæ, "or Worſhippers of Heaven, an Heretical Sect in the Fifth Century; at "which Time they were condemned by the Reſcripts of Honorius the Em-"peror." It is hard again, that he could not have referred his Readers to the ſame Place of my Book, or his own Epitome, where they might have found a much better Account of them. But this Gentleman was to magnify his own Index, and make his Readers believe, that he had done great Feats and Wonders in Diſcovering the Tenets of ancient Hereticks, where I had been ſilent, or but lightly touched upon them; though by theſe Inſtances the Reader will now be able to judge of the Perfection and Excellency of his Performance.

I will give but one Inſtance more of this Kind out of many that might be added. In ſpeaking of the Ethnophrones, he ſays, "They were Hereticks "of the Seventh Century, who taught that ſome Pagan Superſtitions were "to be retained together with Chriſtianity." But why did he not inform his Reader what theſe Pagan Superſtitions were? Is there no Author that ſpeaks particularly of them? The Learned Reader may pleaſe to take this Account from me in the Words of Damaſcen. de Hæreſibus, p. 585. Ethnophrones cum Gentium Inſtituta ſequantur, in cæteris ſunt Chriſtiani. Hi Natales dies, Fortunam, Fatum, omnem Aſtronomiam, & Aſtrologiam, omnemque Divinationem & Auſpicia probant: Auguria, Expiationes, & Placationes, Sortes, Prodigiorum & Portentorum Inſpectiones, Veneficia, aliaſque ejuſdem generis impias fabulas adhibent: iiſdemque quibus Gentes, utuntur Inſtitutis. Dies etiam Feſtos quoſdam Græcorum probant: Dies denique, & Menſes, & Annos, & Tempora obſervant & notant. In ſhort, they were the ſame with thoſe ſuperſtitious Chriſtians, who followed the forbidden Heathen Arts of Divination, Magick, and Inchantment, Judicial Aſtrology, Calculation of Nativities, Augury, Soothſaying, Divination by Lots, Obſervation of Days and Accidents, and the Obſervation of Heathen Feſtivals, of whom I have ſo largely and particularly treated in two whole Chapters, Book XVI. Chap. iv and v. where I ſpeak of the Diſcipline and Laws of the Church made againſt them. And yet this Gentleman will bear his Readers in hand, That he has given a Perfect Account of thoſe ancient Sects and Hereſies, which I only occaſionally and lightly touch upon.

2. THE Second Charge I have againſt his Index is more weighty, That many of his Accounts of Hereſies and Hereticks are very falſe, and highly injurious to the Character and Memory of Great, and Good, and Excellent Men, whom he makes Hereticks, when they were really noble Confeſſors and brave Defenders of the Catholick Faith. For Proof of this I will not inſiſt upon the Characters he gives of Melito Biſhop of Sardes, or of Nicholas the Deacon; but only obſerve, That a Prudent Writer might have ſoftned his Character of each. For though Valeſius [a] bears hard upon Melito, and ſays, with our Author, That he aſſerted GOD to be Corporeal, in a Book which he wrote, Περὶ Θεοῦ ἐνσωμάτου, which Valeſius tranſlates, De Deo Corporeo: Yet other Learned Perſons [b] think this to be a Miſtake; ſince Θεὸς ἐνσώματος does not ſignify a Corporeal GOD; but GOD Incarnate, or made Fleſh, or dwelling in the Body; which is a quite different Thing from GOD's being Corporeal in his Divine Nature. And therefore, ſince thus much might juſtly have been ſaid, by Way of Apology, for Melito, our Author ſhould not have been ſo ſevere upon him, as to ſtyle him an Heretick of the firſt Ages, who held, That GOD was Corporeal; but have alledged in his Favour what ſo many Learned Men have ſaid in Juſtification of him: Eſpecially conſidering what both Polycrates [c] in Euſebius, and Tertullian [d] in St. Jerom, ſay of him, That he was a Man filled with the

the HOLY GHOST, and generally believed to be a Prophet among Chriſtians.

THE ſame Apology might have been made, and in Juſtice ſhould have been made, for Nicholas, one of the Seven Deacons. For though ſome of the Ancients lay the Doctrine of the Nicolaitans to his Charge; yet, as I ſhew in one of the preceding Books [*], a great many others, particularly Clemens Alexandrinus, Euſebius, Theodoret, and St. Auſtin excuſe him, and ſay, The Doctrine was none of his, but only taken up by thoſe who pretended to be his Followers, grounded upon ſome miſtaken Words of his, which had no ſuch Meaning.

BUT I paſs over this to our Author's Account of the Acephali; "Who, "he ſays, were an Headleſs Kind of Hereticks, who owned neither Biſhop, "Prieſt, nor Sacrament, like our Modern Quakers." I know not what Grounds our Author had for this: For he never cites any particular Writer throughout his whole Index: But I know Alexander Roſſe ſaid the ſame before him; and he is one of this Gentleman's Learned Authors. I know alſo that ſome Popiſh Writers [ ] object it to the Lutherans, That they are like the old Acephali, becauſe they have no Biſhops for their Leaders: And I am apt to think, Alexander Roſſe took it, right or wrong, from ſome of thoſe Popiſh Writers. But Alexander has the Misfortune to contradict himſelf: For he ſays in the very ſame Breath, That Severus, Biſhop of Alexandria (he meant Antioch) was Author of this Sect of Acephali, under Anaſtaſius the Emperor, An. 462. And that they were called alſo Theodoſians from Theodoſius their chief Patron, and Biſhop of Alexandria. Strange indeed! That they ſhould have Biſhops for their Authors and Patrons, and yet be without Biſhop, Prieſt, or Sacrament among them! Our Author was aware of this Rock, and had the Wit to avoid it: And therefore here he fairly and wiſely dropped his Guide, and left him to ſhift for himſelf with his Contradictions; telling us the firſt Part of the Story, but not the latter, which would have ſpoiled his Parallel between the Acephali and the Quakers. But how would he make out, if he was preſſed hard to it, That the Acephali had no Biſhops, or were named Headleſs, from the Want of ſuch Heads among them? For my Part, I never met with any ancient Writer that gave this Account of them. Liberatus ſays [f], They were called Acephali, becauſe they would not receive the Doctrine of Cyril of Alexandria, nor follow him as their Head, nor yet any other. But theſe were Biſhops, who would neither take Cyril Patriarch of Alexandria, nor John Patriarch of Antioch for their Head, and were therefore called Acephali, becauſe they would follow neither Patriarch as their Leader. For as thoſe Biſhops were called Autocephali, who had no Patriarch above them, but were a Sort of Patriarchs themſelves, and independent of any other: So thoſe Biſhops, who were ſubject to Patriarchs, and withdrew their Obedience from them, were called Acephali, becauſe they were no Heads or Patriarchs themſelves, and yet refuſed to be ſubject to any other. Patriarchs were then Heads of the Biſhops, as Biſhops were Heads of the People; and theſe are quite different Things; for Biſhops to be called Acephali, becauſe they rejected their Patriarch, and People to be called Acephali becauſe they had neither Biſhop, nor Prieſt, nor Sacrament among them. I am not fond of defending ancient Hereticks, but I think all Men ought to have Juſtice done them, and not be charged with more Hereſies than they were really guilty of. It is allowed on all Sides, that these Acephali were Eutychians and Enemies of the Council of Chalcedon; and as such Leontius [g] also writes against them; But he says not a word of their being without Bishops, Priests or Sacraments: And therefore it lies upon our Author to produce some ancient Voucher, better than Alexander Rosse, for the Charge he brings against them.

I insist not on his little Grammatical Error in his Account of the Saccophori, "Who, he says, were a Branch of the Encratites, so called because they "carried a long Bag, to make the People believe they led a Penitent Life." They were indeed a particular Sect of the Manichees, who are condemned under that Name in several Laws of the Theodosian [h] Code, where the several Branches of the Manichees are proscribed under the distinguishing Names of Solitarii, Encratitæ, Apotactitæ, Hydroparastatæ and Saccofori, which Names they assumed to shelter themselves against the Severity of former Laws made against the Manichees under the Name of Manichees only. But now these Manichæan-Saccophori were not so called from carrying a long Bag, but from wearing Sackcloth, and affecting to appear with it in Publick. Saccus indeed will signify a Sack or a Bag, as well as Sackcloth: But what has a long Bag to do with a Penitent Life? It is fitter to describe a Philosopher than a Penitent: But Sackcloth and a Penitent Life will consist very well together. However the Church did not allow any to affect this Garb, though some Monks, like the Manichees, were very fond of it, and loved to appear publickly with Chains or Crosses about their Necks, and walked barefoot, and wore Sackcloth out of mere Singularity and Affectation: Who are therefore often severely censured for these Things by the Ancients, Epiphanius, St. Austin, St. Jerom, Palladius and Cassian, as I have shewed more fully [*] in another Place: But I never heard of any, either Monks or Hereticks, censured for carrying a long Bag, as an Indication of a Penitent Life: And I am of Opinion, this Gentleman when he considers it again, will reckon this such another Slip as Index Hæreticus; which are but small Failings in Comparison of what I have now farther to object against his Index, which turns Catholicks into Hereticks in several Instances both of former and later Ages.

AMONG the Ancients he does great Injustice to Eustathius, the Famous Bishop of Antioch. For in giving an Account of the Eustathian Hereticks, he says, "The Eustathians were the Spawn of the Sabellian Heresy, and "had their Name from Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, who was deposed in a "Council held in his own City, about the Middle of the Fourth Century, "for holding those Principles." I take no Notice of his Parachronism in saying, That he was deposed in the Council of Antioch about the Middle of the Fourth Century: For though we cannot well call the Year 327 or 329, when that Council was held, the Middle of the Fourth Century; yet this is but a small Mistake, into which he might easily be led by Baronius, or the corrupt Copies of Athanasius and St. Jerom, which place that Council in the Reign of Constantius, instead of Constantine, as the best Criticks, Valesius [i], Gothofred [k], Pagi [l], and Dr. Cave [m] are fully agreed; and as appears from all the Historians, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Philostorgius. But the Thing I complain of, is this, That he makes this Eustathius a Sabellian, and his Followers a Spawn of the Sabellian Heresy. Whereas, in Truth, he was the

the great Defender of the Catholick Faith againſt the Arian Hereſy in the Council of Nice: The Council itſelf tranſlated him from Beræa to Antioch; and he was the firſt Man that opened the Council with a Panegyrical Oration to Conſtantine; as this Author, forgetting himſelf, fairly owns in his Account of the Eight General Councils, p. 476. Athanaſius gives him this Character, That he was a Noble Confeſſor and Orthodox in the Faith, ὁ πίστιν εὐσεβὴς, and exceeding zealous for the Truth [n]. How then could he be a Sabellian, unleſs Sabellianiſm was the true Faith, and Athanaſius a Sabellian alſo? To open this Matter a little farther, and undeceive this Gentleman and his Readers alſo: This Euſtathius was only abuſed in his Character out of Spite and Malice by the Arians, who were his implacable Enemies, becauſe he was a reſolute Defender of the Nicene Faith againſt them. They therefore endeavoured to make him odious, by falſely charging him with Sabellianiſm, and ſeveral other Crimes, upon the Strength of which Calumnies they depoſed him in one of their own Councils at Antioch. Socrates [o] and Sozomen [p] ſay expreſsly, that this Council of Antioch was an Arian Council that depoſed Euſtathius, upon a Pretence, That he was more a Defender of the Sabellian Doctrine, than of the Nicene Faith. Which was an uſual Trick of the Arians, whereby they endeavoured to undermine Athanaſius alſo. Now this being only a mere Calumny and Slander of ſo Great a Man, impoſed upon him by his profeſſed Enemies, the Arians, it does not become any one, who takes upon him to give Unlearned Readers an Account of the ancient Hereſies, to fix this Character upon him, without giving ſome Authority, or at leaſt an Intimation, that he was depoſed only in an Arian Council. I do not ſuppoſe this Gentleman had any ill Deſign in what he wrote about this Matter; but he was either impoſed upon by ſome Modern Hiſtorian, or did not ſufficiently conſider what he found delivered by ancient Writers. Which ſhould make him the more cautious for the future what Guides he follows, and learn to write with Judgment, when he takes upon him the Office of an Hiſtorian for ſuch as cannot contradict him.

He commits the ſame Fault in giving an Account of the Eſſenes, "Who, "he ſays, were a Sect of Chriſtian Hereticks at Alexandria in the Time of "St. Mark." Now there ſeems to be a little more of wilful Miſtake in this. For he could not be ignorant, whilſt he was tranſcribing my Origines, that I had alledged the Authority of Epiphanius, Euſebius, and St. Jerom, to ſhew, That they believed them to be the Orthodox Church, and not a Sect of Chriſtian Hereticks at Alexandria in the Time of St. Mark: And he himſelf in his Epitome, refers his Readers to theſe Authorities alſo. I ſaid farther (which he leaves out) That ſome Learned Modern Writers, ſuch as Valeſius, Scaliger, and Dallæus queſtion, whether they were Chriſtians; whilſt Biſhop Beverege and others maintain the common Opinion. But all agree that they were not a Sect of Chriſtian Hereticks; however this Author came to deſpiſe all Authority, both Ancient and Modern, in fixing that Character upon them. For if they were Hereticks, they belonged to the Jews, and not to the Chriſtians.

In his Accounts of Modern Hereticks (which he might have ſpared in a Book of Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities) he is much more injurious to the Reader, as well as to the Pious Memory of great Numbers of many Excellent Men, and to the Proteſtant Cauſe in general, when he puts the Albigenſes, the Huſſites or Bohemians, the Lollards, the Waldenſes, and the Wicklevites, all into into his Black-List of Hereticks; ascribing to them such monstrous Opinions as they were certainly never guilty of, but only stood falsely charged with them by the implacable Malice of their Romish Adversaries, who treated them just as the Arians did Athanasius and Eustathius in former Ages. It might have become a Protestant Heresiologist and Historian, either to have omitted these Names, or at least to have told his Readers what Excellent Vindications and Apologies have been written by the most Learned Protestant Authors of the two last Ages, to clear their Character of those black and odious Imputations, which their Adversaries falsely and industriously threw upon them. If he knew nothing of these Vindications, he was very ill qualified to act the Part of an Historian in this Case: If he did know them, he was more Unpardonable still, in Concealing from his Readers what in all Justice both to them, and the Church, and the Memory of the Saints, who were so traduced, he ought carefully to have laid before them. If he had thought fit to have looked into my Scholastical History of Baptism, as carefully as he has done into the Origines, he might there have found the Venerable Names of some of those Worthy Men, who have done Justice to the Protestant Cause, in Vindicating those Witnesses of the Truth from the false Aspersions that are cast upon them. For his and the Truth's Sake, I will once more transcribe them, with a little Addition, and more particular Reference to the Books and Places containing those Vindications.

Now is it poſſible, among ſuch a Number of fine Diſcourſes and elaborate Pieces upon this ſubject, a Perſon who writes the Account of Hereſies, ſhould never have met with, or heard of any Apologies that were made in the Behalf of theſe Men; but he muſt needs take his Accounts crudely, as delivered by their profeſſed Enemies? If the Account of Rainerius, their Adverſary, but an Ingenuous Popiſh Writer, be taken, it does them abundantly more Juſtice than this Author. For though he calls them a Sect, yet he ſays, it was an ancient Sect: For ſome ſaid, It had continued from the Time of Pope Sylveſter; and others, from the Time of the Apoſtles: And whereas all other Sects were accompanied with horrible Blaſphemies againſt God, which would make a Man tremble; this of the Leoniſts had a great Shew of Piety: They lived uprightly before Men, and believed all Things aright of God, and all the Articles contained in the Creed: Only they blaſphemed and hated the Church of Rome. Were theſe the Waldenſes, "That "rejected Epiſcopacy, and the Apoſtles Creed, and all Holy Orders, and "the Power of the Magiſtrate, and approved of adulterous Embraces, "and practiſed promiſcuous Copulation, as our Author repreſents them, ſtyling "them, by Way of Contempt, the Religion-mongers, and pious Reformers "of the Twelfth Century?" If our Author were put to apologize for himſelf, he would lay all the Blame upon Alexander Roſſe: For he is his learned Author from whom he tranſcribed. And Alexander tells us ingenuouſly, he had his Accounts from Baronius, Genebrard, Sanders, Gualterus, Bellarmin, Viegas, Florimundus Raimundus, Prateolus, Gregory de Valentia, and ſuch other Writers, who were noted Papiſts, and inveterate Enemies of the Waldenſian and Proteſtant Religion. And ſhould an Author, who writes about Hereſies, have given his Accounts, deſigned for the Uſe of Proteſtant Readers, out of ſuch Authors, when he might have had Recourſe to one or more of ſuch a Number of Excellent Proteſtant Writers, who have cleared up the Character of the Waldenſes, and vindicated their Memory out of their own Writings and Confeſſions of Faith, which are the moſt certain Evidences of their Religion? It is amazing to think how any Ingenuous Writer, who pretends to the leaſt Knowledge of Books and Learning, ſhould give ſuch a Black Character of thoſe Excellent Confeſſors and Witneſſes of the Truth, without ſuggeſting the leaſt Tittle of what ſo many learned Men have ſaid, or what may be ſaid, in their Vindication. I will not ſuſpect our Author of any ſiniſter Deſigns of advancing Popery: But I will be bold to ſay, He could hardly have taken a more effectual Way, had he deſigned to do it, than by inſtilling into the Minds of thoſe who can look no farther than his Accounts, ſuch an odious Character of thoſe Men, of whom ſo many Thouſands laid down their Lives for the Cauſe of true Religion, in thoſe very Points wherein Proteſtants ſtand diſtinguiſhed from Papiſts at this Day. I had once an Occaſion to make this ſame Reflexion in a former Book [*] on another Writer, who is much ſuperior to our Author in Learning and Ingenuity: And I never heard that he took it unkindly at my Hands for ſo doing: For an Hiſtorian's Buſineſs is only to find out Truth as well as he can, and then deliver it to others fairly without Diſguiſe, or any falſe Colours put into it. And therefore I hope our Author will take Occaſion to amend this grand Error, whenever he has Opportunity to write any Thing farther upon this Subject. His Time would be much better imployed in Reading and Conſidering the Books of ſome of thoſe Excellent Writers I have referred him to, than in Collecting an Heap of Rubbiſh from Alexander Roſſe, or any other ſuch Injudicious Writers.

3. But

[*] Scholaſt. Hiſt. of Baptiſm. Part I. Chap. i. p. 97.

3. BUT there is one Thing more I muſt put this Author and his Readers in mind of: That whilſt he bears ſo hard upon the poor Waldenſes, and Albigenſes, and Wickleviſts, and Huſſites, and Lollards, he has not one Syllable in all his Index of the grand Errors of the Romaniſts or Papiſts, under any Title or Denomination whatſoever. He cannot pretend they fell not directly in his Way: For he treats of Modern Sects and Heterodoxies as well as Ancient. Neither did he want his Guide here; for Alexander Roſſe has a whole Section of Fifty Pages in his Book upon the Subject. Or if he had ſaid nothing upon it, yet it might have become a new Hereſiologiſt to have taken Notice of the Errors of the Romaniſts upon ſome Title or other. Their Errors are as Conſiderable and Dangerous, as moſt other Modern Sects; Why then have they no Place in the Index? Is Tranſubſtantiation no Error? Is Idolatry in its various Species of Worſhipping Saints, Angels, Images, Relicks, the Hoſt, and the Croſs, no Crime? Is not the Hildebrandine Hereſy, as our Writers Stile it, that is, the Doctrine of Depoſing Kings an Error worth mentioning? Nor the Pope's Pretence to Infallibility and Univerſal Power over the Church, worthy of a Proteſtant's Cenſure? Is it no Crime to exempt the Clergy from the Power of the Civil Magiſtrate; nor any Wrong done them to impoſe Celibacy upon them? Have the People no Injury done them in keeping the Scriptures locked up in an unknown Tongue? Or being oblig'd to have Divine Service in a Language they do not underſtand? Or in being deprived ſacrilegiouſly of one Half of the Communion? Or in having the abſolute Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion impoſed upon them? Is there no Harm in the Uſe of Interdicts and Indulgences? Are Private and Solitary Maſſes, and the Doctrine of Purgatory, with many other Errors, ſuch Innocent Things, that it was not worth an Hiſtorian's while to give his Readers any Notice of them, or Caution againſt them? Our Author knows, I have fairly combated moſt of theſe Things, and ſhewed them to be Novelties and great Corruptions, in the ſeveral Parts of my Origines, as I had Occaſion to meet with them. Therefore the leaſt he could have done, had been to refer his Readers to thoſe Parts of his own Epitome, or my Origines, where theſe Things are treated, if he was not minded to give them in one View in his own Collections.

BUT he is as favourable to the Anti-Epiſcopal Men, or Presbyterians, as he is to the Papiſts. For he gives them no Place in his Catalogue neither. I ſuppoſe he was in haſt for the Preſs, and conſidered not that he had made ſuch an Omiſſion. But he ſhould now conſider, that he who falſely objects it to the Waldenſes, That they rejected Epiſcopacy, (which they always carefully maintained) ſhould not have paſſed over in Silence thoſe Men who oppoſe Epiſcopacy, when he might with Juſtice and Truth have charged them with it as their proper Heterodoxy, from which their Denomination of Anti-Epiſcopal, or Presbyterian, is taken. But this is not all the Defect of his Index.

IF this Author would have given a Perfect Catalogue of All the Original Hereſies from the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, together with the more remarkable Heterodoxies which appeared in theſe latter Times, he ſhould have inſerted many other Names, both Ancient and Modern, which are now omitted in his Catalogue. In the firſt Century; The Thebulians, Cleobians, Doſitheans, Gorthæans, Merinthians: Not to mention Demas, Hermogenes, Hymenæus and Philetus, Alexander the Copper-ſmith, Diotrephes, and the Doctrine of Jezabel, which are noted in Scripture. In the Second Century, Baſſus, a new Diſciple of Valentinus. In the Third Century, the Diſcalceati, Apocaritæ, Dicartitæ, and Solitarij, which were new Branches of

of the Manichees. In the Fourth Century, the Minæi, Adelphians, Pſathyrians and Lucianiſts, two new Branches of the Arians, Adelophagi, Theoponitæ, Triſcildæ or Triformiani, Hydrotheitæ, Cyrthiani and Pytheciani, new Sects of Arians, Gyrovagi, Homuncionitæ, Ametritæ, Pſychopneumones, Adecerditæ, Sarabaitæ or Remboth, Paſſioniſtæ, Nyctlages, Theophronians, Metagenetæ, Sabbatians or Protopaſchites. In the Fifth Century, the Vigilantians and Maſſilienſes. In the Sixth Century the Marcianiſts or Followers of Marcianus Trapezita, the Tetraditæ, and Severians, with the ſeveral Branches that ſprung from them, the Contobabditæ, Paulians, Theodoſians, Damianiſts, Petrites, Cononites, Corrupticolæ; together with the Errors of Peter Moggus and Peter Gnapheus or Fullo, which made a great Noiſe in the Hiſtory of this Age; as did alſo the Practices of Zeno with his Henoticon, and Anaſtaſius againſt the Council of Chalcedon. In the Seventh Century, Joannes Philoponus and Ethicoproſcoptæ. The Eighth Century was famous for the Diſputes between the Iconoclaſts and the Iconolatræ, Image-Worſhippers and Image-Breakers: And the Errors of the Second Council of Nice might have been ſet forth in a much more advantageous View, had our Author been pleaſed to have acquainted his Reader with the brave Oppoſition that was made againſt it by the Council of Francford and other Councils and Writers of that and the following Ages, in his Hiſtory of the General Councils. The Ninth and the Tenth Ages, Prateolus is pleaſed to ſay, was a perfect Interregnum of Hereticks, a Ceſſation and Reſt of the Church for Two Hundred Years and more from all Heretical Infeſtation. Others more properly call theſe the dark and ignorant Ages, when the Enemy ſowed his Tares, whilſt Men were aſleep. And Baronius himſelf cannot forbear upon ſome Accounts to call them Infeliciſſima Romanæ Eccleſiæ Tempora & omnium luctuoſiſſima, the moſt unhappy and deplorable Times of the Roman Church, when weak Men were in Danger of being ſcandalized by ſeeing the Abomination of Deſolation ſet in the Temple. If our Author had been as inquiſitive as it became him, he might have found the great Idol of Tranſubſtantiation begun to be formed in the Errors of Paſchaſius Rathbertus in theſe Ages, though not fully compleated till ſome Ages after in the Council of Lateran: And the Seeds of the Hildebrandine Hereſy ſpringing up in the bold Attempts of the Popes of theſe Ages againſt the Power of Princes, till it came to its full Maturity under Hildebrand himſelf, called Gregory VII: To mention no more of the Popiſh Errors, which our Author thought fit wholly to paſs over. In the Twelfth Century he might have found the Errors of Durandus de Waldach, and Petrus Abælardus, and Gilbertus Porretanus, and the Coterelli, and the Populicans, to have added to his Index. But above all, the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries would have furniſhed him with great Abundance of more remarkable Errors to have filled up his Catalogue inſtead of the Wicklevites and Huſſites, and Waldenſes, and Albigenſes. For now appeared in the Thirteenth Century the Errors of Abbot Joachim, and Petrus Joannes de Oliva, and John de Parma, the Author of the infamous Book, called, Evangelium Æternum, The Everlaſting Goſpel, which was to ſuperſede and ſet aſide the Goſpel of CHRIST, under Pretence of introducing the more ſpiritual Goſpel of the HOLY GHOST. Eimericus has noted Seven and Twenty Errors and Blaſphemies contained in this Book, which the Mendicant Fryers in thoſe Days highly magnified. But our Author needed not to have gone ſo high as Eimericus for them: For Biſhop Stillingfleet gives an ample Account of them in his Fanaticiſm of the Church of Rome. As he does alſo of the Errors of Gerardus Segarelli, and the Dulciniſts, and Herman of Ferraria, and the Book called, The Flowers of St. Francis, and another, The Conformities of St. Francis and CHRIST. To which may be added the Errors of Raymundus Lullius, and David Dinantius, and Bugaurius de Monte Falcone, together with the Errors of Joannes Guion, and Joannes de Mercuria, and Nicolas de Ultricuria, and Dionyſius Soulechat a Franciſcan, and Joannes de Calore, and one Ludovicus, and Guido an Auſtin Hermit, with ſome others that were condemned in theſe Ages by Guilielmus Pariſienſis and Stephanus Pariſienſis, with the Concurrence of the Univerſity of Paris, and are to be found at the End of ſome Editions of Peter Lombard, with the Errors of Peter Lombard himſelf, under this Title, Articuli in quibus Magiſter Sententiarum communiter non tenetur. Lombard. Sentent. Lugd. 1594. 8°. Spondanus adds to theſe, the Condormientes, and Paſtorelli, and Guido de Lacha, and the Humiliati, and the Ordo Apoſtolorum: All which appeared within the Compaſs of the Thirteenth Century, beſides the Famous Diſputes between the Guelphs and Gibelins, which continued in the following Ages. In the Fourteenth Century, there are the Errors of Arnaldus Montanerius, and Arnaldus de Villa Nova, Bertoldus de Roback, Martinus Gonſalvus Conchenſis, Nicolaus Calaber, Bartholomæus Janoveſius, the Bizochi, and Fratres de Paupere Vita, the Pſeudapoſtoli, Joannes de Latone, Joannes Hato, the Sect of the Impuri, Raimundus de Terraga, Amadeus Luſitanus; the Albati, who travelled with great Admiration for their Sanctity over all Parts of Europe; the Templars, whoſe Order was extinguiſhed in the Council of Vienna; the New Sabellians of Spain, who maintained upon the Hypotheſis of Tranſubſtantiation, That the Euchariſt was both FATHER, SON and HOLY GHOST; the Errors of Franciſcus Ceccus, an Italian Aſtrologer; the wild Diſputes between the Palamites and Joannes Cantacuzenus on the one Side, and Barlaam and Acyndinus on the other, concerning the Light of Mount Tabor; the Revelations of St. Brigit and St. Catharine for and againſt the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary; the Diſputes about the ſame Matter between the Dominicans and the Franciſcans; and the more fierce Diſputes of thoſe Orders concerning the Poverty of JESUS CHRIST; Of which Biſhop Stillingfleet gives an ample Account in his Fanaticiſm of the Church of Rome, and the Author of The Myſtery of Jeſuitiſm an Account no leſs entertaining: Add to theſe, the Errors of Pope John XXII, Ninety of which are laid to his Charge by our Countryman Gulielmus Ockam, for which he himſelf with his Friends Joannes Pariſienſis, Joannes de Poliaco, Petrus de Vineis, Joannes de Janduno, and Marſilius de Padua, with many others, are charged with Hereſy, being in Reality firm to the Defence of the Imperial Power againſt the Papal. A Collection of whoſe Tracts may be found in Goldaſtus Monarchia Imperij Romani, ſeu de Juriſdictione & Poteſtate Imperatoris & Papæ, per varios Auctores. 3 Vol. Hanov. 1612. Fol.

IN the Fifteenth Century there are the famous Diſputes between the Councils of Conſtance and Baſil on the one Side, and the Council of Florence on the other, concerning the Infallibility and Supremacy of the Pope, above General Councils; the Error of the Council of Conſtance in taking away the Cup from the People; the Error of the Council of Baſil in Determining for the Immaculate Conception. There are alſo the Errors of Auguſtinus de Roma, Joannes Parvi, Franciſcus Georgius Venetus, Laurentius Valla, a Reviver of Sabellianiſm, Nicholas Machiavel, Matthæus Palmerius, Petrus de Aranda, Fanatici Suevenſes, Matthias Tiburtinus, a Franciſcan Enthuſiaſt, Tympaniſta Germanus, and a Sect called Opinioniſts, not to mention Henricus Harphius, whoſe Errors, becauſe they are cenſured and expurged only by the Order of the Roman Index, are of a more doubtful Nature. There was alſo in the beginning of this Age, one Vincentius Ferrerius, a Catalonian Preacher, who is now cried up as a great Saint by Spondanus and Baronius, and other Writers of the Roman Church: But there was a Time when he was condemned as an Heretick by Eimericus the Inquiſitor, for aſſerting, among other Things, That Judas repented unto Salvation. To which which may be added the Errors of Quadrigarius and Munerius, cenſured by the Sorbone, An. 1442, and 1470.

THE Sixteenth Century had but a little Time before the REFORMATION was begun by Zuinglius and Luther: Yet in this ſhort Interval our Author might have noted Hermannus Riſſuick, and the Foſſarij in Bohemia, and Petrus Pomponatius in Italy, who read publick Lectures againſt the Immortality of the Soul. And if he had added, Thomas de Vio, commonly called, Cardinal Cajetan, he would have had the Authority of Prateolus and Ambroſius Catharin alſo, who wrote a Book particularly againſt Cajetan, wherein he objects to him above Two Hundred Errors, an Extract of which may be found in Flaccius Illyricus de Controverſiis Religionis Papiſticæ. p. 138. Baſil. 1565. 4°.

WE are now come to the Age of the REFORMATION, where our Author has noted many Sects and Heterodoxies, but omitted abundance more, that were very conſiderable. Catharin, who condemned Cajetan, had alſo his Errors noted by others. Sotomajor in his Index prohibits ſome of his Books to be read, and orders others to be expurged: But one may queſtion whether that was done for his Real Errors, or only for his Opinions inclining to the Proteſtant Side. But his Opinion of an Intermediate State after the End of this World, in a new Earth between Heaven and Hell, for thoſe who are neither ſo Good as to be admitted into Heaven, nor ſo Bad as to be condemned to Hell, is an Error that might have been worthy our Author's Obſervation. He ſpeaks of the Anabaptiſts, but with a great deal of Confuſion, whereas others diſtinguiſh them into at leaſt Fourteen Sects, according to their peculiar Tenets, the Muncerians, the Apoſtolici, the Separati, the Cathari, the Silentes, the Enthuſiaſts, the Liberi, the Adamitæ, the Hutitæ, the Auguſtinians, the Beuckeldians, the Melchiorites, the Georgians, and the Mennoniſts. Some add to theſe the Paſtoricidæ, the Nudipedes, the Manifeſtarij, the Clancularij, the Baculares, the Batemburgici, the Pacifici, the Sanguinarij. Our Author mentions ſome of theſe under their proper Titles, but he omits the greateſt Part of them. And he ought to have diſtinguiſhed our Engliſh Anabaptiſts from thoſe of other Countries, becauſe they abhor many of their Opinions. In giving an Account of the Antitrinitarians, he ſays, they are the Spawn of the old Arians and Samoſatenians, grafted upon their Stock by Michael Servetus. Whereas Servetus was no Arian, nor Samoſatenian, but a Reviver of Sabellianiſm, in which he was followed by Keckerman and many others, who never met with ſo ſevere a Cenſure. The Authors of Modern Arianiſm were Valentinus Gentilis, and Georgius Blandrata, and Gregorius Pauli, and Matthæus Gribaldus, and Franciſcus David, and Joannes Paulus Alciat, and Joannes Campanus, and Lælius Socinus, Uncle to Fauſtus Socinus, of whom our Author ſhould have given a particular Account under their ſeveral Titles. He ſhould alſo have given ſome Account of the Errors of Julius Cæſar Vaninus, and Andreas Cæſalpinus and Hobbes, who were in the ſame Claſs with Spinoſa. It had alſo been worth his while to have told his Reader what were the ſingular Opinions or Heterodoxies of Archer, who among other Blaſphemies maintained publickly in Print, That GOD was the Author of Sin, for which he was cenſured by the Aſſembly of Divines, and his Book burnt by the common Hangman, An. 1645. He ſhould alſo have noted the Errors of Jacob Behmen, and Antonietta Bourignon (againſt whom Dr. Cockburn wrote) and Hieronymus Cardanus, and Curcellæus, and Epiſcopius, and Arminius: and the Errors of Grotius, after he fell into his Deſigns of Comprehenſion, and favourable Interpretations both of the Popiſh and Socinian Tenets, which plainly appear in his later Writings: The Errors alſo of the Lord Herbert of Cherbury; The New Hereſy of the Jeſuits, as the Janſeniſts themſelves call it, which aſſerts the Pope to be Infallible not only in Matters of Faith, but Matters of Fact; and gives him Power to dethrone Princes, and to abſolve Subjects from their Oaths of Allegiance to them: Which Doctrine every where occurs in the Writings of Bellarmin againſt Barclay, and Widdrinton under the Name of Sculkenius, and in Becanus, and Mariana, and Suarez, and Leſſius, and Azorius, and Emanuel Sa, and Hundreds of others, ſome of whoſe Books together with Baronius have been publickly burnt at Paris and Madrid by the Hands of the common Hangman. To theſe might have been added the new Doctrine of the Jeſuits in Morality, largely ſet forth in the Books called, Provincial Letters, and the Jeſuits Morals; chiefly taken out of Eſcobar, Filliucius, and ſuch other Writers. As alſo the Doctrine of Probability, taught by Caramuel, which opens a Way to Licentiouſneſs; for which he ſtands condemned and branded, even in the Roman Index, under this Title, Joannis Caramuelis Apologema pro Antiquiſſima & Univerſaliſſima Doctrina de Probabilitate, prorſus prohibetur. There are alſo no leſs than Forty-five Propoſitions of the Jeſuits Caſuiſtical Divinity, whereof this Doctrine of Probability is one, condemned by Two Bulls of Alexander VII, at the End of the Roman Index, which would have appeared well in our Author's Collection. As alſo the Cenſures of the Parliament of Paris and the Sorbone upon the Propoſitions of Santarellus, An. 1626. wherein he aſſerted the Pope's Depoſing Power: The Cenſure of the Sorbone upon the Jeſuits, An. 1661. for aſſerting, That the Pope has the ſame Infallibility as Jesus Christ in Matters of Fact, as well as Right: And the Cenſure of the Sorbone, An. 1561, upon another Author for aſſerting, That the Pope has Power to diſpoſe of the Dominions of Heretical Princes, and abſolve their Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance and Fidelity. All which may be found in the Book, called, The pernicious Conſequences of the new Hereſy of the Jeſuits. Richerius alſo gives us the Cenſures of the Sorbone, upon one Ludovicus Coubont for aſſerting, That Biſhops have not their Authority immediately from Jesus Christ, but from the Pope: And another upon Ludovicus Cellotius for maintaining, That General Councils have their Authority only from the Pope: And another upon Francis Guillou, and a fourth upon Jacobus Vernant, for the ſame Aſſertions; beſides the Cenſure of Sanctarellus the Jeſuit, which is alſo there related, Richer. Vindic. Doctrinæ Scholæ Paris. In another Book of Richerius, De Poteſtate Papæ in Temporalibus, we have the Arreſts of the Parliament of Paris againſt Tanquerel and Cardinal Perron, and Bernardinus Caſtorius, for Publiſhing the Infamous Bull, De Cœna Domini, and againſt Joannes Caſtellus, and Florentinus Jacob, and Ravaillac who murdered Henry IV. of France, upon the Depoſing Principles; as alſo the Arreſts againſt Bellarmin, and Martin Becanus, and Sculkenius, that is, Bellarmin himſelf again, and Suarez, for their ſeveral pernicious Books upon the ſame Subject. An Account of which would have been a Grace to our Author's Catalogue of Modern Heterodoxies. Farther yet; if he had looked into Biſhop Stillingfleet's Book of the Diviſions of the Roman Clergy, he might there have found, beſides the Schiſms of the Popes in former Ages, and their Contentions with the Emperors for Temporal Power, and the Feuds of the Monaſtick Orders one with another, a particular Account of the Jeſuits Oppoſition to Epiſcopal Power and Juriſdiction, in the Books of Nicholas Smith and Thomas à Jeſu; which Books were cenſured firſt by the Archbiſhop of Paris, then by the Sorbone, and at laſt by the Biſhops of France in an Aſſembly of them at Paris. To theſe he might have added the Books which the Jeſuits publiſhed under the feigned Names of Hermannus Loemelius, and Edmundus Urſulanus, and the Jeſuits Cenſure of the Apoſtolical Creed, to ridicule the Cenſures of Paris: And how theſe again were anſwered by Hallier, and le Maiſtre, and Petrus Aurelius; who ſhewed that theſe Doctrines were maintained by the Jeſuits; "That the Epiſcopal Order was not neceſſary to the Being of a Particular "Church; That Epiſcopacy was not by Divine Right; That Confirmation

" might be given without Biſhops; That the Monaſtical Order was more " perfect than the Epiſcopal; and that Regulars were exempt from the " Juriſdiction of Biſhops. And all that was done at Rome againſt theſe " Doctrines, was only to ſuppreſs the Books on both Sides; which the " Pariſian Doctors highly complained of, That ſuch ſcandalous and ſeditious " Books as thoſe of the Jeſuits, ſhould meet with the ſame Favour at Rome, " as the Cenſure of the Biſhops of France; that their profane and atheiſti- " cal Cenſure of the Apoſtles Creed, muſt have no Mark of Diſgrace put " upon it, nor ſuch Sayings of theirs, wherein they call the Biſhops " and Divines of France by moſt contumelious Names, and ſay, they are " the Enemies of Truth and Piety." If our Author had looked a little farther into Biſhop Stillingfleet, he might have found how barbarouſly they uſed Don Arnando Guerrero, Biſhop of the Philippine Iſlands, becauſe he condemned them in a Synod for acting independent of his Juriſdiction: And the like Uſage of the Biſhop of Angelopolis in America, for the very ſame Reaſon: And what horrible Things are contained in their Catechiſms which they gave to their new Converts in China, which the Congregation de Propaganda Fide condemned in Seventeen Decrees at Rome, An. 1645. The ſhort of their Inſtructions was this: " To ſpeak little of CHRIST Crucified, but to conceal that ſmall and inconſiderable Circumſtance of the " Chriſtian Doctrine as much as may be; to uſe all the ſame Cuſtoms that " Idolaters did, only directing all their Worſhip to CHRIST and the Saints; " Not to trouble themſelves about Faſting, Penance, Confeſſion, and Partici- " pation of the Euchariſt, or the Severity of Repentance and Mortification." Are not theſe as Pernicious Errors as any that have appeared in theſe later Ages, and were they not fit to be mentioned in an Account of Modern Heterodoxies? Alphonſus de Vargas a Spaniard has Four Books under theſe Titles againſt them: Relatio ad Principes Chriſtianos de Stratagematis & Sophiſmis Politicis Societatis Jeſu ad Monarchiam Orbis terrarum ſibi conficiendam. —— Sedis Apoſtolicæ Cenſura adverſus Novam, Falſam, Impiam & Hæreticam Societatis Jeſu Doctrinam nuper in Hiſpania publicata. — Jeſuitarum Fidei Symbolum velut Canticum novum. —— Actio Hæreſis in Societatem Jeſu.

BUT our Author has paſſed over many other Modern Heterodoxies worthy of a Reader's Information: Such as the Errors of Dr. John Dee and Kelly concerning Converſation with Angels, publiſhed by Meric Caſaubon. Lond. 1659. The Errors of Thomas Monetarius and Chriſtophorus Schaplerus: The Nicodemitæ, written againſt by Calvin: Nicholas Drabicius a German Enthuſiaſt: James Brocard an Apocalyptical Prophet cenſured in the Proteſtant Synod of Rochelle, 1581. Paul Grebner a Swediſh Prophet: Joannes Franciſcus Borri: Bernardinus Ochin, Theophilus Aletheus, and the Book called, Polygamia Triumphatrix, John Milton, Cornelius Vythagius, and other Defenders of Polygamy and Divorces: Paioniſm, cenſured by Spanheim in his Elenchus: The Errors of Gulielmus Poſtellus, Pere Simon, the Suenckfeldians, Vincentius Viviani an Italian Fataliſt, Conradus Vorſtius, and the Weigelians and Paracelſians, called the New Prophets of Germany, an Account of whoſe Blaſphemies may be found in Wendelin's Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Theology, and in Hoornbeck, Thummius, and Beckman, who have written particular Books againſt them.

TO theſe might have been added very properly an Account of our late New Prophets in England, who made ſuch a ſtir not many Years ago; and the Maſonites a little before them; togerher with the Rationaliſts, Latitudinarians, Free-Thinkers; and Unioniſts, who pretend that the Doctrine of Papiſts and Proteſtants rightly repreſented are in a manner all one; ſuch were Father Davenport, otherwiſe called Sancta Clara, and Mr. de Meaux Biſhop Biſhop of Condome, and ſuch other Reconcilers and Expoſitors of the Faith. The Errors alſo of Toland and Aſgil, and the Book called, The Rights of the Chriſtian Church, might juſtly enough have found a Place in our Author's Index. So might alſo ſeveral Sects of Fanaticks in the late Confuſions between 1640 and 1660. The Vaniſts or Diſciples of Sir Henry Vane; the New Bemeniſts, headed by Dr. Pordage; the Followers of Dr. Gell, Parker and Gibbon; Lewis du Moulin, the Levellers, and many others who are deſcribed in Edward's Gangræna, and Reliquiæ Baxterianæ, and other the like Accounts of thoſe Times.

Our Author perhaps will now begin to think himſelf a little ſhort and deficient in his ſhort Account of All the Principal Hereſies ſince the Riſe of Chriſtianity: There being ſo many both Ancient and Modern, of which he has given no Account, nor ſo much as named or mentioned. If he ſays, it was needleſs; I ſay ſo too, with Reſpect to the Work he was about: But when he had undertaken it, he ſhould have made Good his Pretence, and taken Care that the Book ſhould have anſwered his Title. But perhaps this could not have been done without Writing a large Volume upon the Subject. Then he ſhould have let it all alone, and his Epitome would have been both the cheaper and the better for it. His Indigent Readers might have known what Ancient Hereſies were, from St. Auſtin de Hæreſibus more Authentically, and alſo at an eaſier Rate: For it is but a Six-penny Book printed by itſelf at Oxford: And for Modern Sects, they are nothing to the Purpoſe of Antiquity; and therefore might have been omitted upon this Occaſion.

As to his Hiſtory of the Eight firſt General Councils, which runs to a great Length, I think that as needleſs as the other. For the late Worthy Author of the Clergy-Man's Vade Mecum, in his Second Volume has given all ſuch Readers a perfect Account of the Canons both of the Univerſal Code, and the Roman Code, and the African Code, down to the Year 787. Which I dare ſay was in the Hands of moſt Poor Clergymen, before our Author in his great Compaſſion thought fit to take Pity on them. If he would have done any thing to the Purpoſe, it ſhould not have been actum agere, but to have given them a ſhort Account of thoſe Latin Councils which the foreſaid Author does not concern himſelf with, but are frequently uſed in my Origines. For which Reaſon I have given an Alphabetical and Chronological Index of them, being about an Hundred and Twenty in all, together with the Number of Canons contained in them: Which is enough to anſwer the End of my Undertaking.

I have ſupplied the Whole alſo with a General Index of Matter, referring diſtinctly to every Particular Volume, Book, Chapter, Section and Page throughout the Whole: And added a Catalogue of ſuch Authors as I have made uſe of in Compiling the Work from firſt to laſt. I had alſo ſome Thoughts of adding another Index of ſuch Authors as I have had no Opportunity to ſee or uſe, which yet may be of great Uſe to thoſe who are minded to improve this Study of Church-Antiquities farther: But becauſe this Gentleman calls me to a Repetition of my Labours, and obliges me to be my own Epitomizer, (Donatum Rude repoſcit, Atque iterum antiquo tentat me includere Ludo) I will reſerve this for a more proper Occaſion: Wiſhing the Reader in the mean Time as much Pleaſure, Satisfaction, and Advantage in Reading without Labour, as I have had with a Mixture of great Labour in Compiling and Digeſting, theſe Collections.

POSTSCRIPT.

POSTSCRIPT.

FOR the farther Improvement of Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, if any vigorous young Men, of Learning, Application and good Judgment, are minded to employ themſelves that Way, theſe following Works may be proper to be undertaken by ſuch as have Opportunity of Books and Leiſure, eſpecially in the Univerſities.

1. A Supplement to my Origines, in a Book of Miſcellaneous Rites: Which, if GOD ſhould be pleaſed to give me better Health, I ſhould be glad to purſue myſelf, though I think it now the leaſt Part of what is wanting.

2. A Catholick Comment upon the Scriptures, which is already begun, and carried on by a Learned and Diligent Writer.

3. A Body of Catholick Divinity in the Words of the ancient Writers; ſuch as the Theologica Dogmata of Petavius the Jeſuit, and Thomaſin the Oratorian among the Romaniſts.

4. A Body of Practical or Moral and Caſuiſtical Divinity: Of which I have had Occaſion to do a little, ſo far as relates to the great Crimes againſt the Ten Commandments, which fell under the Diſcipline of the Church. But a Complete Work in this Kind, extending to all Vertues and Vices, and Practical Caſes of all Sorts, would be much more diffuſive, and of excellent Uſe for Direction of Preachers and Caſuiſts upon all Moral Queſtions.

5. An Authentick Edition of the Canons of the Councils, Greek and Latin, in their Originals. For Tranſlations and Epitomes, though they are of ſome Uſe to the Unlearned, are not ſatisfactory to Men of true Learning and Judgment, who will always have Recourſe to Originals. Dr. Allix once undertook this Work, and had very particular Favour ſhewed him by the Parliament in granting him foreign Paper without Duty, as I have been informed, and yet the Deſign by ſome Means or other proved abortive. The Acts of the Councils, which are different from the Canons, are much too long to be inſerted in ſuch an Edition: But the Canons themſelves may be comprized, in the Original Greek and Latin, in Two moderate Volumes in Quarto. Which would be exceeding uſeful to Scholars of a moderate Fortune, to have the valuable Part of the Voluminous Tomes of the Councils, Twenty or Thirty in Number, brought to their Hand in an Authentick Manner, and at a very eaſy Rate: Whereas now ſuch Editions of the Councils as Labbé's, are ſcarce to be found throughout a whole Dioceſe, except in the Cathedral Libraries or ſome Collegiate Church, where Few, that have Inclination, can have Acceſs to them without both Labour and Expence, except ſuch as are placed conveniently in the next Neighbourhood, as it

pleaſed Providence to place me; without which Happineſs I had never had Ability to have gone through any Part of the Work which now, by the Bleſſing of God, I have lived to finiſh.

6. The Hiſtory of the Perſecutions and Sufferings of the Primitive Martyrs, extracted out of their authentick Acts, and approved Hiſtorians, without the ſpurious Additions of nauſeous Legendary-Writers, and the uncertain Martyrologiſts of later Ages. I once made ſome Attempt toward this myſelf, and read many Parts of it for a Year or two, as Uſeful Afternoon Exhortations to Zeal and Conſtancy in Religion, in my Pariſh Church. But other Employments made me lay it aſide, and leave it Imperfect. Mr. Ruinart's Acta Martyrum ſincera, and Pagi's Critick upon Baronius, will be of particular Uſe to any one who is minded to ſet about ſuch a Work a-freſh, and bring it to Perfection. So will alſo the Book of Meiſner, Kortholt and Gallonius, which Dr. Cave (in his Prolegomena, p. 27. Vol. I. Hiſt. Liter.) recommends to Mens Uſe upon this Subject. Mr. Dodwell's 12th Diſſertation upon St. Cyprian, is an Excellent Diſcourſe to ſet forth the Cauſes of the Courage of the Primitive Martyrs: But the 11th Diſſertation de Paucitate Martyrum, ſerves for no other End, but only to ſhew what a great Man can ſay upon a bad Cauſe, and argue plauſibly upon a very ſlender and falſe Foundation, which the Undertaker of this Work is to beware of, and conſider well what Ruinart has ſaid againſt it.

7. The Hiſtory of Hereſies, Heterodoxies and Schiſms; which, after all the Attempts that have been made upon it, has never been done to any tolerable Satisfaction or Perfection. Dr. Cave tells his Reader the Names of the common Authors that have written upon it: But he concludes after all, in theſe remarkable Words: Hæc tamen aliiſque plurimis, qui addi poterant, non obſtantibus, Opus accuratum de Hæreticis, præcipue antiquis, deque eorum Ortu, Progreſſu, Affinitate, Dogmatibus, Duratione, merito adhuc inter Deſiderata habendum eſt. And I believe the Remarks I have made upon one of the laſt Authors of this Kind, is a pretty good Evidence of the Truth of his Obſervation. I could ſay a great deal more upon this Subject, but what I have already hinted, is ſufficient to a wiſe Undertaker.

8. And laſtly, A Supplement to theſe two Great and Incomparable Writers, Dr. Cave and Du Pin, who have given the World ſuch an excellent Account of Eccleſiaſtical Writers. Nothing hardly can be ſo perfectly done in this Kind, but that ſtill conſiderable Additions may be made to it. The World has expected for ſome Time a Third Volume of Dr. Cave's, and that perhaps might ſuperſede all other Mens Labours: But till that appears, I can be bold to ſay, there are many Authors lie hid from ordinary View: And that is enough to hint this as a Subject capable of farther Improvement: But there would be another Uſe alſo in it, to bring to Light the Knowledge of ſeveral Hiſtorians and other Writers, whoſe Teſtimony would give Confirmation to the Proteſtant Cauſe againſt the Corruptions of the Romiſh Church in later Ages.

And now that I have mentioned this, I will add Two or Three Things more, that would be of great Advantage to the Church, if they were done by Perſons of Care and Judgment, though they have no Relation to Antiquity.

1. An Account of the Roman Indexes of Prohibited and Expurged Books ſhewing the Reaſons for which the Inquiſitors ſo carefully prohibit or expurge them. I am ſure by this Means a good Collection or Catalogue of Witneſſes Witneſſes for the Truth againſt the Manifeſt Corruptions of the Romiſh Church, might be extracted out of the Confeſſions of her own Writers.

2. A New Work of ſhort Marginal Annotations on the Bible, explaining only the moſt obvious Difficulties, that ſeem to puzzle ordinary Readers. The Learned have Annotations abundantly enough to ſerve their Turn: But there ſeems ſtill to be ſomething wanting of this Kind, for ordinary Readers: I have ſometimes put Learned Friends upon this Work, who perhaps were otherwiſe uſefully employed: And if I myſelf had not had the ſame Plea, I would have attempted ſomething of this Nature for the Benefit of Inferior People, who are allowed to read the Scriptures, and yet many Times want proper Helps to underſtand them: Which would be remedied very often, either by giving a little Turn and Light to the Tranſlation, or explaining ſome obſcure Phraſe, or ſome ancient Cuſtom, upon which the Underſtanding of the Text many times depends, with other ſuch Ways of accommodating the Scripture to the Capacities of the Vulgar.

3. Till this were effected, a ſhort Expoſition of thoſe Chapters only which are read as proper Leſſons out of the Old Teſtament, might be a proper Help to Vulgar Capacities and ordinary Readers, to employ their Meditations upon thoſe Parts of Scripture, which the Church has choſen for their Edification and Inſtruction, and ſeem moſt to want ſome Light and Guide, to make them anſwer that End to them. If I am not miſtaken, I have ſeen ſuch a Work of Biſhop Cooper's in former Times: But be it his or any others, I believe a Thing of this Kind judiciouſly done, would generally be allowed to be an Uſeful Work, for the End it is propoſed and intended. We abound indeed with Poſtils, or Expoſitions on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and large Annotations on the Old and New Teſtament: But theſe ſhort Expoſitions I have mentioned are much more needed; and That is enough to recommend the Work to a Pious Undertaker.

THE great Objection againſt all theſe Things is, That each of them is too great an Undertaking for any Single Man. I remember to have heard of the ſame Objection made by ſome againſt Me and my Origines upon Publiſhing the Firſt Volume of them. I bleſs GOD, I have lived to confute the Objection, and give the World a Proof that Great and Laborious Works are not always ſo Frightful as ſometimes they are imagined. I have given a little Specimen of what the Induſtry of a Single Perſon may do, in whom there is neither the greateſt Capacity, nor the ſtrongeſt Conſtitution. And having made the Experiment myſelf, I can with more Decency and Freedom recommend theſe Things to others, who are qualified to undertake them. But in ſaying this, I would not encourage every bold Empirick in Divinity or Hiſtory, to ſet about ſuch Works, which they are not any ways qualified for, either for want of Knowledge or want of Judgment. To all ſuch the Poets Direction is much more Proper: Sumite Materiam veſtris, qui ſcribitis, æquam Viribus, & verſate diu quid ferre recuſent, Quid valeant humeri. The want of obſerving which Rule does abundantly more Harm than Good. For ſuch Mens Writings only ſerve to confound Learning, and leave Things in a much worſe State than they found them. The World has daily Experiment of this, to the Prejudice both of good Literature and Religion. Therefore what I have ſaid by way of Encouragement, is not to theſe, but to the truly Judicious, the Modeſt, and the Learned, who want nothing but Courage proportionable to their Underſtanding, to make them become great Inſtruments of GOD's Glory in doing Uſeful Things for the Service of his Church. This Church has never wanted ſuch Brave Spirits, and I hope never will, to ſet forth Truth with all the Advantages of Learning, and confound the Oppoſition that is made to it by all the Enemies of Religion, whether they be the more Profeſt Attackers, or the Secret Underminers of its Foundation. The Bleſſing of GOD be upon all thoſe, who have Ability and Will to undertake Great and Uſeful Works for the Promotion of Piety and Religion, and to ſtand in the Gap againſt all the Enemies of Truth.

BOOK XXIII.

Of Funeral-Rites, or the Cuſtom and Manner of Burying the Dead, obſerved in the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of Cemeteries, or Burying-Places, with an Enquiry, How and when the Cuſtom of Burying in Churches firſt came in.

SECT. 1. A Cemetery a common Name for a Burying-Place and a Church. How this came to paſs.

BEFORE we ſay any Thing of the Sacred Rites and Cuſtoms obſerved in Burying the Dead, it will be neceſſary to give ſome Account of the Places where they were buried. That the Chriſtians had anciently ſome Places peculiar to themſelves for Burying their Dead, is evident from hence, That they often met in Times of Perſecution to celebrate Divine Service at the Graves and Monuments of their Martyrs: Which had not been proper Places for ſuch Meetings, had they been common to them with the Heathens. Theſe were called by a general Name Κοιμητήρια, Cæmeteria, Dormitories or Sleeping-Places, becauſe they eſteemed Death but a Sleep, and the Bodies there depoſed not properly dead, but only laid to ſleep till the Reſurrection ſhould awaken them. Theſe were otherwiſe called Areæ Sepulturarum [a], and Cryptæ [b] becauſe they were Vaults often made under-Ground, where the Chriſtians could meet with greater Safety to hold Religious Aſſemblies in Time of Perſecution. Upon which Account, as I have noted elſewhere [*], all theſe were common

[a] Tertul. ad Scapul. cap. 3. [b] Hieron. Com. in Ezek. cap. 40. [*] Book VIII. Chap. i. n. 9.

Names both of Burying-Places and Places of Religious Aſſemblies. Whence the Heathens often, when they would forbid Chriſtians to hold any Aſſemblies for Divine-Service, forbid them their Areæ; as in that Place of Tertullian, Areæ non ſint, Let the Chriſtians have none of their Areæ to meet in [c]; and the like Prohibitions, we find in other Places. So in like manner Æmylian the Roman Prefect tells Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria [d], That they ſhould not have Liberty to go into their Cemeteries, as they called them, and there hold their Aſſemblies for Divine Worſhip. In all which Places it is evident the Words are taken promiſcuouſly both for Burying-places and Places of Aſſembling for religious Worſhip. Which would incline a Man almoſt to think, were there not otherwiſe inſuperable Arguments againſt it, that it was the ancient Cuſtom of the moſt primitive Chriſtians to bury in Churches.

SECT. 2. No Burying-places in Cities or Churches for the firſt Three hundred Years.

BUT upon a nicer Inquiry and more exact View, we are ſure there neither was nor could be any Burying in Churches properly ſpeaking for the firſt Three hundred Years. Neceſſity ſometimes forced the Chriſtians, during this Interval, to hold their Aſſemblies in the Burying-places of the Martyrs, and ſo make a Sort of extraordinary and temporary Churches of them; as they might do of any Cave or Place of Retirement in ſuch Circumſtances: For as Dionyſius of Alexandria [e] well words it, Every Place is inſtead of a Temple in Time of Perſecution, whether it be a Field, or a Wilderneſs, or a Ship, or an Inn, or a Priſon. But this Occaſional Uſe in an extraordinary Caſe and extreme Neceſſity, does not properly make them Churches, that is, Places ſet apart only for Divine Service. And therefore the Occaſional Meetings of the Primitive Chriſtians in their Cemeteries, or at the Graves and Monuments of the Martyrs, did not as yet turn them into Churches: Neither can it be ſaid with any Propriety upon this account, that they then buried in Churches, but only that they made a ſort of extraordinary Churches or Places of Occaſional Aſſembly at the Graves or Burying-places of the Dead. Their Churches, which were their ſtanding and proper Churches, were chiefly then in Cities, and in moſt Places it may be in Cities only: And the Roman Laws all that Time forbad all Burying in Cities to Perſons of every Rank and Quality whatſoever. Conſequently the Chriſtians, who lived in a due Obedience and Subjection to the Roman Laws in all Things of an innocent and indifferent Nature, no ways interfering with the neceſſary Rules of their Religion, were as ready to comply with this innocent Law or Cuſtom as any others: And that is an undoubted Argument, that the Chriſtians neither did nor could then bury in Churches. The Heathens indeed themſelves ſometimes brake through the Laws, and in ſpite of Prohibition and Reſtraint would preſume to bury in Cities: But we no where find this Accuſation of tranſgreſſing the Laws in this Particular brought againſt the Chriſtians; but rather the Chriſtians objected the Tranſgreſſion of it to the Heathens: As Savaro in his Learned Notes upon Sidonius Apollinaris [f] ſhews out of ſeveral Paſſages of Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, Lactantius, Julius Firmicus, Prudentius and others. It was one of the original Laws of the Twelve Tables, in Urbe ne ſepelito, neve urito [g], Let no one bury or burn in the City. This was afterward confirmed, upon ſome Tranſgreſſion, by a Decree of the Senate when Duellius was Conſul, as Savaro ſhews farther out of Servius's Obſervations upon Virgil. And then for ſome Time the Practice was to bury only in the Suburbs, and not in the City, as the ſame Author ſhews out of Tully, Livy and Ovid. Afterward upon ſome Invaſion made again upon the Law (for the Heathens were ſtill ambitious of Burying in the Temples) Hadrian publiſhed a new Edict to forbid it [h], laying a Penalty of Forty Pieces of Gold upon any one that ſhould preſume to bury in the City, and as much upon the Judges that permitted it; ordering the Place to be confiſcated, and the Body to be removed. And no Municipal or private Laws in this Caſe, Ulpian ſays, were to be regarded againſt the General Law of the Prince. Antoninus Pius Succeſſor to Hadrian, revived the ſame Law, forbidding any to bury the Dead within the Cities, as Julius Capitolinus [i] the Writer of his Life informs us. And Gothofred [k] cites Paulus the eminent Lawyer, as concurring in the ſame Judgment, and giving a good Reaſon for it: It is not lawful for any Corps to be buried in the City, that the ſacred Places of the City be not defiled. Finally, Diocletian [l] mentions and confirms theſe preceding Laws by a Law of his own, wherein wherein he gives the ſame Reaſon againſt Burying in Cities, as Paulus did before. Hence it was, that Graves and Monuments were commonly erected by the Highways-ſide without the Cities, as Varro an ancient Roman Writer [m] obſerves, giving a farther Reaſon for it, That Paſſengers might be admoniſhed that they themſelves were mortal, as well as thoſe that lay buried there. Auguſtus and Tiberius were buried in the Via Appia [n], and Domitian in the Via Latina [o]. And accordingly Juvenal [p] ſpeaks of the Dead in general as thoſe that lay buried in the Via Flaminia and Latina [q]. St. Peter upon this Account was buried in the Via Triumphalis beyond the Tiber, as St. Jerom [r] informs us: And St. Paul in the Via Oſtienſis, Three miles without the Gates of the City [s], as the ſame Author, and all others that ſpeak of their Deaths aſſure us. Nay, Sidonius Apollinaris aſſures us farther, that the Place where St. Peter was buried, tho' there was then a Church built over it, was ſtill in his Time, An. 470, without the Pomœria, or pace before the Walls of Rome. For ſpeaking of his Journey to Rome, he ſays, before ever he came at the Pomœria of the City, he went and ſaluted the Church of the Apoſtle, which ſtood in the Via Triumphalis, Sidon. Lib. 1. Ep. 5. Priuſquam vel Pomœria contingerem, Triumphalibus Apoſtolorum Liminibus affuſus, &c. Which implies, that his Monument and Church was ſtill without the Walls. And ſo generally the Graves and Monuments of the Martyrs are ſpoken of as being without the Cities. As St. Cyprian's [t] in the Via Mappalienſi: And Sixtus in the Cemetery of Calixtus in the Via Appia [u] and his Six Deacons in the Cemetery of Prætextatus, Via Appia; and St. Laurence in the Crypta, Via Tiburtina. And upon this Account in after-Ages, when they held Aſſemblies at the Monuments of the Martyrs, we always find them ſpeaking of going out of the Cities into the Country, where the Martyrs lay buried. Thus Chryſoſtom in one of his Homilies upon the Martyrs, ſays [x], As before when the Feſtival of the Maccabees was celebrated, all the Country came thronging into the City: So now, when the Feſtival of the Martyrs, who lie buried in the Country, is celebrated, it was fit the whole City ſhould remove thither. In like manner, ſpeaking of the Feſtival of Droſis [y] the Martyr, he ſays, Though they had ſpiritual Entertainment in the City; yet their going out to the Saints in the Country afforded them both great Profit and Pleaſure. From all which it is evident to a Demonſtration, that for the Three firſt Centuries the Chriſtians neither did nor could bury in the Cities or City-Churches, becauſe the Roman Laws, with which they readily complied, were abſolutely againſt it. If afterwards at any Time we meet with Martyrs lying in Churches, that is only to be underſtood of the Relicks of Martyrs tranſlated into the City-Churches, or of Churches newly built in the Country over the Graves and Monuments of the Martyrs: Neither of which has any relation at all to Burying in Churches: Becauſe the one was only the Tranſlation of their Aſhes in an Urn ſome Ages after, and the other rather an erecting of new Churches in the Places where the Martyrs lay buried ſome Ages before, than any proper Burial of the Martyrs in Churches. Though this gave the firſt Occaſion in future Times to the Innovation that was made in this Matter of Burying in Churches, as we ſhall ſee more hereafter.

SECT. 3. But either in Monuments erected by the Publick, or in Vaults and Catacumbs in the Fields under-Ground.

MEAN while let it be obſerved, that the common Way of Burying, for this Interval of Three Hundred Years, was either in Graves with Monuments ſet over them in the Publick Roads, or elſe in Vaults and Catacumbs for greater Safety made in the Fields and under-Ground. For that they had ſuch Vaults for this Purpoſe, called Cryptæ and Arenaria, from their being digged privately in the Sand under-Ground, is evident both from the ancient and modern Accounts of them. Baronius [z] tells us there were about Forty-three ſuch in the Suburbs of Rome: And Onuphrius [a] gives us a particular Account of their Names (taken from the Names of their Founders, or ſuch Charitable Perſons as were at the Pains or Charge to build or repair them:) And what is chiefly remarkable, he tells us the Places where they were, viz. not in the City, but in the Ways or Roads without the Walls, leading from Rome to other Places, as the Via Appia, Aurelia, Oſtienſis, Nomentana, Tiburtina, Latina, Salaria, Flaminia, Portuenſis, Ardeatina, Lavicana, &c. Which are the known Roads leading to the neighbouring Cities about Rome. And by this we may underſtand what St. Jerom means, when he ſays [b], It was his Cuſtom, ſtom, when he was a Boy at School in Rome, on Sundays to go about and viſit the Sepulchres of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, and often to enter into the Vaults, which were digged deep into the Ground, and on each Side as one went in, had along by the Walls the Bodies of ſuch as lay buried: And were ſo dark, that to enter in them was, in the Pſalmiſt's Language, almoſt like going down alive into Hell. The Light from above peeped in but here and there, a little to take off the Horror of Darkneſs, not ſo much by Windows as little Holes and Cranies, which ſtill left a dark Night within, and terrified the Minds of ſuch as had the Curioſity to viſit them, with Silence and Horror. This is to be underſtood, not of any Places within the City, but of thoſe Vaults which lay by the ſeveral Ways round about Rome. And the Deſcription agrees very well with the Account which Baronius [c] gives of one of them, called the Cemetery of Priſcilla, diſcovered in his Time, An. 1578, in the Via Salaria about Three Miles from Rome. He ſays, at the Entrance of it there was one Principal Way, which on either Side opened into divers other Ways, and thoſe again divided into other leſſer Ways, like Lanes in a City: There were alſo ſome void open Places fitted for the holding of Religious Aſſemblies, which had in them the Effigies and Repreſentations of Martyrs. And likewiſe there were Holes at the Top of it to let in Light, but theſe were long ago ſtopp'd up. Theſe Catacumbs of Rome have made the greateſt Noiſe in the World, but there were ſuch belonging to many other Cities. Biſhop Burnet [d] deſcribes thoſe of Naples, which he ſays are without the City, and much more noble and ſpacious than thoſe of Rome. He ſuppoſes them to be made by the Heathens, and not by the Chriſtians: Which is not a Diſpute material in our preſent Enquiry: Becauſe whether they were made by the one or the other (probably ſome were made [*] by each) they were ſtill without the Walls of the Cities; which is enough to our preſent Purpoſe. And to this agrees the Teſtimony of that Ancient Writer under the Name of St. Chryſoſtom, who ſays in general, That every City, nay, every Village [e] had their Graves or Burying-Places before the Entrances into them, that they who went in, might firſt conſider what they themſelves were, before they ſet a Foot into the Cities flouriſhing with Riches, Dignity and Power. There are Graves before Cities, and Graves before Fields: Every where the School of Humility lies before our Eyes. Now I think, upon the whole, we can hardly have better Proof of any Thing than we have of this, whether we conſider Law or Fact, That for the firſt Three Hundred Years under the Heathen Emperors the General Rule and Cuſtom was to bury without the Walls of the Cities, and conſequently neither in Cities nor City-Churches, unleſs by ſome Connivance or Tranſgreſſion.

Hegeſippus indeed and Euſebius (Lib. 2. c. 23.) and St. Jerom after them, ſay, That St. James Biſhop of Jeruſalem was buried in the City near the Temple, where he was ſlain: But St. Jerom owns there were ſome who thought he was buried upon Mount Olivet: Which is much more probable: Becauſe it is certain from the Goſpel, that it was the Cuſtom of the Jews to bury without the City, Matth. xxvii. 60. Luke vii. 12. John xi. 30. And Euſebius ſpeaking of the Mauſoleum or Monument of Helena Queen of Adiabene, ſays expreſsly it was ἐν περαστοις, in the Suburbs of Jeruſalem, Euſeb. Lib. 2. cap. 12. So that for any thing that appears to the contrary, it may be concluded to have been the general Cuſtom both of Chriſtians, Jews, and Romans, to bury all their Dead without the Cities for the firſt Three Hundred Years.

SECT. 4. Burying in Cities and Churches prohibited by Chriſtian Emperors for ſeveral Ages after.

LET us next examine how this Matter ſtood in the next Period of Time, when the Emperors and Laws were both become Chriſtian. Now here we find that the Laws ſtood for many Ages juſt as they were before, forbidding all Burying in Cities; and ſome new Laws were made, particularly prohibiting and reſtraining Men from Burying in Churches. For when ſome Perſons in Conſtantinople began to make an Invaſion upon the Laws, under Pretence that there was no expreſs Prohibition of Burying in Churches made in them; Theodoſius by a new Law [f] equally forbad both Burying in Cities and Burying in Churches; and this whether it was only the Aſhes or Relicks of any Bodies kept above-Ground in Urns, or whole Bodies laid in Coffins: They were all to be carried and repoſited without the City,

City, for the ſame Reaſons that the old Laws had aſſigned; viz. That they might be Examples and Memorials of Mortality and the Condition of Human Nature to all Paſſengers; and alſo that they might not defile the Habitation of the Living, but leave it pure and clean to them. And if any preſumed to tranſgreſs henceforward the Inhibition of this Law, he was to forfeit the Third Part of his Patrimony: And whatever Officer was aſſiſting in ſuch a Funeral, was to be amerced in a Fine of Forty Pound of Gold. And that no little Quirk or Subtilty ſhould elude the Intention of this Law, and leave Men at Liberty to think, that this general Prohibition of Burying in the City, did not exclude Men from burying in the Places where the Aſhes of the Apoſtles and Martyrs were repoſited, it was expreſsly provided, that they ſhould be ſecluded from theſe Repoſitories, as well as any other Places within the City. St. Chryſoſtom takes Notice of this Law, arguing thus with Sinners, whom he reckons no better than mere Graves and Sepulchres, when dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins: Conſider, ſays he [g], That no Grave is allowed to be made in the City: Therefore neither canſt thou appear in the City that is above. For if this be forbidden in any Earthly City, how much more in that which is Heavenly? In like manner in another Place [h]: If we bury dead Bodies without the City, much more ought we to expell thoſe, who ſpeak dead Words, offenſive to others, and utter things they ought to conceal: For ſuch Mouths are the common Peſt and Plague of the City. The Author under the Name of Chryſoſtom [i], probably Severianus of Gabala, one of his Cotemporaries, had his Eye upon this Law and thoſe that went before, when he ſaid, Every City and Village had their Burying-places before their Entrance into them. This is not only an Evidence of what went before, but alſo of the Practice of his own Times, purſuant to the Law, about the Year 400. Sidonius Apollinaris a French Biſhop lived almoſt a whole Century after this, and he plainly intimates, that it was ſtill the Cuſtom in France to bury without the Walls of the City in the open Field. For ſpeaking of the Grave of his Grandfather, he ſays, It was a Field where he lay buried [k], filled with Funeral Aſhes and the Bodies of the Dead, in the Road and Suburbs of the City Arverne. And after this the Council of Braga, An. 563, ſpeaks of it again [l] as a Privilege even then firmly retained in the Cities of France, That no Corps whatſoever was buried within the Walls of any of their Cities: And they make Uſe of this as an Argument, why no one ſhould be buried in any Church in Spain. Of which more by and by. In the mean while if we look into Africk, in the Time of St. Auſtin, An. 401, we find by an Order made in the Fifth Council of Carthage againſt the Donatiſts, that it was then the Cuſtom to bury ſtill in the Fields and High-ways. For the Donatiſts ſo buried the Circumcellions their pretended Martyrs, erecting them Tombs in the faſhion of Altars to be their Memorials. Upon which Account that Council ordered [m], That ſuch Altars that were ſo erected by the Roads or in the Fields, as Monuments of Martyrs, in which it could not be proved that the Bodies or Relicts of true Martyrs were repoſed, ſhould be demoliſhed, if it were poſſible, by the Biſhops of the reſpective Sees, in whoſe Dioceſes they were found. Which was not ſo ordered, becauſe they were buried in the Fields or High-ways; (for that was agreeable to the Law made by Theodoſius not long before;) but becauſe it was doubtful whether they were true Martyrs or not. For neither the Catholicks nor Donatiſts did then generally pretend to bury either in Cities or in Churches; but only ſome few of the Circumcellions, who were the fiercer and hotter Part of them, in ſpite of all Laws buried ſome of their pretended Martyrs in the Churches: But even theſe, as Optatus [n] tells us, were taken up again and caſt out, becauſe it was not lawful to bury any Corps in the Houſe of GOD. This is the firſt Inſtance of any that I remember, being buried in Churches; and then it was contradicted by the Biſhop of the Place, by whoſe Order they were caſt out. No Alteration as yet was made in the Law againſt Burying in Churches. For Juſtinian, who cut off the former Part of Theodoſius's Law againſt Burying in Cities, retained ſtill the later Part [o] againſt Burying in Churches, inſerting it into his Code: Let no one think that the Places of

of the Apoſtles and Martyrs are allowed to bury human Bodies in. And long after this the Prohibition continued to the Time of Charles the Great, though with ſome Exceptions in Favour of ſome eminent Perſons, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel of the Story, examining by what Steps and Degrees the contrary Cuſtom came into the Church.

SECT. 5. The firſt Step made toward Burying in Churches, was the Building of Churches over the Graves of the Martyrs in the Country, or elſe tranſlating their Relicks into the City-Churches.

THE firſt Thing that gave Occaſion to any to think of Burying in Churches, was the particular Honour that was done to Martyrs in the Fourth Century, when the Graves or Monuments where they lay buried, and where the Chriſtians had uſed to aſſemble in Times of Perſecution formerly for the Worſhip of GOD, had now Churches erected over them in the Country: Or elſe their Aſhes and Remains were tranſlated into the City, and depoſited in Churches; and many Times new Churches were erected in the Places where they were laid, thence called Martyria, Propheteia, Apoſtolæa, from the Martyrs, Prophets, or Apoſtles, whoſe Remains were tranſlated into them. This was ſo much the known Practice of the Fourth Century, that I need not ſtand to give any particular Inſtances of it, but only remark in general, That it had ſo much the Approbation of the Church in that Age, as that no ſuch Kind of Martyria or Churches were to be builded, unleſs the Remains of ſome approved Martyrs were repoſited in them. Which appears from a Canon of the Fifth Council of Carthage [p] forbidding any Memorials of Martyrs to be accepted as ſuch, unleſs either the Body or the Relicks of a Martyr were certainly known to be depoſited there. But then this was nothing to Burying in Churches, but only an Honour paid to the Aſhes of the Martyrs, who had been dead and buried, it may be, ſome Hundreds of Years before; and cannot ſo properly be called a Burying in Churches, as a Building of Churches, and new erecting them in the ancient Burying-places of the Dead. But whatever it was, it was a peculiar Privilege of the Martyrs to have their Remains thus repoſited in the Body of the Church: The Laws forbad it ſtill to all others, and the greateſt Perſons had not this Honour and Favour allowed them, to be interred in the ſame Place where the Remains of the Martyrs were repoſed.

SECT. 6. The next was allowing Kings and Emperors to be buried in the Atrium, or Porch and outer Buildings of the Church.

BUT Kings and Emperors had in this Age a peculiar Privilege above the reſt of Men, to be buried in the Atrium, or Church-porch, or ſome other of the outer Buildings of the Church. Euſebius ſays [q], Conſtantine had deſired to be buried near the Apoſtles, whoſe Memorial he had honoured by building a Church called by their Names. But this was not underſtood to be a Deſire to be buried in the Church itſelf, but only in the Porch before the Church. And ſo far Conſtantius his Son fulfilled his Will, as Chryſoſtom more than once informs us. His Son [r], ſays he, thought he did his Father Conſtantine a very great Honour, to bury him in the Fiſherman's Porch. And what Porters are to the Emperors in their own Palaces, the ſame are the Emperors to the Fiſhermen in their Graves. The Apoſtles, as Maſters of the Place, have their Reſidence within; but the Emperors Ambition proceeds no farther, than as Neighbours and Attendants, to take Poſſeſſion of the Porch before the Church. Again, in another Place, ſpeaking of the ſame Matter [s], At Conſtantinople they that wear the Diadem take it for a Favour to be buried, not cloſe by the Apoſtles, but in the Porch without the Church, and Kings are tht Fiſhermens Door-keepers. Thus alſo Theodoſius Senior, and Arcadius, and Theodoſius Junior, are ſaid by ſome Hiſtorians [t] to be buried. Which is probable enough, though the ancient Hiſtorians Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret ſay nothing of it. Hitherto then for Five hundred Years, we ſee the Generality of Chriſtians were ſtill buried without the City, and only Kings and Emperors allowed to be buried within the City; and yet this not in the Church, but only in the Atrium, or Church-yard, or in the Porch, or other outer Buildings of the Church.

SECT. 7. Then the People in the ſixth Century began to be admitted into the Church-yards, but not into the Church.

IN the Beginning of the Sixth Century the People alſo ſeem to have been admitted to the ſame Privilege of being buried in the Atrium, or Church-yard before the Church: But ſtill they were forbidden by Laws both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil to bury in the Church. For Juſtinian in his new Code, dropping the former Part of Theodoſius's Law, which obliged all People to bury without the City, ſtill retains the latter Clauſe [b] which forbids Men to be buried in the Seats of the Martyrs and Apoſtles. And about the

the Year 563, the firſt Council of Braga in Spain allows [x] Men to be buried, if Need require, in the Church-yard under the Walls of the Church, but utterly forbids any to be buried within: Giving this Reaſon for it, That the Cities of France ſtill retained the ancient Privilege firm, to ſuffer no dead Body to be buried within the Walls of the City; and therefore it was much more reaſonable that this Reſpect ſhould be paid to the venerable Martyrs. We may conclude hence, as we have done before, That at this Time in France they were ſo far from allowing Burials in the Church, that as yet they did not ſuffer any Corps to be buried in the Church-yard, no, nor any where within the Walls of the City. But ſome Time after, about the Year 658, or 659, when the Council of Nantes was held, (Chronologers are not exactly agreed about the Time) the People of France were alſo permitted to bury in the Church-yard [y], or in the Porch, or in the Exhedræ or outer Buildings of the Church, but not within the Church itſelf, and near the Altar where the Body and Blood of CHRIST is conſecrated. This Rule is again repeated in the Council of Arles [z] and the Council of Mentz [a] held An. 813, in the Time of Charles the Great, out of which that Emperor made a Rule in his Capitulars [b] to the ſame Purpoſe. Not to inſiſt upon the uncertain Canon of the Concilium Varenſe, as it is called in Gratian [c], which is a Repetition of the Canon of Nantes: We may add to theſe the Rule made in the Council of Tribur [d], another Synod in the Time of Charles the Great: Let no Layman for the future be buried in the Church: Yet ſuch Bodies as are already buried there, may not be caſt out, but the Pavement ſhall be ſo made over the Graves, that no Footſtep of a Grave ſhall appear. And if this cannot without great Difficulty be done for the Multitude of Corps lately buried there, let the Place be turned into a Polyandrium or Cemetery, and let the Altar be removed thence, and ſet in ſome other Place, where the Sacrifice may be religiouſly offered to GOD. While theſe Laws were thus made in the Weſt, giving Men Liberty to bury in Cities and Church-yards, but ſtill reſtraining them in a great Meaſure from Burying in Churches; Leo Sapiens in the Eaſt about the Year 900, abrogated all the old Laws againſt Burying in Cities, and left Men at perfect Liberty to bury within the Walls or without the Walls of any City [e]: But ſtill ſays nothing of any Licence to bury in Churches. So that it is evident beyond all Contradiction, that hitherto there was no general Licence granted by any Laws in any Part of the World, authorizing all Sorts of Perſons to bury in Churches without Diſtinction, but many of the Laws in this Interval run peremptorily and univerſally againſt it.

SECT. 8. And in this Period of Time, Kings, Biſhops, Founders of Churches, and other eminent Perſons, were by ſome Laws allowed to be buried in Churches.

YET ſome Laws within this Period of Time were made with ſome Limitations and Exceptions in the Caſe of great and eminent Perſons, ſuch as Kings, and Biſhops, and Founders of Churches, and Presbyters, and ſuch of the Laity as were ſingularly conſpicuous and honourable for their exemplary Sanctity and Vertue. The Council of Mentz, mentioned before, qualifies the general Prohibition with this Exception; ſaying, None ſhall be buried in the Church, except Biſhops, and Abbots, and worthy Presbyters [f] and faithful Laymen. And the Council of Tribur [g] only forbidding Laymen to be buried in the Church, may be ſuppoſed to allow it to the Clergy. And this Honour was paid to Biſhops and Emperors ſome Time before. For Socrates [h] ſays, Proclus removed the Body of St. Chryſoſtom from Comanæ to Conſtantinople, and laid it in the Church of the Apoſtles. And Evagrius ſpeaks [i] of it as cuſtomary to bury Emperors and Clergy in the Church of the Apoſtles built by Juſtinian at Conſtantinople. This Honour likewiſe was paid to Founders of Churches: They were allowed to be interred in their own Structures. As Sozomen [k] ſays the Wife of one Cæſarius was buried in the Church near the Ambon or Reading-Desk, becauſe her Husband had been the Founder of it. And Valeſius thinks that Conſtantine was therefore buried in the Church of the Apoſtles, becauſe it was built by him. So he had a double Title to this Privilege, Privilege, both as Emperor and Founder. But we may obſerve a Difference between Conſtantine's Age and this. In Conſtantine's Time an Emperor and a Founder was buried only in the Porch: But in the Time of Sozomen any ordinary Founder might be buried in the Middle of the Church.

SECT. 9. The Matter at laſt left to the Diſcretion of Biſhops and Presbyters, who ſhould or ſhould not be buried in Churches. Hereditary Sepulchres not yet allowed in the Ninth Century, but brought in by the Popes Decretals.

THUS the Thing went on from one Degree to another, taking various Steps and Motions, partly by Permiſſion and Relaxation of the Laws, and partly by Tranſgreſſion of the Laws and Connivence in thoſe who had the Execution of them. And the Matter at laſt was left in a great Meaſure to the Diſcretion of Biſhops and Presbyters to determine who ſhould or ſhould not be buried in Churches, according to the Merit and Deſert of the Perſons who deſired it. In the Ninth Century in France ſome Families began to ſet up a Claim to Hereditary Sepulchres in the Church. But this was oppoſed, and the Council of Meaux, An. 845, made an Order, That no one ſhould pretend to bury any Corps in the Church upon Hereditary Right [l], but the Biſhops and Preſbyters ſhould judge who were worthy of this Favour according to the Quality of their Life and Converſation. And after this we find ſome Laws made in general againſt Burying in Churches. As that of the Council of Wincheſter [m] under Lanfranck Archbiſhop of Canterbury, An. 1076. Let no Bodies of the Dead be buried in Churches. But ſo many Exceptions had been made to the old Laws, that it was no hard Matter for any one who had Ambition, or Superſtition enough to think that he ſhould be much benefited in his Death by being buried in the Church, to obtain this Privilege. And theſe two Reaſons opened the Way to greater Liberties by far than the ancient Canons had allowed. For an Opinion that it was of great Service to Mens Souls to be buried in the Church, made Men more eager than ever to obtain this Privilege at their Death. And Pope Leo III. had made a Decree, which Gregory IX. inſerts into his Decretals [n], giving a Sort of Hereditary Right to all Perſons to be buried in the Sepulchres of their Anceſtors, according to the Example, as it is ſaid, of the ancient Patriarchs. This was about the Year 1230. Not long after which Boniface VIII. [o] ſpeaks of it as a Cuſtomary Thing for Men to be buried in the Church and the Sepulchres of their Anceſtors. So that from theſe Decretals, I think, may be dated the Ruin of the old Laws. For they took away that little Power that was left in the Hands of Biſhops to let People bury in the Church, or not bury, as they ſhould judge proper in their Diſcretion, and put the Right and Poſſeſſion of Burying Places in the Church into the Hands of Private Families. And others, who had no ſuch Right, being led by their Ambition or Superſtition, could then eaſily purchaſe a Right to be buried in the Church, which was a Thing that Emperors themſelves did not pretend to ask in former Ages. I have been the more curious in deducing the Hiſtory of this Matter from firſt to laſt, becauſe the Innovation has been thought a Grievance to ſome very Learned and Judicious Men, and what they could have wiſhed to have ſeen rectified at or ſince the Reformation. This Cuſtom, ſays the Learned Rivet [p], which Covetouſneſs and Superſtition firſt brought in, I wiſh it were aboliſhed with other Relicks of Superſtition among us; and that the ancient Cuſtom was revived, to have Publick Burying-Places in the free and open Fields without the Gates of Cities. This would be more convenient for Civil Uſes alſo: Becauſe in cloſe Places the Air cannot but be affected with the nauſeous Smell of dead Bodies: There is no Good done by it to the Dead, and the Living are in manifeſt Danger by it, eſpecially in the Time of contagious Diſtempers, when infected Bodies are promiſcuouſly buried in Churches, wherein Men daily meet and aſſemble together. A Thing, ſays he, which not without Reaſon has ever appeared horrible to me and many others. The like Complaint is made by ſome among the Romaniſts, particularly by Durantus [q], who was an eminent Lawyer and Preſident of the Parliament of Tholouſe. He commends the Piety of the Ancients for not allowing the Dead to be buried in the Church, and Charles the Great for reviving and reſtoring the Primitive Inſtitution, when it had been in ſome Meaſure neglected: And withal, ſpeaks it with great Regret, That whereas heretofore Emperors were buried only in the Church-Porch, now now the Cuſtom is to let the meaneſt of the People commonly be buried in the Church itſelf, againſt the Laws and Inſtitutions of the ancient Chriſtians. To which, after this Digreſſion, I muſt now return again.

CHAP. II.

Some other Obſervations concerning the Place, and Manner, and Time of Burying.

SECT. 1. Conſecration of Cemeteries not very ancient.

HAVING thus far conſidered in general the Place of Burying, I now proceed to ſome more particular Obſervations concerning the Place, and Manner, and Time of Burying among Chriſtians. And here the firſt Queſtion may be, Whether they uſed any formal Conſecration of their Cemeteries as they did of their Churches? Now concerning this, in the firſt Ages there is a perfect Silence. No Writer before Gregory of Tours, who lived about the Year 570, makes any mention of it. But he ſays [a], The Burying-Places in his Time were uſed to be conſecrated by Sacredotal Benediction. Durantus [b] can trace the Cuſtom no higher, and therefore we may conclude, that about this Time, and not before, it became the Practice of the Church. For the Sacredneſs of Sepulchres, that we ſo often read of before this, was from another Reaſon, and not from their formal Conſecration.

SECT. 2. The Sacredneſs of them ariſing from another Reaſon, and not from their formal Conſecration.

FOR the Heathens themſelves were uſed to reckon theſe Places ſacred, and the Violation of them a Sort of Sacrilege and Violation of Religion. As appears from the Edicts of Two Heathen Emperors, Gordian and Julian, which are ſtill retained among the Chriſtian Laws. Gordian [c] calls them Things deſtined for Religion, and Things made a Part of Religion: And therefore orders, That all Robbers of Graves ſhould be proſecuted as Criminals guilty of an Injury done to Religion. In like manner Julian [d] ſays, The Graves of the Dead are conſecrated Hills; and to move a Stone hence, or diſturb the Ground, or break a Turf, has always been accounted next to Sacrilege by our Forefathers: To ſteal away the Ornaments from the Tables or Portico's of Graves, is a Piacular Crime and Violation of Religion, to be puniſhed as doing Injury to the Dead. Juſtinian in repeating this Law of Julian in his Code [e], inſtead of Pœna Manium, reads it Pœna Sacrilegii cohibentes, inflicting both the Name and Puniſhment of Sacrilege expreſsly upon this Crime. And ſo the ancient Poet does in that Diſtich.

Res ea ſacra, miſer, noli mea tangere Fata:
Sacrilegæ Buſtis abſtinuere manus.

Touch not my Monument, thou Wretch: It is a ſacred Thing: Even ſacrilegious Hands commonly abſtain from offering Violence to the Habitations of the Dead. All which ſhews, that Graves and Burying-Places were reckoned ſacred Things both by Heathens and Chriſtians without any formal Conſecration: and the Romans accounted it a Piece of Impiety in any Caſe to diſturb or violate the Aſhes of the Dead, except it were thoſe of their publick Enemies, whoſe Graves were not reckoned ſacred, as Paulus [f] the great Lawyer determin'd: And therefore it was lawful for any one to take the Stones of ſuch Graves and turn them to any other Uſe, and no Action of Violating Sepulchres could be brought againſt them

BUT in all other Caſes, the Graves of the Dead were Places of great Sacredneſs; and conſequently Places of great Security: Inſomuch, that they were reckoned ſafe Repoſitories not only for the Dead, to ſecure them from Violence, but alſo for any Ornaments that were ſet about them, or Riches

Riches that together with the Dead were often buried with them. For the Romans often adorned their Monuments with rich Pillars of Marble and fine Statues and Images ſet about them. As appears from ſeveral Laws in the Theodoſian Code [g], which are made to reſtrain the Pillagers of them: And alſo from great Variety of Roman Writers, which Gothofred [h] mentions and alledges in his Comment upon one of thoſe Laws, as Pliny, Cicero, Aggenus, Propertius, Servius, and Eutropius, who gives a particular Account of Trajan's Pillar, which was One hundred and forty Foot high. The Two Antonines indeed laid ſome Reſtraint upon the exceſſive Vanity and Profuſeneſs of the Romans in this Matter, making ſevere Laws againſt Extravagance in Burying, and Building of Sepulchres, as Julius Capitolinus [i] informs us: But this did not hinder Men from adorning their Monuments with Marble Statues and Pillars, and ſuch like common Ornaments, as we afterwards find allowed in one of the Laws of Gordian in the Juſtinian [k] Code. So that theſe Monuments of the Heathen were often very pompous and magnificent both in Building and Ornament, which frequently made them become a Prey and Spoil to rapacious Invaders. But we can hardly ſuppoſe this of any Chriſtian Sepulchres for the firſt Three hundred Years. Caius an ancient Writer and Presbyter of the Church of Rome about the Year 210, ſpeaks of the Trophies and Monuments [l] of St. Peter and St. Paul, which were then to be ſeen, the one in the Vatican in the Via Triumphalis, and the other in the Via Oſtienſis: But theſe Trophies were not ſo magnificent, whatſoever they were, but that afterwards about the Year 258, they were tranſlated by Pope Xyſtus [m] into the Catacumbs for Fear of ſome Indignity that might be offered to them in the Heat of Perſecution. The moſt that we can ſuppoſe is, That they were Grave-ſtones with an Inſcription, declaring their Names and Character, and the Time and Manner of their Death. And ſome of them, we are ſure, were not ſo much as this. For ſometimes great Multitudes of Martyrs were buried in one common Grave, and then the Inſcription contained only the Number, and not the Names, or any particular Account of them. Prudentius [n] ſays, He had obſerved one ſuch Grave wherein Sixty Martyrs were buried together. St. James's Monument at Jeruſalem was no more than a Pillar [o] or Grave-ſtone with an Inſcription. And in after-Ages the Chriſtians were not very fond of erecting ſtately Monuments before they came to bury in Churches. For they had obſerved what Spoil and Ravagement had been made of the Heathen Monuments, and how many Laws the Emperors were forced to make againſt the Violation of Sepulchres: Which made many pious Chriſtians think how much better and ſafer it was to build themſelves Monuments in their Life-time by Liberality to the Poor, than to build ſtately and coſtly Monuments for Thieves and Robbers to plunder at their Pleaſure. Thus St. Jerom ſays of Paula, That ſhe gave all her Subſtance to the Poor, and wiſhed not to have any Thing at her Death, but that ſhe might be beholden for a Winding-ſheet to the Charity of others. And Ephrem Syrus left it upon his Will, That nothing ſhould be expended upon his Funeral; but whatever ſhould be appointed for that, ſhould be given to the Poor, as Gregory Nyſſen [p] reports in the Life of that great Saint and Luminary of the Eaſtern Church. And St. Baſil exhorts Rich Men in general [q] rather to expend their Superfluities in Works of Piety, than to build themſelves coſtly Sepulchres. For what Need have you of a ſumptuous Monument, or a coſtly Entombing? What Advantage is there in a fruitleſs Expence? Prepare your own Funeral whilſt you live. Works of Charity and Mercy are the Funeral Obſequies you can beſtow upon yourſelf.

SECT. 4. They differed alſo in the Manner of Burying: The Heathens commonly Burning the Body, and putting the Bones and Aſhes in Urns: But the Chriſtians buried the Body whole in the Earth, abhorring the Heathen Cuſtom.

ANOTHER Difference between Heathens and Chriſtians was in the Manner of Burying. For the Heathen for the moſt part burned the Bodies of the Dead in Funeral Piles, and then gathered up the Bones and Aſhes and put them in an Urn above-Ground: But the Chriſtians abhorred this Way of Burying; and therefore never uſed it, but put the Body whole into the Ground; or if there was Occaſion for any other Way of Burying, they embalmed the Body to lay it in a Catacumb, that it might not be offenſive to them in ſuch Places, where they were ſometimes forced to hold their religious Aſſemblies. That the Chriſtians uſed the plain and ſimple Way of Inhumation, and not Burning, evident from the Objection of the Heathen in Minucius [r]: They abhor Funeral Piles, and condemn Burning by Fire, for Fear it ſhould hinder their Reſurrection. To which the Chriſtian anſwers: We do not [s], as ye ſuppoſe, fear any Detriment from Burying (by Fire) but we retain the ancient Cuſtom of Inhumation as more eligible and commodious. The ſame is evident from Tertullian, who ſays, Some of the Heathen abſtained from Burning upon a ſuperſtitious [t] Notion, that the Soul hovered over the Body after Death: And therefore they would not burn the Body out of a needleſs Compaſſion to the Soul. But, ſays he, our Reaſon is Piety and Humanity to the Body, not flattering it as the Relicks of the Soul, but abhorring Cruelty in reſpect to the Body itſelf, for as much as no Man deſerves to be deſtroyed by a Penal Death. In another Place [u] he derides the Heathens for their contradictory Cuſtoms, firſt in Burning the Body with great Barbarity, and then making Feaſts and Sacrifices at their Graves by way of Parentation, as they called it: Which was to make the ſame Fires both oblige them and offend them; to ſhew themſelves cruel under the Pretence of Piety, and inſult them by making Feaſts in Behalf of thoſe whom they had burnt before. The Criticks are not agreed when or by what Means this Cuſtom of Burning was laid aſide by the Romans. Some think it was forbidden by the Two Antonines in their ſevere Laws about Funerals, mentioned before: But Gothofred and others, not without Reaſon, think this a Miſtake: Becauſe not only Tertullian derides it as ſtill cuſtomary among the Heathen, but alſo becauſe there is ſome Intimation given in one of Theodoſius's Laws, that there were ſome Remains of it even in his Time: For he ſpeaks of both Cuſtoms, that is, of Burying not only whole Bodies in Coffins under-Ground, but alſo [x] of Burying in Urns above-Ground; which ſuppoſes the Body to be burnt before, and the Remains only, the Bones and the Aſhes, to be put in an Urn and kept above-Ground. However, it is certain, that this Cuſtom was quite worn out even among the Heathen within the Space of Forty Years after. For Macrobius, who lived in the Time of the Younger Theodoſius, about the Year 420, ſays expreſsly [y], That the Uſe or Cuſtom of Burning the Bodies of the Dead, was quite left off in that Age, and all that he knew of it was only from ancient Reading. It is moſt probable, that the Heathen Cuſtom altered by Degrees from the Time of Commodus the Emperor: For Commodus himſelf and many of his Friends were buried by Inhumation, and not by Burning, as a Learned Perſon [z] obſerves out of Xiphilin: And from that Time the Cuſtom of Burning might decreaſe, till at laſt under the Chriſtian Emperors, though without any Law to forbid it, the contrary Cuſtom entirely prevailed, and this quite dwindled into nothing. But the Chriſtians were always very tenacious of the plain Way of Burying by Inhumation, and never would conſent to uſe any other: Reckoning it a great Piece of Barbarity in their Perſecutors, whenever they denied them this decent Interment after Death, as they ſometimes did, either by expoſing their Bodies to the Fury of Wild Beaſts and Birds of Prey, or Burning them in Scorn and Deriſion of their Doctrine of a future Reſurrection. Thus, Euſebius [a] ſays out of the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna, they treated Polycarp at the Inſtigation of the Jews, Burning his Body according to their own Cuſtom, after which the Chriſtians were content to gather up his Bones and bury them. And ſo they treated the Martyrs of Lyons and Vienna in France, to the great Grief of the Chriſtians, whom they would not allow to bury them, but for Six Days together kept them above-Ground, and then burned their Bodies, and caſt their Aſhes into the River Roſne, in Deſpite to their Belief of a Reſurrection; crying out, Now let us ſee whether they will riſe again, and whether their GOD is able to deliver them out of our Hands: As the ſame Euſebius [b] relates the Story out of The Acts and Monuments of their Paſſion. Thus Maximus the Preſident threatned Tharacus the Martyr [c], That though he raiſed himſelf upon the Confidence that his Body after Death ſhould be embalmed and buried, he would defeat his Hopes by cauſing his Body to be burnt, and ſprinkling his Aſhes before the Wind. And it were eaſy to give other Examples of the like Uſage of them upon ſuch Occaſions, ſome of which are related by the Heathen Hiſtorian [d] himſelf, not without ſome Reſentment and Reflexion upon the unnatural Cruelty and Inhumanity of ſuch Proceedings.

SECT. 5. Embalming of Bodies much used by Christians. And why more by them than the Heathens.

FROM the last Instance of the President's threatning the Martyr Tharacus, that he should not be embalmed, it were easy to infer, that the Custom of Christians was to bestow the Honour and Charge of Embalming commonly upon their Martyrs at least, if not upon others. But the Custom seems to have been more general: For the Heathen in Minucius [e] makes it a Matter of Reproach to Christians universally, That they would make use of no Odours for their Bodies whilst they lived, but reserved all costly Ointments for their Funerals. And Tertullian seems to intimate [f], That the Preparation of the Body for its Funeral with Odoriferous Spices was the general Practice of Christians. 'Tis true, says he, we buy no Frankincense: But if Arabia complains of this, let the Sabeans know, that more of their costly Wares is spent in Burying of Christians, than the Heathens spend in their Temples in offering Incense to their Gods. One of the chief Ingredients in this Unction of the Body or Embalming was Myrrh: Whence Prudentius alluding to the Custom [g] says, The Sabean Myrrh Anointing the Body, by its Medicinal Vertue preserves it from Corruption. This was the particular Use and Virtue of Myrrh, as Grotius [h] observes out of Pliny. And therefore he tells us farther out of Herodotus [i] also, that the Eastern Nations were wont to make use of Myrrh to embalm the Bodies of their Dead. And that the Jews used an Unction as a Preparation for Burial, is infallibly certain in general both from the Testimony of our SAVIOUR given to the Woman who anointed his Body to the Burial, and also from what St. John says in particular of Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, that they brought a Mixture of Myrrh and Aloes, about an Hundred Pound Weight, and took the Body of JESUS, and wound it in the Linnen-Clothes, with the Spices, as the Manner of the Jews is to bury, John xix. 39. From hence most probably the Christians took their Intimation of paying the same Respect to the Bodies of the Dead. The Ancients also were of Opinion that there was something mystically denoted in the Presents made by the Wise Men to our SAVIOUR at his Birth, when they presented him with Gifts, Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh: Gold, as to a King; Frankincense, as to GOD; and Myrrh, as to a Man that must die and be buried. For though they might intend none of these Things, yet the HOLY GHOST might direct these Presents to be such as might signify all these Things without their Knowledge; as he directed Mary's Anointing of CHRIST to his Burial; For so our LORD himself was pleased to interpret and accept it, though perhaps that was not particularly in her Intention. It is certain this was the general Notion of the Ancients concerning the Myrrh presented to our SAVIOUR: As Maldonat [k] from Irenæus, Cyprian, Origen, Basil, Gregory Nyssen, Chrysostom, Ambrose, Austin, Jerom, Juvencus and Sedulius. And the Opinion seems to have taken its Original from the Practice of the Eastern Countries in using Myrrh in the Preparation of dead Bodies for their Burial. And this concurring exactly with the Jewish Custom and our SAVIOUR's Manner of Burial, might probably the more incline the Ancients to be curious in using the same Preparation of dead Bodies for their Funeral. But they had also a farther Reason for it: For they were often obliged to bury their Dead in those Places where they were to assemble for Divine Service: And in that Case it was Necessary that they should use Embalming to preserve the Bodies from Corruption, and make those Places to be the less offensive: As I find a late Ingenious Writer is also inclined to think [l] in his Reflexions on this Subject. Now the Heathens having generally another Way of Burying, this Custom was of no Use among them: For it was incongruous to use Methods to preserve the Body from Corruption, which they intended immediately to destroy by Fire and reduce to Ashes in a Funeral-Pile. These Things were plainly contradictory to one another: And therefore as the Roman Heathens made no Use of Embalming, so we may reckon this another Difference between the Christian Funerals and those of the Heathens.

SECT. 6. The Christians usually buried by Day, the Heathens by Night.

THERE was one Difference more in Point of Time. For the Heathens commonly performed their Funeral Obsequies by Night: But the Christians, when they had Liberty, and could do it with Safety, always chose the Day. In Times of Persecution indeed, it is reasonable to suppose, they might often be forced to celebrate their Funeral Offices, as they did others, in the Security and Silence of the Night, to avoid the Rage of their Enemies. As we find an Example in the Passion of of Cyprian [m], whoſe Body becauſe of the Curioſity of the Gentiles is ſaid to be buried ſecretly in the Night with Lamps and Torches. And yet even this was not always the Caſe in thoſe difficult Times: For the Judges were often better natured, than to deny them the common Right and Civility of Burying, which they themſelves thought was a Debt due to human Nature in general: And therefore, whatever other Cruelties they exerciſed toward Chriſtians, they ordinarily gratified them in ſuffering them to bury the Martyrs whom they had ſlain; as is evident from ſeveral of their Acts or Hiſtories of their Paſſions [n]: In which Caſe there was no Need to fly to the Favour and Security of the Night, but they might bury, as they often did, in the open Day. Thus when Polycarp was burnt, the Diſciples afterward were permitted quietly [o] to gather up his Bones and Relicks, and bury them as they pleaſed. And Aſturius a Roman Senator is famed [p] for carrying Marinus on his own Shoulders from the Place of his Martyrdom to his Grave.

BUT however this Matter ſtood in Times of Perſecution, it is certain, that as ſoon as Conſtantine came to the Throne, Chriſtians choſe to perform their Funeral Rites openly in the Day: Which they did all the Time of Conſtantine and Conſtantius; at which Julian the Apoſtate was ſo highly offended, that he ſet forth an Edict on purpoſe to forbid it, which is a certain Evidence in the Caſe. We underſtand, ſays he, that the Bodies of the Dead [q] are carried to their Graves with great Concourſe of People, and Multitudes to attend them: Which is an ominous Sight and a Defilement to the Eyes of Men. For how can the Day be auſpicious that ſees a Funeral? Or how can Men go thence to the Gods and to the Temples? Therefore becauſe Grief in Funeral Obſequies rather chuſes Secrecy, and it is all one to the Dead whether they be carried forth by Night or by Day, it is fit that ſuch Spectacles ſhould not fall under the View of all the People, that true Grief, and not the Pomp and Oſtentation of Obſequies ſhould appear in Funerals. This is a plain Reflexion on the Practice of the Chriſtians in the Two foregoing Reigns. It grieved Julian to ſee the Chriſtians celebrate their Funerals ſo openly by Day, and with Indications of Joy rather than Grief; eſpecially in their Tranſlations of Martyrs, which was of the ſame Nature with Funerals, and was performed with great Magnificence and Expreſſions of Joy, with Pſalmody and Hymns to GOD, in a general Aſſembly and Concourſe of the People. As it was particularly in the Tranſlation of Babylas from Daphne to Antioch, which happened in his Time, and was one of the great Grievances in his Reign. For, as the Hiſtorian [r] tells us, all the Chriſtians of Antioch, Men and Women, young Men and Virgins, old Men and Children accompanied the Coffin all the Way, having their Precentors to ſing Pſalms, at the End of every one of which the whole Multitude joyned by way of Antiphonal Reſponſe, with this Verſicle, Confounded be all they that Worſhip carved Images, and that boaſt themſelves in Idols or vain Gods. This they did for the Space of Six thouſand Paces or Forty Furlongs, even in the Hearing of Julian himſelf: Which ſo inraged him, that the next Day he put many of them into Priſon, and ſome to extreme Torture and Death. And this, no Doubt, was the ſecret Reaſon of his enacting that Law againſt the Manner of celebrating Chriſtian Funerals; though the Law itſelf pretends other Reaſons, taken from the ſuperſtitious Principles of his profound Philoſophy and Religion. His firſt Reaſon is, That the very Sight of a Funeral by Day, and much more their Attendance upon it, pollutes Men ſo, that they are not fit all that Day to attend upon the Service of the Gods. And therefore a Prieſt or a Magiſtrate, by the Rules of the Roman Superſtition, was not allowed to attend upon any Funeral by Day, but only by Night; as Gothofred [s] out of the beſt Roman Writers, Servius and Donatus, Aulus Gellius, Seneca, Tacitus and Dio, ſhews at large in his Expoſition of that Law. This is a Reaſon taken from the Principles of his own Superſtition in Religion. Another is taken from the Principles of his Philoſophy, of which he pretended to be a great Maſter; namely this, That the Secrecy and Silence of the Night was fitter for Sorrow, than the Pomp and Oſtentation of the Day, as he called it. A third Reaſon was, That it was all one to the Dead, whether they were buried by Night or by Day: And therefore it was more commodious to bury by Night for the Sake of the Living, who by Nocturnal Funerals could not be polluted or offended. But the Chriſtians deſpiſed theſe Reaſons, both as Unphiloſophical, and Ridiculous and Irreligious. As to the firſt, they knew no Pollution ariſing from the the Attendance on a dead Body or a Funeral. The Bodies of Christians were the Members of CHRIST, both alive and dead; and they owned no Defilement in accompanying such to their Graves, who were there only laid asleep and at rest, as Candidates of the Resurrection. Whatever the Gentile Theology might teach, they were fully persuaded that the Dead were in the Communion of Saints still, and as such might be Communicated with and attended without any moral Defilement or Pollution. And for his second Reason from Philosophy, that the Night is more convenient for Sorrow, while the Day only serves for Pomp and Ostentation: This was no Argument to them, who were taught not to give way to excessive Sorrow for the Dead, nor to sorrow as others without Hope for them that were only fal'n asleep: For Christian Mournings had also a Mixture of Joy and Comfort in them: Their Funeral Pomp was chiefly Psalmody and Praises, with which they conducted the deceased Party to the Grave: And such a Pomp as that had nothing of Ostentation in it: It served only to provoke the Living to Holiness and Vertue, to be mindful of Death, and to make a good Preparation for it: And therefore was proper to be exhibited in open View, in the Eyes of all the People, in the most publick Manner, among Crowds of Spectators and a general Concourse. For all which the Day was far more convenient than the Night, the Design of their Funerals being to be seen of all the People. And therefore since it was an indifferent thing to the Dead whether they were buried by Day or by Night, (which was his third Reason) the Christians chose the Day for such Solemnities, as being much more proper for the Living, whose Advantage herein was chiefly regarded.

AND upon these Reasons the Christians continued to perform their Funeral Obsequies by Day, notwithstanding Julian's Inhibition or Reasons to the contrary. Gothofred thinks, that from this Time there is no Instance of their Burying by Night: Against which he says there is nothing to be alledged but one Passage in St. Ambrose, which seems to speak [t] still of Funerals by Night: For writing to Widows, he bids them consider, whether Marrying again, and being conducted Home with Torches in the Night, would not look as much like a Funeral as a Marriage? But Gothofred says, this is not any Account of Fact, or what was then practised, but only an Allusion to the Ancient Custom of using Torches both at Marriages and Funerals, according to that of the Poet, Vivite felices inter utramque facem, which was the common Acclamation of the People to the new-married Couple, Live happy all your Lives between your Marriage-Torch and your Funeral-Torch. But I am not sure that this is a good Answer, because there are other undeniable Evidences in Fact of Christians burying with Lamps and Torches attending the Funeral. And therefore some other Account seems necessary to be given of it: And it may be this: That the Christians even when they buried by Day, used sometimes to carry lighted Torches in the Procession of the Funeral, as a Demonstration of Joy: Which they also did upon some other Occasions. For St. Jerom [u] says, In all the Churches of the East, when the Gospel was to be read, they lighted Candles in the Day-time, not to drive away the Darkness, but to give a Demonstration and Testimony of their Joy for the Good News which the Gospel brought, and by a corporeal Symbol to represent that Light of which the Psalmist speaks, Thy Word is a Lamp to my Feet, and a Light unto my Paths. And therefore it is not improbable but that they might use the same Ceremony in their Funerals by Day, and for the same Reason, to demonstrate their Joy, rather than Sorrow like the Heathens. In Fact it is evident beyond Dispute, that they did use lighted Torches at their Funerals; and yet no Intimation is given that their Funerals were by Night. Nazianzen speaking of the Obsequies of his Brother Cæsarius [x] says expressly, That his Mother carried a Torch in her Hand before his Body at his Funeral. St. Jerom says the Bishops [y] of Palestine did the like at the Funeral of the famous Lady Paula: Some of them in Honour to her carried her Body to the Grave, and others went before the Corps with Lamps and Torches in their Hands. Gregory Nyssen gives the same Account of the Funeral of his Sister Macrina [z], that the Clergy went before the Corps, carrying lighted Torches in their Hands. And Theodoret [a] speaking of the Translation of Chrysostom's Body from Comanæ to Constantinople, says, There was such a Multitude of People met him in Ships in his Passage over the Bosphorus, that the Sea was even covered with Lamps. St. Chrysostom himself [b] speaks also of the Use of Lamps in their Funerals. And in one of Justinian's Novels [c] the Acolythists are forbidden to exact any Thing for their Torches, because at Constantinople they were allowed for Funerals out of a Publick Fund, which was there provided for the Interment of the Dead. These are not bare Allusions to an ancient Custom, Cuſtom, but plain Accounts of Fact, which either prove that Chriſtians celebrated ſome of their Funerals by Night, or elſe that they uſed lighted Torches by Day; as ſome of the Teſtimonies ſeem to intimate: For Chryſoſtom ſays, they uſed their Lights before the Dead, to ſignify that they were Champions or Conquerors, and as ſuch, conducted in Triumph to their Graves. And thus far Gothofred's Opinion may be admitted, that the Chriſtians generally celebrated their Funerals by Day: But then this muſt be added to it, That they uſed Lamps and Torches lighted in the Day, to expreſs their Joy, and ſignify their Reſpect and Honour to the Deceaſed as a victorious Combatant, who had conquered this World here below, and was now gone to take Poſſeſſion of a better World above. If any Weight could be laid upon the uncertain Authority of the Writer of the Life of St. German Biſhop of Auxerre in Surius, it would put the Matter out of Diſpute: For he ſays [†], the Multitude of Lights uſed at his Funeral ſeemed to outdo the Sun, and beat back its Rays at Noonday. But without this uncertain Teſtimony, enough has been ſaid to ſhew the Difference between the Cuſtom of the Heathens burying by Night, and the Chriſtians burying by Day, which is the principal Thing I intended in this Part of my Diſcourſe. I only add one Thing by Way of Confirmation, that the Chriſtians in this Age generally celebrated the Euchariſt at their Funerals, which is a Service belonging to the Day, and not the Night; and to the Morning Part of the Day, and not the Afternoon. Whence in one of the Councils of Carthage we find an Order, That if any Commendation of the Dead was to be made in the Afternoon, it ſhould be performed only with Prayers and not the Celebration of the Euchariſt: Which is a certain Argument, that their Funerals were then generally by Day, ſince the Funeral Office was in a manner appropriated to the Euchariſtical or Morning-Service: But of this more hereafter in its proper Place.

CHAP. III.

How they prepared the Body for the Funeral, and with what Religious Ceremonies and Solemnities they interred it.

SECT. 1. Chriſtians always careful to bury the Dead even with the Hazard of their Lives.

COME we now to the Ceremonies uſed in preparing the Body for the Funeral, and the Solemnity of interring it. No Act of Charity is more magnified by the Ancients than this of Burying the Dead: And therefore they many times ventured upon it even with the Hazard of their Lives. In Times of Perſecution, and in Times of peſtilential Diſeaſes this could not be done without great Danger; and yet they never ſcrupled it in either Caſe. Aſturius a Roman Senator [a] took the Body of Marinus the Martyr from the Place of Execution, and carried it on his own Shoulders to the Grave. And Eutychianus is celebrated in the Roman Martyrology and the Pontifical for having buried Three [b] hundred forty-two Martyrs in ſeveral Places with his own Hands. Sometimes they ventured to ſteal away the Bodies of the Martyrs in the Night, when they could not otherwiſe either by Money or Entreaties get Liberty to bury them. As we learn from the Epiſtle of the Church of Lyons and Vienna in Euſebius [c], where the Brethren expreſs their profoundeſt Sorrow and Grief becauſe their Enemies would not ſuffer them to bury the Bodies of their Martyrs. For they kept ſuch a ſtrict Guard upon them, that they could not come at them by Night to take them away, neither would Money prevail, nor any Sollicitations move the Keepers to deliver the Bodies up to be buried, but they kept them Six Days expoſed in the open Air, and then burned them, and ſcattered their Aſhes in the River, that there might be no Relicks of them remaining upon the Earth. The Brethren here ventured their Lives by Night, to have got the Bodies, if it had been poſſible, to have given them a decent Funeral. And there want not Inſtances in the ancient Martyrologies of ſome who became Martyrs themſelves upon this Account for their exceſſive Charity to their Brethren. The other difficult Caſe in which they expreſſed an equal Charity and Concern, was the Time when Peſtilential Diſeaſes raged in the World. Even in this Caſe they would never deſert their Brethren while alive, nor leave them unburied after Death. Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria gives us a remarkable Inſtance of this Care [d] in that terrible Plague that happened in Egypt in his Time. He ſays, The Chriſtians not only attended their Brethren when when they were ſick, but alſo took Care of them when they were dead, cloſing their Eyes and Mouths, laying them forth, watching with them, waſhing their Bodies, dreſſing them, and clothing them in Garments proper for their Burial, and then carrying them out on their own Shoulders to their Graves: In doing which they often ventured ſo far, that in a ſhort Time it was their own Lot to have the ſame good Offices done to themſelves by others.

SECT. 2. How they prepared the Body for Burial. Firſt, Cloſing its Eyes and Mouth: A decent Circumſtance, obſerved by all Nations.

THIS Paſſage of Dionyſius ſhews us not only the great Charity of the ancient Chriſtians in burying their Dead, but alſo ſome of the leſſer Circumſtances and Ceremonies then uſually obſerved in preparing and decently compoſing the Body for its Burial. Firſt, he ſays, they were uſed to cloſe its Eyes and Mouth as ſoon as it was dead. Which was a Cuſtom of Decency obſerved by all Nations, and taught them as a comely Thing by Nature itſelf. Only the Romans added another Ceremony to it, which had nothing of Nature, but Superſtition in it: Which was, as Pliny [e] deſcribes it, to open their Eyes again at the Funeral-Pile, and ſhew them to Heaven: Which, according to the Roman Superſtition, was as neceſſary to be done, as it was neceſſary at firſt to cloſe their Eyes againſt the Sight of Men. The Ground of this Superſtition I will not ſtand to enquire into, but only obſerve, That as the Chriſtians rejected this Ceremony becauſe it was a mere Superſtition, ſo they retained the other as agreeable to that Decency which is taught by Nature.

SECT. 3. Then Waſhing the Body in Water.

THE next Circumſtance mentioned by Dionyſius was laying the Body out, and waſhing it with Water. This was a Ceremony uſed not only by the Greeks and Romans, but by the Hebrews alſo: From whom it was taken and continued by the Chriſtians, as it is now by the Jews, though for more ſuperſtitious Reaſons than formerly, as Buxtorf acquaints us [f], at this Day. That it was a very early Rite derived from the Jews to the Chriſtians, we learn from the Account which is given of Tabitha, Acts ix. 37. where it is ſaid, That when ſhe was dead, they waſhed her, and laid her in an upper Chamber. And ſome will have [g] this to be the Meaning of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xv. 29. where he ſpeaks of being baptized or waſhed for the Dead: Which is not ſo certain. However, the Cuſtom is mentioned as uſual among Chriſtians, not only by Dionyſius, but Tertullian [h], who ſays, The Chriſtians uſed Bathing as well as the Heathens, at proper Times for Health, to preſerve their vital Heat and Blood: For it was time enough to grow pale and cold when they came to be waſhed after Death. This was alſo an innocent and decent Ceremony, and therefore the Chriſtians retained it, not for any myſtical Signification, that any of them mention, but as a Civil Rite, and comely Preparation of the Body for its Burial. How long it continued in Practice, I know not exactly: But Durantus [i] gives later Inſtances of its Uſe out of Gregory of Tours, and Bede's Life of St. Cuthbert, and Eginhardus's Life of Charles the Great.

SECT. 4. Dreſſing it in Funeral Robes: And theſe ſometimes rich and ſplendid.

THE next Circumſtance noted by Dionyſius, is Dreſſing and Adorning the Body in Robes proper for its Funeral. He takes no notice of Anointing the Body with precious Oyntment, nor of the Uſe of any Embalming (which was proper to be mentioned between Waſhing and Clothing), becauſe this was not ſo generally uſed, as being a more chargeable Thing, and not ſo proper therefore to the deplorable Caſe he was ſpeaking of. But we have had Occaſion to ſpeak enough of this before. The preſent Circumſtance of Dreſſing and Adorning the Body in ſome Robes or Veſtments proper for its Burial, is mentioned by ſeveral other Writers, who ſpeak of theſe Robes as differing much, either according to the Dignity and Quality of the Deceaſed, or the Quality of thoſe who prepared them. Euſebius [k] ſays, Aſturius being a rich and noble Roman Senator, wound up the Body of Marinus the Martyr, εὖ μάλα πλουσίως, in a very rich Garment, and ſo carried him to his Grave. And Conſtantine, according to the Dignity of an Emperor, was buried in a Purple Robe, with other Magnificence proper to the Dignity of his Perſon, as the ſame Euſebius [l] informs us. And St. Jerom ſignifies this to have been the Cuſtom of the Rich [m], tho' according to his uſual Manner he ſomewhat ſatyrically inveighs againſt it: Spare, I pray, yourſelves, ſpare at leaſt your Riches which ye love; Why do you wind up your Dead in Clothes of Gold?

Gold? Why does not your Ambition ceaſe in the midſt of Mourning and Tears? Cannot the Bodies of the Rich find a Way to rot any otherwiſe than in Silk? Thus he at once gives us the Cuſtom, and his own tart Reflexion on it; ſhewing himſelf a Friend rather to the plain and common Way of Dreſſing the Dead for their Funeral: Which was to wrap them up in clean Linnen Clothes, after the Example of CHRIST's Body, as the Manner of the Jews was to bury. So St. Jerom ſays in another Place [n], ſpeaking of the Woman that was Seven times ſmitten: The Clergy whoſe Office it was, wound up her bloody Body in Linnen Clothes. And ſo Prudentius in his Hymn upon the Obſequies of the Dead, repreſents it as the moſt uſual [o] Funeral Dreſs. And Athanaſius [p] ſays, It was the Cuſtom of the Egyptians to uſe Linnen not only for the meaner Sort of People, but for the Nobles alſo and the Martyrs. However, ſome Adorning or other was always uſed: And therefore Sidonius Apollinaris repreſents it [q] as a Thing contrary to the common Way of Burying in the Goths, that being forced to bury their Slain in a tumultuous manner, they could neither waſh them, nor clothe them for the Grave, but threw whole Loads of them naked and dropping with Blood into the Earth: Which is uſual enough in Burying the Slain of an Army in the Field, but no way agreeable to the Manner of Burying in Time of Peace. He that would ſee more of this Cuſtom, may conſult the Learned Savaro's Notes upon Sidonius, who gives other Inſtances out of Arnobius, and Lactantius, and Corippus, and Gregory of Tours, and Conſtantius's Life of Germanus, which I will not ſtand to repeat in this Place. I only add that of St. Jerom [r] where he commends the Lady Paula for her great Charity to the Poor, in that ſhe never ſuffered any of their Bodies to go without a Funeral Garment to their Graves; and out of her immenſe Propenſity to the Practice of this Vertue, wiſhed that ſhe herſelf might die Poor, and be beholden to the Charity of ſome other to give her a Piece of Linnen to wrap up her Body for its Funeral: And to this ſubjoyn that Paſſage of St. Chryſoſtom [s] where he makes Funeral Clothing to have ſomething of Signification in it, ſaying, We clothe the Dead in new Garments, to ſignify or repreſent before-hand their putting on the new Clothing of Incorruption.

SECT. 5. Watching and attending it in its Coffin till the Time of the Funeral.

THE next Circumſtance mentioned in the ſhort Account of Dionyſius, is the decent Compoſing them in their Coffin, and Watching and Attending them till the Time of their Funeral. It was the Cuſtom of all Nations to let the dead Corps lie ſome Time unburied, leſt there ſhould chance to be ſome Vital Spirit or Remains of Life in them, that might be quite deſtroyed by too haſty a Funeral. For this Reaſon the Romans let their Body lie Seven Days; mean while uſing their Ablution in warm Water, aud their ſeveral Conclamations, as they called them, to try if there was any Spirit left in them, which might be awaked and recovered to Life again. If after the laſt Conclamation no Sign of Life appeared, then Conclamatum eſt, there was no Remedy, after this Cry they carried them forth to their Funeral-Pile. The Roman Antiquaries note farther, That the Rich were commonly laid in Beds, and the poor Sort in Coffins, in the Porch or Entrance of their Houſes cloſe by their Gate. The Chriſtians Ceremonies were in ſome Things the ſame, and in ſome Things a little Refinement upon theſe. The common Sort of People were laid in Coffins of plain Wood, as St. Ambroſe and others inform us [t]. For in this the Chriſtians choſe rather to follow the Heathens than the Jews: The Jews uſing no Coffins, but only Grave-clothes to wrap up the Body, and Biers to carry it to the Grave. Others had their Coffins adorned with more coſtly Materials. Conſtantine was put in a Coffin overlaid with Gold, ἐν χρυσῇ λάρνακι, as both Euſebius [u] and Socrates word it, and that was covered alſo with a Purple Pall. St. Jerom ſays likewiſe [x], That Bleſilla the Daughter of Paula, a rich Lady in Rome, had her Coffin covered with a Cloth of Gold: But St. Jerom himſelf did not like it; for he ſays immediately upon it, It ſeemed to him as if he then heard CHRIST crying from Heaven, I own not this Garment: This Clothing is none of mine; this Ornament is the Ornament of Strangers. From whence we may conclude, that this Way of adorning Coffins ſo pompouſly was not very common among Chriſtians. Neither did they imitate the Heathens in their Collocation in the Porches or Entrance of their Houſes: Though Durantus [y] ſays, This old Roman Cuſtom is ſtill continued at Paris: But they ſet their Coffins either in ſome inner-Room of their Houſe, or an upper-Room, as we read of Tabitha, Acts ix. 37. or carried them to the Church, where they watched with the Body to the Time of its Funeral. Euſebius [z] ſays, Conſtantine's Body was laid in his golden Coffin covered with Purple in one of the chief Rooms of the Palace; where Lights were hanged round about it in golden Candelſticks; and the Body ſo adorned with the Purple Robe and Royal Diadem, was attended by the Watchers for ſeveral Days and Nights together; Such a ſplendid Sight as was never ſeen from the Foundation of the World before. Others choſe immediately after Death to be laid in the Church, where the Watchers alſo attended them till they were carried forth to their Funeral. Thus Paulinus [a] tells us, the Body of St. Ambroſe, as ſoon as it was dead, was carried into the Church, and there they watched with him the Night before Eaſter. And here inſtead of the Roman Conclamation, they were wont to make the Church eccho with Pſalmody, and Hymns, and Praiſes to GOD, which was a noble Refinement upon the old Ceremony of Conclamation. Thus Gregory Nyſſen [b] repreſents the Watching that was kept with the Body of his Siſter Macrina. They watched and ſung Pſalms all Night, as they were uſed to do on the Vigils of Pernoctations preceding the Feſtivals of the Martyrs. And ſomething of this Kind is that which St. Auſtin ſays [c] was done in his Mother's Houſe ſome Time after ſhe was dead: Euodius took the Pſalter and began to ſing a Pſalm, and the whole Family anſwered alternately, I will ſing of Mercy and Judgment, unto Thee, O LORD, will I ſing.

SECT. 6. The Exportation of the Body performed by near Relations, or Perſons of Dignity, or any charitable Perſons, as the Caſe and Circumſtances of the Party required.

THE laſt Circumſtance mentioned by Dionyſius, is the Exportation of the Body to the Grave: Which in the particular Caſe he ſpeaks of, being the Time of a raging Plague and Peſtilence, was done by ſuch charitable Perſons as were willing to venture their own Lives to diſcharge theſe laſt pious Offices to their dying Brethren. And there were many Occaſions for this Sort of Charity in the Three firſt Ages, not only upon the account of infectious Diſeaſes, but for the Multitude of Martyrs, and Numbers of the Poor, who had nothing to depend upon but the Kindneſs of ſuch charitable Perſons in the Church. Sometimes this Office was performed by the next Relations; and ſometimes by Perſons of Rank and Quality, when they deſigned to do a particular Honour to the Party deceaſed in Regard to his Merit and Vertue. I have noted before out of Euſebius [d], how Aſturius a noble Roman Senator carried Marinus the Martyr on his own Shoulders to his Grave: And how Eutychian Biſhop of Rome is ſaid to have buried above Three hundred Martyrs with his own Hands. St. Jerom alſo tells us, That the Biſhops of Paleſtine [e] paid this particular Reſpect to the Famous Lady Paula, that they carried her forth with their own Hands, and put their own Necks under her Coffin. So Gregory Nyſſen [f] ſays, that he and ſome others of the moſt eminent Clergy carried his Siſter Macrina to her Grave. Nazianzen alſo [g] tells us, That St. Baſil was carried χερσὶν ἁγίων, by the Hands of the Clergy in Honour to his Perſon.

SECT. 7. Particular Orders of Men appointed, in ſome great Churches, under the Names of Copiatæ, and Parabolani, to take Care of the Sick, and perform all theſe Offices for the Dead.

IN the firſt Ages the Poor were buried at the common Charge and Charity of the Church, as we learn from Tertullian's Apology, cap. 39. But afterward in ſome of the greater Churches, where there were Multitudes of Poor, in the Beginning of the Fourth Century we find two Orders of Men ſet up in the Church with a Sort of Clerical Character, whoſe particular Buſineſs was to attend the Sick, eſpecially in infectious Diſeaſes, and to do all Offices that were neceſſary to be done in order to give the Poor a decent Funeral. The one were called Parabolani, from venturing their Lives among the Sick in Contagious Diſtempers; and the other Copiatæ, Laborantes, Lecticarij, Foſſarii, Sandapilarij and Decani (anſwerable to the old Roman Names Libitinarij and Veſpillones) whoſe Office was to labour in digging of Graves for the Poor, and carrying the Coffin or Bier, and depoſiting them in the Ground, as moſt of the Names ſignify: Which it is ſufficient only to hint here in this Place, becauſe I have given a full Account of theſe Orders of Men in two diſtinct Chapters [*] in a former Book.

SECT. 8. Pſalmody the great Ceremony uſed in all Proceſſions of Funerals among Chriſtians, in Oppoſition to the Heathens Piping and Funeral-Song.

NOW to proceed: Whereas the Heathens had their Nænia or Funeral-Song, together with their Pipers and ſometimes Trumpeters to play [b] before them: Inſtead of this the Chriſtians choſe to carry forth their Dead in a more ſolmen Manner with Pſalmody to the Grave. We cannot expect to find much of this in the three firſt Ages, while they were in a State of Perſecution: But as ſoon as their peaceable Times were come, we find it in every Writer. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions gives this Direction [i], That they ſhould carry forth their Dead with Singing if they were Faithful. For precious in the Sight of the LORD is the Death of his Saints. And again it is ſaid, Return to thy Reſt, O my Soul, for the LORD hath rewarded thee. And the Memory of the Juſt ſhall be bleſſed: And the Souls of the Juſt are in the Hand of the LORD. Theſe probably were ſome of thoſe Verſicles which made up their Pſalmody upon ſuch Occaſions. For Chryſoſtom ſpeaking of this Matter, not only tells us the Reaſon of their Pſalmody, but alſo what particular Pſalms or Portions of them they made uſe of as proper for this Solemnity. What mean our Hymns [k], ſays he, do we not glorify GOD, and give Him Thanks, that He hath crowned him that is departed, that He hath delivered him from Trouble, that He hath ſet him free from all Fear? Conſider what thou ſingeſt at that Time: Turn again unto thy Reſt, O my Soul, for the LORD hath rewarded thee. And Again, I will fear no Evil, becauſe Thou art with me. And again, Thou art my Refuge from the Affliction which compaſſeth me about. Conſider what theſe Pſalms mean. If thou believeſt the Things, which thou ſayeſt, to be true, why doſt thou weep and lament, and make a mere Pageantry and Mock of thy Singing? If thou believeſt them not to be true, why doſt thou play the Hypocrite ſo much as to ſing? He ſpeaks this againſt thoſe who uſed exceſſive Mourning at Funerals, ſhewing them the Incongruity of That with the Pſalmody of the Church. And he uſes the ſame Argument frequently upon this Occaſion, diſſuading Men, not from moderate, but exceſſive Sorrow, as inconſiſtent with the uſual Pſalmody of the Church, and expoſing them at the ſame Time to the Ridicule of the Gentiles. For what, ſaid they, are theſe the Men that talk ſo finely and philoſophically about the Reſurrection? Yes indeed! But their Actions do not agree with their Doctrine. For whilſt they profeſs in Words the Belief of a Reſurrection, in their Deeds they act more like Men that deſpair of it. If they were really perſuaded that their Dead were gone to a better Life, they would not ſo lament. Therefore, ſays Chryſoſtom [l] let us be aſhamed to carry out our Dead after this Manner. For our Pſalmody, and Prayers, and ſolemn Meeting of Fathers, and ſuch a Multitude of Brethren, is not that thou ſhouldſt weep and lament, and be angry at GOD; but give him Thanks for taking a deceaſed Brother to himſelf. St. Jerom alſo frequently ſpeaks of this Pſalmody as one of the chief Parts of their Funeral-Pomp. He ſays [m], at the Funeral of the Lady Paula at Bethleem, which was attended with a very great Concourſe of the Biſhops, and Clergy, and People of Paleſtine, there was no Howling or Lamenting as uſed to be among the Men of this World, but Singing of Pſalms in Greek and Latin and Syriack (becauſe there were People of different Languages preſent) at the Proceſſion of her Body to the Grave. And ſpeaking of St. Antony's Burying Paul the Hermit [n], he ſays, He wound him up, and carried him forth, Singing Hymns and Pſalms, according to the Manner of Chriſtian Burial. Gregory Nyſſen gives the ſame Account of the Funeral [o] of his Siſter Macrina, and Nazianzen [p] of the Funeral of his Brother Cæſarius. And the Practice was ſo univerſal, that Socrates [q] takes Notice of it among the Novatians, telling us how they carried the Body of Paulus their Biſhop at Conſtantinople with Pſalmody to his Grave. And it being ſo general and decent a Practice, it was a Grievance to any one to be denied the Privilege of it. Victor Uticenſis [r] upon this account complains of the inhuman Cruelty of one of the Kings of the Vandals: Who can bear, ſays he, to think of it without Tears, when he calls to mind, how he commanded the Bodies of our Dead to be carried in Silence without the Solemnity of the uſual Hymns to the Grave? For none were wont to be denied this Privilege ſave only ſuch as either laid violent Hands upon themſelves [s], or were publickly executed for their Crimes, or died in a wilful Neglect of Baptiſm. Such were not allowed this Solemnity of Pſalmody at their Funeral; being in the ſame Rank with excommunicated Perſons, who had no Title

Title to be Partakers in any Office peculiarly appropriated to Communicants in the Church. But such as were called away out of the World in the Vocation of GOD, as one of the Councils of Toledo [t] words it, that is, the Bodies of all Pious and Religious Christians, were allowed this Honour of being carried to their Graves with Singing: But then that Singing must not be those Funeral-Songs which were commonly used among the Gentiles, accompanied with antick Beating of their Breasts and the like: For it was sufficient for Christians, whose Bodies were buried in Hopes of a Resurrection, to have the Service of Divine Songs, or Psalmody bestowed upon them. This shews us another Difference between the Heathen and Christian Way of Burial. The Heathens were used to have their Præficæ, or Women hired on Purpose to make Lamentation at their Funerals: Which even Lucian himself derides, bringing in a dead Man, by way of Prosopopœia, asking this Question, What does your Lamentation signify to me, or your Beating of the Breast at the Sound of the Pipe? And Chrysostom [u] in a more serious manner reproves some, who in his Time were still fond of this Heathenish Custom, whom he threatens, unless they amended, to prosecute them with the utmost Severity of Excommunication.

SECT. 9. Crowning the Coffin with Garlands not allowed among Christians, though they scrupled not to carry Lights before them.

THE Heathens were used in their Funeral Pomp to crown their Corps with Garlands, in Token of Victory, as Clemens Alexandrinus interprets it [x], drawing thence an Argument to prove that their Idol-Gods were only dead Men. Tertullian [y] also expressly mentions their Funeral Crowns, but he condemns them among all the rest that he writes against in his Book of the Soldier's Crown, where he reckons them all idolatrous, as used by the Heathens. We do not find this Custom used by Christians in their Funeral Rites. The Heathen in Minucius makes it one Topick of Accusation [z] against them, That they did not crown their Sepulchres: And Minucius in his Answer [a] owns the Charge: We do not crown the Dead: And I wonder more at you, that ye give either Torches or Crowns to a dead Man, who has no Sense of them; when, if he be happy, he needs no Flowers; and if he be miserable, he takes no Pleasure in them. We adorn our Funeral Obsequies with the same Tranquillity that we live; not making fading Crowns to ourselves, but expecting a Crown of everlasting Flowers from GOD. It is plain from this, that the Christians did not crown their Dead. Neither according to this Reading of Minucius, could they use Torches at their Funerals. But this seems strange, when it is certain, that in the Time of Minucius they were often forced to bury in the Night. Therefore it is probable the Word Facem is crept into the Text: For the Sense and Scope of the Argument requires it not. However, in after-Ages the Christians scrupled not to carry Lights and Torches by Day before their Dead, as an Emblem of Victory and Joy, as we heard St. Chrysostom himself before [b] explaining the Reason of it. So that either the Christians did never scruple this Ceremony, or else it must be said, they thought fit to adopt it into their Rites in after-Ages.

SECT. 10. Funeral Orations made in the Praise of eminent Persons.

WHEN they had thus conducted the Corps to the Place of Burial, it was usual to make a Funeral Oration in the Praise and Commendation of the Party deceased, if there was any Thing singular and eminent in him, fit to be recommended as an Example and Pattern of Virtue to others, or worthy to be related as a just Memorial and Monument of his own Merits and Glory. We have several Orations of this Kind still remaining: As that of Eusebius at the Funeral of Constantine; and those of St. Ambrose at the Funerals of Theodosius and Valentinian, and his own Brother Satyrus; and those of Gregory Nazianzen upon his Father and his Brother Cæsarius, and his great Friend St. Basil, and his Sister Gorgonia; and that of Gregory Nyssen upon the Death of Melitus Bishop of Antioch, which Socrates in one Place [c] calls ἐπικήδειον λόγον, his Funeral Oration, and in another Place [d] ἐπτάφιον, his Epitaph. But St. Jerom's Epitaphs upon Nepotian, Fabiola and Paula, are of another Sort, being only Private Characters composed by him to perpetuate their Memory, but not delivered in Publick as Funeral Orations.

SECT. 11. Together with Pſalmody and the uſual Service of the Church.

BUT whether there was a Funeral Oration or not, the other Service of the Church was uſually performed at the Interment of the Dead; the whole Service, if the Burial was in the Morning, when the Oblation of the Euchariſt might be celebrated; or elſe only the Pſalmody and Prayers, if the Funeral was in the Afternoon. The Pſalmody and Prayers are largely deſcribed by the Author under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite [e], who ſpeaks firſt of their ſinging Hymns of Thankſgiving to GOD for the Party deceaſed, and his making a victorious End, and deſiring that they may come to the ſame Reſt with him. Then the Biſhop makes a Prayer of Thankſgiving alſo to GOD for making the Party perſevere in the Knowledge of GOD and his Chriſtian Warfare unto Death. Then the Deacon reads ſuch Portions of Scripture as contain the Promiſes of a Reſurrection, and the Hymn appertaining to the ſame Purpoſe. Thus far was the Service of the Catechumens in this Office of Burial. After their Diſmiſſion, the chief Deacon makes a Commemoration of all Saints departed, and proclaims them Conquerors, giving the ſame Elogium to him that was now to be interred, and exhorting all to follow his Example, and beg of CHRIST an happy End. Then the Biſhop prays after this for him that was deceaſed, That GOD would forgive him all his Sins contracted by human Infirmity, and tranſlate him into the Place of Light and the Regions of the Living, and give him a Manſion in the Boſom of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, whence all Grief, and Sorrow, and Mourning are fled away. Then he gives him the Kiſs of Peace, and anoints him with the holy Oyl, and ſo commits him to the Earth. Here is no mention of the Euchariſt being celebrated in this Office, but we find it in others: And the two laſt Ceremonies of giving the Kiſs of Peace, and Anointing with Oyl, are in a manner peculiar to this Author, and the former of them expreſsly forbidden in ſome other Rules of Burial. But the Hymns and Pſalmody, and proper Portions of Scripture and Prayers, made a Part of the Burial-Office in all Churches. St. Jerom [f] thus deſcribes the Funeral of Fabiola: The Pſalms were ſung aloud, and the Eccho of the Alleujahs ſhook the Golden Roof of the Church. So again at the Funeral of Paula [g] he ſpeaks not only of their Singing in the Proceſſion, but in the Middle of the Church alſo. The African Councils ſpeak likewiſe of Prayers uſed at the Funerals of the Dead: Which Prayers were particularly termed Ἐγκώμια and Commendationes [h], Commendatory Prayers, being ſuch as they uſed when they committed the Bodies to the Ground: And theſe are appointed to be ſuch only as were approved in Synod, that no Corruption of Faith through Ignorance might creep into the Offices of the Church. This is abundant Proof that Pſalmody and Prayers were always a Part of the Funeral Service in the Church.

SECT. 12. And ſometimes the Oblation of the Euchariſt.

AND whenever it was a proper Seaſon, the Communion was added to theſe alſo: That is, when the Funeral or Commendation of any Perſon deceaſed was in the Morning, which was the only proper Time for the Communion, becauſe it was to be received by all Faſting. This Diſtinction is made in the Third Council of Carthage, which orders [i] firſt, That all Men ſhall receive the Communion faſting: And then adds, That if any Commendation, or Funeral of a Biſhop or any other be to be celebrated in the Afternoon, it ſhould be done with Prayers only, and not with the Celebration of the Euchariſt, if they that aſſiſted at the Funeral-Office, had dined before. This is a manifeſt Evidence, that the Communion was generally celebrated at Funerals in this Age, at leaſt in the African Church, unleſs ſome intervening Circumſtance of Time made it otherwiſe. Accordingly Poſſidius [k] tells us St. Auſtin was buried with the Oblation of the Sacrifice to GOD for the Commendation of his Body to the Ground. And ſo St. Auſtin [l] himſelf tells us, his Mother Monicha was buried with the Offering of the Sacrifice of our Redemption, according to Cuſtom, before her Body was laid in the Ground. This made Victor Uticenſis [m] bring in the People of Africk thus complaining, when when all their Clergy were driven away in the barbarous Deſolation of the Vandals, Who ſhall now bury us, when we are dead, with the ſolemn Prayers? And that we may not think this was a Cuſtom peculiar to Africk, Paulinus [n] tells us St. Ambroſe was ſo buried on Eaſter-Day in the Morning, after the Divine Sacrament had been adminiſtred. In like manner Euſebius [o] deſcribes the Funeral of Conſtantine: He ſays, the Clergy performed the Divine Service with Prayers: And leſt we ſhould take this for Prayers only, he adds, They honoured him with the Myſtical Liturgy, or Service of the Euchariſt, and the Communion of the Holy Prayers. So St. Ambroſe gives us to underſtand it was in the Funeral of Valentinian, by thoſe Words in his Oration upon his Death: Bring me the Holy [p] Myſteries, Let us pray for his Reſt with a Pious Affection. And ſo Euodius [q] ſays he buried his Pious Notary, ſinging Hymns to GOD at his Grave Three Days together, and on the Third day offering the Sacraments of Redemption.

SECT. 13. With Particular Prayers for the Dead.

NOW this was the rather done, becauſe in the Communion Service, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Times, a ſolemn Commemoration was made of the Dead in general, and Prayers offered to GOD for them; ſome Euchariſtical by Way of Thankſgiving for their Deliverance out of this World's Afflictions; and others by Way of Interceſſion, that GOD would receive their Souls to the Place of Reſt and Happineſs; that he would pardon their human Failures, and not impute to them the Sins of Daily Incurſion, which in the beſt Men are Remainders of natural Frailty and Corruption; that he would increaſe their Happineſs, and finally bring them to a perfect Conſummation with all his Saints by a glorious Reſurrection. All which Prayers, as I have fully demonſtrated [*] in another Place, could have no relation to the modern groundleſs Fancy of Purgatory, but went upon other Principles that perfectly overthrow it: But being agreeable to the Senſe and Opinions of thoſe Times, they choſe the rather to uſe the Communion Service at Burials, becauſe of theſe Prayers that were conſtantly made therein to GOD for all Holy Men and Women departed, among whom they reckoned the Soul of him in particular, whom they were then about to commit to his Grave. But whether they had a Communion or not at the Funeral, they had always Prayers, as is evident from the laſt mentioned Canons of the Councils of Carthage and Mileve, which give Directions about the Uſe of them. And in theſe Prayers, when there was no Communion, they particularly commended the Soul of the Deceaſed to GOD, whence probably theſe Prayers more eſpecially had the diſtinguiſhing Name of Commendations. Beſides theſe it was uſual to pray for them by private or ſudden Ejaculations, as we find Examples in St. Ambroſe's ſeveral Orations upon the Emperors Theodoſius, Valentinian and Gratian, and his own Brother Satyrus, and Gregory Nazianzen's Funeral Speech upon his Brother Cæſarius, and St. Auſtin's private Prayers for his Mother Monicha: Not to mention the Prayers made for them annually upon their Anniverſary Days of Commemoration. One of theſe Forms of Prayer uſed at Funerals is ſtill remaining in the Conſtitutions, which I the rather chuſe to repeat here, becauſe it fully ſhews, there was no relation to Purgatory in thoſe Prayers, but quite the contrary, viz. a Suppoſition that the Soul of the Deceaſed was going to a Place of Reſt and Happineſs in Abraham's Boſom. The Form runs after this manner: Firſt the Deacon [r] ſays, "Let "us pray for our Brethren, who are at Reſt "in CHRIST; That the merciful GOD, "who hath taken the Soul of this our Brother, "would forgive him all his Sins, voluntary "and involuntary, and of his great Mercy "and Good-will place him in the Region of "the Juſt, that are at Reſt in the Boſom of "Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, with all thoſe who "have pleaſed GOD and done his Will from "the Beginning of the World; in the Place "whence Sorrow, and Grief and Mourning "are fled away." After this the Biſhop makes another Prayer in theſe Words: "O "Thou immortal and everlaſting GOD, from "whom every Thing whether mortal or im-"mortal has its Being; who haſt made Man "a Rational Creature, and Inhabitant of the "World, Mortal in his Conſtitution, but "promiſed him a Reſurrection from the "Dead; who didſt preſerve Enoch and Elias "from taſting Death; O GOD of Abraham, "GOD of Iſaac, and GOD of Jacob, who "art not the GOD of the Dead, but of the "Living: Becauſe the Souls of all live to "Thee, and the Spirits of Juſt Men are "in Thy Hand, whom Torment cannot "touch: Look down now upon this Thy "Servant, whom Thou haſt choſen, and "received to another State; Pardon him "whatſoever he has willingly or unwilling-"ly ſinned againſt Thee; Grant him fa-"vourable Angels, and place him in the "Boſom of Patriarchs, Prophets, Apo-"ſtles,

" Amen.

THEN the Biſhop prays again for the People there preſent: " LORD, ſave Thy Peo- " ple, and bleſs Thine Inheritance, whom " Thou haſt purchaſed with the precious " Blood of Thy CHRIST; Feed them un- " der Thy Right Hand, protect them under " Thy Wings, grant that they may fight the " good Fight, and may finiſh their Courſe, " and keep the Faith, immutable, unblame- " able, unreproveable, thro' our Lord JESUS " CHRIST thy beloved Son: To whom " with Thee and the HOLY SPIRIT be all " Glory, Honour and Adoration, World with- " out End. Amen.

THESE Prayers for the Dead are not made upon the Romiſh Suppoſition of the Soul's being in Purgatory or any Place of Torment, but plainly upon a quite contrary Suppoſition of their being conducted by the Holy Angels to a Place of Reſt, to the Boſom of Patriarchs, Apoſtles and Prophets: Which is an infallible Demonſtration, that the Church then knew nothing of a Purgatory-Fire to torment the Dead for many Ages after Death; but all her Prayers went upon another Suppoſition, which overthrows the Belief of a Purgatory Fire, by placing the Souls of the Dead in a State of immediate Reſt and Happineſs.

SECT. 14. A corrupt Cuſtom of giving the Kiſs of Peace and the Euchariſt to the Dead, corrected by the ancient Canons.

WHILST we are ſpeaking of Prayers for the Dead, and the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt at Funerals, we muſt not forget to mention a corrupt Cuſtom which through Ignorance or Superſtition crept into ſome Places, but was ſtrictly forbidden by the Canons. That was the Cuſtom of giving the Kiſs of Peace and the Communion to the Dead. This had a Semblance of Piety in it, and doubtleſs aroſe from the laudable Cuſtom of Celebrating the Communion at Funerals, of which it ſerves for a farther Teſtimony: But it was the Effect of a blind Superſtition only. And therefore tho' the feigned Author under the Name of Dionyſius the Areopagite [s] ſpeaks with Approbation of the Ceremony of giving the Kiſs of Peace to the Dead: Yet when this Cuſtom, together with that of giving the Euchariſt to the Dead, began to creep into France about the Year 578, the Council of Auxerre made a peremptory Canon againſt them both: It is not lawful to give either the Euchariſt or the Kiſs of Peace [t] to the Dead. The Corruption of giving the Euchariſt to the Dead had been moving in Africk ſome Ages before in the Time of St. Auſtin: But he and the reſt of the Fathers who met in the third Council of Carthage gave Check to it [u], forbidding ſuch ignorant and weak Presbyters, by whoſe Folly the Practice had been encouraged, to give way any longer to it, or miſguide the People in ſuch an erroneous Opinion, as to make them think the Euchariſt was to be given to the Dead: Whereas our LORD ſaid, Take and eat: But dead Bodies can neither take nor eat it. The ſame Perſons thought, that dead Bodies might alſo receive the other Sacrament of Baptiſm: As if there had been ſome peculiar Vertue and Efficacy in the outward Elements of the Sacraments themſelves, without any Senſe or Concurrence of Faith in the Receiver. Both which Errors are cenſured alſo by St. Chryſoſtom [x]; and that of giving the Euchariſt to the Dead more particularly by the Council of Trullo [y]. All which ſhews that this was an Error which many ſuperſtitious People were very fond of; but it was never allowed or encouraged publickly by any Authority in the Church. The Cuſtom of Burying the Euchariſt in the Coffin with the Dead (which has ſo much prevailed in the Romiſh Church) is a Novelty of later Ages only, begun by Benedict the Monk, but without any Precedent or Example in any of the ancient Monuments of the Church, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew more fully in a former Book [*]. Let us therefore now paſs on from theſe Corruptions to the more approved Practices of the Church.

SECT. 15. Almſdeeds commonly added to Prayers for the Dead.

ALMSDEEDS, as a proper Concomitant of Prayers at all times, was now thought as ſeaſonable as ever, to be given by the Living for the Dead. Would you honour the Dead? Give Alms ſays St. Chryſoſtom [z] in one of his Homilies. And in another [a], Why do you call the Poor after the Death of any Relation? Why do you deſire desire the Presbyters to pray for him? I know you will answer, That he may go into Rest, that he may find a merciful Judge. He commends this Practice a little after, and thus presses rich Men to it, that bury their Heirs: If many barbarous Nations burn their Goods together with their Dead, how much more reasonable is it for you to give your Child his Goods when he is dead? Not to reduce them to Ashes, but to make him the more Glorious: If he be a Sinner, to procure him Pardon; if Righteous, to add to his Reward and Retribution. St. Jerom commends Pammachius upon [b] this Account: Whilst other Husbands throw Violets, and Roses, and Lilies, and purple Flowers upon the Graves of their Wives, our Pammachius waters the holy Ashes and Bones of his Wife with the Balsam of Alms.

SECT. 16. And repeated yearly upon the Anniversary Days of Commemoration of the Dead.

SOME repeated these Alms yearly upon the Anniversary-Day of Commemorating the Dead. At these Times they were used to make a common Feast or Entertainment, inviting both the Clergy and the People [c], but especially the Poor and Needy, the Widows and Orphans, that it might not only be a Memorial of Rest to the Dead, but an Odour of sweet Smell to themselves in the Sight of GOD, as the Author under the Name of Origen words it. St. Chrysostom says [d], they were more tenacious of this Custom than they were of some others of greater Importance. If they were to commemorate a Child or a Brother that was dead, they were pricked in Conscience, if they did not fulfil the Custom and call the Poor: But at other Times, even when they were to commemorate the Death of CHRIST, they could overlook them.

SECT. 17. But this often degenerated into great Excesses and Abuses, which are complained of as no better than the Parentalia of the Gentiles.

BUT this often degenerated into great Abuses. For some instead of Feeding the Poor, only made this an Occasion of indulging themselves in great Excesses: Which was the Fault that Tertullian so smartly reproves in the Parentations of the Gentiles, when he objects to them their holding Feasts at the Graves of their Parents, and junketing to Excess [e], so as to return Drunk from thence, and besides their Senses; feeding voraciously at the Graves of those, whom in a mock Piety, but real Cruelty, they had burnt before. In the Three first Ages no Heathen could retort this back again upon the Christians: But in the Fourth Age such Excesses were committed by some, that the Manichees in St. Austin's Time objected it to the Catholicks, and the Matter was so flagrant, that St. Austin was forced to own it [f], confessing that he knew many that drank luxuriously over the Dead, and when they had made a Feast for the Deceased, buried themselves over the Dead, and placed their Gluttony and Drunkenness to the Account of Religion. But he says the Church condemned them, and daily laboured to correct them as wicked Children. He complains of the same Matter again in one of his Epistles [g] to Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, where he desires that these Oblations for the Dead might be so regulated, that they might not run into any Sumptuousness or shameful Excess: And if any thing was given in Money upon that Account, it should be distributed immediately among the Poor, according to the primitive Design and Intent of such Oblations. For such Oblations the Church always willingly received, but never encouraged any other [h]. The Author of the Book De duplici Martyrio under the Name of Cyprian [i], who wrote long after the Time of St. Austin, has a like severe Reflexion upon the Intemperance of the African People. Drunkenness, says he, is so common in our Africa, that it is scarce reckoned any Crime. Christians are compelled by Christians to be drunk even at the Memorials of the Martyrs. Which is no less a Crime than offering a Goat to Bacchus. But of this I have spoken largely in a former Book [*], where I had Occasion to reflect on the same Excesses committed by some at the Monuments of the Martyrs on their Anniversary Festivals or Commemorations. I now return to the Funerals of the ancient Church.

SECT. 18. Decent Expressions of moderate Sorrow at Funerals not disallowed; but the Heathenish Custom of hiring Præficæ, or Mourning Women, sharply reproved by the Ancients.

MODERATE Sorrow, when expressed in a decent Manner for the Loss of Friends, is a Thing so natural in itself, and so consistent even with the Joy and Faith of a Christian, that the Ancients never said any thing against any one expressing such Sorrow at a Funeral. But Two Things they extremely disliked and sharply reproved; first immoderate moderate Grief, as unbecoming the Character and Profeſſion of a Chriſtian, whoſe Converſation is in Heaven already, and his Hope and Expectation no leſs than a Crown and Kingdom after Death; who therefore ought not to grieve or ſorrow above Meaſure, but with a Mixture of Joy, that any Friend is gone to Heaven before him to take an earlier Poſſeſſion of it. The other Thing they diſliked was the Heatheniſh Cuſtom of having Women hired on Purpoſe to lament and make an hideous Crying and Howling before the Dead, with Tearing their Hair alſo, and many other ridiculous Signs of Mourning. The chief of theſe the Romans called Præficæ, from being ſet over the reſt to guide and direct them in their Funeral-Songs and Lamentations, as Roſinus [l] deſcribes them out of Varro and Lucilius, and Sextus Pompeius and Nonius Marcellus, and other Roman Authors. Now this the Ancients extremely diſliked and ſeverely inveighed againſt as a mere Heatheniſh Cuſtom. Why do you beat yourſelf and lament, ſays Chryſoſtom [m], and accuſe the Inſtitution of CHRIST, who has overcome Death, and made it only a Sleep? If an Heathen does this, he is worthy to be laughed to Scorn: But if a Chriſtian does it ſtill, after he is aſſured of a Reſurrection, what Apology or Excuſe can be made for him? And yet you aggravate your Crime by calling in Heathen Women to be your Mourners, and to inflame your Sorrow, not regarding what St. Paul ſays, What Concord hath CHRIST with Belial? And what Part hath he that believeth with an Infidel? He then goes on to ſhew the monſtrous Folly and Vanity of this Practice, by great Variety of Arguments, and curiouſly anſwers all the little Pleas, which ſuch Chriſtians made in Behalf of themſelves to excuſe this unchriſtian Deportment. In another Place [n] he treats them more ſharply, telling them, He was not only grieved but utterly aſhamed to think how Chriſtians debaſed and diſgraced themſelves in the Eyes of the Heathen and Jews, and Hereticks, by their Weeping, and Wailing, and Howlings, and Lamentations, and other indecent Practices in the open Streets, for which the Gentiles derided them. For they were ready to ſay, How can any of theſe Men deſpiſe Death themſelves, who cannot ſo much as bear the Death of another? They are fine Things indeed that are ſpoken by Paul, when he ſays, GOD delivered them, who through Fear of Death were all their Life-time held in Bondage: Theſe are heavenly Words truly, and very worthy and becoming the great Kindneſs and Love of GOD to Men: But ye will not ſuffer us to believe theſe Things, for ye contradict them by your own Actions. Shew me your Philoſophy by your Patience in bearing chearfully the Death of others, and then I will believe the Reſurrection. Thus he makes the Heathen ſpeak by a neat Proſopopœia, to ſhame ſuch Chriſtians, if it might be, into a more manly Deportment. He adds withal, That ſuch indecent Behaviour of Men and Women, tearing their Hair and making ſuch hideous Lamentation, was a Crime for which, if they had their Deſert, they ought to be caſt out of the Church, as in Fact denying the Reſurrection. In ſhort he tells them with the Authority of a Biſhop, That if they perſiſted in that vile Abuſe of hiring Heathen Women to be their Mourners, he would excommunicate them as Idolaters. For if St. Paul calls the Covetous Man an Idolater, much more may he be called ſo, who brings the Practices of Idolaters among Chriſtians. From thenceforth he peremptorily forbids them to make uſe of any ſuch Heathen Mourners under the Penalty of the higheſt Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. By which (not to inſiſt upon what he urges in other Places [o], nor what is ſaid by other Writers) we may eaſily judge, how great an Abuſe this Way of indecent Mourning was reckoned in the Church.

SECT. 19. The Novendial of the Heathen rejected as a ſuperſtitious Practice.

THE Heathens had another Cuſtom of repeating their Mourning on the third, and ſeventh, and ninth Day, which was particularly called the Novendiale: And ſometimes added the twentieth, and thirtieth, and fortieth, not without a ſuperſtitious Opinion of thoſe particular Days, wherein they uſed to ſacrifice to their Manes with Milk, and Wine, and Garlands, and Flowers, as the Roman Antiquaries [p] inform us. Something of this Superſtition, abating the Sacrifice, was ſtill remaining among ſome ignorant Chriſtians in St. Auſtin's Time; for he ſpeaks [q] of ſome who obſerved a Novendial in relation to their Dead, which he thinks they ought to be forbidden, becauſe it was only an Heathen Cuſtom. He does not ſeem to intimate, that they kept it exactly as the Heathens did; but rather that they were ſuperſtitious in their Obſervation of nine Days of Mourning, which was without Example in Scripture. There was another Way of continuing the Funeral Offices for Three Days together, which was allowed among Chriſtians, becauſe it had nothing in it but the ſame Worſhip of GOD repeated. Thus Euodius writing to St. Auſtin [r] and [r], and giving him an Account of the Funeral of a very pious young Man, who had been his Notary, ſays, He had given him honourable Obſequies, worthy ſo great a Soul: For he continued to ſing Hymns to GOD for Three Days together at his Grave, and on the third Day offered the Sacraments of Redemption. The Author of the Conſtitutions [s] takes Notice of this Repetition of the Funeral Office on the third Day, and the ninth Day, and the fortieth Day, giving peculiar Reaſons for each of them: Let the third Day be obſerved for the Dead with Pſalms, and Leſſons, and Prayers, becauſe CHRIST on the third Day roſe again from the Dead; and let the ninth Day be obſerved in Remembrance of the Living and the Dead; and alſo the fortieth Day, according to the ancient Manner of the Iſraelites, Mourning for Moſes Forty Days; and finally, let the Anniverſary Day be obſerved in Commemoration of the Deceaſed. Cotelerius in his Notes upon this Place has obſerved ſeveral other ancient Writers, who take Notice of ſome of theſe Days. Palladius in his Hiſtoria Lauſiaca, cap. 26. mentions the third and the fortieth. Juſtinian in one of his Novels [t] ſpeaks of the third, the ninth, the fortieth, and the Anniverſary Day of Commemoration; forbidding Women who profeſſed the Monaſtick Life, to go into the Monaſteries of the Men under Pretence of any of theſe ſolemn Commemorations of the Dead. To theſe he adds St. Ambroſe in his Funeral Oration upon Theodoſius, and Iſidore of Peluſium, Lib. 1. Ep. 114. and Euſtratius Conſtantinopolitanus, mentioned by Photius, Cod. 171. To omit Damaſcen, Nicon, Philippus Solitarius, Hincmarus, Theodore Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or any later Writers. Suicerus and Meurſius take Notice of the ſame Cuſtom in the Word Τεσσαρᾶται, which ſignifies the third and ninth Day of Commemorating the Dead, which, they ſay, was the Cuſtom of the Ancients. So that when St. Auſtin ſpeaks againſt obſerving the ninth Day, it was not what Cotelerius ſuppoſes, becauſe he was ignorant of this Practice, with St. Ambroſe and many other of the Latins, (wherein Cotelerius contradicts himſelf, having alledged St. Ambroſe before as one that approved the Practice:) But it was becauſe St. Auſtin had obſerved ſomething amiſs in the Practice of ſome ſuperſtitious Chriſtians, who kept the ninth Day with ſome Abuſe, moſt probably Rioting and Exceſs, reſembling the Novendial of the Heathens; as we have heard him complain before of the Feaſts, which ſuch Chriſtians made at the Graves of the Dead, too much reſembling the Parentalia of the Gentiles.

SECT. 20. The Cuſtom of Strawing Flowers upon the Graves of the Dead, retained without Offence.

THE Cuſtom of Strawing Flowers upon the Graves of the Dead was reckoned innocent, and therefore was retained by ſome Chriſtians without any Rebuke. St. Ambroſe and St. Jerom both mention it without any Cenſure: Only they ſeem to ſpeak of it as chiefly the Practice of the Vulgar: For the more intelligent Sort of Chriſtians deſpiſed it as a Trifle, and ſhewed their Reſpect to the Dead in Acts that were more ſubſtantial. Thus St. Ambroſe in Praiſe of Valentinian, ſays [u], I will not ſcatter Flowers upon his Grave, but perfume his Spirit with the Odour of CHRIST. Let others ſtraw their Baskets of Flowers upon him: My Lily is CHRIST, and with this Flower only will I conſecrate his Remains. In like Manner St. Jerom [x] commends his Friend Pammachius for this, That whilſt other Husbands ſcattered Violets, and Roſes, and Lilies, and Purple Flowers upon the Graves of their deceaſed Wives, and with ſuch little Offices aſſwaged the Grief of their Breaſts; Pammachius watered the Holy Aſhes and Bones of his Wife with the Balſam of Almſdeeds and Charity to the Poor. With theſe Perfumes and Odours he ſolaced the Aſhes of the Dead that lay at Reſt, knowing that it was written, As Water will quench a flaming Fire, ſo Alms makes an Atonement for Sins.

SECT. 21. As alſo Wearing a Mourning Habit for ſome Time.

THEY had the ſame Notion of going into a Mourning Habit for the Dead: They did not condemn it, nor yet much approve of it, but left it to all Mens Liberty as an indifferent Thing; rather commending thoſe that either omitted it wholly, or in a ſhort Time laid it aſide again, as acting more according to the Bravery and Philoſophy of a Chriſtian. Thus St. Jerom commends one Julian [y] a rich Man in his Time, becauſe having loſt his Wife and

and Two Daughters, that is, his whole Family in a very few Days one after another, he wore the Mourning Habit but Forty Days after their Death, and then resumed his usual Habit again; and because he accompanied his Wife to the Grave, not as one that was dead, but as going to her Rest. Cyprian indeed seems to carry the Matter a little farther: He says, He was ordered by divine Revelation to preach to the People publickly and constantly, That they should not lament their Brethren that were delivered from the World by the Divine Vocation; as being assured that they were not lost, but only sent before them; that their Death was only a receding from the World, and a speedier Call to Heaven; that we ought to long after them, and not lament them; nor wear any Mourning Habit [z], seeing they were gone to put on their White Garments in Heaven: No Occasion should be given to the Gentiles justly to accuse and reprehend us, for lamenting those as lost and extinct, whom we affirm still to live with GOD; and that we do not prove that Faith, which we profess in Words, by the inward Testimony of our Hearts and Souls. Cyprian thought no Sorrow at all was to be expressed for the Death of a Christian; nor consequently any Signs of Sorrow, such as the Mourning Habit; because the Death of a Christian was only a Translation of him to Heaven. But others did not carry the Thing so high, but thought a moderate Sorrow might be allowed to Nature, and therefore did not so peremptorily condemn the Mourning Habit, as being only a decent Expression of such a moderate Sorrow, though they liked it better if Men could have the Bravery to refuse it.

SECT. 22. Some other Rites not allowed by the Ancients.

WE find some other Funeral Rites mentioned by the spurious Writers under the Names of Dionysius the Areopagite and Athanasius. As the Priests anointing the Body with Oyl before it was put into the Grave, for which the pretended Dionysius [a] gives this Reason, that as in the Ministration of Baptism, after the Person had put off his old Garments, he was anointed with Oyl: So in the End of all Things Oyl was poured upon the Dead. The first Unction called the baptized Person to his Holy Fight and Combate; the second Unction declared that he had fought his Fight and finished all his Labour, and was now consummated and made perfect. This was a quite different Unction from the Anointing or Embalming of the Body to its Burial, of which we have spoken before: And as other Writers say nothing of it, I let it pass as a Thing uncertain, the bare Testimony of this Writer not being sufficient to establish an Ancient Ecclesiastical Custom. We may say the same of another Rite mentioned by the pretended Athanasius [b], who speaks of lighting a Mixture of Oyl and Wax at the Grave of the Dead, as a Sacrifice of Burnt-offering to GOD. But besides the Silence of others, there are two farther Prejudices against this, first, That it looks more like a Piece of Jewish Superstition than a Christian Rite, and secondly, That the Council of Eliberis has an express Canon [c] forbidding a Ceremony not very different from this, viz. Burning of Wax-Tapers by Day in the Cemeteries of the Dead, lest the Spirits of the Saints should be molested: And if any despised this Order, they were liable to be cast out of Communion for their Contempt of it. I will not pretend to explain to the Reader the Reason of this Inhibition, nor say that it forbids expressly the Rite beforementioned: But there is some Analogy and Similitude between the two Ceremonies, and therefore it is hence very probable, that neither of them were accepted or any ways approved by the Church.

SECT. 23. To what Sort of Persons the Privilege of Burying with this Solemnity was denied.

WE have now seen the whole Manner of Christian Burial among the Ancients, with all the Rites both Sacred and Civil accompanying and attending it. I have only one Thing more to observe concerning the whole in general: Which is, That Christian Burial with these Solemnities were ever esteemed a Privilege, and such as good Men always desired when they could have it, and bad Man were punished for their Crimes with the Denial and Refusal of it by the Church, who laid it as a Mark of Censure and Displeasure upon them, not to allow them the Honour and Privilege of that solemn Interment which was Customary in the Practice of the Church. Good Men indeed were not above measure concerned for their Bodies, so as to think it any real Detriment or Loss to them, if either the Barbarity of their Enemies or any other Accident denied them this Privilege: For in this Case, as St. Austin largely discourses [d], the Faith of a Christian set him above any Fear that might arise from the Want of a Burial: The Consumption of Wild Beasts would be no Prejudice to those Bodies dies which must rise again, and an Hair of whose Head could not perish. The Psalmist indeed says, and that with some Concern, Thay have given the dead Bodies of thy Servants to be Meat to the Fowls of the Air, and the Flesh of thy Saints to the Beasts of the Land: Their Blood have they shed on every side of Jerusalem, and there was no Man to bury them. But this, says St. Austin, is said more to exaggerate the Cruelty of those who did it, than the Infelicity of those who suffered it. For though these Things may seem hard and direful in the Eyes of Men, yet precious in the Eyes of the LORD is the Death of his Saints. Therefore all these Things, namely, the Care of a Funeral, the Building of a Sepulchre, the Pomp of Funeral Obsequies, are rather for the Consolation of the Living, than for the Benefit of the Dead. If a sumptuous Funeral be any Advantage to the Wicked, then a poor one or none at all may be some Detriment to the Just. The rich Man that was clad in Purple, had a splendid Funeral, by the Ministry of his Servants, in the Sight of Men: but the poor Man full of Sores had a much more splendid one in the Sight of GOD, by the Ministry of the Angels, who did not carry him forth into a Marble Tomb, but translated him into Abraham's Bosom. Some Philosophers have despised the Care of a Funeral; and whole Armies, whilst they were Fighting for an earthly Country, have been as regardless where they should lie, or to what Beasts they should become a Prey. And the Poets have said plausibly enough upon this Subject, ——Cælo tegitur qui non habet urnam.

He that has no Urn, has yet the Heaven for a Covering. Therefore let not the Heathen insult over the Bodies of Christians, that lie unburied, who have a Promise that their Flesh and all their Members shall be reformed, not only out of the Earth, but out of the most secret Recesses of every other Element, and in a Moment of Time be perfectly restored to their pristine and primitive State again.

THIS was the Christians Consolation, whenever Malice or the Necessity of their Fate and Condition denied them a Funeral. In other Cases they were very desirous to be decently interred among their Brethren; and the Living thought it a Piece of Justice to the Dead, to treat them handsomely after Death, seeing their Bodies had been the Organs and Vessels of the HOLY GHOST to every good Work; and were not only like a Ring or a Garment, mere external Ornaments to the Nature of Man, but more intimately and nearly belonging to him, as Part of his very Essence and Constitution. Upon this Account good Men were equally careful both to pay this just Debt to their holy Brethren, and to make Provision that the same good Office should be done to themselves. And this made it an honourable and desirable Privilege to be buried after the Manner of the Faithful. But then it was a Privilege which belonged to none but such. All Catechumens that died in a voluntary Neglect of Baptism, were excluded from the Benefit of it, as we find by an Order of the first Council of Braga [†], and many Passages of St. Chrysostom to this Purpose, which direct Men [e] to offer private Alms and private Prayers for them, but assure us they had no Place in the Publick Offices of the Church. The Case was otherwise, when Men died without Baptism not through any Neglect or Contempt of it, but by some unavoidable Necessity, which happened and could not be foreseen or prevented, whilst they were piously and studiously preparing for Baptism. In this Case, either Martyrdom or a Man's own Faith was thought sufficient to supply the Want of Baptism, as I have largely shewed [*] in another Place: And then they were buried with the same Solemnity as other Believers, being all one with them in the Estimation of the Church.

ANOTHER Sort of Persons, to whom the Church denied the usual Solemnity of Burial, were the Biathanati, that is, such as laid violent Hands upon themselves, being plainly guilty of Murder, and that without Repentance, by calling Death upon themselves. And they put into the same Class all those that were publickly executed for their Crimes; because these were virtually and indirectly guilty of Self-Murder, in doing those Things which in the Course of Justice brought them to an untimely End; or at least such Things as deserved a Spiritual Censure, as well as a Temporal Punishment. Upon this Account the Council of Braga [f] orders, that both these Sorts of Men shall be denied the Honour of being carried with the usual Solemnity of Psalmody to the Grave. The Council of Auxerre [g] orders, That the Oblations of such as voluntarily hanged or drowned themselves, or killed themselves with a Sword, or cast themselves from a Precipice, or were any other Ways guilty of a voluntary Death, should not be received in the Church. And this was a Punishment of the same Nature as denying them a solemn Burial. There is a like Order in the Second Council of Orleance leance [b] to refuſe the Oblations of ſuch as lay violent Hands upon themſelves; but they excepted ſuch as were killed for their Crimes; I ſuppoſe, upon a Suppoſition, that ſuch Perſons repented of their Crimes before their Execution. But if any one laid violent Hands upon himſelf, or was actually killed in his Crimes, there was no Exception ever made in his Favour. Optatus ſays [i], even one of the Donatiſt Biſhops denied the Circumcellions ſolemn Burial, becauſe they were ſlain in Rebellion againſt the Civil Magiſtrate. Which ſhews that this was a Rule inviolably obſerved in the Church.

ANOTHER Sort of Perſons, to whom the Church denied the Privilege of ſolemn Burial, were all excommunicated Perſons, who continued Obſtinate and Impenitent in a manifeſt Contempt of the Church's Diſcipline and Cenſures. Under which Denomination all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, that were actually denounced ſuch by the Cenſures of the Church, were included. For this Office of Burial belonged only to the Fideles, or Communicants, that is, ſuch as died either in the full Communion of the Church, or elſe if they were excommunicate, were yet in a Diſpoſition to communicate by accepting and ſubmitting to the Rules of Penance and Diſcipline in the Church. In which Caſe their Deſire of Communion was accepted, as the Catechumens Deſire of Baptiſm, and they were treated as Communicants, though they happened to die without a formal Reconciliation in the Church: The Church in this Caſe relaxed their Cenſures, and received them into Communion, and treated them as other Communicants after Death: Of which I have given [*] a more ample Account in ſpeaking of the Diſcipline of the Church in a former Book.

CHAP. IV.

An Account of the Laws made to ſecure the Bodies and Graves of the Dead from the Violence of Robbers and ſacrilegious Invaders.

SECT. 1. The old Roman Laws very ſevere againſt Robbers of Graves, and all Abuſes and Injuries done to the Bodies of the Dead.

THOUGH it does not ſtrictly belong to the Buſineſs of Funeral Rites to ſpeak any thing of Robbers of Graves, and the Laws made againſt them, yet becauſe theſe have ſome Relation to the Dead, and ſome Things alſo remarkable in them I will add ſomething upon this Subject for the Cloſe of this whole Diſcourſe. I have hinted befor [†] that the old Roman Laws were very ſevere againſt all Injuries and Abuſes offered either to the Bodies or the Monuments and Sepulchres of the Dead. They were reckoned Sacred Things; and therefore if any violated a Sepulchre, ſo as to draw out the Body or the Bones, it was a Capital Crime to be puniſhed [a] with Death in Perſons of a meaner Rank; and others of an higher Fortune were either to be tranſported into ſome Iſland, or otherwiſe baniſhed, or condemned to the Mines, as appears from the Anſwer of Paulus in the Pandects, and thoſe Laws of the Chriſtian Emperors [b], which ſpeak of the old Laws puniſhing this Crime with Death. They made a Diſtinction between the Bodies and the Sepulchres: He that violated the Sepulchre only, but offered no Injury to the Body, was not puniſhable with Death, but either Confiſcation, or Infamy, or Baniſhment, or digging in the Mines: But if he offered any Indignity to the Body itſelf, his Crime was Capital, and his Blood was required to expiate the Offence; unleſs the Dignity of his Condition happened to be ſuch as the Law allowed to ſecure his Life, and change the Puniſhment of Death into a Penalty of ſome other Nature.

THIS Law continued all the Time of Conſtantine: But Conſtans his Son made a little Alteration in the Penalty; which laſted not very long; for it was preſently after revoked by Conſtantius, and the old Penalty revived again. Conſtans in a firſt Law about demoliſhing Sepulchres (making no mention of violating the Bodies themſelves) left the Matter pretty much as he found it; Ordering [c] all ſuch as were concerned concerned in demoliſhing of Sepulchres, to be ſent to the Mines, if they were of a ſervile Condition, and did it without the Knowledge of their Lord: But if they did it barely at his Inſtance, by his Authority and Command, they were only to be exiled by a common Baniſhment: And if the Lord was found to have received any Thing into his own Houſe or Farm, that was taken from a Sepulchre, his Houſe or Farm or whatever Edifice it was, was to be confiſcated to the Publick. But in a Second Law [d] he took away the Puniſhment of Death, which the old Laws appointed, and inſtead of it laid a Mulct or Fine of Twenty-Pound of Gold upon all that ſhould be found guilty in any Thing of this Nature. Conſtantius did not approve of this Reduction or Abatement of the ancient Penalty, and therefore he revoked the Indulgence of his Brother Conſtans, and by two new Laws of his own brought the ancient Puniſhment of Death into Force again, with ſome additional Puniſhment by way of Fine alſo. His firſt Law [e] runs in theſe Terms: We underſtand there are ſome, who out of a greedy Deſire of Gain pull down and demoliſh Sepulchres, transferring the Materials of the Building to their own Houſes: Now ſuch, when their Wickedneſs is detected, ſhall be ſubject to the Puniſhment appointed by the ancient Laws. In his other Law, he firſt impoſes a Penalty of Ten Pound of Gold upon any one that ſteals from a Monument either Stones, or Marble, or Pillars, or any other Material, whether to uſe in any Building, or to ſell them: And then he ſubjoins [f], That this Puniſhment is intended as an Addition over and above to the ancient Severity: For he would not derogate any Thing from that Puniſhment which was before impoſed upon thoſe, who offered Violence to the Graves of the Dead: Becauſe, as he ſays in the Beginning of his Law, it was a double Crime equally injurious both to the Dead and the Living; To the Dead, by deſtroying and ſpoiling their Habitations; and to the Living, by polluting them in the Uſe of ſuch Materials in Building. And he adds in the Cloſe, that his Intention was to include within theſe Penalties all ſuch as meddled with the Bodies and Relicks of the Dead, as well as thoſe who defaced their Sepulchres. There is alſo a Law of Julian's in the Theodoſian Code, wherein he firſt complains of the Audaciouſneſs of Men in demoliſhing Sepulchres and ſtealing away the Ornaments of them; and then orders [g] ſuch to be proſecuted with the Severity of the former Laws made againſt them. Finally, Theodoſius Junior and Valentinian III. made a moſt ſevere Law againſt all ſuch Invaders of what Quality ſoever, appointing their Puniſhment according to the Dignity of the Perſons concerned. If a Slave or a Countryman [h] was apprehended in this Crime, he was immediately to be put to the Rack: And if he confeſſed that it was his own Act, and his Maſter was not concerned in it, he was to be put to Death. If his Maſter was concerned in it, he was puniſhed in like manner. If a Freeman was found guilty, who was but a Plebeian and had no Eſtate, he was alſo to ſuffer Death. If he had an Eſtate, or was in any Dignity, he was to be amerced in half his Eſtate, and for ever after to be made infamous in Law. If a Clergyman was found guilty of this Crime, whether Biſhop or Inferior, he was immediately to be degraded and loſe the Name of a Clerk, and to be ſent into Baniſhment without Redemption. and all Judges are ſtrictly charged to ſee this Law duly put in Execution. Pax ſepultis, Peace be to the Dead.

To give theſe Laws the greater Force and Terror, it was uſual with the Emperors, when they granted their Indulgence to ſeveral Criminals, according to Cuſtom at the Eaſter-Feſtival, ſtill to except Robbers of Graves with other great Criminals whom they thought unworthy of any ſuch Pardon or Indulgence; ſuch as Men guilty of Sacrilege, Inceſt, Raviſhment, Adultery, Sorcery, Necromancy, Counterfeiting or Adulterating the Publick Coin, together with Murder and Treaſon: As we find the Exceptions made in ſeveral Laws of Valentinian, and Gratian, and Theodoſius Senior, and Theodoſius Junior, and Valentinian III, put together in one Title in the Theodoſian Code [i], beſide this famous Law of Valentinian now recited.

SECT. 4. For this Crime a Woman was allowed by the Laws to give a Bill of Divorce to her Huſband.

AND it is remarkable alſo, That Conſtantine, who allowed a Woman Liberty to put away her Husband for Three Crimes, made this one of the Three; if he was a Murderer, or a Sorcerer, or a Robber of [k]

Graves. And Theodosius Junior also puts the same Crime among the legal Causes of Divorce both in Men and Women in one of his Laws [l], which Justinian not only put into his new Code, but confirmed by several Laws and Novels of his own Composing, as has been already shewed more at large in handling the Matter of Divorces [*] in the last Book. Neither were the Ecclesiastical Laws wanting in the Punishment of this Crime, which was reputed the most barbarous and inhuman Sort of Robbery of any other; concerning which I have spoken fully under the Head [†] of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and therefore need say no more of it in this Place.

SECT. 5. One Reason tempting Men to commit this Crime was the rich Adorning of the Heathen Sepulchres.

Now if it be inquired, What made Men professing Christianity to be so much addicted to this Vice, that there should be Need of so many Laws against it? I answer, There were Three Motives or Temptations to this Kind of Robbery; Two of which had something plausible in them; but the first had nothing but down-right Covetousness in it, arising from the rich Ornaments and splendid Furniture of many of the Heathen Monuments built over their Graves; which some wicked Christians, as well as others, looking upon not so much with an envious, as a covetous and rapacious Eye, took Occasion either publickly or privately to make a Spoil and Plunder of them. This is evident from the Complaints made in the several Laws, of such Robbers carrying off Marble Stones, and Pillars, and other rich Furniture, either to adorn their own Houses therewith, or make a Gain of them by Selling to others. Some were so base and sordid, as to pull down Monuments to make Lime with, or sell them to others for that Purpose, Coquendæ Calcis Gratia, as one of the Laws words it.

SECT. 6. A more plausible Pretence was taken up from the Laws, that ordered all Heathen Altars and Images to be demolished.

But this rapacious Humour was something covered with a plausible Pretence of Piety and Zeal for the Christian Religion. For Constantine, An. 333, had ordered all Altars and Images as well as Temples to be destroyed: And the Heathen Monuments and Sepulchres were often adorned with such Images: Which gave Occasion, beyond the meaning of the Law, to bad Men to demolish the Heathen Monuments, under the Notion of destroying Images, and rooting out Idolatry, and all the Remains and Footsteps of it. Had they kept within the Intent of the Law, only destroying Images and Altars, and not the Graves themselves, there had been no just Reason of Complaint: But when under this Pretence they destroyed not only the Images, but the whole Edifice of the Monuments, erasing the Titles, and disturbing the Bodies or Ashes of the Dead, and carrying off Marble Stones and Pillars, and whatever was ornamental or valuable about them; this was thought intolerable by the succeeding Emperors, and therefore so many good Laws were made against the hypocritical Rapaciousness of such illegal Pretenders to Reformation. The Law was good, had they used it Lawfully: But they, through Covetousness and Rapine, went beyond their Bounds: And therefore Constans the Son of Constantine, An. 349, ordered all these Creatures to be called to an Account, who had so abused the Law of his Father; and under Pretence of destroying Images, had the Marble Ornaments [m] and Pillars taken away, and the Stones thrown down to burn into Lime. Whosoever of this Sort could be discovered, from the Time that Dalmatius and Zenophilus were Consuls, that is, from the Year 333, when Constantine first published his Edict, which they fraudulently took the Advantage of; they should forfeit to the Emperor's Coffer a Pound of Gold for every Monument so defaced. And whoever for the future was found guilty of such Rapine, should be amerced Twenty Pounds of Gold to the Use of the Exchequer likewise. So that this Pretence of Demolishing Heathen Monuments under the Notion of destroying Idolatry, was a mere hypocritical Act of Covetousness varnished over with a Face of Religion.

SECT. 7. A third Reason was, to get the Relicks of Martyrs to sell and make Gain of them.

There was also a third Temptation of the same Nature, which seems to have prevailed even among some of the more senseless and covetous Clergy: Which was the gainful Trade of getting and selling the Relicks of Martyrs. This made them for the Sake of filthy Lucre rob Graves, and steal away the Bones of Martyrs, or any others, that they might have a sufficient Stock of Relicks (true or false, it mattered not which) to feed the foolish Superstition of such as were willing to let them make a Gain of them. This Kind of Superstition, calculated to encourage Covetousness and religious Cheats, was stirring among some in the Church betimes. For though the Church for above Five Hundred Years made no other Use of the Relicks of Martyrs, but only decently cently to interr them; yet ſome ſuperſtitious Perſons privately made another Uſe of them. Optatus ſays, Lucilla the rich Foundreſs, as one may call her, of the Donatiſt-Schiſm, was uſed before ſhe received the Euchariſt, to kiſs the [n] Mouth of a certain Martyr, which whether true or falſe, ſhe had procured, and kept by her for that Purpoſe. For this ſhe was gravely reproved by Cecilian then Archdeacon of Carthage: Which ſhe ſo reſented and remembred, that when he came to be Biſhop, ſhe being a rich, potent, factious Woman, by her Intereſt procured ſome others to be ſet up againſt him: Which was the firſt beginning of the Schiſm of the Donatiſts, founded upon the Pride of an imperious Woman, who was incorrigibly bent upon the ſuperſtitious Veneration of the Relick of a Martyr. St. Auſtin likewiſe tells us, there were in his Time [o] a great many wandering idle Monks, hypocritical Men, who by the Inſtigation of Satan went about the World, ſelling Relicks of Martyrs, which it was very doubtful whether they were the Relicks of true Martyrs or not. However they made a gainful Trade of it; and no doubt were tempted upon that Account to rob the Graves of the Martyrs, or ſome others, which would as well ſerve the Purpoſe. In Oppoſition to this Sort of Men Theodoſius the Great [p] made an expreſs Law, that no one ſhould remove any Dead Body that was buried, from one Place to another; that no one ſhould ſell or buy the Relicks of Martyrs: But if any one was minded to build over the Grave where a Martyr was buried, a Church to be called a Martyrium in reſpect to him, he ſhould have Liberty to do it. This was then the Honour that was paid to Martyrs, to let them lie quietly in their Graves, and build Churches over them, which were dedicated to GOD and his Service, not to any Religious Worſhip of the Martyr; only in Honour to him the Church might be called a Martyrium after his Name: But beyond this no Honour was to be given to him under any Pretence of Veneration: And to take up his Body and make Merchandiſe of his Bones, was ſo far from Veneration, that it was reckoned a diſturbing of his Aſhes and a robbing of Graves, which was mere Covetouſneſs hypocritically covered under the Name of Religion. I queſtion not but the Law of Valentinian III, which ſpeaks of Biſhops and others of the Clergy, who were concern'd in Robbing of Graves, was levelled againſt this Sort of Men, who digged up the Bones of Martyrs, and ſold them as holy Relicks, to gratify their Lucre at the Expence of ſuperſtitious People, who thought it an Honour to a Martyr to keep his Bones above-Ground; whereas all Laws of Church and State then reckoned it a ſacrilegious Robbing of Graves, and Diſturbance of thoſe holy Relicks, which ought to have lain quiet and undiſturbed to the Reſurrection.

THERE was a peculiar Cuſtom in Egypt, which might have given great Encouragement to this wicked Practice; though we do not find Men made that ill Uſe of it; however it was diſapproved upon another Account. For the Cuſtom of Egypt was ſo to embalm the Dead, as to keep them either in their Houſes, or in Monuments and Mauſolæums above-Ground: The Body ſo ordered was by the ancient Greek Writers called Τάριχος; the Egyptians called it Gabbara; and Modern Writers, Mummia, as Gataker [q] obſerves from the Arabick Word, Mum, which denotes Wax, uſed chiefly in this Embalming. Moſt ancient Writers ſpeak of this Egyptian Way of Embalming: And Tully more particularly takes Notice [r] of their keeping the Bodies ſo embalmed in their own Houſes without any other Burial. This Cuſtom, it ſeems, was alſo retained among the Chriſtians of Egypt, many of whom ('tis certain not all) were wont not to bury their Dead under-Ground, but when they had embalmed them, to keep them ſtill in their Houſes laid in Beds, out of Reverence and Honour for their Perſons. Athanaſius ſays St. Antony [s] the famous Egyptian Hermit was very much offended at this Cuſtom, and therefore he was uſed with a great deal of Freedom to tell the Biſhops of Egypt, that they ought to teach the People better, and endeavour to break the Cuſtom. For the Bodies of the Patriarchs and Prophets were kept in their Sepulchres unto this Day; and the Body of our LORD was laid in a Grave to the Time of his Reſurrection. By which Arguments he ſhewed, that it was a Sin for any Man not to bury the Bodies of his Dead under the Earth, although they were holy. For what can be greater or more holy than the Body of the LORD? Upon this many People changed their Cuſtom, and buried the Bodies of their Dead under-Ground, giving GOD Thanks that they were better inſtructed. 'Tis added added a little after, that St. Antony gave orders that his own Body ſhould ſo be buried, which was accordingly done in a Place that no one knew of beſide the two Perſons that took care of his Funeral. But it was not eaſy to break an inveterate Cuſtom, and therefore though many left off this Way, yet many continued it ſtill: For St. Auſtin ſpeaks of it [t] as a Thing in Uſe among the Egyptians in his Time, at leaſt to dry the Bodies of the Dead by their curious Way of Embalming, which made them almoſt as hard as Braſs, and kept them from Corruption. Theſe in their Language they called by a peculiar Name, Gabbaræ, which, I think, we may Engliſh Egyptian Mummies. He does not expreſsly ſay, they ſtill kept them above-Ground, but he ſeems to intimate as much, in ſaying, they intended by their Embalming to harden them like Braſs, and preſerve them from Corruption.

SECT. 9. No Religious Worſhip allowed to be given to Relicks in the ancient Church till after the Time of St. Auſtin.

WE may hence draw ſeveral Arguments, as Mr. Daille has done in a very Curious and Learned Book [u], to prove, that there was no religious Worſhip given to the Relicks of Saints and Martyrs for ſeveral of the firſt Ages in the Church. For their great Care then was to bury them under-Ground, (and not ſet them upon the Altar [x] as in after-Ages:) This was the greateſt Reſpect they thought they could pay to them. St. Antony thought it was a great Diſreſpect to keep them above-Ground unburied: The Laws made it Sacrilege to rob a Grave for the Sake of them, and abſolutely forbad any one to buy or ſell the Relicks of a Martyr: Lucilla was reproved for paying an undue Reſpect to them: St. Auſtin inveighs againſt the Monks that went about the World Selling the Relicks of Martyrs: And he condemns thoſe who worſhipped Graves and Pictures under Pretence of honouring [y] the Dead, whom he puts into the ſame Claſs with thoſe who made themſelves drunk at the Monuments of the Martyrs, and placed their Intemperance to the Account of Religion. All ſuch, he ſays, were a Scandal to the Church, whom ſhe condemned as ignorant and ſuperſtitious Men, and daily laboured to correct them as wicked Children. There is one Inſtance in the IIId Century of ſome well-meaning Chriſtians, who after the Martyrs Fructuoſus and Eulogius were burnt, gathered up their Remains, and would have kept them by them only out of Reſpect and Love, not for any religious Worſhip: But Fructuoſus after his Paſſion [z] appeared to them, and admoniſhed them to reſtore immediately whatever Part of the Aſhes any one out of Love had taken to himſelf, and that putting them all together they ſhould bury them in one common Grave. The great Care of the Church and of the Martyrs themſelves in thoſe Days, was not to have their Relicks kept above-Ground for Worſhip, but to be decently buried under the Earth. And therefore when the Heathen Judge asked Eulogius the Deacon who ſuffered with Fructuoſus his Biſhop, Whether he would not worſhip Fructuoſus as a Martyr after Death? He plainly replied, I do not worſhip Fructuoſus [a], but him only whom Fructuoſus worſhips. The like Anſwer was given by the Brethren of the Church of Smyrna to the Suggeſtion of the Jews, when at the Martyrdom of Polycarp the Jews deſired the Heathen Judge, that he would not permit the Chriſtians to carry off the Body of Polycarp, leſt they ſhould leave their crucified Maſter, and begin to worſhip this Man in his Stead: This Suggeſtion, ſays the Anſwer, proceeded purely from Ignorance [b], and a falſe Preſumption, that we could either forſake CHRIST, or worſhip any other. For we worſhip CHRIST, as being the Son of GOD: But the Martyrs as the Diſciples and Followers of the LORD, we love with a due Affection, for their great Love of their own King and Maſter; with whom we deſire to be Partners and Fellow-Diſciples. They add, That when his Body was burnt, they gathered up the Bones, more precious and valuable than any Gold or precious Stones, and buried them in a convenient Place, where by GOD's Permiſſion they intended to meet and celebrate his Birth-Day with Joy and Gladneſs, as well for the Memorial of thoſe who have bravely ſuffered and fought as Champions before, as for the Exerciſe and Preparation of thoſe that come after. I will only add one Teſtimony more out of St. Auſtin, where he makes ſome pious Reflections upon the Paſſions of the foreſaid Fructuoſus and Eulogius. He mentions the ſame Anſwer of Eulogius to the Judge, that the Acts ſpeak of; when the Judge asked him, Whether he would worſhip Fructuoſus? He replied, I do not worſhip Fructuoſus; but I worſhip Him whom Fructuoſus alſo worſhips. Upon which St. Auſtin makes this Remark, That hereby we are taught [c] to honour the Martyrs, but not to worſhip them, but only only to worſhip the GOD whom the Martyrs worſhip. For we ought not to be ſuch as the Pagans are, whom we lament upon that very Account, becauſe they worſhip dead Men. For all thoſe whoſe Names you hear, to whom Temples are built, were Men, and all or moſt of them Kings among Men: As you have heard of Jupiter, Hercules, Neptune, Pluto, Mercury, Bacchus and the reſt: whom not only the Fictions of the Poets, but the Hiſtories of all Nations declare and evidence to have been Men, who having obliged the World with ſome Temporal Kindneſſes, were after Death worſhiped by vain Men, who called and eſteemed them Gods, and built Temples to them as Gods, and prayed to them as Gods, and erected Altars to them as Gods, and ordained Prieſts for them as Gods, and offered Sacrifices to them as Gods: Whereas the True GOD alone ought to have Temples, and Sacrifices ought to be offered to the True GOD alone. As for the Martyrs, he ſays, they did neither take them for Gods, nor worſhip them as Gods. We give them no Temples, nor Altars, nor Sacrifices; neither do the Prieſts offer to them. GOD forbid. Theſe Things are only done to GOD, and offered to Him from whom alone we obtain all good Things, at the Memorials of the Martyrs. Therefore if any one asks thee, Whether thou worſhip Peter? Anſwer as Eulogius did concerning Fructuoſus, I do not worſhip Peter, but I worſhip Him whom Peter alſo worſhips. Then he brings in the Example of Paul and Barnabas refuſing to be worſhipped by the Lycaonians, and the Example of the Angel refuſing to be worſhipped by St. John, and bidding him to worſhip GOD alone. After which he adds theſe remarkable Words in the Cloſe, both againſt thoſe who kept Feaſts at the Graves of the Martyrs, and thoſe who worſhipped them: The Martyrs hate your Flagons of Wine, the Martyrs hate your Frying-Pans, the Martyrs hate your drunken Revellings at their Graves: I ſpeak not theſe things to injure or reproach any who are not ſuch: Let them who do ſuch things, take it to themſelves: The Martyrs [d], I ſay, hate theſe Things, and love not thoſe that do them: But they much more hate and abhor any Worſhip that is offered to them. Theſe are plain Evidences, that no religious Worſhip was given to the Martyrs, much leſs to their Relicks, by the Church in the Time of St. Auſtin: But ſome ignorant and ſuperſtitious Perſons were carried away with a blind Zeal, to reckon thoſe Things to be an Honour to the Martyrs, which were a real Reproach both to themſelves and the Church, and diſpleaſing both to GOD and the Martyrs; to whom the greateſt Honour they could do, was to lay their Relicks quietly in the Grave, and meet at their Tombs to praiſe GOD for their glorious Atchievements and Victories over the Terrors of Death, and to excite themſelves to Piety and Conſtancy in the Faith by the Provocation of their Examples. Other Honours to the Dead the ancient Church knew none; at leaſt approved or encouraged none; but laboured to correct and repreſs them where-ever they appeared, as reſembling too near, and ſavouring too much of the Follies and Superſtitions of the Gentiles, whoſe Gods were only dead Men, deified by their own Conſecration and Worſhip, without any real Foundation in Nature: For by Nature they were no Gods: And this is the great and irrefragable Argument the Ancients always made Uſe of againſt them; of which I have ſaid enough both here and elſewhere [*], and ſo I put an End to this Diſcourſe concerning the Manner of treating the Dead in the ancient Church.

I HAVE now gone through the whole State of the Primitive Church, and given an Account of the ſeveral Parts of her Publick Worſhip and Offices of Divine Service: Which in a great Meaſure anſwers the Deſign I at firſt propoſed to myſelf, when I begun this Work. Another Book more of Miſcellaneous Rites might be added: But having laboured in this Work for Twenty Years with frequent Returns of bodily Infirmities, which make hard Study now leſs agreeable to a weakly Conſtitution; and the Things themſelves being of no great Moment; I rather chuſe to give the Reader a compleat and finiſhed Work, with an Index to the Whole, than by graſping at too much, to be forced to leave it imperfect, neither to my own nor the World's Satisfaction. I bleſs GOD for enabling me to go through the Work with Comfort and Pleaſure: I thank the World for their Patience and Approbation; and I thank my particular Benefactors more, as I think I am oblig'd to do, for their ſuitable Encouragement to a Work of ſuch a Nature: I blame none for Want of Encouragement, nor any that diſlike the Whole, or any Part of it: They may have Reaſons perhaps, which I know not of, and ſhall never enquire into. I hope however, that it may prove an Uſeful Work in ſome Meaſure both to the Preſent and Future Generations, as a Learned Prelate was once pleaſed to ſay to me, by way of Approbation and Encouragement, Seris Arbores alteri Sæculo profuturas: If ſo, I ſhall have my End: Let the Church receive Benefit, and GOD the Glory of all.

HISTORY

CHURCH

In reference to the

ADMINISTRATION

BY

WHEREIN

An Account is given of the Practice of the Primitive Church, the Practice of the modern Greek Church, and the Practice of the Churches of the REFORMATION.

WITH

An APPENDIX containing ſome Remarks on the Hiſtorical Part of Mr. Lawrence's Writings touching the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, his Preliminary Diſcourſe of the various Opinions of the Fathers concerning Rebaptization, and Invalid Baptiſms, and his Diſcourſe of Sacerdotal Powers.

By JOSEPH BINGHAM,

M. A. Rector of Headborn-Worthy, and ſometime Fellow of Univerſity-College in Oxford.

PREFACE.

THE firſt Deſign of the following Diſcourſe, was only to have been a ſingle Chapter of the next Volume of my Origines Eccleſiaſticæ, where the Order I have propoſed to obſerve in that Work will lead me next to purſue the ſeveral Offices of the Ancient Liturgy and Services of the Church, and among them, in the firſt Place, the Inſtitution of the Catechumens, together with the Offices of Baptiſm and Confirmation. Here the Subject Matter would neceſſarily lead me to ſpeak of the Miniſter of Baptiſm, and of Rebaptizations, and the Power granted to Laymen, in ſome Caſes, to Baptize. But I quickly found, that to do Juſtice to the preſent Subject, eſpecially at a Time when ſome Controverſies had been raiſed about it, it would be requiſite to handle it a little more largely, than would conſiſt with the uſual Method I have obſerved in my Origines, where great Variety of Matter obliges me to treat upon all Subjects as compendiouſly and ſuccinctly as poſſible: And therefore I have choſen to treat of this one particular Subject in a ſeparate Diſcourſe by itſelf, that I might have room to inlarge upon it, and give ſuch an Hiſtorical Account as was proper upon the preſent Occaſion. I had obſerved ſeveral Miſtakes to be committed, in relation to this Matter, by ſome late Learned Writers: And though I love not to enter into Diſpute with any Men, yet it was neceſſary for me in this Diſcourſe (with due Reſpect and Civility) to take Notice of them: In which Caſe I think no Great Names ſo Venerable, as to be of ſufficient Authority to lead others by their Dictates only, eſpecially in Matters of Fact and Hiſtory, unleſs they aſſign juſt Grounds and Reaſons for their Aſſertions. Upon this Account I have taken the Liberty to ſhew the Miſtakes of the Learned Dr. Forbes, in Reference to the Baptiſms of Deacons and Laymen, and how he wrong underſtands the Meaning of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Jerom, upon thoſe Subjects. And becauſe, in the Point of Rebaptization, Stephen Biſhop of Rome has been much miſrepreſented, as if he were for receiving the Baptiſm of all Hereticks in general, without Exception, I could not but do Juſtice to his Character in that Reſpect, by ſetting Matters in their proper Light, though ſeveral Great Names, and Biſhop Pearſon's among the reſt, had given current

Credit and Authority to the contrary Opinion. I had obſerved alſo great Streſs laid upon the Senſe of the Modern Greek Church, and the Practice of the Churches of the Reformation, by ſome late Learned Writers, in reference to the Point of Laymens Baptizing in Caſes of Neceſſity, or otherwiſe, to prove the Invalidity of all ſuch Baptiſms: And therefore I have made a particular Enquiry into the Judgment and Practice of all thoſe Churches, and corrected ſeveral plain Miſtakes committed in the Accounts that have been given of them, by thoſe that have pleaded their Authority in this Behalf. I have alſo made a particular Enquiry into the Senſe and Practice of the Church of England, from the Beginning of the Reformation to this preſent Time, and ſhewed, that ſhe has no Rule, nor was ever underſtood to have any, for Rebaptizing thoſe who, in Time of Neceſſity, were Baptized by Laymen. And becauſe the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and Excommunicate and Degraded Clerks, is a Matter of great Concern, with which the Church Univerſal has always been exerciſed; and the Church of England in particular has a conſiderable Intereſt depending upon the Validity of it, I have been at ſome Pains to enquire into the Bottom of this Queſtion, and ſtate it with Exactneſs from the ancient Writers; ſhewing that ſuch Baptiſm, though given in Contradiction to Authority, is notwithſtanding reputed valid; and though it has its Deficiencies, yet they are ſuch as might be ſupplied by the Church without Rebaptization. And becauſe it ſeems a great Difficulty to Account for the Legal Authority of the Church of England to Baptize, whilſt it is confeſſed that ſhe had her Baptiſm from the Heretical and Schiſmatical Church of Rome, I have pointed out the true Method of ſolving this Difficulty, by ſhewing that She regained her juſt Authority, by returning to the Unity of the Catholick Church at her Reformation. And that no one might object, that there were then no viſible Profeſſors in the Holy Catholick Church, beſide thoſe of the Church of Rome, I have ſhewed that there was a very great and numerous Body of ſuch Profeſſors always preſerved among the Albigenſes or Waldenſes, to the very Time of the Reformation: And I have vindicated their Character, as I thought myſelf in Juſtice bound to do, from the Miſrepreſentations and odious Reflections which ſome among ourſelves have unwarily, if not deſignedly, caſt upon them. Finally, becauſe the Writings of Mr. Lawrence, an Ingenious Layman, (who, out of a Scruple of Conſcience, deſired to be rebaptized) have made great Impreſſions upon many, who reckon the Acuteneſs of his Reaſonings, and the Exactneſs of his Hiſtorical Accounts unanſwerable, I have made ſuch Remarks upon them, as came properly in my way, to ſhew both him and the World, that he has committed ſeveral great Miſtakes in Point of Ancient Hiſtory; that he alſo frequently confounds the Terms of Lay-Baptiſm, Unauthorized Baptiſm, and Invalid Baptiſm together, which yet in the Hiſtory of the Church are Terms of very different Importance; and that he builds his whole Book upon this miſtaken Foundation, ſuppoſing thoſe Terms to be Equivalent, which are vaſtly wide of one another. But that which I have chiefly remarked in Mr. Lawrence's Way of handling this Argument, is, the Fatal Tendency of the Notions he has advanced concerning the Invalidity of Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm, which, in their direct and immediate Conſequence, do Unchurch and Unbaptize the whole Church of England, unleſs it can be ſhewed that we had our Baptiſm from ſome other Church Originally, than from the Heretical and Schiſmatical Church of Rome. This is a Conſideration ſo Momentous, that I hope neither Mr. Lawrence, nor any other who Indiſcriminately imbibe his Notions, will be diſpleaſed at me for obſerving it, ſince ſo much of our Chriſtianity depends upon it in theſe latter Ages of the Church. But if any Obloquy or Reproach befals me for ſaying this, I can eaſily be content to receive and ſuffer it for the Good of the Church Univerſal, and the Church of England, whoſe true Intereſts I have always been

ſerving, by writing the Antiquities of the one and Apologies for the other; in purſuance of both which Deſigns I have publiſhed the preſent Diſcourſe, not only to give an Account of the Practice of the Ancient Church, but to vindicate the juſt Right and Power of the Church of England, when under Pretence of magnifying her Power, ſuch Arguments and Methods of Reaſoning are uſed, as tend to overthrow her Conſtitution, and leave her naked, expoſed, and deſtitute even of true Chriſtian Baptiſm. Which has been the Misfortune of Mr. Lawrence's Way of Reaſoning, if I am capable of underſtanding him. I can readily acknowledge my great Reſpects for Mr. Lawrence, as a Man of a ſharp Wit, and in many Things an Acute Reaſoner: And I can as heartily pity any Man in his Circumſtances, who, out of a pure Scruple of Conſcience, doubting of the Validity of his Baptiſm, deſires Leave of the Church to be rebaptized for Satisfaction. For in ſome Caſes (though not exactly in his) where a Man doubted whether he were baptized or not, the Primitive Church allowed of a Rebaptization, to take away all Scruples that might ariſe upon that Account. But when a Man uſes ſuch Arguments in his own Defence, as deſtroy the very Power of Baptizing in that Church from whom he deſires to receive Baptiſm; then it would be Uncharitable to him, and Unjuſt to the Church, not to ſhew him his Errors, and vindicate the Validity of ſuch Baptiſms in the Church, as his Arguments tend to overthrow. And with this View only, I have made Remarks upon him, as it became one to do, to whoſe Province it is fallen to explain the Laws and Practices of the Ancient Church, and aſſert the juſt Rights and Privileges of the Church of England.

THERE is one Thing more I would humbly beg leave to offer, with all due Reſpect to the Conſideration of our Superiors, legally aſſembled in Convocation, that is, Whether it might not be proper to have a peculiar Form of Confirmation or Impoſition of Hands, for ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, upon their Return to the Unity of the Church; conſidering what frequent Occaſion there is for ſuch a Form, by reaſon of great Multitudes that have been baptized in Hereſy or Schiſm, and are admitted into the Church upon Repentance and Renunciation of their Errors, without Rebaptization. The Ancient Church had ſuch Forms peculiar to this Occaſion: For they did not think Confirmation was to be given exactly in the ſame Way to thoſe who were baptized by Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, as they did to thoſe that were baptized in the Church; becauſe though they did not eſteem the Baptiſm of ſuch to be ſimply Null and Invalid, yet they looked upon it as Deficient in ſeveral Reſpects (of which I have given a particular Account in the following Diſcourſe) and therefore they appointed proper Forms for the Confirmation of ſuch, before they admitted them to the Euchariſt, upon their Return to the Church. One of theſe Forms, becauſe it will give ſome Light in this Matter, and illuſtrate what I am diſcourſing of, I ſhall here ſubjoin, out of De Marca, who ſays [*] he had it from a Manuſcript Collection of an Ancient Writer in the French King's Library, written above Eight hundred Years ago. And it plainly appears to be drawn in Conformity to the Decrees of the Second General Council of Conſtantinople, and the Council of Trullo, which order ſome Hereticks to be received as meer Heathens, by a new Baptiſm, and others only by Impoſition of Hands, with the Unction of Chriſm or Confirmation. The Ceremony of Receiving thoſe of the later Kind is thus deſcribed: Firſt they are to learn the Orthodox Faith, and give themſelves to Faſting and Prayer for Ten or Fifteen Days together, being inſtructed and diſciplined after the manner of the Catechumens. Then they are publickly to to renounce and anathematize their former Hereſies, and make Profeſſion of the Catholick Faith. After which Profeſſion, kneeling down before the Prieſt, he lays his Hands upon them and recites this Prayer: " O GOD our " SAVIOUR, who would'ſt have all Men to be ſaved, and come to the " Knowledge of the Truth; receive this thy Servant, who is ſcarce yet " throughly awakened out of Error, but deſirous to come to the Knowledge " of thy Truth. For Thou haſt ſaid, I have other Sheep which are not of " this Fold, and them I muſt bring, and they ſhall hear my Voice, and there " ſhall be one Fold and one Shepherd. Feed him with the Doctrine of thy " Truth, as Thou haſt revealed it by thy Holy and Glorious Apoſtles; " vouchſafe to give him the Seal of the Divine Unction, and the Inſpiration " of thy HOLY SPIRIT, and make him Partaker of the bleſſed Body and " Blood of CHRIST: And conſummate this thy Servant, that he may be " numbred with thy Flock, to the Glory and Praiſe of thy Greatneſs, for " thine is the Kingdom and the Power.

THEN anointing him with the Chriſm, after the manner of thoſe that are newly Baptized, he uſes the ſame Form of Words as is uſed to them: And afterward repeats this Prayer; " O LORD our GOD, who haſt vouchſafed " to Perfect and Conſummate this thy Servant with the true Faith in Thee, " and with the Seal of thy Holy Unction, Thou LORD of all Things, keep " and preſerve this true Faith in him, make him to encreaſe in Righteouſ- " neſs, and adorn him with all the Graces of thy SPIRIT. " After this he is admitted to partake of the Holy Euchariſt.

'TIS eaſy to obſerve, That this Form of Confirmation was not for ſuch as were baptized in the Church, but peculiar to thoſe who were baptized in Hereſy or Schiſm: For mention is made of their Errors in the very Words of the Prayers, and they are obliged alſo to confeſs and anathematize their Hereſies upon their Return to the Church. Since therefore we have no ſuch peculiar Form in our Liturgy, I leave it to the Wiſdom and Diſcretion of our Superiors to conſider, whether ſuch a Form might not be proper to be added to it, when the Form of Reconciling Penitents, and others of the like Nature, come next under their Conſideration. This was the Way which the Ancient Church took to ſupply the Deficiencies of ſuch Baptiſms, as She thought fit to receive as Valid, though not every way Perfect, without Rebaptization.

An Account of the Practice of the Ancient Church.

TO underſtand the State of the preſent Controverſy aright, it will be neceſſary, in the Entrance of this Diſcourſe, to diſtinguiſh theſe ſeveral Queſtions from one another. 1. Whether the Commiſſion to Baptize was ſo given to the Apoſtles, as that they might communicate it to any others? 2. Whether Biſhops were inveſted with the ſame Right which the Apoſtles had? 3. Whether the Biſhops may communicate this Power only to Presbyters or Prieſts, as inveſted with Sacerdotal Powers? 4. Whether Deacons may baptize either in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes? 5. Whether the Minor Clergy, below Deacons, may have any thing of the ſame Power communicated to them? 6. Whether mere Laymen, who were never called to any Eccleſiaſtical Office, may promiſcuouſly adminiſter Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes? 7. Whether Biſhops may give them a Right to do it in extraordinary Caſes of extreme Neceſſity? 8. Whether, if they do it with or without ſuch Commiſſion, their Baptiſm be wholly Null and Invalid? 9. Whether Women may be allowed to baptize in Caſes of the like Neceſſity, and their Baptiſm be valid? 10. Whether Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts be any better qualified to adminiſter Baptiſm than Catholick Lay-men? 11. Whether their Baptiſm be either Legal or Valid? 12. Laſtly, Whether Baptiſm adminiſtred by Turks, Jews or Infidels be of any Account in the Chriſtian Church? The diſtinct Conſideration of theſe ſeveral Queſtions will take in every thing that relates to this Subject: And what I propoſe, is to give ſome Reſolution of them, ſo far as may be collected from the general Senſe and Practice of the Church both ancient and modern; beginning firſt with the Practice of the ancient Church, then examining the Rules of the modern Greek Church, and laſt of all, the Churches of the Reformation.

SECT. 2. The Commiſſion given to the Apoſtles to Baptize; by them communicated to others at Diſcretion.

To begin with the Practice of the ancient Church. It is certain, the Commiſſion to baptize was originally given by our SAVIOUR to the Eleven Apoſtles: For ſo it is expreſsly ſaid, Math. xxviii. 16, &c. Then the Eleven Diſciples went away into Galilee, into a Mountain where JESUS had appointed them. And JESUS came and ſpake unto them, ſaying, All Power is given unto me in Heaven and in Earth; Go ye therefore and teach all Nations, Baptizing them in the Name of the FATHER, and of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST; teaching them to obſerve all Things whatſoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the End of the World. Now, by the Tenour of this Commiſſion it is certain, they were inveſted with Authority not only to baptize themſelves, but to communicate that Power to others: For the Commiſſion and Power of Baptizing was not to die with them, but to continue to the End of the World. But then two Queſtions ariſe from hence: Whom they actually authorized to baptize? and, To whom they gave Commiſſion to authorize others to baptize? For both theſe Things were neceſſary to preſerve the Church according to the Order of CHRIST, at leaſt in future Ages. As to the firſt Queſtion, it is evident from the Apoſtolical Hiſtory, that they gave Commiſſion to Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons to baptize: For Philip, who was but a Deacon, baptized the Eunuch, as we read Acts viii. 38. But ſtill it remains a Queſtion, Whether they extended this Commiſſion to any others, either in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes. The ancient Author, under the Name of St. Ambroſe [a], was of Opinion, That the Apoſtles found it neceſſary, for the Augmentation and Increaſe of the Church, to grant a general Commiſſion to all Chriſtians, both to teach and baptize; But as ſoon as that Neceſſity was over; as ſoon as the World was generally converted, and Churches erected, Governors and other Officers were appointed in all Churches; and then this General Commiſſion was withdrawn; ſo that none, even among the Clergy, was to preſume to meddle with any Office to which he was not appointed. Hence it came to paſs, that neither Deacons were allowed to preach, nor the inferior Clergy, nor Laymen to baptize. This Author ſeems to have been of Opinion, that the Commiſſion which our SAVIOUR left with his Apoſtles, was a Diſcretionary Power to authorize ſuch others to baptize, as they in their Wiſdom, under the Direction of the HOLY GHOST, ſhould think proper to anſwer the preſent Neceſſities and emergent Occaſions of the Church: And that therefore, as no one can have a Power of Baptizing, but he that receives, ſome way or other, a Commiſſion from them; ſo when the Neceſſity of the Church required it, they had Power to authorize others, beſides the ſtanding Miniſters, to baptize; which Power they both might and did recal again, as ſoon as thoſe Neceſſities of the Church were over. And upon this Principle it was chiefly, that the ancient Biſhops of the Church allowed Deacons, and ſometimes Laymen, in extraordinary Caſes, to baptize: For they looked upon themſelves as inveſted with the ſame Commiſſion and Power that the Apoſtles had, as their Succeſſors: That is, as has been ſaid, not only a Power to baptize themſelves, but to authorize others to baptize, either in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes. By Virtue of which they made Presbyters their Aſſiſtants in ordinary Caſes, and uſed their Diſcretionary Power ſometimes to grant Authority alſo to Deacons to miniſter Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes, and ſometimes to reſtrain them wholly from it, and confine them only to extraordinary Caſes, and great Neceſſities of the Church, allowing them no other Power than what in the like Caſes they allowed to Laymen. For tho' no other Writer among the Ancients has ſo plainly expreſſed his Mind upon this Point, as this Author, under the Name of St. Ambroſe; yet it is plain, all of them who maintained the Power of Biſhops to authorize Deacons and Laymen to baptize, or at their Diſcretion to reſtrain them from it, muſt needs go upon the ſame Principle, viz. That ſuch a Power was lodged in the Hands of

of the Bishops of the Church, as the Apostles Successors, to authorize what Men should baptize, and in what Cases, according as they should think necessary in their Wisdom and Discretion, for the greater or lesser Exigencies of the Church: For without this Principle it will be impossible to account for the Practice of the ancient Bishops, who sometimes restrained Deacons from Baptizing, as well as Laymen, and sometimes granted Authority to them both.

SECT. 3. Bishops invested with the same Power which the Apostles had, as their Successors.

THAT thus the Matter was in Fact, is very evident from many Passages of the ancient Writers, where they speak of the original Power of administring Baptism, as lodged solely and entirely in the Hands of the Bishops, as the Apostles immediate Successors, and derivatively conveyed from them to others, whom they authorized to be either the standing and ordinary Ministers of Baptism, or else only the occasional and extraordinary Ministers of it in Times of absolute Necessity, and great Exigencies of the Church. Hence it was, that anciently in many small Dioceses, Bishops were the usual and ordinary Ministers of Baptism themselves. There was but one Baptistery belonging to a City or a Diocese, and that at the Cathedral or Mother-Church, where the Bishop resided, and whither all Persons came at the two solemn Festivals, Easter and Pentecost, for Baptism. In larger Cities and Dioceses, where more Baptisteries were necessary, they were still erected by the Bishop's Appointment, and only such Persons allowed to officiate in them as had his Consent and Authority, that nothing might be done in Opposition or Contradiction to him, but in a due Subordination to him as their Superior. Thus it is remarked by the Author of the Pontifical in the Life of Marcellus [b], That whilst he was Bishop of Rome, he appointed Five-and twenty Churches, as so many little Dioceses, for the Convenience of Baptizing Pagans upon their Conversion, and an equal Number of Presbyters to minister in them. But still all these were subordinate to that one Bishop, and acted by the Authority and Commission which they received from him. So that as one of the Roman Councils [c] expresses it, "Tho' both Presbyters "and Deacons, at some solemn Times, were "allowed to baptize at Rome in the Bishop's "Presence, yet they were but Officials to "him, and what they did was reckoned his "Act, and went in his Name." 'Tis peculiarly remarked to this Purpose by one of the Bishops present at the Council of Carthage under Cyprian [d], "That CHRIST gave the "Commission to his Apostles, and to them "alone the Power which was given him by "his FATHER; and that Bishops were the "Apostles Successors in governing the Church "with the same Power, and granting Baptism "to Believers." Hence it became a general and a standing Rule in the Church, That Presbyters and Deacons were to perform no Offices [e] without the Authority and Consent of their Bishop, because the LORD's People were committed to his Trust, and he was to answer for their Souls. This was particularly specified in the Office of Baptism, by most of the ancient Writers. The Rule was as old as Ignatius, who delivers himself after this manner, in relation to this Point. "It is not lawful either to baptize [f] or "celebrate the Eucharist without the Bishop; "but that which he allows is well-pleasing "to GOD." He does not say, that no one beside the Bishop might administer Baptism, but that it was not regularly done without his Commission or Delegation: He being the chief Minister of Baptism, as well as all other Offices in the Church. In like manner Tertullian [g] asserts the Bishop's Original Right as Chief Priest, Independent of any other; and then the Right of Presbyters and Deacons to baptize; but this in Dependence of their Bishop: For they are not to do it without his Authority, for the Honour of the Church, in the Preservation of which Peace is preserved. St. Cyprian [h] and another Bishop, one of his Cotemporaries [i] who writes of the Baptism of Hereticks, speak of themselves

ſelves as the Prime Miniſters of Baptiſm; who only had Power to give it, with all the Ceremonies and Solemnities belonging to it: And when it was given by the Inferior Clergy, in Caſes of Neceſſity, as to the Clinicks upon a Sick Bed, the Want of thoſe Ceremonies was either ſupplied by the Biſhop in Confirmation, upon the Party's Recovery, or by GOD himſelf, in calling them to the State of Martyrdom. This ſhews, that they thought Baptiſm chiefly to be the Biſhop's Office, and when it was done by others, it was ſtill done by his Authority, and reputed as his Act, which he alſo ratified as Occaſion required, by adding what was wanting in the Circumſtances of the Solemnity, in a ſubſequent Confirmation. The ſame is alſo aſſerted by St. Ambroſe [k], That tho' the Presbyters do baptize, yet they derive the Authority of their Miniſtry from the Chief Prieſt, that is, the Biſhop. And the Author of the Comments upon St. Paul's Epiſtles [l], under the Name of St. Ambroſe, ſays in general, none of the Clergy were to meddle with any Office, to which they were not appointed. But no one expreſſes himſelf more fully or plainly upon this Head than St. Jerom: "The Welfare [m] of the Church, ſays he, depends "upon the Dignity and Veneration of the "Chief Prieſt; on whom, if there was not "ſome extraordinary and eminent Power "conferred, there would be as many Schiſms "in the Church as there are Prieſts. Hence "it is, that neither Presbyters nor Deacons "have a Right to baptize without the Chriſm "and Command of their Biſhop." So that this Point was clear among the Ancients, beyond all Diſpute, that Presbyters had only a Derivative and Subordinate Power to baptize as well as others; and ſo long as they kept to this Rule, their Baptiſms were regular and lawful, as done in Conformity to the eſtabliſhed Rules and Orders of the Church: But if they ſet themſelves in Oppoſition to their Biſhop, and either acted without or againſt his Conſent, as abſolute and independent of him, then their Baptiſms and all their other Offices and Adminiſtrations were irregular and unlawful, becauſe done in a ſchiſmatical Way, and in a profeſs'd Contempt of Authority, and all the ſtanding Rules and Laws of the Church.

SECT. 4. By what Power Presbyters anciently baptized, in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes.

YET tho' ſuch Baptiſms were very ſinful and irregular in reſpect of the Perſons miniſtring, they were not eſteemed to be utterly void and null in reſpect of the Perſons baptized. Whence it follows, that a plain Diſtinction muſt needs have been made always between the Irregularity and the Invalidity of any Baptiſm; ſince the Want of a lawful Commiſſion and Authority would render the Act of Adminiſtration ſinful and irregular, but not abſolutely Invalid. It is therefore here very material to enquire into this, How it came to paſs, that Baptiſm miniſtred by a Presbyter illegally and without Commiſſion, was nevertheleſs eſteemed Valid, notwithſtanding the Sinfulneſs of the Act of Miniſtration. 'Tis reſolved by ſome into the Indelible Character and Power of the Prieſthood, which is given to a Presbyter at his Ordination, by which they think all his Miniſterial Acts ſtand good, tho' done in an irregular manner, againſt the Laws and Canons of the Church; and that a Prieſt cannot be diveſted of this Power, after he is once legally ordained to it. But this could not be the Ground upon which the Ancients went, for ſeveral Reaſons. 1. Becauſe they did not ſuppoſe Baptiſm founded wholly upon Sacerdotal Powers, nor tied ſo abſolutely to the Office of a Prieſt, but that it might, in ordinary Caſes alſo, be adminiſtred by Deacons, if they had the Biſhop's Commiſſion; and by Laymen in extraordinary Caſes of preſſing Neceſſity, if they had the Biſhop's Licenſe and Authority to do it, as we ſhall ſee hereafter, 2. The Indelible Character of a Prieſt does not authorize or qualify him to act contrary to the Commiſſion of his Biſhop: For then his Baptizing would be both authorized and unauthorized, regular and irregular, lawful and unlawful at the ſame time, and in the very ſame Act and Reſpect, which is a manifeſt Contradiction. Then alſo a Prieſt could never be depoſed from his Office, or have his Commiſſion recalled, or his Function legally taken from him, be his Crimes never ſo great, and deſerving Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure: Once a Prieſt he would be always a Prieſt, and they who gave him this Commiſſion would have no Authority to withdraw his Commiſſion, and reduce him to the State of a Layman, in the moſt urgent and neceſſary Caſe that could be conceived: Which [k] Ambroſ. de Sacram. Lib. 3. cap. 1. Licet Preſbyteri fecerint, tamen Exordium Miniſterii a ſummo eſt Sacerdote.

[m] Hieron. Dial. cum Lucifer. cap. 4. Eccleſiæ ſalus in ſummi Sacerdotis dignitate ac veneratione conſiſtit: cui ſi non exors quædam & ab omnibus eminens detur poteſtas, tot in Eccleſiis efficientur Schiſmata quot Sacerdotes. Inde ideo venit ut ſine Chriſmate & Juſſione Epiſcopi, neque Presbyter neque Diaconus jus habeant baptizandi.

Which is contrary to the whole Tenour of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and quite cuts the Sinews of Epiſcopal Power in the Church. For theſe Reaſons it is evident, the Ancients could not think the legal Power of Baptizing belonged to a Man, barely as he was a Prieſt, but as he was a Man inveſted with ſuch Power by his legal Superior, whether he was Prieſt or Deacon; and that Power ſubject to certain Laws, which if he did not obſerve, his Acts were irregular and unlawful; and if he perſiſted obſtinately to contradict ſuch Rules, the ſame Superior who gave him his legal Authority to baptize, had a legal Power to withdraw it again, and exclude him from the ordinary Exerciſe of any Office of the Eccleſiaſtical Function. Whence it follows, that the irregular Baptiſms of ſuch Prieſts being eſteemed Valid, ſo as not to be repeated, tho' irregularly and unlawfully given, could not be thought Valid upon the Notion of their being once ordained Prieſts, and having an Indelible Character of the Prieſthood upon them, but upon ſome other Notion and Foundation, which equally extended to Deacons as well as Prieſts, and made the Baptiſm of a Deacon, tho' irregularly and unlawfully performed, as Valid as that of a Prieſt in the ſame Circumſtances: And that muſt be upon theſe two Grounds, Either that Baptiſm by whatſoever Chriſtian performed, was Valid and not to be repeated, provided it was done with due Matter and Form; or elſe that the Biſhops of the Church, as chief Miniſters of Baptiſm, had Power to receive and confirm thoſe Baptiſms, which were otherwiſe irregularly, and in Oppoſition to their Authority performed in the Church. But however it was, this is certain, that the Validity of an irregular Prieſt's Baptiſm was not owing to his Indelible Character; ſince the Baptiſm of Deacons and Laymen, who had not the Character of Prieſts, was ſometimes authorized and allowed as Valid: which is evident from plain Matters of Fact, which I now proceed to give a farther Account of.

SECT. 5. Of the Power granted anciently to Deacons to baptize.

DEACONS, by ſome ancient Canons, are inveſted with the Power of Baptizing in ordinary Caſes, as well as Prieſts. It is plain, Tertullian ſo underſtood it: For he puts Presbyters and Deacons together, [n] as the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm next after the Biſhop, and under his Direction: He makes no Diſtinction in the Power given to thoſe two Orders; for the one had as much Power to baptize as the other, and they both alike ſubordinately acted under the Biſhop, in whom as Chief Prieſt, the original Power of Baptizing was lodged, and from whoſe Authority they received their Power. St. Jerom [o] was of the ſame Mind; for he ſays, "Without the Commiſſion of "the Biſhop, neither Presbyter nor Deacon "had any Right to baptize." Which implies, that by his Commiſſion they had each of them the ordinary Power. Thus it was in the Churches of Spain, at the Time of the Council of Eliberis, in one of whoſe Canons [p] there is Proviſion made, That if a Deacon who preſides over a People, ſhall baptize any Perſon without a Biſhop or Presbyter, the Biſhop in that Caſe ſhall perfect what was wanting in the Ceremony by his Benediction. It is not ſaid he ſhall re-baptize them, becauſe they were only baptized by a Deacon; but he ſhall ratify the Baptiſm by his conſummating Act, which was his Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation. From whence it is evident, that Deacons in Spain were then allowed to be the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm. The ſame appears from St. Cyril's [q] Catechetical Diſcourſes, to have been the Cuſtom of the Churches in Paleſtine: For he tells his Catechumens when the time of Baptiſm came, they might go either to Biſhops, or Presbyters, or Deacons: For the Grace of GOD was to be had in Villages as well as Cities, and came upon the Unlearned as well as Learned, upon the Bond as well as Free; ſeeing that Grace was not from Men, but a Gift of GOD by the Hands of Men. This denotes that Deacons in Country-Villages, had the ordinary Power of Baptizing. And ſo we find in the firſt Council [r] of Orleance, a Decree implying, That the ſame Power was allowed them in the French Churches. For in one of the Canons of that Council Deacons and Presbyters are joyned together as Miniſters of Baptiſm, both in ordinary and extraordinary Caſes: For it is ſaid, That if a Deacon or a Presbyter ſhall, for any private Guilt, have withdrawn himſelf from the Communion of the Altar, under the Profeſſion of a Penitent, yet, even in that Caſe, ſuch a Deacon or Presbyter, if there happen a Caſe of evident Neceſſity, and no other can be had, may baptize any Man that deſires Baptiſm. Certainly thoſe who authorized Deacons in ſuch ſingular Circumſtances and Diſadvantages to baptize, even when they were under a ſort of Diſcipline and Penance, muſt needs allow them the ſame Privilege as Preſbyters byters had to baptize in all other ordinary Caſes. Yet ſome other ancient Rules ſeem abſolutely to forbid Deacons to miniſter Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes, confining the Office only to Biſhops and Presbyters. Among thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons there are Four that ſpeak of the Miniſters of Baptiſm, and thoſe are there only Biſhops and Presbyters, but no mention is made of Deacons. One Canon [s] ſays, If a Biſhop or Presbyter receives the Baptiſm of Hereticks, he is to be depoſed. Another ſays, If [t] a Biſhop or Presbyter rebaptizes one that has been truly baptized before, or does not baptize again one that has been profanely polluted in Baptiſm by the Impious, he ſhall be depoſed, as one that derides the Croſs and Death of CHRIST, and makes no difference between true and falſe Prieſts. Another Canon [u] ſays, If any Biſhop or Presbyter obſerve not the Form of Baptiſm preſcribed by our Lord, in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST; but baptizes in the Name of Three Unoriginated Principles, or Three Sons, or Three Holy Ghoſts, he ſhall be depoſed. And a fourth Canon [w] alſo pronounces the ſame Cenſure againſt any Biſhops or Presbyters, who did not uſe Three Immerſions in the Sacred Myſtery. In all theſe Canons there is not the leaſt mention of Deacons, becauſe by them only Biſhops and Prieſts are ſuppoſed to be the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm, and not Deacons. So likewiſe in the Conſtitutions under the Name of the Apoſtles, all the Inferior Clergy, among which the Deacons are comprehended, are prohibited to miniſter Baptiſm: "We do "not permit, ſay they, [x] the reſt of the "Clergy to baptize, as Readers, Singers, "Doorkeepers, Subdeacons, but only Bi"ſhops and Presbyters, to whom the Dea"cons are to miniſter. And they that pre"ſume to act otherwiſe, ſhall bear the Judg"ment of Corah and his Company." The Deacons are here wholly excluded from the Office of Baptiſm, as well as the reſt of the Inferior Clergy: And in ſome ancient Copies they were excluded by Name; for in Georgius Hamartolus's Citation of this Paſſage, as Cotelerius [y] has obſerved, the Prohibition names Deacons expreſsly among the reſt that are forbidden to baptize; and if they had not been excepted by Name, yet it were ſo to be underſtood: For he that confines Baptiſm only to the Office of Biſhops and Presbyters, muſt be ſuppoſed thereby to exclude Deacons, unleſs it be pretended that Deacons are of the ſame Order with Biſhops or Presbyters; which the Conſtitutions are ſo far from aſſerting, that they make Deacons only Miniſters to the other two Orders. But in another place the Conſtitutions ſpeak yet more expreſsly againſt Deacons Baptizing: For they thus diſtinguiſh [z] the Offices of Presbyter and Deacon from each other; "A Presbyter is to teach, to "offer the Euchariſt, to baptize, and to give "the Bleſſing to the People; but a Deacon "is only to miniſter to the Biſhop and the "Presbyters, and not to perform the reſt." And again [a], "A Deacon does not give "the Bleſſing, but receive it from the Biſhop "or the Presbyter: He does not baptize; he "does not offer the Euchariſt; but when the "Biſhop or Presbyter has offered, he diſtri"butes it to the People, not as a Prieſt, but "as one that miniſters to the Prieſts." Yet, notwithſtanding this, 'tis aſſerted by the ſame Author [b], That a Deacon may baptize, if he has a Commiſſion and Authority from his Biſhop to do it, as he ſuppoſes Philip the Deacon, and Ananias to have had a ſpecial Call from GOD. "If any one, ſays he, "ſhall plead the Example of Philip the "Deacon, and Ananias the Faithful Bro"ther, the one of which baptized the "Eunuch, and the other St. Paul; they "underſtand not what we ſay: For we ſay, "that no Man takes to himſelf the Digni"ty of the Prieſthood, but either he is cal"led of GOD, as Melchizedec and Job; or he "receives it from the Chief Prieſt, as Aaron "from Moſes. Therefore Philip and Ananias "did not appoint themſelves, but were choſ"en by CHRIST the Chief Prieſt, the "Incomparable GOD." St. Chryſoſtom ſeems to have been of the ſame Opinion, That the Ordinary Office of Baptizing belonged only to Prieſts, and not to Deacons, though Deacons, in Caſe of Neceſſity, might do it. In his Diſcourſes of the Prieſthood he thus argues for, and magnifies the Power of the Prieſt: "'Tis plain Madneſs to deſpiſe ſo great "a Power, without which we cannot obtain "Salvation, or the good Things that are pro"miſed us. For if no one can enter into "the Kingdom of Heaven, except he be "born of Water and the HOLY GHOST; "and he that eateth not the Fleſh of the "LORD, and drinketh not his Blood, is de"prived of eternal Life; and all theſe things "are performed by no other [c] but thoſe "ſacred Hands, I mean the Hands of the "Prieſt: How can any one, without theſe, "either

" either escape the Fire of Hell, or ob" tain the Crown that is laid up in Hea" ven?" 'Tis certain St. Chrysostom, in these Words, excludes Deacons from the ordinary Power of Baptizing, as much as he does Laymen. Which the Learned Dr. Forbes [d], who first produced this Passage against Lay-Baptism, was so sensible of, that he equally concludes the Baptism of Deacons to be Invalid, as well as that of Laymen. But he mistakes St. Chrysostom's Meaning: For he did not intend so to confine Baptism to the Hands of a Priest, as to make it simply and absolutely unlawful, in any Case whatsoever, for a Deacon to administer it: For, in Case of Necessity, he not only permits, but positively enjoyns Deacons to baptize. " For, says he, " if there be a Necessity, and a Child be " found unbaptized, and ready to die, it is " [e] lawful for a Deacon to baptize it." Which shews, that he only made Priests the ordinary Ministers of Baptism; and that it was the Contempt of their Ministry only, when it might be had, which he so inveighs against, and not the bare Want of it, when it could not be had in Cases extraordinary and of extreme Necessity, in which it might be supplied by a Deacon. And this must be the Meaning of Epiphanius [f], when he says, " That Deacons are not permitted to " celebrate any Mystery or Sacrament in the " Church, but only to minister in the Ce-" lebration." That is, they were not to do it in ordinary Cases, when a Priest was at hand, but only to assist the Priest, as the principal Agent, in the performance of it. St. Hilary [g] was of the same Mind: For he reckons Baptism a Part of the Apostolical Office and Ministry, and that it was therefore only an extraordinary Exigence that made Philip the Deacon baptize the Eunuch, who had such an impatient Desire of Baptism, that he could not stay to be baptized by an Apostle. The Canons of the Church are many times peremptory against Deacons baptizing in ordinary Cases, but they always except the Case of Necessity, the time of Sickness, and Disability or want of other Ministers. Among the Decrees of Gelasius [h] this is one: " Let not a Deacon presume to bap-" tize without the Bishop or Presbyter, un-" less they be far absent, and an extreme " Necessity compel him: In which Cases it " is sometimes allowed to Lay-Christians to " do it." Cotelerius [i] and Sirmond give us a Canon out of one of the Roman Councils, which forbids Deacons to baptize at any other time beside Easter: But at that time Deacons as well as Presbyters, are allowed to grant Remission of Sins; that is, to baptize in the Parish Churches: At other times, even in Case of Sickness, none but a Presbyter is authorized to do it, because he only had Power to offer the Oblation. The Reason of this Difference in the Roman Church seems to have been this: That in a great and populous City, where there were many Churches and many Presbyters, and but Seven Deacons, there could never scarce any such Case of Necessity happen by the Sickness of a Catechumen, but that a Presbyter might be had, rather than a Deacon, to give him Baptism: But at the solemn time of Easter such Multitudes came together at once to be baptized, that the Bishop and all his Presbyters were hardly sufficient to perform the whole Ministry, and therefore Deacons in that Exigence were taken in to be their Assistants. Where we may observe two Things; First, That they did this by the Bishop's License and Authority: And, Secondly, that only in a time of great Exigence, when a Case of Necessity required it. Isidore of Sevil, who wrote a considerable time after this, observes the like of Deacons ministring Baptism in the Age he lived in. " It is evident, says he [k], " that the Ministry of Baptism belongs only " to Priests; nor is it lawful for Deacons " themselves to perform the Mystery without " the Bishop or a Presbyter; unless in their " Absence, when the extreme Necessity of " Sickness requires and compels them to do " it: In which Case it is often permitted to " faithful Laymen." And thus it continued for many Ages after in the English Church, as appears from the Canons of the Council of of York [l], held in the Year 1195; and the Council of London [m], in the Year 1200, and the Canons of St. Edmund, An. 1236, mentioned in Linwood's [n] Provincial. In all which Deacons are forbidden to baptize, except upon urgent Neceſſity, when the Prieſt cannot, or is abſent, or through Folly and Indiſcretion will not, and a Child or a ſick Perſon is in imminent Danger of Death. And ſo it was in ſome Parts of the Greek Churches in former Ages, as is clear from St. Chryſoſtom's Teſtimony alledged before; and from Theodoret [o], who ſays, when a Preſbyter was not at hand, if a preſſing Neceſſity required, even a Deacon was compelled to give Baptiſm to any one that wanted it. He might not then do it ordinarily, but only in Caſes of Neceſſity, when a Presbyter or Prieſt could not be found to do it. And ſo it continued to be the Rule of the Church of Conſtantinople for ſeveral Ages after; as we learn from the Canons of Nicephorus the Patriarch in the Ninth Century, where, in extraordinary Caſes of Neceſſity [p], a ſimple Monk and a Deacon are equally qualified to baptize. Which implies, that neither of them were qualified to do it in ordinary Caſes: For the ſimple Monks were not in Holy Orders, but properly Laymen, being oppoſed to thoſe whom the Greeks called Ἱερομοναχοὶ, or Monks in Sacred Orders, who pertained to the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy and Function; as I have more fully ſhewed in another Place [q]. Now then Deacons being joined with ſimple Monks, could not be ſuppoſed to be the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm, but only qualified to do it in extraordinary Caſes. Hence it is moſt evident, that ſo many of the Ancients as excluded Deacons from the Ordinary miniſtration of Baptiſm, did it upon this Suppoſition, that the ordinary Miniſtration of Baptiſm was the proper Office of the Prieſts or Presbyters alone, who were a ſuperior Order above Deacons: but yet, that in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity it was lawful for others, beſides Prieſts, to miniſter Baptiſm by the Biſhops Authority; and upon this Ground, in ſuch Caſes, it was eſteemed alſo the Office of Deacons. So neceſſary, we ſee, was this Diſtinction between ordinary and extraordinary Caſes, to adjuſt Matters in the Practice of the primitive Church, whilſt, on the one hand, the Honour and Dignity of the Prieſthood was to be preſerved, and yet Deacons allowed, on the other hand, to miniſter Baptiſm in ſome Caſes, though they were not Prieſts in the ſtrict Senſe, in the Opinion of thoſe who allowed them to do it.

SECT. 6. Whether the Inferior Clergy were allowed to baptize.

THE next Queſtion is concerning Subdeacons, and the reſt of the Inferior Orders, who went by the Name of the Minor Clergy in the Primitive Church. Theſe were not properly of Divine, but only of Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution, for Helps to the ſuperior Clergy in their Miniſtration, as has been fully prov'd againſt the Romaniſts [r] in another Book. Now the Queſtion about theſe at preſent is, Whether in any Caſes they had Power to baptize? That they had no Power in ordinary Caſes, is evident from what has been before diſcourſed of Deacons: For if Deacons themſelves had not generally ſuch a Power allowed them, it would be abſurd to think that the Inferior Orders below them ſhould have it. The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [s] excludes them all by Name from this Office, Readers, Singers, Doorkeepers, Subdeacons, threatning them with the Puniſhment of Corah, if they preſum'd to invade it. But this is to be underſtood of the ordinary Miniſtration of Baptiſm, from which Deacons alſo were excluded. The Queſtion then runs out farther, Whether in any extraordinary Caſes they were allow'd to give it? But there are few among the Ancients that have, in direct Terms, decided this Queſtion; ſo we muſt judge only by parity of Reaſon what they thought upon it. The ancient Author of the Book concerning the Baptiſm of Hereticks, publiſh'd by Rigaltius and Biſhop Fell, among the Works of St. Cyprian, ſeems to ſay, that the Minor Clergy [t], in Caſes of Neceſſity, might baptize. But Learned Men are not agreed what that Author means by the Minor Clergy. Cotelerius [u] and Valeſius [w] are of Opinion, that it ſignifies all the Inferior Clergy below Biſhops and Presbyters. And if ſo, it were a plain Proof indeed that the Inferior Clergy in Caſes of Neceſſity, might baptize. But Rigaltius and Biſhop

Biſhop Fell, in their Notes upon the Place, think the Minor Clergy only means Presbyters and Deacons who were called ſo in reſpect of the Biſhop their Superior, who commonly adminiſtred Baptiſm himſelf, and when he could not do it in Perſon, gave his Commiſſion to Presbyters and Deacons in his ſtead. I will not venture to decide ſo nice a Controverſy between theſe Learned Men: But I think the main Queſtion may eaſily be decided another way: For if the Ancients granted Liberty to mere Monks and Laymen to baptize, in extraordinary Caſes, it will readily follow, that they would never ſcruple to grant the ſame Power to the Inferior Clergy, who were, at leaſt, one Degree above Monks and Laymen. We cannot therefore better determine this Queſtion, than by proceeding to that other, concerning the Power granted to Laymen in reference to the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, which is the grand Queſtion in this whole Affair.

SECT. 7. Laymen prohibited to baptize in ordinary Caſes.

NOW here firſt of all it is certain, that Laymen were always debar'd from medling with the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm in all ordinary Caſes. All the former Allegations, which make it the proper Office of Biſhops and Presbyters, even to the excluſion of Deacons, are certainly of much greater Force againſt the Uſurpations of Laymen. Beſides, they are ſometimes prohibited in particular by Name: As in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions three times at leaſt. "We "do not permit Laymen to perform [x] any "Sacerdotal Office, of the Sacrifice of the "Euchariſt, or Baptiſm, or Impoſition of Hands, "or the leſſer or the greater Benediction: "For no Man taketh this Honour to him-"ſelf, but he that is called of GOD. This "Dignity is given only by the Laying on of "the Biſhop's Hands; but he that takes it "to himſelf without Commiſſion, ſhall ſuſtain "the Puniſhment of Uzzias." The Author, under the Name of St. Ambroſe [y], ſays therefore, That from the time of the Apoſtles, the Inferior Clergy and Laymen were prohibited to baptize. Which, at leaſt, muſt be underſtood of a Prohibition to uſurp the Office, and do it in ordinary Caſes.

SECT. 8. Yet allowed to do it ſometimes in Caſes extraordinary.

BUT ſtill the grand Queſtion remains, Whether ever they were allowed to do it in Extraordinary Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, when no publick Miniſter could be procured to do it? And this muſt be reſolved in the affirmative, as to the general Practice of the Church, tho' there are ſome Exceptions of particular Churches to the contrary. Tertullian, I think, is the firſt Writer that ſpeaks directly to this Point, and he delivers himſelf thus upon the Matter: "The Chief Prieſt, who is the Bi-"ſhop, has Power to give Baptiſm, and after "him Presbyters and Deacons, yet not with-"out the Authority of the Biſhop, for the "Honour of the Church, in the Preſervation "of which, Peace is preſerved. In another "reſpect Laymen have alſo [z] a Right to "give it; for what is received in common, "may be given in common. Baptiſm is GOD's "Peculiar, and may be conferred by all. But "Laymen are in a much greater degree "obliged by the Rules of Modeſty in the "uſe of their Power, ſince they who are "ſuperior to them, are obliged not to aſ-"ſume to themſelves the Office which be-"longs to the Biſhop only. Emulation is "the Mother of Striſe. All things are law-"ful, ſays the holy Apoſtle, but all things "are not expedient. Therefore it ought to "ſuffice them to uſe this Power in Neceſ-"ſities, when the Condition of the Place, "or Time, or Perſon requires it: For then "their charitable Aſſiſtance is accepted, "when the Circumſtance of one in Danger "preſſes them to it. And in this Caſe he "would be guilty of a Man's Deſtruction "that omitted to do what he lawfully might." Mr. Dodwel [a] and ſome others except againſt this Paſſage of Tertullian, as expreſſing only his own private Opinion, and not the common Practice of the Church. But no Learned Man before ever thought ſo, as Mr. Dodwel himſelf confeſſes, and acknowledges his own Opinion to be a Paradox. And there is this Prejudice againſt it from the coherence of Tertullian's Diſcourſe: That in the former Part of it he is certainly ſpeaking of the Practice of the Church, when he ſays, Presbyters and Deacons act by the Bishop's Authority when they administer Baptism in ordinary Cases. It would be strange then if he should invert his Discourse immediately in the next Words, and not mean the Practice of the Church, when he comes to speak of Laymen. But however this be, Tertullian's Sense was in the next Age confirm'd by some publick Acts of the Church.

SECT. 9. The Testimony of the Council of Eliberis.

ABOUT an hundred Years after Tertullian, the Spanish Bishops, assembled in the Council of Eliberis [b] made a publick Decree about this Matter: They there appointed, That when Men were upon a Voyage at Sea, or in any Place where no Church was near at hand, if a Catechumen happened to be extremely sick, and at the Point of Death, that then any Christian who had his own Baptism entire, and was no Bigamist, might baptize him. This Authority was not given to all Christians in all Cases, but with several Limitations and Restrictions. 1. It must be a Case of absolute Necessity, when Baptism could no otherwise be had. 2. The Person Baptizing must have his own Baptism entire. Which Albaspiny understands of not Lapsing after Baptism [c]. Vossius [d] with better reason supposes it to be opposed to Clinick Baptism, which was a less solemn and imperfect Baptism, which made a Man uncapable of Holy Orders ever after, as I have shewn elsewhere [e], from the ancient Laws of the Church. And it was very often attended with another Defect, which was the want of Confirmation, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost by Imposition of the Hands of the Bishop, which was not ordinarily sought for by Clinicks, who were baptiz'd in haste upon a Death-bed. For this Reason these Spanish Bishops denied such the Privilege of Baptizing in any Case, whilst they allow'd it to others. 3. They require also that the Man must be no Bigamist, because that also unqualified a Person for Sacred Orders. And it was their Intent, when a Priest could not be had to administer Baptism, only to authorize such Laymen to do it, as had those proper Qualifications that were requisite to obtain Orders, and so bring them as near Priests as they could. This is the most probable Account I can give at present of these Limitations. However, in the main, the Matter is indisputable, that they plainly intended, in some extraordinary Cases, to give Laymen a License and Authority to administer Baptism, which could not then be said to be unauthoriz'd in Spain, since it had the best Authority the Church could give it, which is the Determination and Authority of a Council. It will not here be material for any one to object, That this was but the Determination of a private National Council: For we are not now enquiring, what Obligation any other Church is under to follow this Rule, but only what was Matter of Fact, and the Practice of the ancient Church. The Church of Rome varied from the Rule of this Council many Ages ago; for they allow'd Bigamists to baptize, [f] as Auxilius informs us, tho' that was forbidden by the Determination of this Spanish Council. But I proceed.

SECT. 10. Of the Church of Alexandria.

WHILST this Matter was thus determin'd in the West, there happened another famous Transaction in the East, which drew on a like Determination in the Church of Alexandria, if we may give credit to any of the ancient Historians, Socrates, Sozomen, and Ruffin, who all relate it. Ruffin says, he had the Story from the Mouth of those who liv'd and convers'd with Athanasius: and the Account of it, according to his Relation, is this: "Alexander, Bishop of Alexandria, on a "certain Day, being the Festival of Peter the "Martyr, after the solemn Service of the "Church was over, was entertaining him- "self with a Prospect, toward the Sea, whilst "he expected his Clergy to come and dine "with him: In his Prospect, at some di- "stance, upon the Sea-shore, he beheld a "Number of Youths at play, acting the Part "of a Bishop, and doing all things which "were used to be done in the Church: And "viewing them intently for some time, he "at last saw them come to the secret and "mystical Rites of Religion. Upon which "being somewhat preplexed, he sent imme- "diately for his Clergy, and shew'd them "what he himself had seen; ordering them "withal to go and bring the Boys before "him. Who being ask'd, What Play they "were at, and what they had done, and af- "ter what manner? They at first deny'd all "the whole Matter, as Children use to do "through Fear, but afterward they told eve- "ry thing in order as it was done, con- "fessing that they had baptiz'd certain Ca- "techumens, by the Hands of Athanasius, who "acted the Part of the Bishop in the Play. "Then examining farther of those who were "said ſaid to be baptized, [g] what Queſtions they "were ask'd, and what Anſwers they made; "and being likewiſe informed by him who had "been the chief Actor, when he found that "all things had been done according to the "Rites of our Religion; after he had con-"ferr'd with a Council of his Clergy, he "is ſaid to have determin'd, That the Bap-"tiſm of thoſe on whom Water had been "poured, with the proper Interrogatories and "Reſponſes, ought not to be repeated, but "only have thoſe things added, which the "Prieſts were uſed to perform." Socrates [h] and Sozomen [i] have the ſame Story, and the Author of the Life of Athanaſius [k] in Photius, with Johannes Moſchus [l], and many others. They who find themſelves preſſed with this Relation, take ſeveral ways to evade the Force of it. Michael Glycas, a Greek Hiſtorian, plainly inverts the Biſhop's Determination, and ſays, he order'd them to be Rebaptized. Which is ſo manifeſt a Prevarication, and Affront to the Faith of all the old Hiſtorians, that it deſerves no other Anſwer, but to give it its true Name of a bold Falſification and Impoſture. Others incline to call in queſtion the whole Story, and tell us, that Learned Men now generally alſo incline to reject it as a Fiction. I know Spanheim, and ſome few others do ſo; but the generality of Learned Men are not of that Opinion: Archbiſhop Whitgift, Abbot, Cotelerius, Pagi, and many others that might be nam'd, Men of Character in their Age, have appeared in its behalf, and defended it as a genuine Piece of Hiſtory. And it is ſome Confirmation, that Ruffin ſays, he had it from the Mouth of thoſe who converſed with Athanaſius. And Nicephorus Caliſtus, who alſo relates the Story [m], gives a parallel Inſtance of another Fact much like this, which happened in his own Time at Conſtantinople. Which ſhews it not to be altogether ſo ſingular and incredible a Caſe, as ſome are apt to imagine. But admit it were a fabulous Report, yet we muſt charitably believe of the ancient Hiſtorians, both Greek and Latin, that they believed themſelves, at leaſt, what they reported; that ſuch a Fact had happened at Alexandria; and if it had been contrary to the general Senſe and Practice of the Church in their Times, they would hardly have related it ſo plauſibly, without paſſing ſome Cenſure and Reflection on it; as ſome modern Greeks have done, who like not the Thing, and therefore cenſure it, not as a fabulous Story, but an irregular Action: Which the ancient Hiſtorians having not done, it may reaſonably be concluded, that, at leaſt, they thought the Determination of Alexander and his Council to be agreeable to the general Senſe and Practice of the Church. But there is another Exception made to this Caſe by Matthew Blaſtares [n], a modern Greek Canoniſt, who ſays, It was only a ſingle Example, and done againſt Canon. Which is an Anſwer that has more Modeſty, and in one part of it ſeems to carry more Weight in it than either of the former. For I believe there is no Canon that does antecedently authorize one Youth, without Neceſſity, to baptize another. But then he a little miſtakes the Queſtion, which is not about the Fact of Athanaſius, but the Determination of Alexander upon it: For as to the Fact of Athanaſius, any one will readily own, that there was neither Canon nor Precedent, perhaps, to warrant the doing of it; and it would be ſtrange if any ſuch Canon ſhould be made in the Church. But for the Determination of Alexander, that a Baptiſm given in due Form, though irregularly, by the Hand of a Layman, may be ſo Valid as not to need repeating; I believe it will not be ſo eaſy a Matter as Blaſtares imagined, to produce an ancient Canon directly to confront it, by declaring that ſuch irregular Baptiſms are utterly null and void, though they have the poſtnate Allowance of the Church where they are done, which was the peculiar Circumſtance of the preſent Caſe: For there ſeem to be two Ways of allowing any Act, either by an antecedent Authority given to a Man to perform it, or by a ſubſequent Confirmation of the thing when done irregularly, and without Authority, which is, ex poſt facto, in Allowance of it. And thus, it is plain, the Baptiſms given by Athanaſius were allowed and confirmed by Alexander in the Church.

SECT. II. Of St. Jerom.

IN the latter End of the IVth Century lived St. Jerom, and St. Auſtin, who have both ſpoken very plainly of the Practice of the Church, as to what concerns the allowance of Lay-Baptiſm in ſome certain Caſes. St. Jerom, as has been obſerved before, derives the Power of Presbyters and Deacons to baptize from the original Power of the Biſhop: Yet, in Caſe of Neceſſity, he ſays, it was [o] alſo allowed frequently to Laymen: For in ſuch Caſes he that had received Baptiſm, might give it to others. This Teſtimony of St. Jerom is ſo full and plain, that I have often wondered how ſo learned and acute a Man as Dr. Forbes [p], and the Ingenious Mr. Reeves [q], could run into ſuch a Miſtake, as to ſay, "That after the Council of Nice, "this Propoſition, That thoſe whom a Laick "baptized are to be Rebaptized, was look-"ed upon to be ſo true, that it was the un-"doubted Principle, whereby the Orthodox "confuted the Luciferians." Who that reads theſe Words in theſe Learned Writers, and looks no farther, would not at firſt ſight be tempted to think, that the Council of Nice had ſomewhere made an Order, that Perſons baptized by Laymen ſhould be rebaptized; and that the Catholicks generally made uſe of this as an undoubted Principle to confute the Luciferians? And yet in Fact there was no ſuch thing. The Council of Nice never made any Decree about the Rebaptization of Perſons baptized by Laymen, but only by Heretical Prieſts. Nor did the Catholicks uſe that Propoſition as an undoubted Principle againſt the Luciferians. St. Jerom wrote againſt the Luciferians, but he is ſo far from aſſerting, univerſally, that thoſe whom a Laick baptizeth are to be rebaptized, that he expreſly maintains the contrary, That if Neceſſity required, Laymen had liberty granted them to baptize. Mr. Reeves has once done me the Honour to let my Opinion and Judgment be of ſome Eſteem with him, and I believe when he conſiders this Matter again, he will ſee reaſon to alter his Opinion in this particular, being as Ingenuous as he is Learned; and the rather, becauſe the World is apt to be led into Error by Perſons of Note and Authority, and to take Things upon Truſt, when delivered to them by Men of a ſuperior Character. If there had not been this Fear, I could not have prevailed with myſelf to have noted this Miſtake in a Perſon, for whoſe uſeful Labours I have ſo great a Veneration.

SECT. 12. Of St. Auſtin.

ST. Auſtin was Cotemporary with St. Jerom, and of the ſame Opinion with him in this Matter. In his Epiſtle to Fortunatus, which is preſerved in Gratian [r], he ſays, "In "Time of Neceſſity, when a Biſhop, or a "Presbyter, or other Miniſter could not be "found, and a Man deſired Baptiſm who "was in Danger of Death, in that Caſe "Laymen were uſed to give him that Sa-"crament which they had received, rather "than he ſhould end his Life without it." And this Cuſtom he founds upon Authority deſcended by Biſhops from the Apoſtles: For in the ſame Epiſtle [s] he ſays, "Baptiſm "is Holy in itſelf, if it be given in the Name "of the FATHER SON and HOLY GHOST: "And there is in this Sacrament the Au-"thority of the Commiſſion which our SA-"VIOUR gave to the Apoſtles, and by "them to Biſhops, and other Prieſts, and "even to Laymen deſcending from the ſame "Stock and Original." He there alſo relates a Story of a certain Catechumen, who being at Sea, and in danger of being caſt away in a Storm, was baptized by a Penitent, becauſe there was no other Chriſtian in the Ship with them. And he concludes upon it, that though ſuch a Fact had not happened, yet it was a Caſe that, every one muſt own, might happen, and then no one could ſay, that in ſuch a Caſe a Man who deſired Baptiſm in imminent Danger of Death, was to be deſerted and left unbaptized. But if any one thinks theſe Paſſages doubtful, becauſe they are only related by Gratian, he may read the ſame in St. Auſtin's undoubted Works. In his Books againſt Parmenian the Donatiſt [t] he uſes this Argument to prove that the Baptiſm of Hereticks ought not to be repeated: "Becauſe tho' it be but a Layman that gives "Baptiſm to a Man in extreme Neceſſity, "when he is ready to periſh, he cannot "think any one can piouſly ſay, that it "ought to be repeated. If it be done with-"out Neceſſity, it is indeed an Uſurpation of "another Man's Office: But if he be compel-"led by Neceſſity, it is either no Fault at all, "or but a very light one."

SECT. 13. Of Gelaſius. An. 492.

ſtle to the Biſhops of Lucania, Brutia, and Sicily [u] reſtrains the Office of Baptizing in ordinary Caſes to Biſhops and Presbyters only; excluding Deacons from it, except in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, when the ſuperior Miniſters were abſent: In which Caſes it was often allowed to Lay-Chriſtians to perform it. So that Laymen had as much Authority to perform it, in the Abſence of Deacons, as Deacons had to do it in the Abſence of the Presbyters and Biſhop.

SECT. 14. Of Iſidore, Biſhop of Sevil, An. 595.

ISIDORE, Biſhop of Sevil, lived about an Hundred Years after Gelaſius, and he delivers himſelf to the ſame Effect: "That it is unlawful either "for private Men, or the inferior Clergy [w] "to baptize; for the Office belongs only to "Prieſts. We read in the Goſpel, that it was "given by Commiſſion to no other than the "Apoſtles, JESUS, after his Reſurrection, "ſaying unto them, As my Father hath ſent me, "ſo ſend I you. And when he had ſaid this, "he breathed on them, ſaying, Receive ye the "Holy Ghoſt. Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are re-"mitted unto them; and whoſeſoever Sins ye retain, "they are retained. And in another Place, Go teach "all Nations, Baptizing them in the Name of the FA-"THER, and of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST. "Whence it is manifeſt, that the Miniſtry "of Baptiſm was committed only to Prieſts; "nor is it lawful for Deacons themſelves to "perform the Myſtery without a Biſhop or "Presbyter; Except in their Abſence the "extreme Neceſſity of Sickneſs compel them "to do it: In which Caſe alſo Lay-Chri-"ſtians are often permitted to do it; leſt any "one ſhould be called out of the World "without the Remedy or Means of Salva-"tion." Thus we have ſeen for Six hundred Years the general Senſe and Practice of the ancient Church, grounded, as they ſuppoſe, upon the Commiſſion given to the Apoſtles; whereby Biſhops, as the Apoſtles Succeſſors, are qualified firſt to give Baptiſm themſelves, and then to grant a Commiſſion to others to baptize; and that either to Preſbyters and Deacons, or to Presbyters alone in ordinary Caſes: And in Caſes extraordinary and of extreme Neceſſity, to Deacons and Laymen.

SECT. 15. The Objection from St. Chryſoſtom, Baſil and Cyprian anſwered.

To this general Conſent of Antiquity, Dr. Forbes [x] and ſome others who follow him, have oppoſed the Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtom, St. Baſil, and St. Cyprian; whoſe Evidence, if it were entirely on the Objectors Side, would not weigh very much, becauſe it would be only their private Senſe, and not the Practice of the Church, which is the Subject of the preſent Enquiry. But I have ſhewed before Sect. 5. that St. Chryſoſtom's Meaning is utterly miſtaken by Dr. Forbes. For when Chryſoſtom confines the Office of Baptiſm to the Hands of a Prieſt, he only means in ordinary Caſes; otherwiſe Deacons, who are no Prieſts, would be abſolutely excluded from it in all Caſes whatſoever, as well as Laymen: And yet Chryſoſtom allows Deacons to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity; which makes it evident that this Diſcourſe only relates to the Miniſtration of Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes. I do not here repeat St. Chryſoſtom's Words, becauſe the Reader may find them alledged above, in ſpeaking of the Power of Deacons. As to St. Baſil, it will be readily owned, that he had ſomewhat of a ſingular Opinion in this Matter: For he was for rebaptizing all Perſons that were only baptized by Laymen, as he was alſo for rebaptizing all that were baptized by Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts; For he brings in Cyprian and Firmilian his Predeceſſor in the See of Cæſarea, arguing after this manner; "Hereticks and Schiſmaticks "[y] are broken off from the Church, and "become Laymen, and therefore have no "Power to baptize, or to ordain, being no "longer able to give the Gift of the HOLY "GHOST to others, which they have loſt "themſelves. Therefore ſuch as are bap-"tized by them, when they return to the "Church, are to be rebaptized with the "true Baptiſm of the Church, as being only "baptized by Laymen." If it were not for St. Baſil's Teſtimony, I ſhould doubt whether Cyprian had ever made uſe of ſuch an Argument as this. 1. Becauſe no ſuch Argument, that I know of, is to be found in his Works. 2. Becauſe Tertullian, whom Cyprian commonly called his Maſter, made a great Diſtinction between between the Baptiſm of Hereticks and the Baptiſm of Catholick Laymen, at leaſt in Caſes of Neceſſity, as we have ſeen before. For he was againſt rebaptizing thoſe that were ſo baptized by Laymen, tho' he was as much for rebaptizing thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks [z] as Cyprian himſelf. 3. Cyprian always paid a far greater Deference to Catholick Laymen than he did to Heretical Prieſts; as eſteeming the one Members of the Church, and the other quite cut off from it: He admitted the one into his Councils, and did nothing without their Conſent in many Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: But the other he abandoned and abhorred, as Men that had abandoned the Faith, and renounced their Chriſtianity by their Heretical Doctrine. Theſe are probable Arguments to incline a Man to think, that Cyprian was of the ſame Mind with his Maſter Tertullian, as to the Point of Lay-Baptiſm, had not St. Baſil's Authority been againſt them. But however this Matter was, St. Baſil was not ſo ſtiff to this Opinion, and the particular Practice of his own Church as to unchriſtianize thoſe that were baptized by Schiſmaticks, or break the Communion of the Church upon it: For he gives his Advice in the Words immediately following, "That "Men ſhould quietly comply with the Rules "and Practice of their own Church where "they lived. But foraſmuch, ſays he, as "ſome of the Aſiatick Churches [a] think "otherwiſe, that the Baptiſm of ſuch, by way "of Diſpenſation for the Sake of great Mul-"titudes, ought to be received, let it be re-"ceived." Whence, I think, it may be inferred, that tho' St. Baſil, in his own Opinion, did not approve of the Baptiſm either of Schiſmaticks or Laymen, yet he thought it might ſtand good, if the Church thought fit to receive and confirm it: And this he ſeems to aſſert, upon the common Principle of the Ancients, That a Latitude of Power was left with the Rulers and Governors of the Church, to ratify ſuch Baptiſms, when they found it neceſſary for the Benefit and Edification of the Church. But, if otherwiſe, St. Baſil's Opinion, or St. Cyprian's, cannot prejudice the contrary Doctrine, or be thrown into the Ballance againſt the common Conſent and Practice of the Church. And yet it may be obſerved, That St. Baſil ſpeaks, perhaps, not of Lay-Baptiſm in Caſes of Neceſſity, but of uſurping the Office, as Hereticks did in ordinary Caſes: Which makes a wide Difference in the Caſe, and belongs to a more difficult Queſtion, that is, Whether unauthorized Baptiſms were ever ratified and made good by the ſubſequent Confirmation and Reception of the Church? Which is the next Point that comes now in order to be conſidered.

SECT. 16. Whether the uſurped and unauthorized Baptiſm of Laymen was allowed to be valid.

THIS Queſtion, as I ſaid, has much more Difficulty than the former: Becauſe a great many of the Authors who have juſtified the Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm in Caſes of Neceſſity, are wholly ſilent upon this Point: For neither Tertullian, nor the Council of Eliberis, nor St. Jerom, nor Gelaſius, nor Iſidore, have ſaid any Thing upon it; they only conſider the Caſe of Neceſſity and no other. And the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſeems to pronounce ſeverely of uſurped and unauthorized Actions, as utterly null and void. He has a whole Chapter with this Title, "That it is an "horrible Thing for a Man to thruſt him-"ſelf into the Prieſts Dignity or Office, as "the Corahites, and Saul, and Uzzias:" And he thus expreſſes himſelf upon it; "As it "was not lawful for a Stranger, that was "not of the Tribe of Levi, to offer any "Thing, or approach the Altar without a "Prieſt; ſo do ye nothing without the Bi-"ſhop. For if any Man does any thing with-"out the Biſhop, he does it [b] in vain: "It ſhall not be reputed to him as any Ser-"vice. As Saul, when he had offered Sacri-"fice without Samuel, was told, that he had "done vainly; ſo whatever Layman does any "thing without a Prieſt, he labours in vain. "And as King Uzzias, when he had invaded "the Prieſts Office, was ſmitten with Lepro-"ſy for his Tranſgreſſion; ſo every Layman "ſhall bear his Puniſhment, that contemns "GOD, and inſults his Prieſts, and takes "Honour to himſelf, not imitating CHRIST, "who glorified not himſelf, but ſtayed till "his FATHER ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for ever "after the Order of Melchizedek." Now this Diſcourſe, when applied to Baptiſm, will amount to this, That every one who uſurps the Office of Baptizing, which belongs not to him, is a great Tranſgreſſor in the Sight of GOD; and all his Acts are vain, as to what concerns himſelf; for they ſhall never be accounted to him as acceptable Service, worthy of a Reward, but rather inevitably make him liable to Wrath and Puniſhment. But ſtill the Queſtion remains, Whether ſuch Acts, tho' vain in reſpect of the Adminiſtrator, be utterly vain and void in reſpect of the Receiver alſo? And as this Author has not preciſely determined this Point, ſo I will not pretend to determine it for him. On the the other hand, the Determination that was given by Alexander and the Church of Alexandria, is plain, that ſuch Baptiſms, tho' unauthorized and very irregular in the Adminiſtrator, niſtrator, are not wholly null and void as to the Effect in the Party baptized. Athanaſius, it is certain, could have no Law of the Church to authorize him to baptize in that Caſe and Manner in which he performed it; and yet Alexander would not ſuffer thoſe to be rebaptized, who had been ſo baptized by him. St. Auſtin was of the ſame Judgment: He freely owns, that when Baptiſm is performed by a Layman, without Neceſſity, it is an Uſurpation of another Man's Office: But yet he thinks it is not wholly null and void as to the Receiver, but a true Baptiſm, which ought not to be repeated: His Words are theſe: "Tho' "it be uſurped without [c] Neceſſity, and "given by any Man to another, that which "is given cannot be ſaid not to be given, "though it may be truly ſaid to be unlaw-"fully given. Therefore the unlawful Uſur-"pation is to be corrected by a ſincere and "affectionate Repentance. And if it be not "corrected, that which is given will remain "to the Puniſhment of the Uſurper, as well "of him who gave it unlawfully, as of him "who received it unlawfully; but yet it "cannot be accounted as not given. No "devout Soldier ever violates the Royal Stamp, "tho' it be uſurped by private Men: For "tho' ſome by Stealth, and in a clandeſtine "Way, ſet the Royal Stamp, not to the pub-"lick Money, but their own; yet the Money "ſo ſtampt, when they are either puniſhed "or pardoned for their Offence, having the "Royal Standard upon it, is not defaced, "but brought into the King's Treaſury." Whence it is plain, he thought that Baptiſm given by Laymen in ordinary Caſes, which was an Uſurpation of the Prieſt's Office, was not to be repeated. And this he aſſerts in another Place againſt the Donatiſts; yet not as the Determination of any general Council, but as his own Opinion: For he ſays, If he were a Member of ſuch a Synod, wherein this Queſtion was debated, he ſhould not ſcruple to aſſert all thoſe to have Baptiſm [d], whereſoever, or by whomſoever baptized, that had received it in Faith, and without Diſſimulation, in that Form of Words which is preſcribed by the Goſpel; tho' if they wanted Charity, and were out of the Catholick Church, it would not profit them to Salvation, or any other ſpiritual Concerns. Optatus was plainly of the ſame Opinion, He thought that CHRIST gave a Commiſſion to his Apoſtles to baptize, but yet not ſuch an one as peremptorily annulled and evacuated all Baptiſms that were performed by any other. Our SAVIOUR, ſays he, gave Commandment [e] in whoſe Name the Nations ſhould be baptized: But he did not determine without Exception, by whom they ſhould be baptized. He ſaid not to his Diſciples, This ſhall ye do, and no other ſhall do it. For whoever baptizes in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, fulfils the Work of the Apoſtles. Then he alledges that Saying of St. John the Apoſtle in the Goſpel, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out Devils in thy Name, and we forbad him, becauſe he followeth not with us. To which CHRIST replies, Forbid him not, for he that is not againſt you is for you. Upon which he concludes, that it was the Name of the TRINITY, and not the Work of the Agent that ſanctifies the Myſtery, and that the Miniſters of Baptiſm were only Labourers, and not Lords of the Action. And upon this Ground he allows the Baptiſm of Schiſmaticks, and ſuch Hereticks alſo as baptized in the Faith of the TRINITY, to be valid, tho' they were not every way legally authorized and qualified, as the true Miniſters of the Church, to perform it: Of which more hereafter in its proper Place.

SECT. 17. Of the Baptiſm of Women, whether they had any Authority to baptize.

THE next Queſtion is concerning the Baptiſm of Women, Whether they had any Authority, or were ever allowed in any Caſe to baptize in the Church? As to ordinary Caſes, it is agreed on all Hands, that they were abſolutely forbidden to meddle with any Eccleſiaſtical Office, and Baptiſm in particular. This was the Controverſy between the Church, and ſeveral ancient Hereſies, whether Women might be Prieſts, and baptize as well as Men. The Marcionites affirmed it to be lawful; ſo did the Collyridians, and the Pepuzians, and Cataphrygians, which were a Branch of the Montaniſts. But the Catholicks with great Vehemence always oppoſed this, as an illegal and unchriſtian Practice, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew more at large in another Work, were I diſcourſe of the Office of the Deaconeſſes [f] in in the ancient Church, to which I refer the Reader. The Lutherans and the Romaniſts who defend the Baptiſm of Women in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, do not deny this, but ſay their Adverſaries do them Wrong to charge them with the Practice of the Marcionites and Montaniſts, which they utterly diſavow. Therefore the Streſs of the Queſtion lies in this, Whether the ancient Church allowed Women to baptize in extraordinary Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, as ſhe did Laymen? And here, I think with ſubmiſſion to better Judgments, ſhe did not: For Tertullian, in the very ſame Place where he grants it may lawfully be done by Men, forbids it abſolutely to be done by Women; and he goes upon this Principle, that Men were called to the Sacerdotal Office, but not Women; and therefore when any Exigency required, the one might perform it, but not the other. He calls it Petulancy [g] in Women to uſurp the Power of Baptizing. And whereas ſome defended it by the Example of Tecla, and urged the Authority of that ancient Writing, which was called the Acts of Paul and Tecla, and was ſuppoſed to be written by the Apoſtle himſelf: He gives them to underſtand that it was no ſuch Thing, but that it was written by a Preſbyter in Aſia under the Name of St. Paul; and that the Presbyter was convicted of the Matter, and confeſſed the Thing, that he did it out of Love to St. Paul; but he was Depoſed notwithſtanding for his Forgery. For it was utterly improbable, that the Apoſtle ſhould grant Women a Power to teach and baptize, who did not ſo much as allow them to ask Queſtions for Learning's Sake in a publick Aſſembly. In another Place [h] he ſays, It was not permitted to Women to ſpeak in the Church: "But neither might they teach, nor baptize, nor offer the Oblation, nor aſſume to themſelves any Office belonging to Men, much leſs thoſe that appertained to the Prieſts only." Whence it ſeems pretty plain, that he did not allow the ſame Power and Authority to Women to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity, as he did to Men, ſince he makes an Exception in the one Caſe, but none in the other. And ſo in the IVth Council of Carthage [i] Women are abſolutely forbidden to baptize, without any Exception. For though Gratian and Peter Lombard add the Words Niſi neceſſitate cogente, except Neceſſity require, to the ancient Body of that Canon; yet this is either an Interpretation of their own, or elſe a plain Fraud; for there is no ſuch Reading now in any Tome of the Councils; and as Voſſius [k] obſerves, it is otherwiſe cited by Walafridus Strabo [l] ſome Ages before them; which is an Argument that the former is the genuine Reading, and that the Canon originally had no ſuch Exception. Nor does St. Jerom, nor St. Auſtin, nor Gelaſius, nor Iſidore, grant any Authority to Women to baptize, as they do to Men. Whence it may be inferred from their Silence, that they did not think their Caſes to be parallel. And it may be concluded farther, that the Practice and Rules of the modern Greek Church, and Romaniſts, and Lutherans, which allow Midwives or any other Women to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity, whatever other Grounds they may have to go upon, are not to be juſtified from the Rules and Canons of the ancient Church, ſince there are no ſuch to authorize the Practice.

SECT. 18. Whether the uſurped Baptiſm of Women was eſteemed valid.

BUT it will be demanded farther, Whether if Women uſurped the Authority of Baptizing, either in ordinary Caſes, as the Heretical Prieſteſſes did; or in extraordinary Caſes of Neceſſity, as perhaps ſome might do in the Catholick Church, though againſt Law; was their Baptiſm repeated as null and void, or received as valid by the Church? This Queſtion conſiſting of ſeveral Parts, I cannot give the ſame diſtinct and poſitive Anſwer to each Part of it. But I think there is no Doubt to be made but that, firſt, All ſuch Churches as rejected the Baptiſm of Heretical Men, muſt needs be ſuppoſed to have rejected the Baptiſm of Heretical Women, whether in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes. Therefore Tertullian, Cyprian, and Firmilian [m] are plain in the Caſe, that all ſuch Baptiſms are invalid. I think it alſo probable that they who received the Baptiſm of Heretical Men out of the Church as valid; and the Baptiſm of Catholick Laymen in the Church, as not only valid, but authorized too, did yet reject the Baptiſm of Women in both Caſes, becauſe they are ſo peremptory in prohibiting Women univerſally to meddle with the miniſterial Offices, and this always without Exception tion of any Caſes whatſoever. But as I remember no ancient Author that has ſpoken directly and cloſely to this Part of the Queſtion; and there are ſome Reaſons to incline a Man to believe St. Auſtin to have been of a different Opinion; ſo I leave this to the Judgment of others, and farther Enqury.

SECT. 19. Whether Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts, and Degraded Clergymen had any legal Authority to baptize.

THE next Thing in Debate is, concerning Baptiſm adminiſtred by Heretical and Schiſmatical Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, and ſuch of the Catholick Clergy as are legally Degraded or Depoſed by the Authority of the Church, for tranſgreſſing the Rules of their Function. The particular Stating and Examination of this Matter is a Thing of great Weight and Moment; becauſe it is ſuch a Practical Caſe as the Church has always been much more concerned in, than in that of the Baptiſm of meer Laymen: And the whole Church of England, and all the Churches of the Reformation have the very Eſſence and Being of their Baptiſm and Chriſtianity depending on it. For they all received their Baptiſm from the Heretical and Schiſmatical Church of Rome: According therefore as Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm is determined to be valid or not valid, ſuch muſt be the Fate of theſe Churches, either to have received true and valid Baptiſm, or elſe to want yet all of them to be Rebaptized. Now that I may ſpeak the Senſe of the ancient Church upon this grand Point with Clearneſs and Diſtinction, it will be neceſſary to treat ſeparately of theſe Four Queſtions: 1. Whether Hereticks and Schiſmaticks have any Legal Authority from the Church to Baptize? 2. Whether ſuppoſing them to have no Legal Authority, their Baptiſm be notwithſtanding true and valid Baptiſm? 3. What Privileges are conferred by ſuch Baptiſm, what are its Defects, and how thoſe Deficiencies were ſupplied upon Mens returning to the Unity of the Holy Catholick Church? 4. Whether Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clergymen act in that Capacity as Clergymen or Laymen? The diſtinct Conſideration of theſe ſeveral Queſtions will be of great Uſe: For nothing has more embroiled the Church, or confounded Men in this Diſpute, than the not diſtinguiſhing authorized Baptiſm from that which is merely valid; and the Privileges and Perfections of the one from the Deficiencies and Imperfections of the other. It was the not attending to theſe Things diſtinctly, that led Cyprian and all his Aſſociates into the Error of Rebaptization: They thought no Baptiſm could be valid, unleſs both the Adminiſtrator was an authorized Perſon, and his Baptiſm could alſo exhibit all thoſe ſpiritual Graces, which are ordinarily the Effects of Catholick Baptiſm; but both theſe Things were wanting in the Baptiſm of Hereticks, viz. both Authority and Spiritual Grace; and therefore they concluded their Baptiſm to be Invalid. It is the ſame want of attending to the Diſtinction between Unauthorized Baptiſm and Invalid Baptiſm, which leads many into a Miſtake at this Day. They always confounded theſe two Things together, which yet are of very different Conſideration from each other: For all the Baptiſms of Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Miniſters are unauthorized; and yet it will not be ſafe to conclude immediately that they are therefore abſolutely Invalid: Otherwiſe the Catholick Church and the Church of England were in an ill Caſe, as will appear by the ſequel of this Diſcourſe.

FOR, firſt of all, it was agreed on all Hands, that Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clergymen had not any Legal Authority from the Church to baptize. This was not only aſſerted by Cyprian and his Followers, who maintained the Invalidity of ſuch Baptiſms, but alſo by St. Auſtin, and all the reſt that ſtood up for the Validity of them againſt the Neceſſity of Rebaptizing. And they went upon this Ground, that they who deſerted and oppoſed the Church, were thenceforth Deſtitute of her lawful Call, and therefore acted not only without her Authority, but againſt her Authority in all their Miniſtrations. They were ſo far from having the Churches Authority to baptize in ſuch Caſes, that they incurred her ſevereſt Cenſures and Anathema's for doing it, although their Baptiſms were received as valid under ſuch an Irregular and Unlawful Adminiſtration. Nothing can be plainer than that Canon of the ſecond Council of Carthage to this Purpoſe, which ſays, "That if "a Presbyter, who is under the Cenſure or "Excommunication of his own Biſhop, would "have any Redreſs, he muſt apply himſelf "to the neighbouring Biſhops, and have "his Cauſe heard by them, in order to be "reconciled to his Biſhop. But if he refuſes "to do this, and proudly withdrawing himſelf from the Communion [n] of his Biſhop, he ſets up a Separate and Schiſmatical Meeting to offer Sacrifice to GOD, "let him be Anathema and loſe his Place." If ſuch a Schiſmatical Presbyter makes himſelf an Anathema for miniſtring the Sacrament in a ſeparate Meeting, however valid in themſelves his Sacraments may be, yet certainly he acts againſt the Authority of the Church, and all his Miniſtrations are ſinful and unlawful in ſuch a Separation. This is what we have heard Ignatius [o] declare before, "That "it is not lawful either to baptize or cele- "brate the Euchariſt without the Biſhop, but "what he allows is well-pleaſing to GOD." Now what ſhould make it ſinful and diſpleaſing to GOD, for a Presbyter to baptize without his Biſhop, but only that in ſo doing he acts without and againſt the Authority of his Biſhop, and in Oppoſition to him whom GOD has made the chief Governour of the Church? This is alſo what we have heard St. Jerom [p] ſay before, That neither Presbyters nor Deacons have any Right to baptize without the Order or Authority of their Biſhop, becauſe he is the Chief Miniſter of the Church. But enough has been ſaid already upon this Point, in ſpeaking of the Biſhops original Power, and of the Power of Presbyters and Deacons, as only derivative from them, to ſhew that none can have any Lawful Authority or Regular Power to baptize, but only as they act in Subordination to them, according to the ſtanding Laws and Rules of the Catholick Church. Only here we muſt obſerve a Diſtinction which St. Auſtin makes about the word Power; which either ſignifies that Regular Authority and Power of adminiſtring Baptiſm in a lawful Way, which we have been ſpeaking of; or elſe ſuch a Power as may be in Men to give a Baptiſm that ſhall ſtand valid and firm, though they were not Regularly qualified to perform it, but did it by Contradiction to known Rules, and in manifeſt Uſurpation. In which Senſe he allows Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and contumacious or degraded Biſhops and Prieſts to have ſtill a Power to baptize: But then this was not the true Regular, Authorized Baptiſm of the Church, but an uſurped Power, and Invaſion of an Office which Regularly belonged to others. So that there was no Diſpute among the Ancients upon this Point; for they all agreed in this, That taking Power only for Regular Power, and Juſt and Lawful Authority, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Prieſts had not Lawful Authority to baptize; but what they did was done (properly ſpeaking) by an Unauthorized, Criminal, Anti-epiſcopal Uſurpation, becauſe contrary to the known Rules and Orders of the true Governing Part of the Catholick Church.

SECT. 20. Whether the Baptiſm of Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks was Valid.

BUT now, notwithſtanding their Agreement upon this Point, That the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks was Unauthorized and Unlawfull, they were divided upon the next Queſtion, about the Validity of ſuch Baptiſms. Tertullian, though he allowed the Lawfulneſs and Validity of the Baptiſm of Laymen in Caſes of Neceſſity, yet he utterly rejected the Baptiſm of Hereticks, ſimply and univerſally, as altogether Null and Void. For he ſays, "There is but one Baptiſm "delivered to us either in the Goſpel [q] "of CHRIST, or the Writings of the Apo- "ſtles; becauſe there is but one Lord, and "one Baptiſm, and one Church in Heaven. "Upon which account it is proper to con- "ſider, what is to be obſerved in Relation "to Hereticks. For the Thing is only giv- "en in Command to us. But Hereticks "have no Part or Fellowſhip in our Diſci- "pline; their very Breach of Communion te- "ſtifies them to be Foreigners: Therefore I "ought not to acknowledge that in them, "which is only commanded to me; becauſe "we and they have not the ſame GOD, "nor the ſame CHRIST; and conſequent- "ly not one and the ſame Baptiſm: which "ſeeing they have not Rightfully, they have "it not at all. That which is not, cannot "come into any account; nor can they be "ſaid to receive that which they have not." He ſays alſo he wrote a Book in Greek particularly to this purpoſe. And he touches upon it in his Book of Preſcriptions againſt Hereticks [r], where he ſays, "No Man can "be Edified by him, by whom he is deſtroy- "ed. No Man can be illuminated by him, "of whom he is led into Darkneſs." And in another Book he tells us [s] more expreſly, That Hereticks were received again by Baptiſm, in the ſame manner as Heathens were. Some think Tertullian here ſpake of the School of Montanus, becauſe he wrote his Book de Pudicitia when he was a Montaniſt: But his other Books were written by him whilſt he was a Catholick; and therefore I rather think he ſpake the Senſe of the Church of Carthage, and and perhaps the whole African Church in thoſe Days. For Agrippus, Biſhop of Carthage, with a Synod of the Provinces of Africa and Numidia not long after confirmed the ſame Thing, as we learn from Cyprian's [t] Epiſtle: And the Opinion of Cyprian [u], and the ſeveral Councils of Carthage in his Time [w] are ſo well known, that I need not inſiſt upon them. Firmilian alſo, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, joined with Cyprian, and wrote a long Epiſtle to him [x] in Defence of the ſame Opinion, where he alſo mentions the Decree of the Synod of Iconium to the ſame purpoſe. Dionyſius alſo Biſhop of Alexandria, maintained the ſame Doctrine [y], and in one of his Epiſtles he alledges the Decrees of the Council of Iconium and Synada for confirmation of it. On the other hand, Stephen, Biſhop of Rome, and the Churches under him, ſtood up in Defence of the contrary Opinion: They aſſerted, That all who were baptized in the Name of the Holy TRINITY were to be received only with Impoſition of Hands, without Rebaptizing, whatever Hereſies or Schiſms they came over from to the Catholick Church: For ſo Firmilian, in his Epiſtle to Cyprian [z], delivers their Opinion with Exactneſs and Candor. I know indeed a great many Learned Perſons, and among them Voſſius, Blondel, and Biſhop Pearſon [a] are of Opinion, that Stephen, Biſhop of Rome, in Oppoſition to Cyprian's Doctrine, fell inconſiderately into the contrary Extreme, and aſſerted, That all Perſons baptized by Hereticks, whether in the Name of the TRINITY or otherwiſe, were to be received without Diſtinction: but a great many Things are ſaid by the Learned Pagi [b] to clear Stephen of this Imputation, and, I think, with Juſtice and Reaſon; for this one Paſſage of Firmilian (which yet has eſcaped the Obſervation of Learned Men on both Sides) does abundantly vindicate him from the Charge; for it ſhews plainly, he was not for receiving the Baptiſm of all Hereticks whatſoever, but ſuch only as kept to the Form of the Church, and baptized in the Name of the Holy TRINITY. And if there be any Expreſſions in Stephen's Letter to Cyprian, which ſeem to import more, they are candidly to be interpreted with this Reſtriction and Limitation. Which I obſerve for the Sake of ſome late Ingenious Writers, who depending upon the venerable Authority of Biſhop Pearſon, have unwarily ſlid themſelves, and led others into the ſame miſtaken Opinion about Stephen Biſhop of Rome; whereas Vincentius Lirinenſes [c] fully vindicates his Doctrine from the Charge of Novelty, and reckons it the true ancient Catholick Opinion: Nor do I know any ancient Writer that has paſſed any harder Cenſure on him for it, except ſuch as were profeſt Abettors of Cyprian's Opinions, however they might diſlike his fierce and immoderate Temper.

THUS then the Controverſy ſtood at firſt, about the Rebaptization of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. In the next Age the Diſpute was reſumed again, and the Doctrine of Stephen, with a little Variation, was generally received, whilſt the Doctrine of Cyprian was condemned in the Donatiſts, who pretended to be Followers of his Opinion. Now a Diſtinction was firſt made between Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and then again between the ſeveral Sorts of Hereticks: For ſome baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, according to the Form of the Church, and others did not; and of thoſe who baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, ſome were Heterodox as to the true Faith of the TRINITY; others were Orthodox in that Point, but Heretical in other Opinions. And according to theſe Diſtinctions a Difference was made in the Reception of their Baptiſms. The Baptiſm of Schiſmaticks was generally received as Valid, without any Diſtinction: The Baptiſm of ſuch Hereticks as did not baptize in the Name of the TRINITY, and the Form of the Church, was as generally rejected: But about the Baptiſm of thoſe who gave Baptiſm in the Name of the TRINITY, and yet did not believe the true Faith of the TRINITY, as the Arians and ſome ſuch others, there was ſtill ſome Queſtion remaining: For Athanaſius, and Optatus, and ſome few others, thought it was not only neceſſary that Men ſhould be baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, but alſo into the true Faith of the TRINITY; and therefore they rejected the Baptiſm of the Arians, becauſe though they obſerved the Form of Baptizing in the Name of the TRINITY, as it was uſed in the Church, yet they did not baptize into the true Faith of the TRINITY, becauſe they denied the Divinity of the SON and HOLY GHOST; and therefore they thought their Baptiſm was not good, and ought to be repeated: But the Generality of the Church were of another Mind, and therefore they received the Btptiſm of the Arians alſo, becauſe they gave Baptiſm in the Name of the TRINITY, though their Faith was not right about it. This was the true State of this Matter in the IVth Century, when upon Occaſion of the Schiſm of the Donatiſts it came exactly to be conſidered. And of the Truth of all this the Reader may ſatisfy himſelf himself from the Testimonies I shall lay before him.

THE first Decree that was made in this Matter was in the great Council of Arles, An. 314. at which, St. Austin says [d], near Two hundred of the Western Bishops were present, though few of their Subscriptions are now remaining. In this Council the Dispute about Heretical Baptisms was thus determined; according to the new Edition of Sirmond: "We make this Decree concerning "the Africans, who have been used to re-"baptize according to a peculiar Law [e] "of their own: If any one return from his "Heresy to the Church, let the Catholick "Priests question him about the Creed; and if "they perceive that he was baptized in the "Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY "GHOST, only Imposition of Hands shall be "given him, that he may receive the HOLY "GHOST. But if upon Examination he an-"swers not the TRINITY, that is, that he "was not baptized in the Name of the TRINI-"TY, let him be rebaptized." All that is here required, is only that a Man be baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, or at most in the Faith of the TRINITY, to make Heretical Baptism valid. And no more is required in the great Council of Nice, which has two Canons to this purpose: The first of which orders the Novatian Schismaticks to be admitted upon their Return, even to the same Degrees among the Clergy which they enjoyed before, without any other Ceremony than Imposition of Hands. But the other [g] requires the Paulianists, or Samosatenian Hereticks to be rebaptized. Hence it became a general Rule, that Schismaticks were to be admitted universally without Rebaptizing; but Hereticks with some Exception: For they who were in the Condition and Capacity of the Samosatenians, were to be rebaptized. But the Question may be, Upon what account the Paulianists are ordered to be rebaptized more than other Hereticks? Was it because they did not baptize in the Name of the TRINITY, or because they rejected the Doctrine of the TRINITY, tho' they kept to the Form of the Church? Athanasius seems to have been of Opinion, that it was upon the latter account; for he rejects the Baptism of the Arians, tho' they baptized in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST; because tho' they used the same Form of Baptism as was used in the Church, yet they did not believe as the Church believed of the Divinity of the SON and HOLY GHOST. This I take to be the Meaning of that famous Passage in his third Oration against the Arians [h], where he says, They did not baptize Men into the Faith of the FATHER and SON, but a Creator and a Creature, a Being made and the Maker of it. By which he did not mean, as some mistake him, that the Arians had changed the Form of Baptism, which they never did till the Time of Eunomius; but that tho' they baptized in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, yet they did not understand by those Names what the Church understood, but believed the SON and HOLY GHOST to be mere Creatures; and therefore he thought their Baptism to be of no Effect, because tho' they baptized in the Form of the Church, yet not into the Faith of the HOLY TRINITY. And he concludes the same of the Manichees and Montanists, and Samosatenians, who, he thinks, used the Catholick Form of Words, but rejected the true Sense and Meaning of them. Whence it is plain, Athanasius was one of those who neither universally received nor universally rejected Heretical Baptisms; but such as were given in the Catholick Form of Words, and in the true Faith of the TRINITY, those only he admitted; refusing all others as Invalid, where either the Form or the Faith was wanting.

OPTATUS was of the same Opinion, that the Baptism of Schismaticks was to be received as Valid, without any Distinction, because they were baptized [i] both in the Name and the Faith of the TRINITY; and therefore he tells the Donatists, they never made any Scruple about their Baptism, nor ever pretended to wash them over again: For as long as the Faith was the same, the Baptism was [k] the same; and the Donatists were rather to be blam'd for Rebaptizing those who had been baptized in the Faith of the TRINITY before. But as to the Hereticks he made a Distinction: For some baptized neither in the Name nor the Faith of the TRINITY; and the Baptism of such Hereticks he calls sacrilegious [l] and profane, and will not allow it to be the same with the One Baptism of the Church. The Reasons of making such Distinctions he assigns in the next Words, when he says, [m] There

[m] There are Three Things concurr in Baptiſm, 1. The Name of the TRINITY. 2. The Faith of the Receiver. 3. The Adminiſtrator or Baptizer. But theſe Three are not all of equal Weight and Neceſſity. The TRINITY has the principal Place in the Action, without which Baptiſm cannot be performed: after this comes the Faith of the Believer; and then the Perſon of the Adminiſtrator, but that is not of equal Authority with the Two former. Whence he concludes that Baptiſm adminiſtred in the Name and in the Faith of the TRINITY, whatever the Quality of the Adminiſtrator might be, was not to be repeated.

ST. Baſil delivers his Opinion of theſe Baptiſms much after the ſame manner. He thinks that as to the Novatians, and ſuch other Schiſmaticks as did not err in Faith, the Cuſtom of the Church in every Country was to be complied with, whether it was to baptize, or not baptize them again. But as to the Pepuzians or Montaniſts he thinks [n] much otherwiſe, and wonders how the great Dionyſius could paſs them over. For the Ancients decreed, That that Baptiſm only ſhould be received, which did not recede from the Faith. Upon which account, he ſays, they diſtinguiſhed betwixt Hereſies, Schiſms, and παρασυναγωγαὶ, unlawful Aſſemblies. Hereſies denoted ſuch as departed from the Faith; Schiſms, ſuch as contended only about Queſtions of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; and unlawful Aſſemblies were ſuch as were held by Presbyters or Biſhops that were refractory, and would not ſubmit to the Laws and Rules of the Church, but when they were cenſured for their Crimes and ſuſpended from officiating, would yet, notwithſtanding the Canons, pretend to govern or miniſter as before, and draw People after them out of the Catholick Church. Now, he ſays, the Ancients thought the Baptiſm of Hereticks, ſuch as the Manichees, Valentinians, Marcionites and Pepuzians, was wholly to be diſannulled, becauſe they were Diſſenters about the Faith of GOD: But the Baptiſm of Schiſmaticks, as being yet of the Church, was to be received; and ſuch as were baptized in unlawful Aſſemblies, being corrected by true Repentance and Converſion, were to be admitted again into the Church; as thoſe Clergy alſo, who went off with their refractory Leaders, were to be reſtored to their Station again upon their true Repentance. Hence he concludes, that the Pepuzians were to be rejected as Hereticks, becauſe they blaſphemed the HOLY GHOST, attributing his Title to Montanus and Priſcilla, and did not baptize in the Name of the HOLY GHOST, but in the Name of FATHER, SON, and Montanus, or Priſcilla. And tho' Dionyſius had allowed their Baptiſm, yet we were not to follow him in that miſtaken Practice. As to the Novatians, he ſays, Cyprian and Firmilian rejected their Baptiſms, together with that of the Encratitæ, Hydroparaſtatæ, and Apotactici, being they were broken off from the Church by their Separation, and ſo neither had the SPIRIT themſelves, nor could they give it to others, but were mere Laymen, who had no Power either to baptize or ordain; and therefore they ordered all ſuch as were baptized by them, to be rebaptized, as Perſons baptized only by Laymen. This was the Practice of Cyprian and Firmilian: But for as much as many Churches in Aſia received the Baptiſm of ſuch by way of Diſpenſation, his Advice is to permit it to be received, ἕως δεκτὸν, only upon their Return they muſt receive the Unction of Chriſm or Confirmation. Whence it is plain, St. Baſil was not ſo rigid as Cyprian in the Baptiſm of Schiſmaticks; but for Hereticks who made a Breach upon the Faith, he rejected their Baptiſm univerſally without Exception.

BUT the more general and prevailing Interpretation of the Nicene Canon was, That the Baptiſm of all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who did not reject the Catholick Form of Baptizing in the Name of the TRINITY, was to be received, however they might be Heterodox in their Faith and Opinions. For they ſuppoſe the Paulianiſts were therefore to be rebaptized, becauſe they uſed another Form of Baptiſm. This was certainly the Senſe of the Council of Laodicea and the Second General Council of Conſtantinople, and the Second Council of Arles and Trullo; as alſo of St. Auſtin, St. Jerom, Gennadius, Urſinus Afer, Siricius, Leo, Innocentius, the Author under the Name of Juſtin Martyr, and the Generality of the ancient Writers.

THE Council of Laodicea has two Canons to this purpoſe, in the former of which, all ſuch as had been baptized by the Novatians, the Photinians, and the Quartadeciman Hereticks, are ordered to be received [o] to a Participation of the Holy Myſteries, only firſt Anathematizing their Hereſies, Learning the Catholick Creed, and being anointed with the Holy Chriſm. Here is no mention of a new Baptiſm, but only Confirmation upon their Return to the Church. But in the next Canon, ſuch as return from the Hereſy of the Cataphrygians or Montaniſts, though they had been Ordained among their Clergy, and Dignified with the Title of Maximi, are appointed both to be Catechiſed and Baptized [p] by the Biſhops and Presbyters of the Church. Now, what ſhould be the Reaſon of making ſuch ſuch a Difference between the Baptiſm of the Photinians and the Montaniſts (ſince the Photinians were certainly as erroneous in their Opinion about the TRINITY, as the Montaniſts could be) but only this, That the Photinians, though they did not believe the Divinity of CHRIST, yet they ſtill kept to the Words and Form of the Catholick Baptiſm: But the Montaniſts, ſome think, changed the Form; for they did not baptize in the Name of the FATHER, SON and HOLY GHOST, but in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and Maximilla, or Montanus, as Theophylact [q] and the Learned Suicerus [r], and others have obſerved from him: Or elſe by their Errors they deſtroyed the very Eſſence [s] of Baptiſm.

THE like Difference was made by the ſecond General Council of Conſtantinople, An. 381, between the Baptiſm of the Arians and Macedonians on the one hand, and that of the Eunomians, Montaniſts, and Sabellians, on the other. The Arians and Macedonians are joined with the Sabbatians, and Novatians, and Quartadecimans, and Apollinarians; all which are to be received only by Conſignation or Unction of the Holy Chriſm, wherewith they are to be anointed on the Forehead, Eyes, Noſe, Mouth, and Ears, with this Form of Words, The Seal of the Gift of the Holy Spirit. But for the Eunomians, Montaniſts, and Sabellians, and ſuch other Hereticks, they are to be received in the ſame manner [t] as Heathens; which was by going through all the Stations of the Catechumens, in order as they are there mentioned, being the firſt Day made Chriſtians at large, the ſecond Day Catechumens, the third Day Exorciſed, then Cathechized and Trained up to the Diſcipline of the Church, and at laſt baptized. Now here it is to be obſerved, that the Arians and Eunomians are but Branches of the ſame Hereſy, and yet the one are ordered to be Rebaptized and the other not: The Reaſon of which was evidently this, That the one obſerved the ſame Form of Baptizing as was uſed in the Church, but the other had introduced a new Form of their own Invention. For 'tis particularly noted of Eunomius, that he made a great many Innovations in this Matter: He baptized but with one Immerſion, as is noted in this Canon; and Socrates [u] ſays, that was not in the Name of the TRINITY, but in the Death of CHRIST. Epiphanius alſo obſerves [w] how they rejected the Form of the TRINITY, and baptized in the Name of the Uncreated GOD, and the Name of the Created GOD, and the Name of the Sanctifying SPIRIT, created by the Created SON. And Gregory Nyſſen, who wrote againſt Eunomius [x], brings a like Charge againſt him. So that there was a plain Reaſon for the Councils ordering the Eunomians to be rebaptized, whilſt they decreed otherwiſe about the Arians; for the Arians, properly ſo called, had made no ſuch Innovation, which was peculiar to the Followers of Eunomius.

THE Second Council of Arles made two Decrees about Hereticks with the like Diſtinction. In one Canon the Photinians or Paulianiſts [y] are ordered to be rebaptized, according to the Decrees of the Fathers; meaning, no Doubt, the Decree of the Nicene Fathers made in that Behalf. But the Bonoſiaci, though they maintained the ſame Errors, yet becauſe they baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, as the Arians did, are ordered in the next [z] Canon to be received only with Chriſm and Impoſition of Hands, as ſufficient without a new Baptiſm.

THE Council of Trullo treads in the Steps of the Councils of Nice and Conſtantinople, as to the Rebaptization of the Paulianiſts [a], the Eunomians, the Montaniſts, and the Sabellians; to which they add the Manichees, Valentinians, and Marcionites, and all ſuch-like Hereticks. But the Arians, Macedonians, Quartadecimans, Novatians, Apollinarians, and, as they add, the Neſtorians, might be received only by Chriſm, without a new Baptiſm.

ST. Auſtin delivers his Senſe of the Nicene Canon about the Paulianiſts after the ſame manner: He tells us, in his Opinion, the Reaſon why the Council appointed them to be rebaptized [b] was, becauſe they did not obſerve the Form or Rule of Baptiſm, which many other Hereticks, when they left the Church, carried along with them, and continued ſtill to obſerve it. So that, as he ſays in [c] another Place, one might eaſier find Hereticks that did not baptize at all, than ſuch as did not baptize in that Form of Evangelical Words, of which the Creed conſiſts, without which it was not not the Baptiſm of CHRIST. For as much then as they baptized generally in this Form, their Baptiſm was admitted as a complete Sacrament, tho' their Faith was erroneous. And he makes [d] no Scruple to ſay, "That even "the Baptiſm of Marcion himſelf would be true "Baptiſm, if it were miniſtred in that Form "of Evangelical Words, In the Name of the FA-"THER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, tho' his "Belief under thoſe Words was not the true "Faith of the Catholick Church, but cor-"rupted with falſe and fabulous Doctrines." He alſo aſſigns the Grounds and Reaſons of this Practice, why the Catholick Church did not [e] repeat their Baptiſm, "Becauſe the "Baptiſm given by Hereticks was not, pro-"perly ſpeaking their Baptiſm, but the Bap-"tiſm of CHRIST; which they that once "had, could never loſe by going out of the "Church, and conſequently were not to be "admitted into the Church again by Rebap-"tization, but Repentance." The Church corrected the Errors [f] of their Underſtanding, upon their Return, but did not violate the Sacrament of GOD. And he challenges the Donatiſts [g] to ſhew him an Inſtance of any Man that was ever rebaptized by the Catholicks, after he had been once baptized in the Name of the TRINITY, as the Donatiſts did. Which ſhews, that this was the peculiar Practice of the Donatiſts, and not of the Catholick Church.

ST. Jerom argues upon the ſame Foot againſt Hilary the Deacon, whom he ſtiles Deucalion Orbis, the Rebaptizer of the World, becauſe he was for Rebaptizing all thoſe that had been baptized by the Arian Hereticks. Hilary it ſeems had gone one Step farther than his Maſter Lucifer, and the reſt of the Luciferians; for they allowed the Baptiſms of the Arians, tho' they did not allow their Orders, nor grant them in any Senſe to be Chriſtians, but ſaid they were of the Synagogue of Satan. Yet they received ſuch as were baptized by the Arians [h], not by giving them a new Baptiſm, but only by admitting them to a State of Repentance: So they allowed the Baptiſm of thoſe whom they did not allow to be Prieſts, nor ſo much as Chriſtian Laymen. But Hilary here deſerted his Leaders, and carried the Matter one Degree farther: He ſaid the Arian Prieſts were not only to be depoſed, but their Laicks alſo to be rebaptized. [i] Againſt whom St. Jerom urges not only the contrary Conceſſions and Practice of his Maſter Lucifer, but alſo the Teſtimony of Scripture [k], proving from the Revelations, That ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks might be received, upon their Repentance, without Rebaptizing: For the Nicolaitans were Hereticks, and yet there was no Command given, that they who were baptized by them ſhould be baptized again. Then he proves the ſame from the conſtant Practice of the Roman Church, where Hilary himſelf was baptized, who could be no Chriſtian if his own Doctrine were true; for he was baptized in a Church which had always received Baptiſm from Hereticks. Nay, he himſelf, [l] whilſt he was Deacon of that Church, had received the Baptiſm of the Manichees and Ebionites; but as ſoon as Arius aroſe, he was all on a ſudden diſpleaſed with himſelf, and opened a new Baptiſtery againſt the Church. He that was born in the Boſom of the Church, he that was nouriſhed with the Milk of her Breaſts, lift up his Sword againſt her; calling her Harlot, and yet that Harlot muſt be his Mother, elſe he could not prove himſelf a Chriſtian. Finally, he concludes both againſt Hilary and his Maſter Lucifer, from the Authority of the Council of Nice, which received all Hereticks, except the Samoſatenians, and not only admitted the Baptiſm of the Novatians, but allowed their Clergy to continue their Station in the Church.

IN like manner Gennadius tells us [m], All ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks in the Name or Confeſſion of the TRINITY, were received as truly baptized, when they came over to the Church. And then if they conſented to profeſs the true Faith, they were Confirmed by Impoſition of Hands, and ſo admitted to the Participation of the Euchariſt.

THE ſame Author mentions a Book of one Urſinus Afer [n], written on purpoſe againſt thoſe who were for Rebaptizing all Hereticks, wherein he proved, That ſuch as were either baptized in the Name of CHRIST, or in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, were not to be rebaptized, tho' they underſtood the Words in an heterodox Senſe: But when they made Confeſſion of the TRINITY, the Biſhop's Confirmation by Impoſition of Hands was ſufficient for their Salvation.

ABOUT this Time lived the Author of the Queſtions and Reſponſes, which go under the Name of Juſtin Martyr: Among other Queſtions he propoſes this for one; "If the Bap-"tiſm [o] adminiſtred by Hereticks be adul-"terated and vain, why then do not the "Orthodox rebaptize an Heretick when he "comes over to the Catholick Faith, but "allow his adulterated Baptiſm, as well as "that which is true? To which he anſwers, "That when an Heretick comes over to the "Catholick Faith, the Fault of his Hetero-"doxy is corrected by the Change of his "Opinion, and the Faultineſs of his Bap-"tiſm by the Unction of the holy Chriſm." Here we ſee he does not deny but that the Baptiſm of Hereticks is very faulty; nay, adulterated, ſpurious and vain, as to any ſpiritual Effects, whilſt they continue Hereticks; and yet when they come over to the Catholick Church, their Baptiſm is not to be repeated, as ſimply Null and Invalid, but to be corrected, amended, and completed in its Deficiencies by the Miniſtry of Confirmation, which the Greeks call Chriſm or the holy Unction. And thus we are to underſtand the Word μάταιος, vain, as it is uſed by Ignatius, and the Author of the Conſtitutions, and other Greek Writers, when they ſpeak of the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, not as denoting ſimply the Nullity and Invalidity of it, but the Sinfulneſs of the Action in giving Baptiſm out of the Church, and the Inefficacy of it as to Salvation, or any other Spiritual Effects, till Men return from their Hereſies and Schiſms to the Unity of the Church again.

POPE Leo denies the Spiritual Efficacy of Heretical Baptiſm, as much as any Man; and yet he was utterly againſt Rebaptizing: For he gives this Direction to Nicetius Biſhop of Aquileia, "That ſuch [p] as received Bap-"tiſm from Hereticks, having not been bap-"tized before, were to be received only by "Invocation of the HOLY SPIRIT and Im-"poſition of Hands; and that becauſe they "had before only received the Form of Bap-"tiſm, without the ſanctifying Power of it." He gives a like Reſolution to the Queſtion of Ruſticus Narbonenſis: "Thoſe that know [q] "they have been baptized in the Form of "the Church, but know not what Faith they "were of that Baptized them, are not to "be rebaptized; but by Impoſition of Hands, "and Invocation of the HOLY SPIRIT, "whoſe Grace they could not have from "Hereticks, are to be united to the Com-"munion of Catholicks." And this he learned from the Practice of his Predeceſſors, Innocentius and Siricius; whereof the one ſays, [r] "It was their Cuſtom to receive into "the Communion of Catholicks, as well Ari-"ans as Novatians, and other Hereticks, on-"ly by Invocation of the Seven Graces of "the SPIRIT, with Impoſition of the Bi-"ſhop's Hands, as it had been decreed in "Council." Meaning the Decree which the Council of Nice, or the Council of Arles had made to this purpoſe. And this, he ſays, was then obſerved both in the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches. His other Predeceſſor, Innocentius, affirms [s] the ſame, "That the "Baptiſm of the Arians was allowed as Va-"lid; and when they were converted, they "were received by Penance and Impoſition "of Hands, which was the means of procur-"ing for them the Sanctification of the Ho-"LY SPIRIT." And ſo for the Novatians and Donatiſts, he determines, [t] "That thoſe "who came over from them, ſhould be re-"ceived

"ceived only by Impoſition of Hands; be-

"reticks, yet they were baptized in the Name
"of CHRIST.

IN another place [u] he explains the Reaſon, why the Council of Nice allowed the Baptiſm of the Novatians, but not the Paulianiſts; "becauſe the Paulianiſts did not baptize "in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and "HOLY GHOST, which the Novatians did, "who, in the Point of the Divine Power "of the TRINITY, always maintained the "Orthodox Faith." Such therefore as came over from Hereſies of the like kind with the Novatians, it was the Cuſtom [w] of the Church of Rome to receive with Impoſition of Hands to Lay-Communion, but not to allow them Orders, he ſays; which was a Matter of Diſcipline, in which the Church uſed a Liberty to extend or relax her Cenſures, as ſhe thought proper in her own Wiſdom and Diſcretion. It were eaſy to add many other Teſtimonies of the like Nature; but I ſuppoſe theſe are abundantly ſufficient both to evince and explain the general Senſe of the Church upon this Head, that they allowed as Valid the Baptiſm of all Hereticks that baptized in the Name of the TRINITY; though ſome few required they ſhould be baptized in the true Faith, as well as the true Form, to make their Baptiſm effectual.

SECT. 21. What Defects there are in the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and how thoſe Defects are ſupplied.

BUT now though the Baptiſm of Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded or Excommunicated Clerks was reputed Valid, ſo as it needed not to be repeated; yet it was not eſteemed ſo perfect to all Intents and Purpoſes as the Regular and Authorized Baptiſm of the Church, becauſe both on the Part of the Receiver, and on the Part of the Giver there were ſome Deficiencies in it. We muſt therefore enquire, in the next Place, What the Ancients ſuppoſed ſuch Baptiſm could give? Then, what were its Deficiencies, and what it could not give? and, How thoſe Deficiencies were ſupplied? For the Reſolution of theſe Queſtions, St. Auſtin, who has conſidered this Matter moſt exactly, often inculcates a known Diſtinction between the External or Viſible Sacrament, and the Inviſible or Spiritual Grace; the former of which [x] is common both to Good and bad Men in the Church; but the latter is peculiar only to thoſe that are Good. Now he ſuppoſes ſuch as are baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, to be much in the ſame State as bad Men in the Church: They receive the outward Viſible Sacrament, but not the Inviſible, Internal, and Sanctifying Grace of the SPIRIT. So that it cannot be ſaid, that they receive nothing at all; for they receive as much, almoſt, as wicked Men in the Church; of whom it may be truly ſaid, that they have received the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and need not upon any Occaſion, to be rebaptized again: And farther, that they are hereby made Partakers of all ſuch Privileges, as receiving the Outward and viſible Sacrament of Baptiſm can give to ſuch, as debar themſelves (by ſome Obſtacle of their own) from the Inviſible and Spiritual Grace of it. Their Baptiſm makes them ſomething more than mere Heathens, who need Baptiſm before they can come into the Church: It gives them a Title to be Members of the Viſible Church at large, tho' they are not true Members of the Inviſible and Spiritual Church, becauſe they are not yet ſanctified by the Spirit of CHRIST: It qualifies them for Pardon upon their Repentance, whenever they return from their vicious Practices, and take away thoſe Bars and Obſtacles that hindered the Deſcent of the SPIRIT at their firſt Admiſſion; nay, tho' they turn Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or become Lapſers, or Excommunicate, or even Apoſtates, they need not a new Baptiſm, but only Repentance and Abſolution, to return to the Church again; the Seal and Character of their Baptiſm remaining in this reſpect for ever Indelible upon them, ſo as to qualify them to be admitted ever after to Pardon and Forgiveneſs, upon a true Repentance. Theſe are Privileges that a wicked Man has, by Virtue of his having received the outward Form of Baptiſm, or the Viſible Sacrament in the Church, tho' all the time, by his own Fault, he be deſtitute of Pardon of Sins, and all the Inviſible Graces and Operations of the Holy Spirit. As the Baptiſm of Simon Magus was a true Baptiſm, tho' he was an unworthy and therefore an unprofitable Receiver of it: And as the Sacrament of the Euchariſt is a true Sacrament, tho' many Men eat it not to their Soul's Health, but to their own Damnation, becauſe they are unworthy Receivers of it.

NOW as the Caſe was with wicked Men, who thus received Baptiſm in the Church, that they gained hereby ſome Privileges, but not all, nor the chief of thoſe that belonged to it: So the Ancients ſuppoſed the Caſe of thoſe to be, who were baptized in an uncharitable Oppoſition and Contempt of Authority, by [w] Ibid. c. 4. Noſtræ Lex Eccleſiæ eſt, venientibus ab Hæreticis, qui tamen illic baptizati ſunt, per manus Impoſitionem Laicam tantum tribuere Communionem, nec ex his aliquem in Clericatus honorem vel exiguum ſubrogare.

Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, or Excommunicate and Degraded Clergymen: Their Baptiſm, if done in due Form, intitled them to ſome Privileges, but not all that might be expected from it in the Church: It was the Viſible Sacrament of Baptiſm, and therefore made them ſomething more than Heathens, and qualified them for ſome, if not all, of the forementioned Privileges; ſo that upon their Repentance and Return to the Church, they needed not to be received as mere Heathens, by having their Baptiſm repeated again: But then it wanted the Internal and Inviſible Grace, particularly the Grace of Unity and Charity, which completes all other Graces, and which Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were not ſuppoſed qualified to give, nor they who deſired Baptiſm at their Hands, qualified to receive, till they returned with Repentance and Charity to the Unity of the Church again: And then the Church by Impoſition of Hands, and Invocation of the Holy SPIRIT, might obtain for them thoſe Bleſſings and Graces, which might have been had in Baptiſm, if they themſelves had not been the Obſtacle, and put in a Bar againſt them. This I take to be the true State of this Matter, as generally delivered by ſuch of the Ancients as defended the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm. For as to thoſe that pleaded againſt it, and ſtood up for Rebaptization, they argued upon a quite contrary and miſtaken Notion, That the Viſible Sacrament and the Inviſible Grace muſt neceſſarily be united together to make a true Sacrament; and that neither could the SPIRIT operate without the Water, nor the Water without the SPIRIT. Which was the chief Argument uſed by Nemeſianus a Tubunis, in the famous Council of Carthage for Rebaptization under Cyprian: To which St. Auſtin returns a very ſatisfactory Anſwer, upon Cyprian's own Principles, only by diſtinguiſhing a double Notion [y] of the SPIRIT: "For if the Preſence of the SPIRIT be neceſſary to every "true Baptiſm, it muſt be only in ſuch a Senſe "as Simon Magus, or any other wicked Wretch, "who is baptized in the Church, may be ſaid "to be born again of Water and of the Spirit, who yet ſhall never enter into the King-"dom of Heaven." And the Caſe of Hereticks may be ſuch, i. e. to be born of Water and the Spirit without Salvation. But if by the Spirit be meant only the Spirit of true Converſion, then all thoſe who renounce the World in Words and not in Deeds, are not born of the SPIRIT, but of Water alone, who yet in Cyprian's Opinion, are truly baptized in the Church. For one of theſe two Things muſt needs be granted: Either thoſe who fallaciouſly renounce the World, are born of the SPIRIT, tho' to their Deſtruction, not Salvation; and then Hereticks may be ſo too: Or elſe, if that Saying of the Book of Wiſdom, The Holy Spirit of Diſcipline will not dwell with an Hypocrite, be taken to ſignify, that they who fallaciouſly renounce the World, are not born of the SPIRIT, then a Man may be born of Water alone and not of the SPIRIT. And Nemeſianus diſputed to no Purpoſe when he ſaid, "That "the SPIRIT cannot operate without the Wa-"ter, nor the Water without the SPIRIT." It is plain from this Diſcourſe of St. Auſtin, that the great Deficiency of Heretical Baptiſm was, that either it did not miniſter the SPIRIT at all, or elſe at leaſt not to ſuch a Degree, as was effectual to Sanctification and Salvation. And this Deficiency was therefore neceſſary to be ſupplied upon their Return to the Catholick Church. There was but one Caſe, he thinks, in which heretical Baptiſm could avail any Man to Salvation, and that was when it was ſuch a Caſe of Neceſſity [z] as that a Man could not have Baptiſm from any other, and then the Man in Heart, was ſtill united to the Catholick Church: But in all other Caſes their Baptiſm was unprofitably received; and to make it otherwiſe it was neceſſary for Men to forſake their Hereſy or Schiſm, and joyn themſelves to the Catholick Church. Even as they who were in the Church by the Communion of the Sacraments, but out of it by the Diverſity of their Morals, were obliged to reform their Lives, in order to make their Baptiſm profitable, which before was of little Advantage to them. Therefore St. Auſtin ſays, he had no Diſpute with Cyprian upon this Point; he agreed entirely [a] with him thus far, That Hereticks could not grant Remiſſion of Sins: This was the Deficiency of their Baptiſm, Baptiſm, which both in the Giver and Receiver was only to Deſtruction, becauſe they miſuſed ſo great a Gift of GOD. But then the ſame Deficiency was many times in the Baptiſm of thoſe who were baptized in the Church, becauſe they were baptized in Enmity and Hatred of their Brethren, and in that State could not have Forgiveneſs of Sins: Yet this Deficiency was not ſupplied by a new Baptiſm, but by Repentance and true Converſion, whereby that Pardon was obtained, which they had not merited, nor were qualified to receive before.

NOR was this the ſingular Opinion of St. Auſtin about the Deficiency of Heretical Baptiſm, but the general Senſe of the Church: For which Reaſon they appointed that Impoſition of Hands ſhould be given to ſuch as returned to the Church, in order to obtain the Grace of the HOLY GHOST for them by Prayer, which they wanted before, as having received Baptiſm from thoſe who had no Power to give the HOLY GHOST. For thus Innocent, Biſhop of Rome, who was Cotemporary with St. Auſtin, ſays of the Baptiſm of the Arians, "That their Miniſtrati-"on [b] was defective in this, that they "could not give the HOLY GHOST; and "therefore ſuch as were baptized by them, "were Imperfect, and were to be received "with Impoſition of Hands, that they might "thereby obtain the Grace of the HOLY "GHOST. Pope Leo [c] ſays, They had "only the Form of Baptiſm, without the "Grace of Sanctification; and therefore when "they came over to the Catholick Church, "though the Form of Baptiſm was not to "be repeated, yet what was wanting in it "was to be ſupplied, that by Impoſition of "the Biſhops Hands they might receive the "Grace of the HOLY GHOST." And that this was the true and only Method of ſupplying the Defects of Heretical Baptiſm, is evident from all the Paſſages that have been alledged in the laſt Section, which ſpeak of the Uſe of the Sacred Unction, which was joined with Impoſition of Hands and Prayer, to implore the Grace of Remiſſion of Sins, and the other Gifts of the HOLY SPIRIT, which were wanting before. To all which I ſhall only add theſe two Obſervations farther, to ſhew the Neceſſity of ſupplying the Defects of Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm by Confirmation, or Impoſition of Hands and Prayer, upon Mens Reconciliation and Returning to the Catholick Church. The firſt is, That Impoſition of Hands or Confirmation was thought ſo neceſſary in this Caſe, that though it was Ordinarily only the Office of a Biſhop to perform it, yet in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, when one who had been baptized by Hereticks, was in Danger of Death, and could not come to the Biſhop, a Presbyter, in that Exigency, was authorized to give him that ſolemn Impoſition of Hands uſed in the Prayer of Confirmation, and Invocation of the HOLY SPIRIT, rather than he ſhould die without it. This is evident from the firſt Council [d] of Orange, which made this Decree, "That if any Hereticks at the Point "of Death, deſire to be received as Catho-"licks, in the Abſence of the Biſhop, the "Presbyters ſhall give them the Conſignati-"on of Chriſm and the Benediction" And ſo in the Council of Epone [e] a like Order was made, "That if any Hereticks, who lay "deſperately Sick upon their Beds, deſired "ſuddenly to be converted, in that Caſe, "for the Salvation of their Souls, which was "heartily deſired, a Presbyter is permitted to "give them the Conſolation of Chriſm." Which thoſe that were in Health were to go to the Biſhop for at their Converſion. Here we may take notice, that this Confirmation, or ſolemn Invocation of the HOLY SPIRIT was thought more neceſſary for ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, upon their Return to the Church, than for thoſe that were baptized in the Church: For many of thoſe who were baptized in the Church, in Country-Towns and Villages, died, as St. Jerom obſerves, [f] before the Biſhop could come to give them Confirmation; and yet no ſuch Rule was made in that Caſe, for Preſbyters to Confirm them: The Reaſon of which was, that they had received the Grace of the HOLY SPIRIT in their Baptiſm (which Hereticks had not) and therefore there was no ſuch abſolute Neceſſity of Confirming them in order to die in Peace and Safety: But Hereticks could not die ſecurely without it; and therefore the Church, in Compaſſion to dying dying Hereticks, authorized even Presbyters in Case of extreme Necessity to give them Confirmation, which in other Cases was the ordinary Office of the Episcopal Function. 2dly, The other Observation I would make in Relation to this Matter, is, That Imposition of Hands was thought so necessary for Hereticks upon their Return, that even those who had received it before in their Heretical Baptism, received it again when they were reconciled to the Church. The reason of which was, because Hereticks and Schismaticks, during their Separation, were supposed neither qualified to give nor receive the HOLY GHOST, either by Baptism or Imposition of Hands, or the Consignation of Chrism: For some Hereticks ministred all these, and yet Imposition of Hands was given them again when they returned to the Church. This is plain in the Case of the Donatists. They not only retained Baptism, but also the Unction of Chrism and Imposition of Hands, as the Church did. For so both St. Austin [g] and Optatus testify of them. And yet they could not give the HOLY SPIRIT by any of them. Therefore when they came over to the Church, though neither the outward Form of Baptism nor Chrism was repeated upon them, yet Imposition of Hands was repeated, because that was no more than a Prayer to implore the Gift of the HOLY GHOST to descend upon them, which might be repeated as often as there was Occasion for it. Optatus says expressly, "That neither the Bap- "tism nor Unction [h] of the Donatists was "repeated: But Imposition of Hands was "repeated, because this was necessary as a "Prayer to implore the Divine Blessing, and "convey the invisible Unction of the HOLY "SPIRIT to them, which they were not in "a Capacity to receive before. Therefore "St. Austin [i] says, Imposition of Hands was "not like Baptism, a Thing that might not "be repeated: For it was no more than "praying over a Man for a Blessing. Which "may be done whenever there is occasion "for it." And therefore it was thought necessary to be done when Hereticks came over to the Church, to supply the Defects of their Baptism, which did not minister with the outward Visible Form the Invisible Grace of the HOLY SPIRIT before. I have said thus much upon this Head, to shew those who are baptized in Heresy or Schism, what was the true ancient Method of Reconciliation, and the Way to die securely in the Peace and Communion of the Church. And if all Persons concerned would observe this Method, there would be no need of Disputes about Rebaptization in the Church. For it appears, that the unauthorized Baptism of Hereticks and Schismaticks may be reputed Valid, and without Rebaptizing have its Defects supplied by Imposition of Hands in Confirmation.

SECT. 22. Whether the Baptism of Hereticks and Schismaticks be any more than the Baptism of unauthorized Laymen.

THERE remains one Question more to be resolved concerning Hereticks and Schismaticks and Degraded Clergymen; Whether in that Capacity, as they were unauthorized in all their Ministrations, they were reputed to be of the Body of the Clergy, or of the Laity, or in a middle Rank betwixt both? And whether the Baptisms administred by them in such a State, were of any greater Account than the Baptisms of unauthorized Laymen? This Question is much of the same Nature with that other, Whether an Heretick be a Christian? Which is not to be resolved without a nice Distinction. For if by a Christian be meant one that is not a mere Heathen, but one that has received Baptism so Firm and Valid, as that if the Man turns Heretick, or Schismatick, or Apostate, or becomes Excommunicate, his Baptism notwithstanding will remain so Indelible, and Inviolable, as that he shall never need a second Baptism to be admitted into the Church again: In this Sense the Ancients would make no Scruple to affirm, that Hereticks were Christians. But if by a Christian be meant, one that is of the Catholick and Orthodox Faith, and in the Bosom and Unity of the Holy Catholick Church; then they would make as little Scruple to deny Hereticks to be Christians, but compare them to Jews and Pagans, as being Enemies to true Religion and destitute of the Means of Salvation as well as the other, as I have had Occasion to shew in another [k] Discourse.

NOW the Question, Whether Hereticks be Clergymen or Laymen, Priests or not Priests, Bishops or not Bishops, is to be resolved much after the same manner. If by a Bishop or Priest be meant one that has received such an Ordination from the Church to the Office of Bishop or Priest, as that if the Man turns Heretick or Schismatick, or Apostate, or is Excommunicate, or Degraded, yet his Ordination remains so far Indelible and Inviolable, as that if the Church thinks fit, after all his Crimes and Suspensions, to admit him, upon his Repentance, to officiate in that Station again, he he ſhall not need a new Ordination to qualifie him for it: In this Senſe there are none among the Ancients but will allow Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be Biſhops or Prieſts, according to their reſpective Orders. Some indeed were againſt their being allowed to officiate in thoſe Dignities, and were for depriving them wholly of thoſe Honours, when they returned to the Catholick Church, as thinking them unworthy to enjoy thoſe Privileges, who had ſo manifeſtly prevaricated with the Church, and gone contrary to the Deſign and Duties of their Station. But none ever ſaid, that if the Church ſhould think fit to allow them to continue in her Service, ſhe muſt of Neceſſity give them a new Ordination. Thus far therefore they were allowed to be of the Clergy, and upon this Foot many Churches and Councils accepted them upon their Return, as I have ſhewed elſewhere [l], and permitted them to continue in their Offices without a Reordination. And when, in the Diſcipline of the Church, it was thought proper to deprive them of the Power and Honour of their Places, yet, even in that Caſe, the Church did not intend to deny the Validity of their Ordination, but ſuppoſed that to remain ſtill ſo entire, as that if ever after the Church ſhould recall them to thoſe Offices, ſhe would not do it by giving them a new Ordination, any more than a new Baptiſm. Which is largely inſiſted on by St. Auſtin [m] againſt the Donatiſts; and St. Jerom [n] againſt the Luciferians; both which Sects pleaded for the Invalidity of Heretical Ordinations, but were refuted upon this Principle of the Catholick Church, That Baptiſm and Ordination, tho' ſinfully given, if they be Valid, are not to be wholly annulled, or afterwards repeated. In this Senſe Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Prieſts were allowed to be Prieſts ſtill, and their Acts to be Valid, tho' done irregularly, ſinfully, and unlawfully, againſt the Rule and Authority of the Church, to their own Deſtruction.

BUT then, on the other hand, if by Prieſts be meant only Presbyters acting by the juſt and lawful Authority of their Biſhop, in due Subordination to him, and in the Unity of the Church, and according to the Catholick Laws and Rules thereof; ſo as when either they deſert the Communion of the Church, or are juſtly degraded for their Crimes, they can no longer be ſaid to act by her lawful Authority, but in manifeſt Contempt and Oppoſition to her Rules: And if by Laymen are meant, all thoſe who by the Diſcipline and juſt Cenſures of the Church are degraded from their Clerical Offices, and reduced to the State of Lay-Communion: In this Senſe the Ancients would not allow Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be of the Clergy, but cenſured them as Men out of Office; or as Anti-epiſcopal Uſurpers, who ſet up another Altar againſt their Biſhop; and eſteemed their Acts as much unauthorized, ſinful, and irregular, as thoſe of any unauthorized Laymen; nay, and eſteemed them in ſome Senſe Laymen too, when once they were formally Degraded, and reduced to the Communion of Laymen: Which was making them Laymen as much as was in the Church's Power to do it, by diveſting them of their Offices, and withdrawing all Legal Authority to execute ſuch Offices from them, and ſo leaving them in an unauthorized State of Anti-epiſcopal Uſurpation. The Church indeed did not pretend wholly to cancel or annul their Ordination, or give them a new Ordination, when She authorized them to officiate again: But ſhe could and did by her Diſcipline and Cenſures, deprive them of the Execution of her Sacred Offices, and reduce them in all other reſpects to the Quality of Laymen; and then if they acted in that State, it was not by her Authority, but as Uſurpers and Invaders. So that the Anſwer to the Queſtion propoſed, we ſee, depends entirely upon theſe Diſtinctions: As they had an Ordination that could not be wholly diſannulled, they were in ſome Meaſure intitled to the Name and Character of Clerks; but as they were diveſted of all lawful Authority to execute any Sacred Office, they were in the State and Capacity of Laymen; aad ſo, upon different Accounts, as it were, in a ſort of middle State betwixt both.

UPON the whole Matter, the Reſult of our Enquiry concerning Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and degraded Clergymen is this: 1. They all act in Oppoſition to the Church's lawful Authority, and therefore have not her lawful Authority to baptize. 2. Notwithſtanding this, their Baptiſms, if done in due Form, are Valid, and not to be repeated. Yet, 3. Thoſe Baptiſms have great Deficiencies, particularly that they do not miniſter Remiſſion of Sins, and other Inviſible Graces of the HOLY SPIRIT, except where it pleaſes GOD to ſupply them in extraordinary Mercy, and in an extraordinary Way, to Infants, or others who are baptized by Hereticks in Caſes of Neceſſity, for Want of other lawful Miniſters: Which Deficiencies are to be ſupplied by Impoſition of Hands, and Invocation of the HOLY SPIRIT, upon their Repentance and Return to the Catholick Church. And this whether Hereticks, acting in that Capacity, be conſidered, 4thly, either as Clergymen or Laymen, or in a middle State betwixt both: For whatever Capacity they act in, their Baptiſms are not not properly the Legal and Authorized Baptisms of the Church, and therefore have need of some subsequent Authority to confirm them. This is the Sum of the Doctrine of the Ancients, concerning the Baptism of Hereticks and their Reception into the Church.

SECT. 23. How the Church of England comes to have Authority to baptize, tho' she had her Baptism only from the Heretical Church of Rome.

If it be enquired now, How the Reformed Church of England comes to have full and ample Authority to Baptize, which before was an Heretical and Schismatical Church, under the slavery of the Romish Yoke? I answer, By shaking off that Yoke, and Reforming their Errors, and Returning to the Unity of the Catholick Church. Which was the ancient Method for Schismatical and Heretical Bishops, and other Clergy, to gain that lawful Authority that empower'd them to officiate Legally, which they had not, nor could have, whilst they continued in their Errors, and out of the Unity of the Holy Catholick Church. Thus the great Council of Nice decreed, in the Case of the Novatians, "That upon their Return to the "Church [o] They should continue in the "same Station and Clerical Degrees they were "in before, only receiving a Reconciliatory "Imposition of Hands, by way of Absolu-"tion." And by Virtue of this they had now the full Power and License of the Church to authorize them to officiate, which they certainly had not before. And this was the Case of the Donatists in the Time of St. Austin, as appears from the Writings of that Father, and several Canons in the African Code, of which I have given a particular Account in another Place [p]. The same Rule and Method then which was used and followed in the Primitive Church, was that which authorized the English Bishops and Priests to Officiate Legally upon their Reforming from their Heretical and Schismatical Errors and Corruptions, and Returning to the strict and perfect Unity of the Holy Catholick Church. And so those Persons, who could only give Valid Baptism before, as Hereticks and Schismaticks may do by a kind of Usurpation, were now qualified authoritatively to give it every way Legal, Perfect and Authentick.

BUT some will be ready to ask, Where was that Holy Catholick Church, to which our first Reformers are forced to return? Which is much such another Question as that other, Where was your Church before Luther? To which I answer, It was where the Holy Catholick Faith and Doctrine of the Creed and Scriptures was maintained, without the Addition of the Romish Errors and Corruptions: And tho' there had been no visible Professors of that Faith and Doctrine entirely pure, yet it had been sufficient for the first Reformers to have returned to the Profession of the Faith itself; which, in effect, is returning to the Unity of the Holy Catholick Church, the chief and principal Part of whose Unity is the sincere Faith of the Creed and Scriptures. But we can shew also where there were visible Professors of this Faith in every Age perhaps, who always opposed the Corruptions of the Romish Church, and kept themselves free from her Heretical Stains and Pollutions. And why might not our first Reformers, by joyning themselves to the Faith and Communion of those Visible Professors, be said to return to the Unity of the Holy Catholick Church in the strictest and most perfect Notion of the Unity thereof? Some of those noble Professors were the Waldenses or the Albigenses, and the Fratres Bohemi, whose History is so famous in latter Ages. And many worthy Writers have deserved excellently of the Church of GOD, who have endeavoured to preserve their Memory, and Writings, and Confessions of Faith, as standing Monuments and lasting Evidences of their Religion; and also to clear their Character of the black and odious Imputations, which their Adversaries have falsely and industriously thrown upon them. Such are the learned Labours of Archbishop Usher, and Sir Samuel Moreland, and Dr. Allix among ourselves, and those of the Learned Albertinus, and Joachim Hesterberg; but especially the great Treasuries and Collections of Mr. Paul Perrin and Balthasar Lydius, with the Golden History of the Persecutions of the Church of Bohemia, in most of which we may find their Doctrines and Principles to be the same with those of the Reformation. Here were vast Numbers of Catholick and Visible Professors, as the Reader may easily judge by this one Observation, which Dr. Crakanthorp [q] long ago made out of Bzovius his Annals, "That there "were no less than an Hundred and forty two "thousand nine hundred and ninety of the "Albigenses miserably slaughtered in one Age, "in the one Kingdom of France, within the "space of Threescore Years. And then he "says, who can enumerate, or even but "conceive in his Mind, what Myriads of "Myriads in all other Parts of Europe, for the "space of Four hundred Years and more, "from the Time of Pope Hildebrand, were de-"voured with Fire and Sword, by the Beast "which is drunk with the Blood of the Saints? "Or who can speak of these Things without "weeping? If there were so many Martyrs, "the whole Product of the Church was cer-"tainly much greater: For the Blood of the "Martyrs always makes an Increase." So then, without farther Enquiry, there were Numbers enough of Catholick Professors for the Church of England to join with at the Reformation from her former Errors and Heresies reſies of Rome. And that nothing might ſeem to be wanting, theſe were Epiſcopal Churches too, and great Care was always taken to preſerve Epiſcopacy among them. Spondanus himſelf [r] tells us, the Albigenſes were once ſo powerful in France, as to think of ſetting up one of their Biſhops as a general Patriarch of their Order, againſt the Pope, and that Bartholomæus of Carcaſſon was his Subſtitute in the French Dominions. And that they had Biſhops among them, is otherwiſe evident from the Hiſtory of the Perſecutions of the Bohemian Church, ſuppoſed to be written by Comenius, a Biſhop of the Bohemians in the laſt Age, who tells us a remarkable Story, "How the Bohemians being in ſome Diſtreſs for want of Biſhops, ſent three of their Miniſters, Matthias Kunwaldius, Thomas Prelaucius, and Elias Krzonovius, to the Waldenſes, diſperſed throughout Auſtria and Moravia, to have them ordained Biſhops; which was accordingly done by Stephen and another Biſhop of the Waldenſes, with ſome Preſbyters joined with them: Theſe three were ordained Biſhops by them and ſent back [s] to Bohemia again: And from thence came the Succeſſion of Catholick Biſhops in Bohemia, which continued to the final Extirpation of them in the laſt Age, by the ill Succeſs of the Bohemian War, and the Prevalency of the Popiſh Faction." Theſe are moſt undeniable Proofs, that the Waldenſes or Albigenſes had always Biſhops among them; and they did not derive their Authority from the Pope, but had it originally among themſelves, handed down from the Time of Conſtantine, as they themſelves declared to the Bohemians [t], when they ordained their Miniſters in the forementioned Congreſs. And this agrees exactly with the Account, which even Rainerius, a Popiſh Writer, but ſomething more Ingenuous than the common Railers of that Party, gives of them. "Among all the Sects, ſays he, that are, or ever were, there is not a more pernicious one to the Church of GOD, than that of the poor Men of Lyons; and that for three Reaſons: 1. Becauſe it was more ancient; for ſome ſaid it had continued from the Time of [u] Pope Sylveſter, and others from the Time of the Apoſtles. 2. Becauſe it was more univerſal; for there was no Nation almoſt where this Sect had not ſome footing. 3. Becauſe all other Sects were accompanied with horrid Blaſphemies againſt GOD, which would make a Man tremble; but this of the Leoniſts had a great ſhew of Piety: They lived uprightly before Men, and believed all Things aright of GOD, and all the Articles contained in the Creed. Only they blaſphemed and hated the Church of Rome." Theſe were thoſe ancient, numerous, and pious Members of the Catholick Church, governed by a College of Catholick Biſhops, from the Time of Conſtantine, and ſo from the Time of the Apoſtles, with whom the Church of England had to join in Communion at the Time of her Reformation from the Errors and Hereſies of Popery. Which being ſo, I cannot but ſtand amazed at the Attempt of Mr. Collier, and wonder at his Deſign in his late Hiſtory of the Church of England, where he goes about Induſtriouſly and Partially to repreſent the black Part [w] of the Character of the Albigenſes, from the Calumnies and Slanders of their Adverſaries, without ſuggeſting the leaſt Title of what ſo many Learned Men have ſaid, or what may be ſaid, in their Vindication. This was not acting fairly the Part of an Hiſtorian, much leſs the Part of a Friend to the Church of England, to rob her of the Teſtimony and Confeſſion of ſo conſiderable a Body of worthy Patriots and Martyrs, in whoſe Communion (as I have ſhewed) ſhe had ſo particular an Intereſt in almoſt all the Steps and Meaſures of their Reformation. And now that I have ſaid this, I cannot but note one Thing more in this Author, which looks not well in a Proteſtant Writer; that is, his account of the Lutherans and Calviniſts (in his late Supplement to the Hiſtorical Dictionary) both which are taken from the Hiſtory of Maimbourg, their profeſt Enemy. When yet he could not be ignorant what an excellent Vindication of the Lutherans had been written againſt Maimbourg, by the Noble and Learned Seckendorf; to which he refers his Reader upon ſome other Occaſions; which ſhews, that he was no Stranger to it. But this only by the Way. I now return to the Hiſtory of the ancient Church.

THE laſt Queſtion is concerning the Baptiſms of ſuch as are wholly out of the Church, and in no Senſe Chriſtians, ſuch as Turks, Jews, and Infidels: Whether Baptiſm adminiſtred by any of theſe, in the Form of the Church, be to be reputed Valid as well as others? I had not mentioned this Queſtion, but only becauſe the Church of Rome has carried the Matter ſo ſo far as to affirm it, contrary to the Judgment and the Practice of the ancient Church: For in her Ritual [x] of Baptiſm ſhe has this Rubrick or Direction, "That though the "Ordinary Miniſter of Baptiſm be only a "Prieſt or a Deacon; yet, in Caſe of Ne"ceſſity, it may be done not only by a Lay"man or Woman that is a Catholick, but "by a Jew, a Pagan, or an Infidel." And ſo Pope Nicholas [y] in the Canon Law, and Eugenius in the Council [z] of Florence magiſterially determined. But this is one of the Novelties of Popery; for the Ancients ſpake in another Stile. St. Jerom [a] profeſſes himſelf amazed to hear a Luciferian ſay, A Man might be made a Chriſtian by one who himſelf was in no ſenſe a Chriſtian; which the Luciferians were forced to aſſert upon their Principles, who received the Baptiſm of the Arians, and yet maintained that they were mere Pagans who adminiſtred it: Which St. Jerom juſtly expoſes as a ſtrange Paradox in Chriſtianity, that Chriſtian Baptiſm might be given by Men who themſelves were no Chriſtians. And this ſhews the true State of the Controverſy between St. Jerom and the Luciferians: It was not, Whether Laymen might Baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity, as ſome have imagined; for upon this Point both Sides were agreed: But it was, 1ſt, Whether the Arian Prieſts were meer Heathens? Which the Luciferians affirmed, and St. Jerom denied. And then, 2dly, Whether ſuppoſing them to be meer Heathens, as the Luciferians would have it, their Baptiſm was valid, and ought not to be repeated again? The Luciferians aſſerted it to be valid, notwithſtanding the Suppoſition of their being Heathens: But St. Jerom refutes their Aſſertion upon this Principle, That none but a Chriſtian could give Chriſtian Baptiſm: And therefore the Luciferians ought either to own, as the Catholicks did, that the Arians were in ſome Senſe Chriſtians, and not meer Pagans; or elſe to rebaptize thoſe that were baptized by them, ſince Pagans could have no manner of Power to give Chriſtian Baptiſm. Tertullian and the Council of Eliberis were of the ſame Opinion; For they only plead for the Validity of ſuch Baptiſms as were adminiſtred by Chriſtians. And St. Auſtin ſays, [b] it was a very different Queſtion from that of Lay-Baptiſm, and that nothing ought to be determined in Favour of it, without the Authority of a General Council. Nicephorus, among the Greeks, [c] declares poſitively, "That no Man can baptize others, who is "not firſt baptized himſelf as a Chriſtian." And Pope Gregory III. is alledged by ſome for the ſame Opinion. So that the Determination of the Romiſh Church, for the Validity of Baptiſm adminiſtred by Jews and Pagans, is wholly new, and utterly without Precedent in the Primitive Church. The Author of the Chronicon Alexandrinum and Ado Viennenſis indeed give an Inſtance or two of Perſons who were baptized by Heathens, in Mockery, upon the Stage, who are alſo ſaid to have been Converted, and ſuffered Martyrdom upon it: But theſe Effects were owing to the miraculous Grace of GOD, and not to any ſuch Baptiſm; and therefore theſe Inſtances may ſerve to prove the Power of Martyrdom, which may ſave Men without Baptiſm; but are of no weight to juſtify the modern Practice.

I HAVE now gone through the ſeveral Queſtions at firſt propoſed, ſo far as relates to the Judgment and Practice of the Primitive Church.

CHAP. II.

The Practice of the Modern Greeks and Moſcovites.

SECT. 1. The Practice of the modern Greek Church.

PROCEED we now to enquire into the Senſe and Practice of the Church in latter Ages. And here I ſhall ſay nothing more of the Weſtern or Latin Church, becauſe its Practice is ſo generally known and unconteſted. In the Greek Church there has been ſome Diſpute about this Matter, and ſome ſeeming Variation in the Decrees of their Councils, tho' they have more generally agreed with the Latins ſo far, as to allow the Baptiſm of Laymen in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity; which is now alſo their common Practice. In the Time of the Patriarch Nicephorus, Nicephorus, commonly called the Confeſſor, who lived in the Beginning of the Ninth Century, about Fifty Years before Photius, it was Synodically determined to be lawful. For in Harmenopulus's Epitome of the Canons, and the Collection of Synodical Decrees of the Greek Patriarchs publiſhed by Leunclavius in his Jus Græco-Romanum, there are two Canons of Nicephorus to this purpoſe. In one of which [a] it is ſaid, "That if there happen to be Infants found in a Place where there is no Prieſt, they ought to be baptized: And if in that Caſe the Father baptizes his own Child, or any other Man, provided only that he be a Chriſtian, it is no Sin." In another Canon [b] he ſays, "In Caſe of Neceſſity a ſimple Monk, that is, one who is no Prieſt, may baptize. As alſo a Deacon, and a Layman, if it be in a Place where there is no Prieſt." And thus Matters ſeem to have ſtood alſo in the Time of Photius, who, among all the Objections he raiſes againſt the Roman Church, in his famous Encyclical Epiſtle, never ſo much as touches upon this Point, which probably he would have done, had there then been any Difference between them. Yet ſome private Writers, about this Time, began to diſpute the Legality of Lay-Baptiſm, and call in Queſtion the Church's Practice. Georgius Hamartolus, a Chronographer not yet extant in Print, about the Year 840, made a bitter Invective againſt it; for the Knowledge of which we are beholden to the curious Induſtry of Cotelerius, who has publiſhed a Fragment [c] out of that Writer relating to this Subject. He tells us, That Author having Occaſion to mention the Caſe of the Jew that was baptized in Sand, makes this Reflection on it: "Where now are thoſe who ſay, "that Laymen and Women may baptize ſometimes in Caſes of Neceſſity; and that contend, thro' Ignorance and prodigious and pervicacious Impiety, that ſuch Baptiſm ought to be reputed as Perfect and Divine? Who pay no Regard to the Doctrine and Command of the Apoſtles (meaning the Book which goes under the Name of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions) which ſays, "We do not permit a Layman to perform any Sacerdotal Office, as the Oblation of the Euchariſt, or Baptiſm, or Impoſition of Hands, or the greater or the leſſer Benediction. For no one takes to himſelf this Honour, but he that is called of GOD. For this Dignity or Authority is given by the Impoſition of Hands of the Biſhop: But he that aſſumes this Power as an Uſurper and Invader, will incurr the Crime and become liable to the Puniſhment of Saul and Ozias. Nor do we only prohibit Laymen, but the reſt of the Clergy to confer Baptiſm, as Deacons, Readers, Singers and Subdeacons; allowing it only to Biſhops and Presbyters, who are to have the Deacons attend upon them. And they who preſume to do otherwiſe, ſhall ſuffer the Puniſhment of Corah and his Company. It is therefore vain Cavilling, (ſays our Author) or rather Fighting againſt GOD, to ſpeak more truly, in ſuch as confer the Gifts and Operations of the Prieſthood upon Laymen and Women, to the Subverſion of their Hearers, who lend an Ear to the vain and empty Diſcourſes of Men, who know not what the Prieſthood means, or what Difference there is between a Prieſt and a Layman." This Writer ſeems either not to have known the forementioned Decrees of Nicephorus, or elſe to contemn and inſult them. For he ſets himſelf wholly to oppoſe both the Doctrine and Practice authorized by them, and argues as much againſt the Validity of Baptiſm when miniſtred by Deacons in Caſes of Neceſſity, as by Laymen. Yet notwithſtanding his Oppoſition, theſe Canons continued in Force among the Greeks for ſome Ages after. For Harmenopulus, who lived in the Middle of the Twelfth Century, and wrote his Epitome of the Greek Canons about the Year 1150, has inſerted them both into his Collection: And they are the only Canons that are mentioned upon this Subject; which ſeems to argue that they were then the ſtanding Rule of the Greek Church. Yet there were ſome who made Oppoſition to them in this Age alſo: For Michael Glycas, who wrote his Annals about the Year 1120, takes Occaſion to urge ſeveral Arguments againſt the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm in any Caſes of Neceſſity whatſoever. But as Cotelerius [d] has obſerved, his Arguments are grounded upon ſeveral Miſtakes in Matters of Fact, which makes them weak and inconcluſive: Firſt he urges the [e] Example of Dionyſius, Biſhop of Aſcalon, who is ſaid to have rebaptized a Man, who had been baptized in Sand inſtead of Water, by a Layman. But here wanted an eſſential Part of Baptiſm, viz. the Element of Water, which ſeems to have been the true Reaſon why the Party was rebaptized, if the whole Story be not a Fiction. In the next Place he alledges the Authority of the Apoſtolical Canons, prohibiting Laymen to meddle with the Prieſt's Office, whatever Caſes of Neceſſity may ſeem to require it. And yet the Caſe of Neceſſity is never ſo much as once mentioned in all the Apoſtolical Canons or Conſtitutions: Only Laymen are ſeverely prohibited in general from thruſting themſelves into the Offices of the Eccleſiaſtical ſiaſtical Function. Thirdly, He argues from the Authority of Alexander, Biſhop of Alexandria, who, he ſays, rebaptized the Children that had been baptized by Athanaſius. But this is directly contrary to all the old Hiſtorians, Socrates, Sozomen and Ruffin, who ſay expreſsly that Alexander did not rebaptize them, but only added what was wanting, and what belonged to the Epiſcopal Office to perform, that is, Impoſition of the Biſhop's Hands, with the Unction or Chriſm of Confirmation. And ſo the Author of the Life of Athanaſius, in Photius [f], is to be underſtood, when he ſays, "That Alexander gave them the Unction, "and perfected them by the Seal or Conſig-"nation of CHRIST:" Which Glycas miſtook for the Seal of Baptiſm, inſtead of Confirmation, being led into that Error by ſome modern Biographer, who underſtood not the Truth of the Story, nor the ancient Language of the Church, in which the Word Σφραγὶς ſignifies not only the Seal of Baptiſm, but that of Confirmation alſo. About an Hundred Years after Glycas lived one Theodorus Scutariota, who wrote ſome Scholia or Annotations upon Nicetas Choniates's Theſaurus Orthodoxæ Fidei, where he alſo maintains the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, as Cotelerius [g] informs us, who had ſeen the Manuſcript: For the Work itſelf was never yet made publick. But all theſe were but private Writers hitherto, and therefore ſignify little to oppoſe their own private Opinions to the declared Senſe of the Church, as it was authentically delivered in the Canons of Nicephorus, made in a Patriarchal Council, where Two hundred and ſeventy Biſhops were preſent, if the Council of Conſtantinople, An. 814, was the Council in which thoſe Canons were made. That which ſeems to carry more Weight with it, to bear down the foreſaid Authority, is another Decree made in the Council of Conſtantinople, under Lucas Chryſoberges the Patriarch, An. 1166. Here the Queſtion was put by Manuel Archbiſhop of Heraclea, Whether a Man ought to be received as a Chriſtian, who was baptized by one who pretended to be a Prieſt, but was not ſo? For ſuch a Caſe had lately happened in his Dioceſe [o]. In anſwer to this, the Synod decreed, That ſuch ought to be rebaptized; becauſe the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm is only committed to Biſhops and Prieſts, according to the 46th and 47th Canons of the Apoſtles. This Council cannot be denied to ſpeak plainly againſt the Validity of Lay Baptiſm, and in Favour of Rebaptization, in the Caſe that was then laid before them; which was the ordinary Miniſtration of Baptiſm by ſuch as counterfeited Orders, and pretended to be Prieſts when they were not ſo. But whether they intended by this wholly to invalidate the Baptiſm of Deacons and Laymen in extraordinary Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity, when neither a Biſhop nor a Presbyter can be had; as they have not expreſſed themſelves particularly upon this Point, ſo it is more than I can pretend poſitively from their Words, to determine. But if it was ſo, then I can ſay, it was plainly contrary to the Decrees of the former Council under Nicephorus, which prevailed in Practice both before and ſince this Council, and ſtill does in the Greek Church to this Day, however ſome Learned Perſons, for want of a little better Enquiry, have ſuffered themſelves to be led into an Error in thinking otherwiſe: For the beſt Greek Writers of late Days, in ſpeaking of the Miniſter of Baptiſm, and the Practice of their Church, always except the Caſe of extreme Neceſſity, in which they allow a Layman or Woman to baptize, rather than ſuffer a Child to die without Baptiſm. Nothing can be plainer than the Anſwer which Jeremy, the late Patriarch of Conſtantinople, gave to the Divines of Tubing, Jacobus Andreas and Martin Cruſius, in the laſt Age, when they had ſent him the Auſburgh Confeſſion, and deſired his Sentiments about it. In the Point of miniſtring Baptiſm he thus expreſſes himſelf, according to Socolovius's Tranſlation: "The Inſtrumental "Cauſe of Baptiſm is a Prieſt; unleſs a ſud-"den Neceſſity require it to be otherwiſe; in "which Caſe [i] Baptiſm conferred by one "that is not a Prieſt is Valid." Hottinger takes notice of the ſame Anſwer, and gives us his Words [k] from the Original, which are: "That when a Caſe of Neceſſity happens, "they eſteem it lawful for Laymen to bap-"tize." And Hottinger obſerves farther, That tho' the Patriarch expreſſed his Diſſent from the Lutheran Divines, in ſome other Points, yet upon this Head, and many others, there was a perfect Agreement between them: For the Lutheran Churches, as we ſhall ſee more hereafter, are all for the Validity of Baptiſm, when adminiſtred in Caſes of Neceſſity by Laymen. As to the Practice of the preſent Greek Church, we have farther Evidence from what Suicerus [l] has obſerved out of Metrophanes Critopulus, a late Writer of that Communion, who wrote the Confeſſion of the Oriental Church, where he thus expreſſes himſelf concerning Baptiſm [m] in ſuch Caſes: "When a "preſſing

" preſſing Neceſſity requires, the Infant is " baptized immediately after its Birth: And " if a Presbyter be not at hand, the Midwife " does it. If the Child recover, this Baptiſm " is reckoned ſufficient for him." Arcudius has the like [n] Remark, out of Gabriel Severus, Archbiſhop of Philadelphia, in his Book of the Sacraments [o] of the Church, where he ſays, " That when a Prieſt cannot " be preſent, a Lay Chriſtian, Man or Wo- " man, may baptize." And the Learned Dr. Smith, who has lately written of the preſent State of the Greek Church, gives us this Account of their Practice from one of their publick Confeſſions of Faith, written in the Vulgar Greek, and printed in the Year 1662, where it is expreſsly [p] ſaid, " That it is " not lawful and proper for any one to bap- " tize, but a lawful Prieſt, except in Time of " Neceſſity; and then a Secular Perſon, whe- " ther Man or Woman, may do it." So that what Biſhop Taylor in his Ductor Dubitantium [q], has alledged out of Simeon, Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, declaring, " That no Man baptizes " but he that is in Holy Orders" is either to be underſtood in the ſame manner, with the Limitation and Exception of the Time of Neceſſity, or elſe to be rejected as falſe; ſince there are ſo many plain undeniable Evidences of their Practice to the contrary, that he muſt out-face the Sun at Noonday, that will pretend to withſtand them. This Anſwer was given by Arcudius [r] to this Paſſage of Simeon, long before Biſhop Taylor wrote, but they neither of them refer us to Simeon's Book, whence it is taken: I ſuppoſe it to be his Book of the Sacraments of the Church, whence Socolovius ſays, the Patriarch Jeremy took his Account of Baptiſm: And, if ſo, it is more than probable they were of the ſame Mind in this Matter. But till I can ſee the Book itſelf, I will not be poſitive, but reſt ſatisfied with the Anſwer given by Arcudius, as a juſt Reply to this Exception.

SECT. 2. The Practice of the Moſcovites.

THE Moſcovites commonly follow the Practice of the Greeks, as having been firſt converted to Chriſtianity by them, and ſtill continuing to be of their Communion and Religion. Whence one might probably conclude, that their Sentiments and Practice, in this Point, were agreeable to thoſe of the Greek Church, though there were no farther Evidence for it. But their Rules and Canons give particular Orders about this Matter, as the Learned Gerhard, who was acquainted with them, aſſures us; for he ſays, The firſt Canon [s] of John, their Metropolitan, who is commonly called the Prophet, gives this Direction, " That Children, in Caſe " of Neceſſity, ſhould be baptized without a " Prieſt." The People indeed do not always obſerve this Rule: For ſome Authors tell us [t], many of them think a Prieſt ſo abſolutely requiſite to perform this Office, that whatever Caſe of Neceſſity happen, they will not permit it to be done by any other but a Prieſt. But we are to judge of the Senſe and Practice of a Church, from the Rules and Canons made by its Governours, and not by the Practice of the Vulgar, who often tranſgreſs their Rules either through Ignorance, Neglect, or Contempt; in which Caſe it would be injurious to any Church to judge of her Doctrines by the contrary Practice of the common People.

CHAP. III.

The Practice of the Churches of the Reformation.

SECT. 1. The Practice of the Lutherans.

NEXT for the Churches of the Reformation. The Lutherans in all Nations allow of the Baptiſm of Lay-Perſons, Men and Women, in Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity. We have heard before out of Hottinger, that the German Divines of Tubing, who were Luther's Diſciples, and of the Ausburgh Confeſſion, agreed perfectly upon this Head with the Greek Church. And it is farther evident from the Works of the moſt celebrated Writers of that Way both in Germany and Denmark. Some of their Profeſſors have particular Diſſertations upon this Subject, where they both aſſert the Grounds of their own Churches Practice, and reply to all the Objections that are made to the contrary. It will be ſufficient to refer the Reader to two of them at preſent, Brochmand and Gerhard, whereof the one was Profeſſor of Divinity at Copenhagen in Denmark, and the other at Jene in Saxony. Brochmand in his Body of Divinity [a] lays down this Aſſertion as the Doctrine and Rule of the Church: "That any "Perſon who is a Chriſtian, Man or Wo- "man, may be the Extraordinary Miniſter of "Baptiſm, at leaſt in the Caſe of extreme "Neceſſity, when there is imminent Danger "of Death, and a Miniſter of the Word "cannot be had". He conſiders Four of the Principal Objections to the contrary, and gives them theſe ſhort [b] Anſwers. Obj. 1. That the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments is Part of the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry, Matthew xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. Object. 2. That it is not permitted to a Woman to teach in the Church, 1 Tim. ii. 12. To theſe two Objections, he returns the ſame Anſwer, "That in "Caſe of extreme Neceſſity every Private "Perſon is permitted to teach and admini- "ſter Baptiſm". For he ſuppoſes thoſe Rules to relate only to the publick and ſtanding Miniſtry in ordinary Caſes. To a Third Objection, That no private Perſon is authorized to adminiſter the LORD's Supper: He replies, "That there is not commonly the "ſame extreme Neceſſity in the one as the "other, and that makes ſome Diſparity be- "tween Baptiſm and the LORD's Supper". To the laſt Objection, That Womens Baptiſm was introduced firſt by Marcion the Heretick: He anſwers, "That the Marcionites granted "a promiſcuous Liberty to any Perſons to "baptize in any Caſe, which their Churches "did by no means approve or allow". Gerhard is more copious upon this Subject, Firſt he lays down their Doctrine in this Aſſertion, "That tho' the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm "ordinarily belongs to the Miniſters of the "Church; yet, in Extraordinary Caſes of ex- "treme Neceſſity, when one of theſe two "Things muſt needs be, that either an In- "fant muſt die without Baptiſm, or elſe Bap- "tiſm muſt be conferred upon it by a pri- "vate Perſon; in ſuch an Exigency, they "hold that Baptiſm may be adminiſtred in "a private Houſe, by any Chriſtian that is "rightly inſtructed in the Articles of Reli- "gion, without Diſtinction of Sex". Then he proceeds to aſſign the Grounds of this Aſſertion, where he argues upon the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, from the Words of our SAVIOUR, Except a Man be born again of Water and the SPIRIT, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of GOD; and urges, "That this Neceſſity is "not in reſpect of GOD, who is not ſo tied "to the Sacrament that he cannot regene- "rate without it; but in reſpect of us, up- "on whom there lies a Neceſſity of obſer- "ving the Divine Command, about admini- "ſtring Baptiſm, whereſoever the ſubſtantial "Parts of it may be had, leſt, as much as in "us lies, we hinder an Infant from the or- "dinary Means of Salvation. A publick Mi- "niſter of the Church is not of the Eſſence "of the Sacrament, but a Matter of Order, "which is not ſo neceſſary as the Sacrament "itſelf; Order being inſtituted for the Sacra- "ment, and not the Sacrament for Order: "And therefore Order is to give way to "the Sacrament, when Neceſſity requires. "Secondly, He argues from the parallel Caſe "of Circumciſion, which in its firſt Inſtitu- "tion was appointed to be done by the Ma- "ſter of the Family only, Gen. xvii. 11, 23. "yet in extraordinary Caſes of Neceſſity it "might be done by others, even by Wo- "men, as by Zippora, when Moſes was ſo diſ- "compoſed and diſabled, that he could not "perform it: And by other Women, in the "Time of the Maccabees, 1 Mac. i. 63. 2 Mac. "vi. 10. Thirdly, He argues farther from the parallel Caſe of Abſolution and Teaching, which are the Ordinary Offices of the publick Miniſters: "Yet in Extraordinary Caſes, as "in the Time of a Siege, or in a Plague, or a "Perſecution, when the Church is deſtitute "of Ordinary Paſtors, a private Perſon may "declare Abſolution out of the Word of "GOD, to a dying Man, and he may in- "ſtruct and comfort the Sick, or others that "are under any Affliction. In like manner, "private Men, in Caſes of extreme Neceſſi- "ty may adminiſter Baptiſm; they being alſo "a Royal Prieſthood, 1 Pet. ii. 9. and made Kings "and Prieſts before GOD, Rev. v. 10." I examine not what Weight and Force there is in theſe Arguments, but only barely relate them as I find them in our Author, to ſhew what were the common Principles and Practices of the Lutheran Churches.

SECT. 2. Of the Helvetick Churches.

ANOTHER eminent Branch of the Reformation are the Helvetick Churches, the Followers of Zuinglius, whoſe Doctrine upon this Point differs but little from the Lutherans. The Opinion of Zuinglius himſelf ſelf was altogether the ſame; for in his Book about Baptiſm [d], ſpeaking of three ſeveral Errors that had crept in among the Circumſtances of Baptiſm, he reckons this one of them, "That ſome thought Baptiſm could "not be conferred by any other but a Prieſt "only; whereas it might be given by any "Man in Caſe of Neceſſity, yea, by a Wo-"man alſo, if Need required". But after the Death of Zuinglius, in the General Confeſſion of the Helvetick Churches, Women were forbidden [e] to baptize, becauſe the Apoſtle had commanded Women not to meddle with Eccleſiaſtical Offices, of which Baptiſm was one. But ſtill no Prohibition was laid upon Men in Caſes of Neceſſity, nor any Order made for Rebaptizing thoſe who were Irregularly baptized by others.

SECT. 3. Of the Calviniſts, and French, and Dutch Churches.

OUR next Enquiry is into the Senſe and Practice of the French and Dutch Churches, which in many Things took their Meaſures from the Sentiments of Calvin. Now Calvin freely declares his Mind againſt the Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm in any Caſe whatſoever. He thinks there can be no Neceſſity ſufficient to authorize private Men or Women to do the Office of a publick Miniſter. He owns indeed that the contrary Practice had generally prevailed, not only ſeveral Ages before his Time, but, in a manner, from the firſt Beginning of the Church, "Laymen al-"ways baptized [f] in Danger of Death, if "a Miniſter could not be had in due Time." But he thinks the Grounds they went upon were not juſtifiable. He does not peremptorily pronounce ſuch Baptiſms abſolutely Null and Void, but rather the contrary: For, as Archbiſhop Whitgift long ago obſerved [g], againſt his Adverſary Cartwright, Calvin was of Opinion, "That, as among Men, if an Epi-"ſtle be ſent, ſo as the Hand and Seal be "known, it skilleth not who or what man-"ner of Perſon carrieth it; even ſo it is ſuf-"ficient for us to know the Hand and Seal "of the LORD in his Sacraments, by whom-"ſoever they be delivered. Hereby is the "Error of the Donatiſts confuted, who mea-"ſured the Virtue and Worthineſs of the Sa-"crament, by the Worthineſs of the Miniſter. "Such be now-a-days our Anabaptiſts, which "deny us to be rightly baptized, becauſe we "were baptized by wicked and idolatrous "Perſons in the Pope's Church; and there-"fore they furiouſly urge Rebaptization. "Againſt whoſe Folly we ſhall be ſufficiently "defended, if we think we were baptized "not in the Name of any Man, but in the "Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY "GHOST, and therefore Baptiſm not to be "of Man but of GOD, by whomſoever it be "miniſtred." This was the Judgment of Calvin.

HOWEVER Beza his Succeſſor declares poſitively, not only againſt the Lawfulneſs, but the Validity of Baptiſm adminiſtred by private Perſons, eſpecially by Women; which, he thinks, is no more to be regarded, than what any private Man does of his own Head in the Name of a King or Commonwealth; or, than a counterfeit Seal forged by a private Man, and ſet to any Inſtrument in Imitation of the Publick. Yet he allows an eſſential Part of Baptiſm may be changed [h], viz. the Water, and any other Liquor be uſed, rather than Baptiſm ſhould be deferred. Nay, and if Gerhard do not [i] miſrepreſent him (for I have not Beza's Book which he quotes at hand) he ſcruples not to affirm, "That he ſhould eſteem "the Baptiſm of Satan in the Miniſtry to be "lawful." Which are pretty ſtrange Expreſſions to come from a Man, who thought it a Profanation of Baptiſm, and a mere Nullity, to have it adminiſtred in the moſt extreme Neceſſity by any private Chriſtian. How far the French Churches vindicate Beza in thoſe two latter Aſſertions, at preſent is not very material to enquire: But in the former, that is, in the Doctrine of the Invalidity and Nullity of Lay-Baptiſm, it is certain they all joyn with him. At leaſt from the Time of the general Synod of Poictiers 1560, they were all obliged to defend that Doctrine by Subſcription. For in that Synod the Queſtion was put, What was to be done in Caſe a Child [k] had been baptized by a private Perſon? And the Anſwer was given, That the Baptiſm ſhall be declared Null, and the Child ſhall be brought publickly into the Church, there to receive true Baptiſm. This was alſo inſerted into their Book of Diſcipline, to which they all ſwear and ſubſcribe, Chap. 11. Art. 1. "That "Baptiſm adminiſtred by an unordained Per-"ſon is wholly Void and Null." The ſame Reſolution Reſolution was given in many other National Synods, as the Firſt and Second of Rochel 1571 and 1581, the Synod of Gap 1603, and the Synod of Alenſon 1637. Where tho' the King had ſent them a Letter, requiring them to reverſe their Decree, and allow of the Baptiſm of Women and others, according as is done in the Romiſh Church; yet they utterly refuſed to allow of any ſuch Baptiſm, as a Thing formally contrary to their Belief. This then is indiſputably the Practice of the French Church. But the Obſervation a Learned Perſon makes upon it, is not very Accurate: "That we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, "that all the other Reformed Churches, who "obſerve the ſame Diſcipline, are of the ſame "Opinion." For this is all Suppoſition without Proof. For no other Church, that I know of, obſerves the ſame Diſcipline with the French, which is peculiar to the French Church; and it is incongruous then to ſuppoſe that all the other Reformed Churches obſerve the ſame Diſcipline, when perhaps there is not one that does ſo. Neither are they all of the ſame Opinion as to the particular Caſe before us. For the Lutherans, as I have ſhewed, are all of the oppoſite Side, and manage the contrary Part of the Queſtion particularly againſt the Followers of Calvin. Zuinglius alſo agreed with Luther, and the Helvetick Churches did not very much depart from his Opinions. The Palatines alſo, as I ſhall preſently ſhew, thought that Baptiſm adminiſtred by Laymen in a grand Diſſipation of the Church, was not to be repeated. And I believe neither the Waldenſes, nor the Fratres Bohemi have any different Sentiments from the Lutherans upon this Point, though I have not yet had Opportunity to make an exact Enquiry into their Opinions. How then can it be ſuppoſed that all the Reformed Churches beyond Seas are of the ſame Opinion with the French Church? I hope my ingenuous Friend when he ſees this, will find it neceſſary, and becoming his wonted Ingenuity, to retract his unguarded Expreſſion. To ſay, in a word, all that I know of this Matter, the Dutch Church (tho' ſhe does not obſerve the French Diſcipline any more than any other of the Reformed Churches) joins, I think, with the French Church in this Particular, that the Baptiſm of Laymen is altogether Null and Void, and ought to be repeated. For though I have not any of her publick Acts or Declarations to this Purpoſe, yet I find the general Current of her Writers (the Arminians excepted) to run this Way; and I ſuppoſe they ſpeak the Senſe of their Church without any Heſitation. So Rivet, Riſſenius, Ameſius, Vorſtius, and others, with which I think it not neceſſary, in a plain Caſe, to trouble the Reader. But then the Dutch Church is far from being all the Churches of the Reformation: The Zuinglians are a conſiderable Body; the Lutherans are much more ſo; being ſpread far and wide thro' many great and populous Nations: And ſome of them are Epiſcopal Churches too, which allow this Liberty in Caſes extraordinary to Laymen. Whereas by ſome, the Dutch and French Churches are reckoned of no Account, but Unchurched, becauſe they want Epiſcopacy, and conſequently true Ordinations and Chriſtian Sacraments in their Opinion: And then what ſignifies their Teſtimony in ſuch a Caſe, if as ſoon as they have delivered their Evidence about Chriſtian Baptiſm, they ſhall be caſhiered, and poſitively declared to be no Chriſtians? But I proceed to the remaining Parts of the Reformation.

SECT. 4. Of the Palatine Churches.

THE Churches of the Palatinate commonly follow the Doctrine of the Calviniſts, but in one Caſe ſome of their Divines make an Exception, as in a Time of great Perſecution or Diſperſion of the Miniſtry in ſome grand Diſſipation of the Church. Which was a Caſe that actually happened in the Palatinate by the Wars in the laſt Age, and gave Occaſion to Dr. Alting, Profeſſor of Divinity at Heidelberg, to handle this Queſtion among his Problems. The Queſtion he puts in theſe Terms, Whether that Baptiſm be lawful, which is adminiſtred privately by private Perſons, Men or Women? To this he returns Anſwer in two diſtinct Propoſitions: 1. "That Baptiſm adminiſtred privately by "private Perſons, Men or Women, ought not "to be eſteemed lawful Baptiſm." For which he aſſigns the common Reaſons that are uſually alledged in this Caſe. 1. "Becauſe it pro-"ceeds from a falſe Opinion of the abſolute "Neceſſity of Baptiſm to Salvation, as if an "Infant could not be ſaved without it. 2. "Becauſe Baptiſm is not to be adminiſtred "Privately, but Publickly in the Sight of the "whole Church, as being a Part of the Pub-"lick Miniſtry, and to avoid the Magical "Ceremonies and Superſtitions of the Papiſts. "3. Becauſe Baptiſm belongs not to Private "Men, but to thoſe who are called to the "Miniſtry of the Word. Which two Things "are joined together by CHRIST in the "Words of Inſtitution, Mat. xxviii. 19. 4. "Becauſe Women are expreſly and by Name "excluded from all Miniſtry of the Word and "Sacraments, 1 Cor. xiv. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 12." But notwithſtanding the Illegality of ſuch Baptiſm, he concludes in a 2d Propoſition againſt the Repetition of it in Caſe of a Diſſipation of the [l] Church. "Baptiſm, ſays "he, adminiſtred by Private Men in a grand "Diſper-

" That it be adminiſtred according to CHRIST's " baptized in Water, in the Name of the " FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST.

" 2. That this be done in a Diſſipation of " where throughout the Palatinate: For in

" ſuch a State of the Church GOD par" dons many Things, which in a well-or" dered Church it would not be right and " proper to admit of. Circumciſion, no doubt,
" was adminiſtred with many Faults and Cor-" ruptions, whilſt Religion itſelf was ſo much " corrupted among the People of Iſrael; and
" yet we never read that it was reiterated,
" when the People were called to the Pure
" Worſhip of GOD again. So, in like " manner, in the laſt Age, the Baptiſm of " the Papiſts was vitiated and defiled with " many Superſtitions; but yet it was never " repeated by the Reformed Churches, when " they ſeparated themſelves from the Com" munion of the Papacy." Thus far we have ſeen the Judgment of the ſeveral Churches of the Reformation beyond Seas.

SECT. 5. The Practice of the Church of England.

I COME, in the laſt place, to conſider the Practice of the Church of England. Where we may obſerve ſome Difference between the Directions given in the Liturgy, as it ſtood in the Time of King Edward and Queen Elizabeth, and thoſe of the Liturgy in the Time of King James, which received ſome Alteration after the Conference at Hampton-Court. In the old Liturgy, the Rubrick of private Baptiſm [m] ran in theſe Words: " Firſt let them that be preſent call " upon GOD for his Grace, and ſay the " Lord's-Prayer, if the Time will ſuffer: And
" then one of them ſhall Name the Child,
" and dip him in the Water, or pour Water
" upon him, ſaying theſe Words, I baptize thee
" in the Name of the FATHER, and of the SON,
" and of the HOLY GHOST." This Rubrick was couched in ſuch general Terms, without reſtraining Private Baptiſm to a Miniſter, that hence it is certain in Fact, Occaſion was taken frequently both by Laymen and Women to baptize Children Privately, without a Publick Miniſter: Whence aroſe two Queſtions among the Learned Men of thoſe Days: 1. Whether ſuch Baptiſms were legally performed, and according to the Intent and Rules of the Church? And, 2. if they were Illegal and againſt Rule, whether they were alſo wholly Null and Invalid, and, as ſuch, to be repeated again? Upon the firſt Point Learned Men were a little divided; ſome were of Opinion, that the Words of the Rubrick did no ways authorize Lay-Perſons, Men or Women, to baptize in private; but by private Baptiſm only meant Baptiſm adminiſtred in a private Houſe, not publickly in a Church, and this to be given only by the Miniſter, and not by any private Perſon. This was the Senſe of Archbiſhop Whitgift, as is evident both from his Anſwer to the Admonition, and his Defence of it againſt Cartwright. His Words are theſe: " The Book [n] of Common-Prayer
" doth call it private Baptiſm, in reſpect of " the Place, which is a private Houſe, and " not in reſpect of the Miniſter.— For even
" in Neceſſity the Curate may be ſent for,
" or ſome other Miniſter that may ſooner
" be come by." See alſo the Conference at Hampton-Court. Others think the Church, though She did not approve of this Kind of Baptiſm, yet intended to permit and tolerate it for a Time, till Mens Prejudices and wrong Notions, ſettled in them by long Cuſtom, might gently wear off without any Prejudice to the Reformation. So Archbiſhop Abbot gives his Opinion of this Rubrick: " As Moſes, ſays he,
" for a Time [o] ſuffered the Iſraelites, for
" the Hardneſs of their Hearts, to give a " Bill of Divorce in leſſer Cauſes; ſo, for
" the Weakneſs of Men, and Hardneſs of
" ſome, Laymen were ſuffered to baptize.
" Which I take to have been the true Reaſon,
" why any mention was made of private
" Baptiſm, by thoſe who firſt aboliſhed Su-
" perſtition, and compiled the Common-Prayer-
" Book in this Kingdom: Not that they thought
" Baptiſm given by Laymen was altogether
" Legitimate and Right; but they were not " willing

Quod pro certo exiſtimo in cauſa fuiſſe, cur in regno olim noſtro, qui abolita ſuperſtitione, preces noſtras & Liturgiam in certam formam Librumque redegerunt, Privati Baptiſmi mentionem ſubintulerunt; non quod Baptiſmum datum per Laicos, potiſſimum autem per Fœminas, Legitimum eſſe arbitrati fuiſſent; ſed ne primis Evangelii revocandi auſpiciis, indoctam & inſciam multitudinem a vera Pietate deterrerent, illud ingerendo, quod imbibitæ per multos annos opinioni expreſſe adeo adverſaretur.—— Sed Toleratio & Permiſſio, fas & juſtum eſſe, quod ad tempus toleratur, non concludit.

" willing to deter the ignorant and unlearned " People from the true Religion at the firſt " Dawning of the Reformation, by preſſing " too ſeverely upon them, a Thing which " was ſo directly contrary to the Opinion " which they had for many Years imbibed. " But a Toleration and Permiſſion does not " conclude that to be Right and Juſt which " is only tolerated for a Time." This Difference in Mens Opinions continued to the Time of the Hampton-Court Conference: For there the ſeveral Diſputants expreſſed their Minds variouſly upon it. Archbiſhop Whitgift was ſtill of the ſame Mind, " That the " Adminiſtration of Baptiſm by Women and " Lay-Perſons [p] was not allowed in the " Practice of the Church, but enquired of " by Biſhops in their Viſitations, and cenſured; neither do the Words in the Book " infer any ſuch Meaning". But the King excepted to this, and urged the Words of the Book, that they could not but intend a Permiſſion and Suffering of Women and private Perſons to baptize. The Biſhop of Worceſter, Babington, ſaid, " That the Words were doubtful, and might be preſſed to that Meaning; " but yet it ſeemed by the contrary Practice " of our Church (cenſuring Women in this " Caſe) that the Compilers of the Book did " not ſo intend them, and yet propounded " them ambiguouſly, becauſe otherwiſe, perhaps, the Book would not have then paſſed " in Parliament". Whereunto Bancroft, the Biſhop of London replied, " That thoſe Learned and Reverend Men, who framed the " Book of Common-Prayer, intended not by " ambiguous Terms to deceive any, but did " indeed by thoſe Words intend a Permiſſion " of private Perſons to baptize in Caſe of " Neceſſity, whereof their Letters were Witneſſes;" ſome Parts whereof he then read, and withal declared, that the ſame was agreeable to the Practice of the Primitive Church.

BILSON, [q] the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſpake alſo very learnedly and earneſtly in that Point, affirming, " That the denying of private Perſons in Caſes of Neceſſity to baptize, were to croſs all Antiquity, ſeeing " that it had been the ancient and common " Practice of the Church, when Miniſters at " ſuch Times could not be got; and that it " was alſo a Rule agreed upon by Divines, " that the Miniſter is not of the Eſſence of " the Sacrament." To which his Majeſty anſwered, " Though he be not of the Eſſence of the Sacrament, yet he is of the " Eſſence of the right and lawful Miniſtry of " the Sacrament; taking for his Ground, the " Commiſſion of CHRIST to his Diſciples, " Matth. xxviii. 20. Go Preach and Baptize.

DR. Willet, who wrote his Controverſies whilſt the old Rubrick was in Force, was alſo of Archbiſhop Whitgift's Opinion, " That " neither Laymen or [r] what Calling ſoever, " nor yet Midwives, or any other Women, " ought to be ſuffered in a well-reformed " Church to baptize Infants; neither are they " authorized ſo to do amongſt us".

THIS Difference there was then in Mens Opinions concerning the Senſe of the Rubrick of our Church, as it then ſtood: But yet they all agreed upon the ſecond Point, That whether ſuch Baptiſms were according to Rule or againſt Rule, Permitted or not Permitted, yet they were not abſolutely Null and Void, or as ſuch to be repeated by a lawful Miniſter in order to obtain Salvation. Archbiſhop Whitgift pleads as ſtrongly as any Man for the Validity of ſuch Baptiſms, though he did not believe them to be done according to any Rule, or ſo much as Permiſſion of the Church. In one Place [s] he argues thus againſt Cartwright, who diſliked as well Deacons as Womens Baptizing: " We " read in the Eighth of the Acts that Philip a " Deacon did baptize: We read alſo that " Moſes his Wife did circumciſe. But where " doth this Church of England allow any Woman to baptize, or Deacon to celebrate " the LORD's Supper? And if it did, the " Dignity of the Sacraments do not depend " upon the Man, be he Miniſter or not Miniſter, be he good or evil. Let every one " take heed that they do not uſurp that Authority whereunto they be not called." In another Place [t] ſpeaking again of Sephora's Circumciſion, he ſays, " Moſes at this Time " was extremely ſick, and therefore could not " execute that Office himſelf." And in the Geneva Bible there is this Note: " That it " was extraordinary, for Moſes was ſore ſick, " and GOD even then required it. Sephora " therefore did circumciſe in a Point of Extremity, and not wilfully or of Purpoſe: " And that Circumciſion was a true Circumciſion, though it were not done ordinarily: Even ſo Baptiſm is true Baptiſm, tho' " it be ſometimes miniſtred by ſuch as are " not ordinary Miniſters." A little after [u] he pleads the univerſal Practice of all Churches, Ancient and Modern: " Although, ſays " he, both old and new do not allow that " Laymen ſhould be ſuffered to baptize; " yet there is none of them (ſuch only excepted as err in Rebaptization) that think " the Being of the Sacrament ſo to depend " upon the Miniſter, that it is no Sacra" ment if it be not celebrated by a Miniſter". Here he alledges Tertullian, Ambroſe, Juſtin, Auſtin, Zuinglius, and Calvin himſelf. And then concludes, that if his Adverſaries Doctrine were were true, there had need be ſome general Rebaptization throughout all Chriſtendom, as well of Men, as of Children, for certain it is, that that Sacrament hath been miniſtred to many, by ſuch as be in no Degree of the Miniſtry. He urges farther [w] the famous Example of Athanaſius, and the few that was baptized in Sand inſtead of Water, by a Layman. This latter was rebaptized, but not the former. "This argues, ſays he, that the "Church then made no doubt in reſpect of "of the Perſons that miniſtred this Baptiſm, "but only becauſe there lacked Water.—— "And certainly if the Being of the Sacra"ment depended upon Man in any reſpect, "we were but in a miſerable Caſe: For we "ſhould be always in Doubt, whether we were "rightly baptized or no. But it is moſt true "that the Force and Strength of the Sacra"ment is not in the Man, be he Miniſter "or not Miniſter, be he Good or Evil, but "in GOD himſelf, in his Spirit, in his "free and effectual Operation. This I ſpeak "not to bring Confuſion into the Church: "(For, as I ſaid before, let Men take heed "that they uſurp not an Office, whereunto "they be not called, for GOD will call them "to an Account for ſo doing) but to teach "a Truth, to take a Yoke of Doubtfulneſs "from Mens Conſciences, and to reſiſt an "Error not much differing from Donatiſm and "Anabaptiſm." He finally illuſtrates this Matter [x] from the Example of Preaching: "He that ſpeaketh the Words of Scripture, "and doth interpret them, Preacheth, tho' "he be not thereunto called: And it is "the true Word of GOD he Preacheth, if "he truly interpret; but he intrudeth him"ſelf into a Vocation whereunto he is not "called, and therefore offendeth GOD: "But that doth not derogate from the Word "preached. The ſame Reaſon is of the Ad"miniſtration of the Sacraments: For, as "the Word of GOD is the Word of GOD, "by whomſoever it be preached, Miniſter "or other, ſo is the Sacrament of Baptiſm "true Baptiſm by whomſoever it be cele"brated: The Uſurper of the Office hath to "anſwer for his Intruſion, but the Sacra"ment is not thereby defiled." And a little after [y], "I go not about to prove "that Women may baptize, only I with"ſtand this Error, That the Subſtance and "Being of the Sacraments dependeth up"on the Man in any Reſpect. I ſay, that "Baptiſm miniſtred by Women is true Bap"tiſm, tho' it be not lawful for Women to "baptize; as the Baptiſm alſo miniſtred by "Hereticks is true Baptiſm, tho' they be U"ſurpers of the Office. And I further ſay, "that if the Baptiſm adminiſtred by hereti"cal Miniſters, which be no Members of the "Church, be notwithſtanding good and ef"fectual, I ſee no Cauſe why it ſhould not "be ſo rather, if it be miniſtred by Lay"men which are Members and Parts of the "Church." Mr. Hooker had Occaſion to anſwer Cartwright upon the ſame Subject, and he does it almoſt as copiouſly as the Archbiſhop, but I ſhall only tranſcribe one Paſſage, wherewith he concludes his Diſcourſe upon it. "Laſt "of all, ſays he, whereas [z] general and "full Conſent of the Godly-learned in all "Ages doth make for Validity of Baptiſm, "yea, albeit adminiſtred in private, and even "by Women; which Kind of Baptiſm in Caſe "of Neceſſity, divers Reformed Churches do "both allow and defend; ſome others, which "do not defend, tolerate; Few, in compa"riſon, and they without any juſt Cauſe, do "utterly diſannul and annihilate: Surely, "howſoever through Defect on either Side, "the Sacrament may be without Fruit, as "well in ſome Caſes to him that receiveth, "as to him which giveth it, yet no Diſabi"lity of either Part can ſo far make it fru"ſtrate and without Effect, as to deprive it "of the very Nature of true Baptiſm, having "all Things elſe which the Ordinance of "CHRIST requireth." Whereupon we may conſequently infer, that the Adminiſtration of this Sacrament by private Perſons, be it lawful or unlawful, appeareth not as yet to be merely Void. Archbiſhop Abbot, in his Theological Lecture before the Univerſity of Oxford, largely maintains the ſame Opinion, That ſuch Baptiſms [a] tho' irregularly given, are not to be repeated. His Reaſons are, 1. Becauſe the Perſon of the Miniſter is not of the Eſſence or Being of the Sacrament, but only of the Well-being. The Form of the Sacrament is Baptizing in Water in the Name of the TRINITY. Therefore it is moſt agreeable to the Rules of Piety, to have it done only by a Miniſter; but yet it is done, tho' it be done by another. 2. He argues from the Axiom of the Law, which is, Multa fieri non debent, quæ tamen facta valent; Many Things ought not to be done, which yet are Valid when they are done: As the Marriage of Children againſt the Conſent of their Parents, which is a Thing that ought not to be done, but yet it is Valid when it is done. 3. He argues from the general and perpetual Conſent and Practice of the Church. 4. From the Senſe and Practice of the Church of England, which, for a Time, tolerated ſuch Baptiſms, and left this Direction in the old Rubrick of Private Baptiſm, "Let them not doubt that "the Child ſo baptized, is lawfully and ſuf"ficiently

" tized again." 5. Laſtly, From the Inconveniences that would attend the contrary Practice among the whole Congregation of Chriſtians. For if none but a Prieſt every way qualified without Exception, might in any Caſe baptize, how great a Part of Faithful and Pious Chriſtians would want the Seal of their Chriſtianity? Or who could be certain, that he himſelf was baptized in every reſpect as he ought to be? For one that was never ordained may take upon him the Perſon of a Prieſt. Or perhaps one may take Holy Orders who was never baptized. Or, if he was baptized and ordained, he may be conſecrated by a Biſhop who was no lawful Biſhop, nor had any Power to give Impoſition of Hands to others. Theſe and ſuch-like Doubts both may and often do happen, as Reaſon and Experience teſtify. Whence he concludes, upon the whole Matter, " That Baptiſm is Valid, " tho' given by a Layman or Woman, ha" ving the perpetual Conſent of the Church,
" and not being repugnant to the Truth of
" of the Divine Oracles." This Writer read his Lectures in Oxford in the Year 1597, and about five or ſix Years after there was a Treatiſe publiſhed in the Name of the whole Univerſity of Oxford, wherein the ſame Doctrine is defended. This was the Anſwer to the Millenary Petition. The Title is, The Anſwer of the Univerſity of Oxford to a Petition of ſome Miniſters of the Church of England, deſiring Reformation of certain Ceremonies. Oxon. 1603, Quarto. At Cambridge the ſame Aſſertion was maintained by Whitaker [b], as Dr. Forbes [c] alledges him, who diſlikes his Opinion. And if Archbiſhop Abbot was a competent Judge of the Books then written, there were few or none of the Church of England in thoſe Days that determined otherwiſe. Many were inclined to cenſure Lay-Baptiſm as irregular and unlawful, but they all agreed in this, That it was Valid, and not to be repeated as a mere Nullity, when once it was done. " The pre-
" ſent Times, ſays he, as far as I can judge,
" have not departed [d] from the Determi" nation of their Forefathers, but keep it as " a Depoſitum handed down from them." Cartwright indeed, and his Followers, who affected the French Diſcipline more than they did the Engliſh, went generally the other Way, and declared openly not only againſt the Lawfulneſs, but the Validity of Lay-Baptiſms in any Caſe whatſoever. And therefore they continually declaimed againſt the old Rubrick of Private Baptiſm, and importunately called for an Alteration. This, among other Things, brought on the Conference at Hampton-Court, the Reſult of which was, That the Rubrick ſhould be made a little more plain, by inſerting the Word Lawful Miniſter, inſtead of the general Term, One of them that be preſent, as it was ambiguouſly worded before. This determined the Queſtion about the Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm ſo far, as that it now could not well be thought to be permitted or enjoyned by the Church. But as to the other Queſtion acout the Validity of Lay-Baptiſms when done, the Divines of the Church determined ſtill the ſame Way that they had done before. For tho' ſome Alteration was made in the Rubrick, and the Word Lawful Miniſter inſerted: Yet they thought ſtill no Intimation was given, that private Baptiſms by any other beſide a Lawful Miniſter ſhould be eſteemed abſolutely Null and Invalid; nor any Proviſion made in that Caſe that they ſhould be repeated. Iſaac Caſaubon, who wrote by the Order of King James, and in Defence of him againſt Cardinal Perron, ſome Years after the Conference at Hampton-Court, ſpeaks thus, in the Name of the Church of England: " What
" [e] was heretofore ſaid by Tertullian concern" ing the Primitive Church, that Baptiſm was
" adminiſtred by Biſhops, Prieſts and Dea" cons: And that Laymen alſo, in Caſes of " extreme Neceſſity, might do it; the very " ſame is now obſerved in the Church of " England, ſo far as concerns Biſhops, Preſ-
" byters and Deacons, without tying them
" ſtrictly to any rigid Obſervation of Time or " Place: And for the Baptiſm of Lay-Perſons,
" Men or Women, tho' She forbid it to be " done by her Laws; yet when it is done in
" due Form, She does nor altogether diſal-
" low or reject it, pronouncing it to be Bap-
" tiſm, tho' not lawfully adminiſtred."

KING James aſſerted the ſame in the Hampton-Court Conference: For though he ſo expounded the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, as that it was only neceſſary to be had, where it might be lawfully had, that is, miniſtred by Lawful Miniſters, by whom alone, and by no private Perſon, he thought, it might in any Caſe be adminiſtred; yet he ſaid, he utterly diſliked [f] all Rebaptization, although either Women or Laicks had baptized.

AND indeed he ſhewed his Diſlike upon ſome particular Occaſions: For when one Mr. Crompton had written a Book called, St. Auſtin's Religion, wherein he had aſſerted, " That

" That [g] for a Layman, and much more " for a Woman, to baptize, in Caſe of Ne- " ceſſity, was, in St. Auſtin's Opinion, a par- " donable Sin; though pardonable, yet a Sin, " and the uſurping of another's Office": Dr. Featly tells us, [h] King James, in part, diſ- liked that which Mr. Crompton had delivered. And when he defended himſelf by ſaying, " That in the Conference at Hampton-Court, " Womens Baptizing was utterly condemned; " and whereas before, Women were allowed " to baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity, the new " Rubrick reſtrained Baptiſm to the Lawful " Miniſter": The King excepted to this An- ſwer, and told him, " That in all the ſeve- " ral Impreſſions of the Book of Common- " Prayer, there was nothing ſaid of a Wo- " man's Baptizing, neither to warrant it to " be done, nor to condemn it when it was " done. Neither did St. Auſtin ſimply con- " demn a Layman or Woman Baptizing in " Caſe of Neceſſity, as a Sin, but ſaith, ei- " ther it is no Fault, or a pardonable one." And this, he ſaid, was the Sum of the Re- ſolution at Hampton-Court in this Point, how- ſoever ſome had miſtaken it. By which it plainly appears, what was the Judgment of King James concerning the Senſe and Prac- tice of the Engliſh Church, that though ſhe had given no Authority to Lay-Perſons to baptize, yet neither did ſhe abſolutely con- demn it when it was done, or by any pub- lick Act order it to be repeated. This was the King's Judgment, delivered upon this Occaſion a few Weeks before his Death.

IN the Reign of King Charles the Firſt, one Ambroſe Fiſher wrote a Defence of the Liturgy of the Church of England, Lond. 1630. wherein he maintains the ſame Aſſertion, " That though Laymen were prohibited to " baptize, yet when it was done, their Bap- " tiſm was valid and not to be repeated.

DR. Forbes indeed, that Learned Scotch Profeſſor, ſet himſelf to oppoſe this in a parti- cular Diſſertation among his Hiſtorical Theolo- gical Inſtructions [i], where the Reader may find the whole Strength of the contrary Side. But he goes upon ſuch Principles as cannot poſſibly be maintained by any Engliſh Divine, nor were ever maintained by any ancient Writer; for he argues as much againſt the Lawfulneſs and Validity of Baptiſm admini- ſtred by Deacons, as by Laymen; when yet nothing can be plainer than the Power and Authority which the Church gives them in the Office and Form of their Ordination; for there they are told, " That it appertain- " eth to the Office of a Deacon in the Church, " in the Abſence of the Prieſt, to bap- " tize Infants:" And accordingly, when the Biſhop ſays, Take thou Authority to execute the Office of a Deacon in the Church of GOD com- mitted unto thee, it muſt be underſtood, that, among other Things, the Power and Autho- rity of Baptizing is conferred upon them. But now, if the Baptiſm of Deacons be In- valid, as Dr. Forbes aſſerts, if none but a Prieſt can adminiſter it nor grant Abſolu- tion and Pardon of Sins, that belongs to that Sacrament; then the Church of England has been hitherto miſtaken in conferring Orders upon Deacons, and inveſting them with Au- thority to baptize. But if the Church has Power to authorize Deacons to baptize, then their Baptiſm is not only valid, but autho- rized and authentick too. And that Learn- ed Perſon, and all others who invalidate the Baptiſm of Deacons, upon this Principle, That they want Sacerdotal Powers, are under a great Miſtake, to oppoſe a Practice ſo firm- ly eſtabliſhed in the Conſtitution of the Church of England. However it be, it is certain, there is a manifeſt Oppoſition be- twixt him and the Church upon this Head; and therefore he cannot be ſuppoſed to ſpeak the Senſe of our Church when he invali- dates the Baptiſm of Deacons. Nor does he produce any Rule of the Church to invali- date the Baptiſm of Laymen, but proceeds upon other Grounds, which have been con- ſidered in the foregoing Parts of this Diſ- courſe.

BISHOP Taylor alſo argues for the Invalidi- ty of Laymens Baptiſm [k] in any Caſe wnat- ſoever: But he does not pretend the Church has given any Order to rebaptize ſuch as are unlawfully baptized by Laymen. Nor do I know any Author, till of late, that has pleaded the Authority of the Church for Rebaptization in ſuch Caſes; but the Senſe which was given by Caſaubon and King James has generally paſſed for the Senſe of the Church of England. And indeed if the Church had intended more, it had been eaſy, when ſhe altered her Rubrick, forbidding any but a Lawful Miniſter to baptize, to have inſert- ed a farther Order and Decree, to rebaptize all ſuch as were otherwiſe baptized; as the French Church did, both in her Canons and Book of Diſcipline, becauſe ſhe thought all Baptiſms that were not given by a lawful Mi- niſter, to be abſolutely Null and Void. Which the Church of England having never yet done, it may be preſumed it was not her Senſe to make her Diſcipline ſo Rigorous as that of the French Church, in requiring Rebaptiza- tion. At leaſt Caſaubon and King James, who were very capable of knowing her Senſe, ſo underſtood it, and we do not find many that have been inclined to contradict them. So that, upon the whole, it must be concluded, for any Thing that yet appears to the contrary, that what Casaubon said in the Name of King James, is the present Sense of the Church of England: She forbids Laymen or Women, by her Laws, to baptize; but if it be done in due Form, though she does not approve of it, yet she does not wholly disannul it, or order it to be repeated, as absolutely Null and Void. And whether any Alteration is proper to be made in the Affair, is none of my province to determine: I have performed, as far as I could, the Part of a faithful Historian, to correct the Errors of some and inform the Judgment of others, and leave the rest to be determined in a Lawful Assembly.

AN APPENDIX:

CONTAINING

Some Remarks on the Hiſtorical Part of Mr. Lawrence's Writings, touching the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, his Preliminary Diſcourſe of the various Opinions of the Fathers concerning Rebaptization and Invalid Baptiſm, and his Diſcourſe of Sacerdotal Powers.

WHEN I had almoſt finiſhed the foregoing Diſcourſe, I had Occaſion to look into theſe Writings, as containing ſome Hiſtorical Matters relating to the preſent Subject. I was the more tempted to inſpect them, becauſe the Author pretends to write with great Accuracy, even to a Mathematical Exactneſs. I will not concern myſelf, at preſent, with his Reaſonings, but only his Hiſtory, in which he will pardon me if I friendly ſhew him and the World ſome few Miſtakes, which are neither according to the Rules of Hiſtory, nor the Exactneſs of a Mathematical Method and Way of Writing. In his Diſcourſe of Sacerdotal Powers, Chap. V. p. 120. he has theſe Words: "After the "Council of Nice, the Major Propoſition, "That thoſe whom a Laick baptizeth, are "to be rebaptized, was looked upon ſo true, "that it was the undoubted Principle where- "by the Orthodox confuted the Luciferians; "for thus they argued: Thoſe whom a Laick "baptizeth, are to be rebaptized; but thoſe "whom an Arian Prieſt baptizeth, are not to "be rebaptized: Therefore an Arian Prieſt "is not a Laick. This Argument ſo con- "founded Hilary the Deacon, that he was "forced to deny the Major, which his Ma- "ſter Lucifer had granted before, viz. That "thoſe whom a Laick baptizeth, are to be "rebaptized; and which St. Jerom affirms by "the Authority of the Nicene Council. Hie- "ron. Dial. adver. Lucif. St. Chryſoſtom, Arch- "biſhop of Conſtantinople, An. 398, is expreſs "for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm; and that "in Caſes of Neceſſity it can be no more "adminiſtred by a Laick than the Euchariſt. "Chryſ. Lib. 3. de Sacerd. cap. 5. But all theſe "are Things, ſays he, which can be admini- "ſtred by no other Man living, but by thoſe "Sacred Hands alone, the Hands, I ſay, of "the Prieſt. Theſe are Inſtances for which "I am beholden to the Learned aad Reve- "rend Mr. William Reeve's Notes on the Se- "cond Vol. of the Apol. of Juſtin Martyr. "p. 263, 264." Thus far our Author.

IN which Paragraph there are Abundance of Miſtakes of ſeveral Kinds. The firſt and leaſt is his miſquoting Mr. Reeves his Notes on Juſtin Martyr, inſtead of Vincentius Lirinenſis. 2. He makes Mr. Reeves ſay, what he really does not, That Hilary the Deacon was forced to deny the Major (Propoſition in the Argument) which his Maſter Lucifer had granted before, viz. That thoſe whom a Laick baptizeth, are to be rebaptized; and that St. Jerom affirms this by the Authority of the Nicene Council: Whereas Mr. Reeves ſays expreſly, That Hilary the Deacon did not deny the Major Propoſition, but the Aſſumption, which his Maſter Lucifer had granted; which was, That those whom an Arian Priest baptizeth, are not to be rebaptized; and that it was this Assumption which St. Jerom confirmed by the Authority of the Nicene Council. Mr. Lawrence did not here distinguish between a Major and a Minor Proposition, but unluckily changes Mr. Reeves's Terms, and puts Major instead of Assumption, which stands for a Minor Proposition only in all Logicks whatsoever. We are not like to find, I am afraid, great Exactness in History, when it is to be fetched from ancient Greek and Latin Authors, by a Person who could make so unhappy a Mistake only in transcribing an English Author. Let us next Examine, 3dly, What Errors he commits in Point of ancient History, by Virtue of this Mistake: He makes Lucifer hereby a Witness for the Invalidity of Laymens Baptism, by making him say, That those whom a Laick baptizeth, are to be rebaptized: Which Proposition, when he produces Lucifer's plain Testimony for it, shall have my Assent, and not before. 4. He makes St. Jerom affirm universally the same Thing: And yet it is as plain as Words can make it, that St. Jerom allowed Laymen to give Baptism in Cases of Necessity, as I have proved before from that very Dialogue against the Luciferians, upon which he grounds the Contrary Assertion. 5. He makes St. Jerom assert that pretended Proposition upon the Authority of the Nicene Council: And yet neither is there any such Canon in the Nicene Council, nor did ever St. Jerom assert there was, but only a Canon about allowing some Heretical Bishops and Priests to enjoy the Honour of their Places, and not be degraded to Laymen, upon their Return to the Unity of the Catholick Church. 6. He says, St. Chrysostom is express for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptism; and that in Cases of Necessity it can be no more administred by a Laick, than the Eucharist: But St. Chrysostom neither expressly mentions the Case of Necessity, nor Lay-Baptism, nor the Invalidity of it; but only says, Baptism is not administred by any but the Hands of a Priest: Which, if it were to be taken in the strictest Sense, to exclude all others besides Priests in Cases of extreme Necessity, it would exclude Deacons as well as Laymen; unless this Author will say, that Deacons are Priests, or shew that St. Chrysostom thought them to be so, which I am sure he did not, and yet he allowed them to baptize in Cases of Necessity, when a Priest could not be had, as I have fully proved before, against Dr. Forbes, in Answer to this very Objection. But if such Men as Dr. Forbes, and Mr. Reeves, who was this Author's Guide, were under some Mistake in this Matter, I do not wonder a less skilful Writer should readily follow them: But for his other Mistakes, they are so gross and palpable, that I think he is bound in Justice, both to Mr. Reeves and the World, ingenuously to acknowledge his Misrepresentation, and correct his Errors, as he has modestly promised to do, when any one modestly better informs him.

THE next Thing I shall take notice of is, his Treatment of St. Basil, in whose Mouth he puts an Argument, and makes him contradict himself upon it. He says, p. 119. St. Basil thus argues. "Those whom a Laick "baptizeth, are to be rebaptized: But those "whom an Heretick or Schismatick baptizeth, "a Laick baptizeth: Therefore such are to be "rebaptized. This Argument he made use "of to prove, that Heretical and Schismati-"cal Baptisms were Null and Void; and he "reckoned them so, because he thought them "of the same Nature as Lay-Baptisms in those "Days. His Major Proposition, That those "whom a Laick baptizeth are to be rebap-"tized, was not denyed; he had no Oppos-"ers to defend such Baptisms. All the Op-"position he met with, was, that they de-"nyed his Minor, that those whom an He-"retick or Schismatick baptizeth, a Laick "baptizeth. ---- And therefore though they "did not deny but Lay-Baptism was Null "and Void; yet they affirmed Heretical and "Schismatical Baptisms to be Good, because "they were not Lay-Baptisms; and to this "St. Basil consented. Basil. Canon. Ep. ad Am-"philoch. can. 1.

BUT did St. Basil consent, that Hereticks and Schismaticks were Laymen and not Laymen at the same time? Did he consent that their Baptism was Null and Void, and yet Good too notwithstanding? Either St. Basil was very weak so to contradict himself, or else our Author was very weak to father such a Contradiction upon him. But perhaps he had it from Mr. Reeves, to whom he professes himself beholden for all these Instances. No indeed, it is an Improvement upon Mr. Reeves, I think; but, if otherwise, Mr. Reeves must answer for himself. In the mean time I will answer our Author. St. Basil does not bring that as his own Argument, but only relates it as the Argument of St. Cyprian and Firmilian: But our Author does not distinguish between a Man's acting the Part of an Historian, and that of a Logician: He might as well say, all the Arguments I have related in this Book are my own, because I have related so many Mens Arguments and Opinions upon the present Subject. If he had looked into St. Basil himself, he might have seen this. But was not St. Basil of Opinion, That Lay-Baptisms and Heretical Baptisms were Null and Void? Yes. But he did not then say, they were Good and Valid too: But only he was so modest, as not to condemn or break Communion with those Churches, who differed both in Opinion and Practice from him. And therefore, because there were other Churches in Asia, who allowed of the Baptism of Schismaticks as Valid, he advises those who were Members of those Churches, to comply with the Custom and Practice of their respective Churches.

ἐσω δεκτέον. Let it be received. But he does not ſay the ſame of Hereticks, but thinks every Church ought to repeat their Baptiſm. For he makes a great Diſtinction between the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; and ſo our Author ſhould have diſtinguiſhed, if he would rightly have repreſented St. Baſil's Opinion. For tho', in his own private Judgment, he was for Rebaptizing both of them, yet he makes ſome Allowance for Schiſmaticks, who kept the Faith, which he does not for Hereticks who deſtroyed it. And therefore admits of a Compliance in other Churches, in the one Caſe, which he does by no means allow in the other. I have produced the Paſſage at large in Chap. I. Sect. 20. To which the Reader may have Recourſe.

I COME next to his Preliminary Diſcourſe of the various Opinions of the Fathers concerning Rebaptization and Invalid Baptiſms. Here I obſerve in general, that he delivers ancient Hiſtory very Magiſterially, without referring his Reader to any particular Places in his Authors, whereby to judge of the Truth of his Aſſertions. Thus he ſays, p. 2. That the Stephanians, among other Arguments which they muſtered up for the Validity of Heretical Baptiſms, uſed this for one: "That "all Catechumens, who died unbaptized, were "not therefore Damned; much leſs thoſe "who had received Baptiſm, though from "Hereticks and Schiſmaticks." I do not Diſpute his Aſſertion about the Catechumens, but deſire him only to inform the World in what Writing of the Stephanians, as he calls them, he finds this maintained, That they who had received Baptiſm from Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, were in a State of Salvation. And when he alledges his Author, we ſhall be better able to judge of the Truth of the Aſſertion.

Page 10. HE tells us, Athanaſius, in the Fourth Century, rejected the Baptiſm of Hereticks. By which he would inſinuate, that Athanaſius was of Cyprian's Opinion, and rejected the Baptiſm of all Hereticks in general. But he refers his Reader to no Place, and he is left to look it in two or three large Volumes of Athanaſius's Works: Yet I ſuppoſe he means his third Oration againſt the Arians. Tom. I. p. 413. where he diſputes againſt the Arians Baptiſm, and rejects it as Invalid, becauſe they rejected the Fundamental Doctrine of the TRINITY, tho' they kept to the Form of Baptizing uſed in the Church. But this is not ſimply to reject the Baptiſm of Hereticks; for he allowed the Baptiſm of all others, as I have ſhewed in the foregoing Diſcourſe, Chap. I. Sect. 20.

IN the ſame Page he brings the Teſtimony of Pacianus, without referring the Reader to any Place where to find it, and it is ſcarce worth his while to enquire after it: For it is alledged to no manner of Purpoſe: For what if Pacianus ſays, "That Baptiſm pu-"rifies from Sins, and Unction brings down "the Holy SPIRIT; and both the one and "the other are applied by the Hand and "the Mouth of the Biſhop?" What does this Teſtimony teſtify concerning Rebaptization or Invalid Baptiſm? Either it ſignifies nothing at all, or elſe it ſignifies more than our Author would have it ſignify, that no Baptiſm is Valid, no more than Confirmation, that is not applied by the Hand and Mouth of a Biſhop: For this would deſtroy all Sacerdotal Powers, and make the Baptiſm of Prieſts Invalid, as well as that of Deacons and Laymen.

Pag. 11. In the next Place he produces Optatus, but ſtill keeps his Reader in the dark, and leaves him to read over ſeven Books againſt Parmenian, to find a ſingle Paſſage in that Author, who ſeems to think, he ſays, "That we ought to rebaptize thoſe who were "baptized by Hereticks; but does not make "the ſame Determination concerning thoſe "who were baptized by Schiſmaticks." But if our Author had dealt kindly by his Reader, he ſhould have referred him to the fifth Book of Optatus, p. 85. where he might have found, without any Trouble, that it was not the Baptiſm of all Hereticks that he rejected, but only ſuch as did not baptize into the Faith of the Holy TRINITY: For Optatus was of the ſame Opinion with Athanaſius, and ſays, If Men were baptized in the Faith of the TRINITY, their Baptiſm was not repeated when they came over to the Catholick Church. I have produced the Paſſage at large above, and need not here repeat it.

HIS Reflections on the Council of Eliberis, which follow immediately after, are juſt enough: That it was but a particular Council; and that it authorized only ſome Laymen to baptize, but not all: And thoſe not Anti-Epiſcopal, but in Subjection to their Biſhops.

BUT his next Reflections on the firſt Council of Arles, p. 12. are not ſo Juſt and Accurate. For he diminiſhes the Authority of this Council, by following the faulty Subſcriptions, which make but Thirty-three Biſhops to have been preſent at it. Whereas it was a Plenary Council of the whole Weſtern Church, as St. Auſtin calls it, conſiſting of Two-hundred Biſhops, as Baronius, Schelſtrate, Pagi, and moſt other Learned Criticks, except Valeſius, readily allow. He ſays farther, p. 13. "That the ancient Hereticks and "Schiſmaticks, whoſe Baptiſms that Council "allowed, had commonly received Ordina-"tion from the Hands of ſome Catholick Bi-"ſhop or other; from whence he concludes, "that thoſe Baptiſms were not Anti-epiſco-"pal." Which are both miſtaken Aſſertions. For many of the Hereſies and Schiſms of thoſe Times had a long Succeſſion of falſe Biſhops of their own, who were not ordained by Catholick Biſhops, as the Novatians, Quartadecimans, decimans, and ſeveral others, who certainly did not act by any Authority of the Catholick Church, whilſt they were out of the Holy Catholick Church, and in manifeſt Oppoſition to it. And tho' they had all been ordained by Catholick Biſhops, yet they were no longer authorized to miniſter by the Catholick Church, than they continued in the Church: But as ſoon as they fell into Hereſies and Schiſms, they were Anti-epiſcopal, properly ſpeaking, till they returned to the Centre of Unity in the Church again. If this Author thinks otherwiſe, let him ſpeak his Mind plainly and roundly upon it. In the mean time I will venture to aſſert, That Anti-epiſcopal Baptiſms were in ſome Senſe, the Subject of that Council, for as much as Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſms were the Subject of it.

Page 13. HE ſays, "After the Council of "Nice, it was a prevailing Principle, That "thoſe whom a Laick baptized were to be re-"baptized; and that even Lucifer himſelf grant-"ed this Propoſition to be true." But I have already accounted with this Author for his many and great Miſtakes about this Matter, and therefore ſhall not here repeat them.

Page 16. HE alledges the Eighth Canon of the Second Council of Carthage, in theſe Words: "If a Prieſt Excommunicated by "his own Biſhop, undertake to offer up the "Sacrifices in private, and to ſet up Altar "againſt Altar, thereby making a Schiſm, he "ought to be Anathematized; becauſe there is "but one Church, one Faith, and one Baptiſm. "His Remark upon this Canon is, That this "one Baptiſm cannot be ſuppoſed to be out "of this one Church, and therefore is only "in it." But this Remark is made with great Faintneſs and Ambiguity. Why did he not ſpeak plainly, and ſay, All ſuch Baptiſms are utterly Void, Null, and Invalid, and as ſuch to be repeated again? But perhaps he was ſenſible, this was too plain againſt the Mind of the Council, which did not intend to declare ſuch Baptiſms abſolutely Invalid and Void; but only unlawfully given by Perſons who had no Authority to give them in ſuch a Capacity, whilſt they continued in ſuch a Schiſmatical Oppoſition to their Biſhop, tho' they had otherwiſe received a lawful Ordination from him. Which may convince our Author, if he will be convinced, that all unauthorized and unlawful Baptiſms are not preſently Invalid: For a Prieſt's Baptiſm, if it be given in ſuch Circumſtances as the Council ſuppoſes, is unauthorized and unlawful, as well as that of a Layman, and yet not to be repeated, when the Party ſo baptized returns to the Church again. And it may convince him farther, that theſe Terms, Unauthorized-Baptiſm, Invalid-Baptiſm, and Lay-Baptiſm, are Terms of different Import, tho' they are uſually confounded together and made equivalent by our Author, which is the πρῶτον ψεῦδος, or the reigning Error that runs thro' his whole Book. For, Pag. 24. He repeats this again, "That the "Church has not in any general Council "made any Determination about Unauthori-"zed and Anti-Epiſcopal Baptiſms:" As if either the Baptiſms of Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or Excommunicated Prieſts were not Unauthorized, or the Councils of Nice, or Arles, or Carthage laſt mentioned had made no Decree about them.

Page 26. "HE ſays, his Province is only "confined to Lay, i. e. Unauthorized Bap-"tiſm, ſuch as is performed by Perſons who "never were Authorized for that Purpoſe. "—— And the Adverſary can bring forth, "in their behalf, not one Council, either Ge-"neral or Provincial, till the corrupt ones "of the Church of Rome." Here he again confounds Lay-Baptiſms and Unauthorized-Baptiſms together. As if all Lay-Baptiſms were ſimply Unauthorized, when they ſometimes had the Authority of Biſhops and Canons to Authorize them in certain Caſes. Or as if there could be no Unauthorized Baptiſms but meer Lay-Baptiſms; when yet it is ſo plain, that the Baptiſms of Excommunicated Prieſts are Unauthorized, as well as thoſe of meer Laymen. And how can it be ſaid, with Truth, that no Council can be produced for the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm, or Unauthorized Baptiſm, when he himſelf owns, that the Council of Eliberis Authorized the one, and ſo many Councils confirmed the Validity of the other.

Pag. 28. He alledges Tertullian in theſe Words: "Baptiſm is reſerved to the Biſhop: Here-"ticks are not able to give it, becauſe they "have it not; and therefore it is that we "have a Rule to rebaptize them." Theſe few Words are tacked together from two or three different Places of Tertullian, and therefore he would have done well to have pointed out the diſtinct Books and Chapters to his Readers: Which I have done to his Hand in the foregoing Diſcourſe: The Places are, Tertul. de Bapt. c. 15. and 17. and de Pudicit. c. 19. Where he talks of a Rule indeed to baptize Hereticks again; but that Rule was not what our Author ſays it was, the Law and Practice of the Church, but the Præceptum Domini in Evangelio, the Law of CHRIST and the Apoſtles, as Tertullian himſelf words it, which is the Rule upon which he founded Rebaptization of Hereticks, however our Author came to miſtake it. In the Book de Pudicitia, I own he ſpeaks of the Practice of Rebaptizing Hereticks as Heathens; but the Rule by which he juſtifies this Parctice, is not the Rule of the Church, but the Rule of CHRIST. Yet our Author here could eaſily diſcern when it was for his Turn, that Tertullian talked talked of a Rule, and that that Rule must needs be the Law and Rule of the Church distinct from the Law of CHRIST. But when Tertullian speaks of Laymens having a Licence to baptize in Cases of Necessity, then, in our Author's Opinion, he vents strange odd Notions, his own private Opinions, and not the Churches Custom and Allowance: Though any Unprejudiced Person, that will compare the Places together, will find, that he makes the one the Practice of the Church as well as the other, and founds them both equally upon the Law of CHRIST, or the Rule of the Gospel, which our Author mistook for a Canon of the Church.

Pag. 29. He says, the Council of Eliberis, in the Fourth Century, made a Rule for the Allowance of Lay-Baptism: And yet a little before we heard him say, pag. 26. That Lay-Baptism was the same as Unauthorized Baptism, and that there was not so much as a Provincial Council to be produced in its behalf, till the corrupt ones of Rome.

IN the same Page he insists again upon the Testimonies of St. Basil, St. Chrysostom, and the Catholicks disputing with the Luciferians in the same Century, as more than a Ballance against Tertullian's private Opinion. But why did he not think the Council of Eliberis more than a Ballance against them? who if they were indeed against the Opinion of Tertullian, a private Person, they were also as much against the Publick Opinion of the Council of Eliberis. But, in truth, the greater Part of these pretended Testimonies are neither against Tertullian, nor the Council of Eliberis; as I have particularly noted of St. Chrysostom and St. Jerom, more than once in the foregoing Dissertation. But because our Author talks so frequently and so much of the Catholicks (in the Plural) disputing with the Luciferians in the Fourth Century, I desire him to acquaint us, what Authors he has read against the Luciferians, besides St. Jerom, I will be one of those that will give him Thanks for his Information.

BUT his main Testimony is still behind, and yet it is so little to the purpose, that I had once almost a Mind to have overlooked it. He tells us, Pag. 29. That Ignatius the Glorious Martyr, who lived in the Days of the Apostles, in his Epistle to the Smyrneans, says, "Let that Sacrament be judged Effectual and Firm which is dispensed by the "Bishop, or him to whom the Bishop has "committed it. It is not lawful, without the "Bishop, either to baptize or celebrate the "Offices; but what he approves of, according to the good Pleasure of GOD, that "is Firm and Safe, and so we do every "Thing securely." Our Author thinks this exactly agreeable to the Doctrine of St. Cyprian, and so he would deduce the Rebaptization of Hereticks and Schismaticks from the Apostles. But does Ignatius any where say, That Heretical and Schismatical Baptisms were simply Invalid and to be repeated? He says, indeed, it is Unlawful, and not Safe to baptize in Opposition to the Bishops Authority and Order. And so I believe any Man will say, that has a due Respect for the Authority of the Episcopal Function. But does it hence follow, that all Baptisms are absolutely Invalid and Void, that a Schismatical Presbyter gives in Opposition to his Bishop? It is unsafe, doubtless, either for Minister or People, the Baptizer or the baptized, to be concerned in such Baptisms: They cannot with a safe Conscience, and without Sin, if Schism be a Sin, be either Agent or Patient in such Administrations; because they are acting in Contempt and Defiance of that lawful Authority which GOD has appointed in his Church. But the Way to correct these Errors, is not to disannul the Sacrament by repeating it again, but to repent of the Unlawful Manner of Giving or Receiving it, in Opposition to Lawful Authority and the established Rules of the Church. But our Author, as I observed, always confounds Unauthorized Baptism and Invalid Baptism together; and if an Act be Sinful, Irregular, or Illegal in the Administrator, he presently concludes it must be Null and Void in the Receiver. Which is his great Mistake in his whole Book, and particularly in interpreting this Passage of Ignatius.

I SHALL make but one Remark more upon our Author's Preliminary Discourse, which is, in relation to his Opinion of the Invalidity of Heretical and Schismatical Baptisms, which he thus expresses, Pag. 27. and 28. "To "return once more to the Dispute in St. Cyprian's Time, and the Decrees then and since "made about it, I cannot dissemble my "Thoughts, that the Arguments and Determinations against his Doctrine and Practice, have nothing of that Reason and Solidity which an Inquisitive Person might "justly expect in them: And that, on the "contrary, St. Cyprian and his Collegues defend their Assertion, That the Baptisms of "Hereticks and Schismaticks are Invalid, "with so much Judgment and Cogency of "Argument, founded upon the Topick of "such Hereticks and Schismaticks being destitute of Holy Orders while they were out "of the Church of CHRIST, that I wonder how it could possibly have come to "pass, that their Doctrine should be afterwards exploded; especially when I consider, that what they taught and practised "herein, was confirmed by numerous Councils "in those earlier Days, wherein Truth was "more prevalent than afterwards; and Tertullian long before affirmed the same Thing. "Nay, he says, Ignatius maintained the very "same Doctrine with Cyprian; and he thinks, "nothing could have given Credit and Reputation to the contrary Opinion, but the "monstrous Increase of Heresy and Schism "afterwards

" afterwards, which, together with many " other Cauſes concurring, brought into the " Church of Rome and the reſt of the We- " ſtern Churches, whom ſhe had ſubjected to " her Vaſſalage, abundance of Damnable " Doctrines and Practices, in ſo much that " at laſt there was but little of ſolid and " ſubſtantial Religion to be found in the " Churches of her Communion."

Now let us put theſe Things together, and view them narrowly, and ſee what will be the Conſequence. The Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks are Invalid? The Baptiſms of the Church of Rome are the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; or, in his Words, the Baptiſms of a Church that is overrun with abundance of Damnable Doctrines and Practices, and has but little of ſolid or ſubſtantial Religion to be found in her Communion: Therefore the Baptiſms of the Church of Rome are Invalid. Now if the Baptiſms of the Church of Rome be Invalid, upon this Principle, That the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks are Invalid; What then becomes of the Validity of the Baptiſms of the Church of England, and all other Churches of the Reformation? Had they not all their Baptiſm from the Heretical Church of Rome, which, upon our Author's Principles, could not give Valid Baptiſm, much leſs the Power of Baptizing to others? Is not this as plain as any Demonſtration in Euclid, or any one Syllable of an Argument in our Author's Book, That if the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks be Invalid; and the Church of Rome be an Heretical or Schiſmatical Church, and the Church of England have her Baptiſms Originally from that Church and no other; that then the Conſequence muſt be, that all the Baptiſms of the Church of England are Invalid, and that there is no true Baptiſm adminiſtred by her Prieſts any more than by others? For they are all but pretended Prieſts, as having received their Baptiſm and Ordination originally from Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who had no Power to miniſter any other Sacraments or Orders but ſuch as are Invalid. I believe our Author did not ſee the Conſequence of this Argument, which Unbaptizes all the Church of England at once, and himſelf among the reſt, though he has been twice baptized or waſhed already. I know indeed, he declares (p. 31.) " That it is not his Deſign to med- " dle with the Cyprianick Diſpute in his " Diſcourſe; his Buſineſs is not to enquire, " whether thoſe who were once duly Au- " thorized, and afterwards fall into Hereſy " or Schiſm, and thereby ſeparate themſelves, " or are excluded from the Church, can ad- " miniſter Valid Sacraments and Ordinations " during this their Separation: No, he will " not ſo much as touch upon this at all, be- " cauſe he does not think his Caſe affected " by it." But he has already touched upon it, and freely declared his Opinion about it: And I have ſhewed him, what he did not think, that his Caſe is wonderfully affected by it; and not only his Caſe, but the Caſe of all the Church of England, and all the Churches of the Reformation; which are all Unbaptized, and there is neither a Prieſt, nor a Chriſtian among them, if the Principle he advances ſtands good, That the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks is utterly Invalid: And he muſt ſeek for a Prieſt of another kind to baptize him a third Time with Valid Baptiſm, which he cannot have in the Church of England, nor the Church of Rome, nor the Churches of the Reformation, who all derive their Invalid Baptiſm from one and the ſame Original: He muſt travel then as far as Conſtantinople for a Prieſt of the Greek Church to do it: And when he comes there, he will, perhaps, find the ſame Difficulties in in that Church, as his Principle makes in the reſt of the European Churches nearer at hand. For in that Church, there may be ſome Queſtion, whether there be not ſome Heretical or Schiſmatical Doctrines maintained? She has ſome of the Romiſh Errors; and, to uſe an Expreſſion of his, p. 30. Too too much of her Leaven ſtill " remaining in her; One of her ve- " ry great and peculiar Corruptions (as our " Author ſtiles it) in the Matter of Lay-Bap- " tiſm and Midwives Baptiſm," is ſtill eſpouſed by that whole Church, as I have proved unanſwerably againſt my learned Friend, in the ſecond Chapter of the foregoing Diſſertation. To what Church then this Gentleman will apply himſelf for Valid Baptiſm, I am at a loſs to conſider; and more at a loſs to think by whom all the reſt of Chriſtendom are to be rebaptized. But perhaps he will call this a Tragical Repreſentation; as indeed it is, but it is a true one: He will complain, it may be, that I drive his Principle farther than he intended, and charge it with Conſequences which he never thought of. I would charitably hope ſo indeed: But then I muſt ſay farther, it is proper to ſhew him the dangerous Conſequences of his Opinion, in Order to convince him of the Unreaſonableneſs and Abſurdity of it. But perhaps he will ſay, he neither believes Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm to be Invalid, nor the Church of Rome to be that Heretical and Schiſmatical Church, which I have repreſented from his Character and Picture of her. The Reader will beſt judge of theſe Things from his own Words before recited. But if he denies theſe to be his Opinions, I, for my Part, will believe him; only beſeeching him to expreſs his Mind a little more intelligibly upon ſuch Points for the future. And then I would ask him one Queſtion more: If the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks be Valid, upon what Foot it is ſo? Is it becauſe they have an equal Authority and Commiſſion to baptize, as well as Catholick Prieſts? If ſo, whence is their Authority and Commiſſion derived? Is it from the Catholick Biſhops of the the Church? But ſure they never intend to authorize Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to baptize, or perform any other Eccleſiaſtical Offices, which belong to the Function of the Catholick Clergy. Or if they ordain Men to theſe Offices, who, as ſoon as they are ordained, turn Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and bid Defiance to the Church, and ſet up ſeparate Meetings and Conventicles to perform thoſe Offices, in direct Oppoſition to the Church and all her Orders; can it enter into any Mans Head to think, that they do all theſe by the Authority of the Biſhops or the Church, who firſt gave them Ordination, when they are done ſo manifeſtly in Contempt of all Authority, and perhaps with a profeſſed Deſign to affront Authority, and act Independently of themſelves, without any Regard to the juſt Rules of Catholick Communion? No, certainly, they forfeit all Legal Authority to perform ſuch Offices, at leaſt, after the Church pronounces a formal Sentence and Cenſure upon them. Now then the Queſtion will be, whether any ſuch Offices, and particularly Baptiſm, thus performed in Contempt of Authority, can be ſaid to be Valid or not? That it is not Authoritatively performed is very plain: But does the Thing done remain Valid, or is it therefore abſolutely Null and Void, becauſe the Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſt had not the Authority of the Biſhops of the Orthodox Church to perform it? If it be Valid, then there may be a Valid Baptiſm where the Adminiſtrator is not Legally Authorized to perform it. If it be ſimply Invalid, and abſolutely Null and Void, becauſe adminiſtred by any Heretical or Schiſmatical Prieſt, then all the Difficulties return upon us that I have mentioned before, ſince our Baptiſms originally deſcend from the Heretical and Schiſmatical Church of Rome: Which, if our Author thinks fit to deny to be an Heretical or Schiſmatical Church, I will undertake to ſhew it upon the general Principles of the Reformation. When theſe Things are duly conſidered, they may perhaps have their proper Influence upon this Writer: At leaſt I cannot but think that Venerable Body, who are competent Judges in this Matter, will make no new Decree, that will either reflect upon the general Practice of the Church, or make it ſo extremely difficult to defend the Baptiſms of the Church of England, as it needs muſt be upon the Principles of this Author, who aſſerts the Nullity of Heretical Baptiſms, as well as thoſe of Laymen, though the Church of England has no Rule for Rebaptizing either; and by her conſtant Practice, which, in difficult Caſes, is the beſt Interpreter of Rules, has allowed the Validity of both of them, as has been fully made out in the foregoing Diſcourſe. I ſhall add no more but the handſom Rebuke, which St. Jerom gave Hilary the Deacon, the Deucalion Orbis, as he ſtiles him, who was for Rebaptizing all that had been baptized by Hereticks, when they came over to the Unity of the Catholick Church: Si Hæretici baptiſma non habent, & ideo rebaptizandi ab Eccleſia ſunt, quia in Eccleſia non fuerunt: ipſe quoque Hilarius non eſt Chriſtianus; in ea quippe Eccleſia baptizatus eſt, quæ ſemper ab Hæreticis baptiſmum recepit. Hieron. Dial. contra Lucifer. cap. 9.

Our Author, I am told, underſtands Latin, and therefore I will leave him to tranſlate this, and make the Application.

RIGHT HONOURABLE

JONATHAN,

LORD BISHOP of Winchester,

AND

PRELATE of the Most Noble Order of the GARTER.

My LORD,

I CANNOT but take this Opportunity to make my Publick Acknowledgments for the late Favour your Lordship has been pleas'd to bestow upon me, as an Encouragement to proceed in my Laborious Work of Reducing the Antiquities of the Church into one Body or View. It is no small Satisfaction to me that I have hitherto proceeded with your Lordship's Approbation, not excepting my last Dissertation upon the Judgment and Practice of the Church in reference to the Baptism of Laymen, with which some (who can bear no Contradiction) have been pleased, without Reason, to be offended; to whom, I hope, I have given abundant Satisfaction in the present Discourse. I did not, I confess, write the former Part of this Scholastical History by your Lordship's particular Direction or Command (tho' some have done me so great an Honour Honour as to ſay ſo; and I ſhall ever be proud of doing any thing that is Good by the Direction and Command of my Superiors;) your Lordſhip did not ſo much as know what Subject I was upon, till it was finiſhed; nor did I perfectly know your Lordſhip's Sentiments upon the Point, till You were pleaſed to honour me with a Letter of Thanks for my Book, and tell me that You exceedingly approved of it; and particularly that Part of it which treats of the Deficiency of Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſms, and of the Obligation thoſe, who are ſo baptized, lie under to return to the Unity of the Church, in order to have the Defects of their Baptiſm ſupplied by Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation; which was the uſual Way of ſupplying ſuch Defects, according to the General Rule and Practice of the Ancient Church. Your Lordſhip was pleaſed alſo to acquaint me (with what I did not underſtand before) that all the Biſhops of both Provinces were unanimouſly of the ſame Opinion which I had defended, and thought there were other Ways of ſupplying a faulty Baptiſm, than by Rebaptization, if given in due Form by a Layman. And tho' Your Lordſhip did not conſent to ſubſcribe the Reſolution which was then intended to be drawn up, yet it was not becauſe you diſſented from them in the main of the Determination, but becauſe you thought it more proper to have added the Words, In Caſes of Neceſſity, which are Caſes leſs liable to Exception, whoſe Deficiency whatever it be, may moſt certainly be rectified by Confirmation. And ſo far both the Rules and Practice of the Church of England, for theſe laſt Two hundred Years, are clear: For we have neither Order nor Example to encourage Rebaptization in any ſuch Caſe, no not after the Rubrick had confined the Miniſtration of Baptiſm wholly to the Hands of a Lawful Miniſter. For ſtill no Rule was made, that ſuch as were not baptized by a Lawful Miniſter ſhould be rebaptized; but they were required to receive the Biſhop's Confirmation, and then were admitted to the Euchariſt, and the Privilege of Chriſtian Burial, neither of which are allowed to unbaptized Perſons. Notwithſtanding all this, I am charged by ſome, as a Falſe and Self-intereſted Writer; as one that is Writing againſt the true Church of England; as an Encourager of Diſſenters; becauſe I would not ſuffer certain Perſons to repreſent the Church juſt as they pleaſed, and fix upon Her ſuch Principles and Practices as are peculiar to the Diſſenters only; becauſe I would not joyn with them in advancing Cartwright's Notions about Rebaptization, againſt the Church of England, and revile and undervalue all the Eminent Biſhops and Doctors of the Church that have wrote heretofore in Her Defence, and Learnedly defended Her Conſtitution; becauſe I would not Wiredraw the Writers of the Primitive Church, and repreſent them as favourable to this Novel Hypotheſis, when without the greateſt Injuſtice to Them, and the World, and Myſelf, I could not do it; becauſe I would not allow all the Hereticks and Schiſmaticks of the Primitive Church, to be as true Prieſts of GOD, and inveſted with as ample Commiſſion, Power, and Authority to baptize, when they were actually Degraded, and removed from all Sacerdotal Offices by the Diſcipline of the Church, as thoſe Catholick Prieſts who never were under any ſuch Cenſure. And yet upon this laſt Point (upon which the whole Controverſy turns, and the whole Diſcipline of the Church depends) the Adverſaries are ſtrangely divided. One of them thinks, Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts are ſafe under the Protection of Indelible Character; that is, they can never be wholly diveſted of their Sacerdotal Commiſſion, let the Church uſe what Authority She can or will, to take it from them; their indelible Character will ſtill preſerve their Sacerdotal Authority entire to them, and no Power on Earth can extend ſo far as to deprive them of the Internal Power of Prieſts, whatever Reſtraint She may lay upon the external Exerciſe of their Function. The other Champion of the Cauſe will not venture to go thus far, ſo to deſtroy all Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline at a Blow, and cut the very Sinews of Epiſcopal Power in pieces. Which he is ſenſible muſt be the Conſequence, if they who grant the Sacerdotal Authority to Prieſts, have not Power, acting by the Canons, to withdraw the ſame Commiſſion again, in Caſe of Hereſy, or Schiſm, or any the like Occaſion. For then there is an End of all Authority and Power in the Church; and the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, when inflicted upon a Delinquent Biſhop, or Prieſt, to deprive them of Sacerdotal Authority and Power, is but a Bugbear. Here therefore he deſerts his Fellow-Diſputant, and owns there is a Real and Effectual Power in the Church to withdraw the Sacerdotal Commiſſion from Heretical and Schiſmatical Biſhops and Prieſts, and deprive them of their Authority, and reduce them to the State of Laymen: In which Caſe, he confeſſes, their Baptiſms are as much unauthorized and uncommiſſioned as thoſe of any other Laymen. But then he pretends, that no Church, except the Cyprianick Churches, ever exerciſed this Power againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks: Tho' their Commiſſions were Delible, and the Church had Power to delete them, yet no Church, beſide the Cyprianick, ever actually deleted them. So that, according to him, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were ſtill acknowledged by the Church to be Lawful Prieſts, in actual and full Commiſſion, and the Church was ſo kind to them, even during their Hereſy and Schiſm, as to leave them in full Poſſeſſion of their Sacerdotal Authority, and never withdraw her Commiſſion from them. Which is ſuch a Repreſentation of the Primitive Church, and ſo grand a Reflection on her Diſcipline, as I believe no one ever made before him. But it was neceſſary to ſalve this Gentleman's Hypotheſis, who otherwiſe muſt have been forced to own, That the Primitive Church did generally receive the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks (when given in due Form) at the ſame time that She accounted them to be no Prieſts, but actually deprived of their Commiſſion, and reduced to the State of Laymen. For he is very ſenſible, and one with half an Eye may ſee it, That if the ancient Church did actually by her Diſcipline deprive Hereticks and Schiſmaticks without Rebaptizing, then She muſt receive the Baptiſms of ſuch Perſons as had then no Sacerdotal Commiſſion, being ſuch as She herſelf had deprived of Commiſſion, and reduced to the State of Laymen. The Conſequence is here ſo plain, that our Author, on Suppoſition the Premiſes ſtand good, cannot pretend to deny it. All the Diſpute therefore is reduced to this one Point, Whether the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, whoſe Baptiſms the Primitive Church received and compleated by Confirmation, without a ſecond Baptiſm, were true authorized Prieſts in actual Commiſſion, during their Hereſy or Schiſm; or only Nominal Prieſts, whoſe Commiſſion was vacated by the ſame Lawful Epiſcopal Power and Authority which firſt committed it to them? Our Author does not diſpute the Power of the Church to vacate the Commiſſion of Heretical or Schiſmatical Prieſts, but boldly affirms, That no Churches, except the Cyprianick, ever actually exerciſed this Diſcipline upon them, but left them ſtill in full Commiſſion, and lawful Poſſeſſion of the Power and Authority of the Prieſthood. Which I have proved to be a grand Miſtake, and a grand Reflection upon the Diſcipline of the whole Catholick Church, and ſuch an Abetting of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, as ſets them upon the ſame Level with Catholick Prieſts, which the Catholick Church never intended. For She always vacated the Commiſſion of Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts, and by her juſt Power and Diſcipline took away all Sacerdotal Authority from them, leaving them in the State of unauthorized and uncommiſſioned Laymen. This I have proved from ſuch undeniable Evidence, from the ancient Rules and Canons of General and Particular Councils, and the Practice and Proceedings of the whole Catholick Church, that the contrary Aſſertion muſt be the Effect either of very great Ignorance, or very great Prejudice, and a Reſolution to ſerve an Hypotheſis, in any one that will venture to maintain it. The Reſult then of the whole Enquiry is this, That the Catholick Church was ſo far from Abetting or Encouraging the Prieſthood of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, that She vacated and deſtroyed their Commiſſion, and reduced them, by her Diſcipline, to a State of Laymen: But yet ſhe did not wholly Cancel and Diſannul the unauthorized Baptiſms of thoſe Uncommiſſioned Laymen, or Prieſts who had loſt their Commiſſion; She did not order all Men to be rebaptized, who were baptized by them; but only ſupplied what was irregular, unauthorized, and deficient, by her own juſt Authority and Power in a ſubſequent Confirmation. And it is well known, that the Practice of the Church of England, for theſe Two hundred Years has been the very ſame; and Few, beſides profeſs'd Diſſenters from Her, have offered to oppoſe it. Yet they who now oppoſe Her Practice, and maintain the Principle of Diſſenters, will needs outface the World, and bear all Men down, that they are the only true Defenders of the Church, who really deſert Her Cauſe, and reflect upon Her Practice; and that they who defend Her Practice, and ſhew it to be agreeable to the Practice of the whole Catholick Church, are Men of ill Deſigns; That they who will not allow the Prieſthood of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be as good as that of true Catholicks, are Enemies to CHRIST and the Chriſtian Prieſthood; and that they who write in Defence of the Church's Diſcipline, both Ancient and Modern, are Subverters of Her Conſtitution. I have lately received a Letter from an unknown Hand, which I ſhall beg leave to inſert in this Place.

SIR,

YOU will perhaps wonder to receive this from one that never ſaw you, and perhaps never may. But it is out of Kindneſs to you, to let you know what (Opinion) the true Church of England-Men have of you about us. Your Origines, &c. gained you a great Reputation, and notwithſtanding ſome Miſtakes, incident to all Mankind, you were looked upon as a Member of the Church both Willing and Able to ſerve Her. The News of your Scholaſtical Hiſtory of Lay-Baptiſm being publiſhed, cauſed great Joy to ſeveral about me, hoping ſo Able a Pen as yours would have ſet that Matter in a clear Light, and have ended a Diſpute, which has cauſed ſo much Trouble to the Church, Triumph to its Adverſaries, and a Staggering to ſeveral well-meaning Men; but to our great Surprize, it proved only a Daubing, Prevaricating Piece, to recommend yourſelf to the Moderate Party, falſely ſo called, and their Patrons, unfortunately crept into ſome of the Higheſt Places in the Church. The World has long waited for your Juſtification, in Anſwer to Mr. Lawrence, which if you refuſe to do, all Mankind will impute it to your Guilt, and that you own yourſelf a Falſe and Self-intereſted Writer; which I do aſſure you is the Opinion of

Your Servant

London, Sept. 22.

True Darbyſhire.

ALL I ſhall ſay in Anſwer to this, is only, Bleſſed are ye when Men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of Evil againſt you falſely for my Sake: Rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is your Reward in Heaven. What Reward I am to expect on Earth for my Service, I know not. What Your Lordſhip beſtowed upon me, was for my former Labours, and not for this. For You were pleaſed to give me the Offer of it before ever my laſt Book appeared in Print, and before You Yourſelf was acquainted with the Purport of it. And I hope this Gentleman (whoever he is) or his Friends, will not be angry at Your Lordſhip for giving a little Encouragement to the Author of the Origines Eccleſiaſticæ, which gained him, he ſays, a great Reputation, and made him to be looked upon as a Member of the Church both willing and able to ſerve Her. That may be ſufficient to juſtify Your Lordſhip in beſtowing Your Favour upon a Perſon of ſuch a Character. But I have have now ſpoiled all by writing a Daubing, Prevaricating Piece, to recommend myſelf to the Moderate-Party (falſely ſo called) and their Patrons, unfortunately crept into ſome of the higheſt Places in the Church. Some Perſons take a great Latitude in Diſtinguiſhing Men and Parties, and fixing Names to them as they pleaſe; for which, perhaps, they may be accountable another Day. I ſuppoſe now, every one that declares againſt Rebaptization, is by this Gentleman reckoned among his Moderate-Party-Men: And then I ſee not how Your Lordſhip, or the Archbiſhop of York, or the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, will eſcape the Imputation of being Patrons of the Moderate-Party (and that, in this Gentleman's Opinion, unfortunately crept into ſome of the higheſt Places in the Church) becauſe You have, with many others, declared Yourſelves freely againſt Rebaptization, as contrary to the Senſe and Practice of the Catholick Church and the Church of England. But perhaps he had his Eye more upon ſome others, when he ſpake of Moderate-Party-Men and their Patrons: And if ſo, I can aſſure him, the Author of the Origines had no Occaſion to write a Daubing, Prevaricating Piece to recommend himſelf to them; having gained himſelf, by his former Labours, a good Eſteem with them, as well as others; as Writing what was of General Uſe, and to General Satisfaction. But my Crime is, that I wrote againſt one whom he calls Mr. Lawrence, (for I myſelf muſt not, without a Rebuke, preſume to call him ſo;) one, who in the Opinion of this Gentleman, and his Friends, is highly to be regarded: And unleſs I juſtify myſelf againſt him, all Mankind will impute it to my Guilt, and that I own myſelf a Falſe and Self-intereſted Writer. But perhaps he may be a little out in his Computation. For if I had never Anſwered his Book, all Men would not have judged ſo hardly: There are many who think it needs no Anſwer; and others who would have imputed my not Anſwering to other Cauſes; to Indiſpoſition, or want of Time, and Avocation by other Studies and Labours, or a Willingneſs not to inſiſt too long upon ſuch a Debate, when I had a far greater Work ſtill upon my Hand. But to prevent all farther Demands, the World has now my Juſtification, whereby it will appear who is the moſt Faithful Repreſenter of the Senſe and Practice of the Catholick Church; which I have, in this Second Part of the Scholaſtical Hiſtory, delivered with ſuch Plain, Full, and Authentick Evidence, as cannot fail of giving Satisfaction to all ſuch as will read without Prejudice, and with a Deſign to inform themſelves of the true Diſcipline and Practice of the Ancient Church, in reference to the Baptiſms adminiſtred by declared Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, whom ſhe accounted no more than Laymen. If any Men for doing this will call me again a Falſe and Self-intereſted Writer, they may uſe their Pleaſure: Such Reproaches will only teach me, that there are ſome Men in the World, who are not to be obliged by any Uſeful Services, unleſs a Man will give up his Underſtanding to them, and write Hiſtory againſt the Church, in Favour of their particular Conceptions and Opinions. Which I have never yet done, and by the Grace of God, never intend to do, tho' ſpeaking Truth expoſe me to a Thouſand worſe Reproaches. I cannot yet ſee any Reaſon to eſpouſe the Principle of Diſſenters about Rebaptization againſt the Church; I have more Honour for the Prieſthood, than to put it into the Hands of declared Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, againſt the Diſcipline and Practice of the firſt Six General Councils of the Church; which ſome who call themſelves the only true Churchmen, are forced to do, becauſe their Hypotheſis obliges them to do it, leſt they ſhould be forced to confeſs the Baptiſm of ſuch Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be no more than the Baptiſm of Laymen. Which if they once own, they know they muſt give up the Argument drawn from the Practice of the Catholick Church, which received the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks without Rebaptizing, whilſt She accounted the Adminiſtrators to be no more than Laymen. Theſe Things are ſo plainly demonſtrated in the following Diſcourſe, that tho' I deſpair of Convincing ſome Men, yet I doubt not it will open the Eyes of many, many, and give them Rational Satisfaction, as to what concerns the Diſcipline of the Primitive Catholick Church, whoſe Example in this Point of Diſcipline is now followed by the Church of England: Both which conjoyned together, I have endeavoured to vindicate from the Miſrepreſentations of thoſe, who, under Colour of Defending, manifeſtly oppoſe them both. I know indeed it is confidently pretended by the Adverſe Party, that they are writing in Defence of the Church, againſt the Diſſenters: But Wiſe and Conſidering Men take this to be a very odd Way of Defending the Church. To eſpouſe the profeſs'd Principle of Diſſenters about Rebaptizing, and maintain it againſt the Church's Practice, and yet, after all, call this, Defending the Church againſt Diſſenters. They ſay indeed, they are perſuading the Diſſenters to come into the Church, and be Rebaptized, becauſe Lay-Baptiſm is Invalid. But this is only proving to them what they do not deny; for they aſſert the ſame Thing, That Lay-Baptiſm is Invalid, whilſt the Church denies this by Her conſtant Practice. Therefore inſtead of writing Diſſertations about the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, which they do not deny, they ſhould convince Diſſenters, that their Miniſters are only Laymen; and then they would readily hearken to the Doctrine of Rebaptization, becauſe this Doctrine is according to their own Principles: But as the Matter ſtands at preſent, writing for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, in the Way that they do, is only writing againſt the Church, without any Effect at all upon Diſſenters; who are convinced of nothing more thereby, than what they profeſs'd to believe before, That Lay-Baptiſm is Invalid, which they always aſſerted and maintained againſt the Church from the Beginning of the Reformation. They pretend farther, to be maintaining the Cauſe of the Primitive Church, and the Chriſtian Prieſthood, againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and other Uſurpers: When yet it is plain, they manifeſtly lodge the Power of the Prieſthood in the Hands of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which the ancient Church took from them; and as they thereby miſrepreſent the Diſcipline of the Church, as favouring the Prieſthood of Hereticks, which She utterly denied; ſo they give a ſecret Wound to the Chriſtian Prieſthood, and caſt a Blemiſh on the ancient Diſcipline, even whilſt they would appear to their Admirers to be the only zealous and true Defenders of them. If theſe Things be undeniably proved in the following Diſcourſe, then I hope it will a little abate the Confidence of theſe Gentlemen, and work them either into Satisfaction or Silence, when they find themſelves ſo palpably miſtaken about the Prieſthood of Hereticks, and the Diſcipline of the ancient Church in relation to ſuch a pretended Prieſthood. As I know no better Way to end the preſent Diſpute about Lay-Baptiſm, ſo I hope it will not be unacceptable to Your Lordſhip or the World, to ſee the Proceedings of the ancient Councils againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, brought into one View, in order to illuſtrate this Part of ancient Hiſtory, and ſet it in a juſt Light, purſuant to my General Deſign of Collecting and Illuſtrating the Antiquities of the Chriſtian Church; in which I have hitherto proceeded with Your Lordſhip's Countenance and Approbation, and hope to finiſh it under Your Encouragement and Protection, who am,

My Lord,

Your moſt Obliged,

moſt Dutiful, and

Obedient Servant,

Joseph Bingham.

THE CONTENTS.

THE State of the preſent Controverſy.

Sect. 1. No farther Diſpute with Dr. Brett, about the Modern Greek Church. Sect. 2. Nor about the Churches of the Reformation. Sect. 3. How far we are agreed about the Church of England. Sect. 4. How far we are agreed about the Primitive Writers. Sect. 5. Whether St. Baſil's Canon, and the Council of Trullo determine the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm in the Practice of the Church. Sect. 6. An Account of the Luciferian Hereſy. And whether St. Jerom be a Witneſs of the Churches Annulling the Baptiſm of Laymen in Ordinary Caſes. Sect. 7. The Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtom no Evidence againſt the Baptiſm of Laymen in extraordinary Caſes.

CHAP. I.

THAT Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, when once they are Convicted and Legally Cenſured, are no longer Authorized to miniſter Baptiſm, or officiate as true Prieſts and Miniſters of GOD and the Church; but that thenceforth all their Acts are Unauthorized, and done only by Uſurpation. This proved from the Hiſtory of the firſt Six General Councils, and their Proceedings againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and other Delinquents.

Sect. 1. How Meletius was depoſed and Diveſted of all Miniſterial Authority by the Council of Nice. Sect. 2. How Arius was depoſed and Anathematized by the ſame Council. Sect. 3. How the Macedonians, Apollinarians, and other Hereticks, were Degraded and Anathematized in the Second Council of Conſtantinople. Sect. 4. How the Third General Council of Epheſus Degraded Neſtorius and his Followers. Sect. 5. How the Council of Chalcedon Depoſed Eutyches and Dioſcorus, and their Adherents. Sect. 6. Of the Condemnation of Anthimus and Severus in the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas. An. 536. Sect. 7. How the Defenders of the Tria Capitula were degraded in the fifth General Council of Conſtantinople. Sect. 8. How the ſixth General Council of Conſtantinople Depoſed and Anathematized the Monothelites. Sect. 9. How the Council of Trullo cenſured Delinquent Biſhops and Clerks.

CHAP. II.

THE ſame Aſſertion proved from Patriarchal, National, and Provinical Councils; and from the Writings of Private Fathers; with ſeveral Arguments drawn from their Teſtimony: The firſt Argument, That ſome Hereticks, whoſe Baptiſm was received, never had originally any Real and True Ordination to the Miniſterial Office and Function: Conſequently they could be no other than Unauthorized Perſons. This particularly proved upon the Novatian Hereſy.

Sect. 1. A ſhort Reference to ſuch Patriarchal, National, and Provincial Councils, as agree with the forementioned General Councils. Sect. 2. The firſt Argument founded upon the Novatians wanting a true Ordination. Sect. 3. That Novatian was never a true Biſhop. This proved, firſt, becauſe he had only a Simoniacal and forced Ordination. Sect. 4. Proved farther, becauſe he intruded himſelf into a full See.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENT 2. That Hereticks are not Authorized Miniſters of GOD, becauſe when they fall into open and profeſt Hereſy, they ceaſe to be true Chriſtian Prieſts, and become Wolves and Antichriſts, inſtead of true Shepherds and Governours of the Flock of CHRIST.

Sect. 1. That a Lawful Ordination does not ſecure a Man in the Poſſeſſion of a Perpetual Authorized Prieſthood, unleſs he obſerve the Rules of the Prieſthood. Sect. 2. This proved from Cyprian, who declares Hereticks to forfeit both the Name and Authority of Prieſts. Sect. 3. And from the Council of Aquileia under St. Ambroſe. Sect. 4. And from the Council of Colonia Agrippina. Sect. 5. From an Italick Council under St. Ambroſe An. 381. Sect. 6. From the Roman Council under Damaſus, An. 369. Sect. 7. From the Teſtimony of Domnus Biſhop of Antioch, and John Caſſian. Sect. 8. From the Decrees of Pope Innocent. Sect. 9. And Pope Simplicius. Sect. 10. And Pope Vigilius.

CHAP. IV.

ARGUMENT 3. That Hereticks and Degraded Clerks were not Authorized Prieſts, in the Account of the Ancient Church, becauſe, by her Diſcipline they were reduced to the State and Communion of Laymen.

Sect. 1. No Perſons who were obliged to do Publick Penance, allowed to be of the Clergy. Sect. 2. All Degraded Perſons reduced, at leaſt, to Lay-Communion. Sect. 3. This proved from Cyprian, and his Cotemporaries, Cornelius, and the Council of Carthage. Sect. 4. And from the Apoſtolical Canons. Sect. 5. And the Council of Eliberis. Sect. 6. And the Council of Sardica. Sect. 7. And the Council of Agde. Sect. 8. The Council of Orleance. Sect. 9. The firſt Council of Toledo. Sect. 10. The Council of Hippo, and St. Auſtin. Sect. 11. The Decrees of Pope Innocent. Sect. 12. And Siricius, and St. Jerom. Sect. 13. and St. Baſil. Sect. 14. And the Council of Trullo.

CHAP. V.

ARGUMENT 4. That Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and Degraded Clerks were not accounted Authorized Prieſts, becauſe they were ſometimes thruſt down one Degree below Laymen, by being Anathematized and caſt out of the Communion of the Church.

Sect. 1. That no Man is reckoned a compleat Layman but he that is in full Cammuniom with the Church. Sect. 2. Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and Degraded Clerks ſometimes denied the Privilege of Lay-Communion. Sect. 3. This proved from the Teſtimony of Cyprian. Sect. 4. And the Apoſtolical Canons. Sect. 5. And the Council of Colen. Sect. 6. And the Council of Sardica. Sect. 7. And the Council of Eliberis. Sect. 8. And the Council of Rome under Felix III. An. 487.

CHAP. VI.

THE Objection taken from the Notion of an Indelible Character imprinted in the Ordination of a Prieſt, examined, and ſhewed to be of no Force againſt the former Allegations. With an Account of the firſt Original and Meaning of that Term in the Writings of the Church.

Sect. 1. What meant by an Indelible Character imprinted in Baptiſm. Sect. 2. That the Indelible Character of Ordination is of the ſame Nature. Sect. 3. The Name of the Indelible Character not to be found in any ancient Council. Sect. 4. In what Senſe St. Auſtin owns and allows it in Heretical Prieſts. Sect. 5. What the Papiſts mean by their Indelible Character. Sect. 6. How far an Indelible Character is allowed by Proteſtant Writers. Sect. 7. What Submiſſion is due to the Judgment of the Catholick Church, in ſuch Points of Diſcipline as Rebaptizing and Reordaining.

CHAP. VII.

A Reſolution of ſome Difficulties concerning the Communion of Hereticks, and their Baptiſms, and Ordinations.

Sect. 1. Whether it be lawful to hold Communion with Heretical Prieſts before they be Degraded. Sect. 2. Whether it be Lawful to Communicate with Hereticks, when a whole Church is Heretical. Sect. 3. Whether, in any Caſe, it be Lawful to deſire the Baptiſm of Hereticks. Sect. 4. Whether the Ordinations of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks may be accepted by the Church without Reordination.

OR,

REMARKS on the Author of the Second Part of LAY-BAPTISM Invalid.

CHAP. I.

A Short way to end the Controverſy with this Author about Unauthorized Baptiſm, by ſhewing his great Ignorance of the ancient Diſcipline of the Church, whilſt he ſuppoſes the ancient Hereticks to be true Authorized Prieſts, in Actual Commiſſion, when the Church had reduced them to the State of Laymen.

CHAP. II.

Remarks on our Authors Preface.

Sect. 1. That Unauthorized Baptiſms, and Invalid Baptiſms are not of the ſame Import in the Senſe of the ancient Church. Sect. 2. This Author's Reaſons for the Validity of Heretical Bhptiſm, very different from thoſe of the Primitive Church. Sect 3. His Notions about the Invalidity of Heretical Baptiſm Unbaptizes the whole Church of England. Sect. 4. His Exceptions againſt the New Form of Confirmation, which was propoſed to the Convocation, conſidered. Sect. 5. He confeſſes his Miſtake in producing Lucifer as a Witneſs againſt Lay-Baptiſm. Sect. 6. How he confounds Valid Baptiſm, and Saving Baptiſm together, againſt the Senſe of the ancient Church. Sect. 7. That Heretical Baptiſm is properly Anti-Epiſcopal by our Author's own Conceſſion. Sect. 8. That our Author's Charge upon his Adverſaries, of diſſolving the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, equally reflects upon the Principles and Practice of the whole Catholick Church in all Ages.

CHAP. III.

Remarks on the Firſt and Second Chapters of our Author's Book.

Sect. 1. That allowing the Baptiſms of Uſurpers, Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, to be Valid only ſo far as not to need Rebaptizing, is not Abetting or Encouraging their Uſurpations. Sect. 2. That ſome Diſcretionary Power was ſuppoſed to be in the Hands of Biſhops, in Commiſſioning Perſons to baptize. Sect. 3. Whether Deacons were accounted Prieſts, and the Ordinary and Standing Miniſters of Baptiſm. Sect. 4. That many Uncommiſſioned Baptiſms were anciently Confirmed by Biſhops without Rebaptizing. Sect. 5. The neceſſary Diſtinction of the Ancients between an Authoritative Baptiſm and a merely Valid Baptiſm, confounded by our Author.

CHAP. IV.

Remarks on our Authors Account of the Greek Church, and the Churches of the Reformation.

Sect. 1. That the Ancient Greek Church had ſeveral Laws before the Eighth Century, determining the Validity of Uncommiſſioned Lay-Baptiſm. Sect. 2. The Authority of the Canons of Nicephorus vindicated from our Authors Exceptions. Sect. 3. His diſingenuous Way of anſwering the Modern Greek Writers. Sect. 4. That the Reaſon of the Greeks Practice was not their Opinion of the abſolute Neceſſity of Baptiſm for dying Infants. Sect. 5. Of the Moſcovite or Ruſſian Churches. Sect. 6. No farther Diſpute about the Lutheran Churches. Sect. 7. Nor about Zuinglius and the Helvetian Churches. Sect. 8. That the Calviniſts do in ſome Caſes allow of the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm. The Concluſion, reducing the whole Controverſy to this ſingle Point, Whether the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were true Authorized Prieſts in Actual Commiſſion, or only Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Laymen, Uſurping the Prieſts Office at the Time of Baptizing.

THE STATE OF THE PRESENT CONTROVERSY.

SECT. 1. No farther Diſpute with Dr. Brett about the modern Greek Church.

WHEN I ſet myſelf to write the Firſt Part of this Scholaſtical Hiſtory of Lay-Baptiſm, I did it with the ſame Proſpect and View as I have done all other Parts of the Antiquities of the Church, only to ſet Matters in as fair a Light as I could, and inform the Judgment of every Unprejudiced Reader; not without Hopes of bringing an Unhappy Controverſy to a fair End, by convincing ſome Learned Perſons, who are warmly engaged in the Diſpute, that they were under ſome great Miſtakes, in reference to ſeveral Points both of Ancient and Modern Hiſtory. And in ſome Meaſure I have gained this End, tho' not ſo perfectly as I hope to do in this Second Part, in which I have taken Care to give theſe Gentlemen all imaginable Satisfaction from the moſt authentick Rules, and undeniable Practice of the Primitive Church, if the Senſe of the firſt Six General Councils, and the concurrent Teſtimony of all other Councils and Fathers, be of any Force in ſuch a Caſe. Our Controverſy is now brought within a ſhorter Compaſs: For I have no farther Diſpute with my Learned Friend Dr. Brett, about the Modern Greeks and Muſcovites. All I have ſaid of them is allowed, only the Doctor complains he had not Books to examine upon this Occaſion, nor would the excellent Library of Canterbury furniſh him with neceſſary Aſſiſtance. I hope his Grace of Canterbury, or the Reverend Dean and Chapter, will take his Admonition to furniſh their Library with a Suicerus, and a Leunclavius, a Hottinger, and an Arcudius, &c. that the Doctor may not be at a Loſs, when he is obliged to conſult them upon any other ſuch Occaſion.

SECT. 2. Nor about the Churches of the Reformation.

I HAVE no farther Diſpute with the Doctor neither, about the Churches of the Reformation. We are agreed, that the Lutheran Churches are all of the ſame Opinion with the Greeks, and allow Lay-Perſons to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity. Zuinglius did the ſame, and his Followers did not much depart from his Opinion. The Palatine Churches forbid the Rebaptization of thoſe who are baptized by Laymen in a grand Diſſipation of the Church, if Alting, an eminent Profeſſor among them, knew their Senſe in ſuch an Exigency. The French and Dutch Churches are of the contrary Opinion, and order all Perſons to be rebaptized that are baptized by Laymen in any Caſe whatſoever. Calvin was of the ſame Opinion with Alting, That Lay-Baptiſm might be admitted without Rebaptization in a grand Diſſipation of the Church. And what the Doctor quotes from him, only reſpects Order in a quiet and peaceable State of the Church. The Doctor will have it alſo, that the Scotch Church followed the French at the Reformation: And though he does not prove it from any Piece of their Diſcipline, or from Knox, or any private Writer; for I think Knox's Book of Diſcipline, in Biſhop Spotſwood, has has nothing about it: Yet I will not contend with him about this Particular, having as little Proof againſt his Aſſertion as he has for it, and it would be only to fight in the dark, to ſay any Thing farther without Authority upon it.

SECT. 3. How far we are agreed about the Church of England.

THUS far then our Diſpute ſeems to be at an End. But there are two Points about which the Doctor is not ſatisfied, The Senſe of the Church of England, and the Primitive Church. To what I ſaid about the Church of England, he gives a very ſhort Anſwer, That I have ſaid nothing but what was ſaid ſome time before, in a ſmall Pamphlet, called, The Judgment of the Church of England in the Caſe of Lay-Baptiſm, which was fully anſwered by Mr. Lawrence, to which he therefore refers his Reader; and only obſerves farther, that I gave the Opinion of private Men only, and not the Judgment of the Church from any of her Rubricks, Articles or Canons. So that though I had alledged a Thouſand Authorities more than the little Pamphlet, called, The Judgment, had done, or ſhould now alledge a Thouſand more, the ſame Inſinuation, That I had added nothing new, would anſwer all in a Word. For it ſignifies nothing to this Gentleman to produce the unanimous Conſent of Private Writers, in every Age ſince the Reformation, declaring their Judgment of the Senſe of the Church of England in this Matter. The conſtant Practice of the Church, which is obvious to every one that has but half an Eye, is of no more Weight with him: For unleſs he ſees expreſs Rubricks, Articles, or Canons, forbidding to rebaptize, he will not believe it to have been the Senſe or Judgment of the Church of England. So that it is in vain to add any more Whitgifts, or Abbots, or Whitakers, or Caſaubons, Father or Son, or the Judgment of the Univerſities, or the Judgment of the Prince in a Conference of Biſhops: All theſe were but private Men, and cannot tell us what was the Judgment of the Church in their Times. Nay, according to the new Hypotheſis, ſome of them were not baptized Chriſtians, but only in the State of Catechumens: For Caſaubon, I ſuppoſe, was baptized by a French Miniſter, and therefore, according to this Hypotheſis, ought to have been rebaptized when he firſt joyned himſelf to the Church of England. And it has already been obſerved by others, that the Royal Martyr was baptized by a Scotch Presbyter only, and therefore by the ſame Hypotheſis, ought to have had a new Baptiſm to make him a compleat Chriſtian. But it is in vain to urge any Abſurdities that attend this new Hypotheſis: For be the Conſequences what they will, or be the Authorities and Teſtimonies never ſo full and ample for the Church's Practice, yet unleſs Articles, Rubricks, or Canons be produced, that plainly ſay ſuch Perſons ought not to be rebaptized, the Gentlemen that maintain the new Hypotheſis, reſolve never to depart from it. The conſtant Practice of the Church is not thought ſufficient to interpret her Rubricks; nor the concurring Judgment of the Sons of the Church allowed to be any Indication of the Senſe of their Mother. And therefore if I ſhould here add, that moſt, if not all the Biſhops of the Preſent Church, have either publickly or privately given their Opinion and Judgment in Favour of the Church's general Practice, this would be reckoned to have no Weight, becauſe it is not improved into a Rubrick or Canon of the Church; but a Rubrick or an Article, however miſunderſtood or wrong applied, is of ſufficient Force to bear down all other Authority, whether from general Conſent or general Practice. So that I think it is in vain to diſpute with Dr. Brett, or any other of his Way, any longer upon this Head, who refuſe to be determined by any other Evidence but ſuch as they think cannot poſſibly be brought againſt them: I only take what is allowed, That the general Conſent of private Writers, and the general Practice of the Church interpreting her own Rules, is clearly againſt them: And then leave the reſt to be determined by the Judgment of every ingenuous Reader.

SECT. 4. How far we are agreed about the Primitive Writers.

BUT I have ſomething more to ſay to my Friend Dr. Brett, about the Senſe and Practice of the Primitive Church. For here I intend to give him Satisfaction in his own Way, and anſwer all his Demands, and offer him ſuch Proof and Conviction as will once more try his Ingenuity, whether he will take it kindly to be informed in a Matter of Hiſtorical Truth, by the Evidence of the plaineſt Demonſtration. I will trouble him now with no private Writers, but ſuch as are backed by the Authority of General Councils. In the former Diſcourſe I alledged only private Writers, and thoſe, tho' they ſpake never ſo plain, were all anſwered in a Word, that they delivered only their own private Senſe, and not the Senſe of the Church. When the Teſtimony of Tertullian was urged, it was eaſily turned off, by ſaying, He only ſpake his own Opinion. When I added to this the Decree of the Council of Eliberis, that is anſwered by ſaying, It was not a General, but only a Provincial Council. When it was farther urged, That Alexander, Biſhop of Alexandria, received the Baptiſms given by Athanaſius; that is rejected as a Fable and a mere Hear-ſay Story, becauſe it had no better Authority than Sozomen or Ruffin. When I urged the plaineſt Words imaginable from St. Jerom, I am told, That theſe proceeded only from a Slip of St. Jerom's Pen, whilſt he tranſcribed Tertullian, and is directly contrary to every other Part of his Dialogue againſt the Luciferians. St. Auſtin has no better Quarter, for he is rejected as one that only ſpeaks his private Opinion, and that built upon a wrong Foundation, viz.

The

The absolute Necessity of Baptism to Salvation; which is said neither to be agreeable to the Doctrine of the Catholick Church nor the Church of England. And yet St. Austin in truth had no other Opinion of the Necessity of Baptism in Adult Persons (whatever he might think of Children) but what Cyprian and St. Ambrose, and all the whole Catholick Church had of it before him, and makes the same Allowances, in the Case of Necessity, as the Church of England does at this Day, as I shall undeniably prove in the next Book of my Origines [a], however the Doctor is so confident to the contrary. But something was necessary to be said to lessen the Character and Authority of St. Austin. The same Answer is given to Gelasius and Isidore of Sevil, That the Permission they spake of, as granted in the Western Church to Laymen to baptize in Case of Necessity, was all founded upon the same mistaken Opinion of St. Austin about the absolute Necessity of Baptism, which prevailed by St. Austin's great Authority in the Western Church. This is the unhappy Method which this Learned Person takes to obviate the Force of my former Dissertation; sometimes lessening the Character of Historians as over Credulous; charging others as Writing in a Dream, and letting their Pens run too fast; and others of great and venerable Name, as guilty of Heterodoxy, in running against the general Sense of the Catholick Church: And all of them, put together, whether they spake true or false, are no sufficient Evidence of the Practice of the Church, in his Opinion, because they spake no more but their own private Sense of the Matter. And this is a Solution ready at hand for a Thousand Authors, had they been alledged to the same Purpose. So that unless we can produce some General Councils determining the Validity of Lay-Baptism in the Cases under Debate, or at least some Authors of indisputable Credit, that say General Councils have so determined, the Doctor will find his Evasion, and desire to be excused from yielding his Assent to it. Now some Persons would be apt to complain of this as hard Usage, for Men to require the Evidence of General Councils to determine a Matter of Fact on one Side, when the other Side will not produce a Patriarchal, or a National, or so much as a Provincial Council on the other hand. They would be ready to say, This was to bind heavy Burthens and grievous to be born, and lay them on other Mens Shoulders, whilst they themselves will not touch them with one of their Fingers. But I will make no such Complaint, but gratify my Friend in his Demands, and try whether I cannot convince him, that this Matter has been abundantly determined by all the Six General Councils, when I have first examined, how he pretends to prove his Opinion to be agreeable to the general Sense and Practice of the Church.

SECT. 5. Whether St. Basil and the Council of Trullo determine the Invalidity of Lay-Baptism, in the Practice of the Church.

HIS main Strength is from the Testimony of St. Basil; whose Opinion, he says, p. 59. is not to be esteemed a private Opinion, for the Epistle wherein it is contained is a Canonical Epistle, and received by the Greek Church as a Canon, and as such is put into the Canonical Code of that Church, and was so early as the Sixth Century at least; about which Time Johannes Scholasticus, Patriarch of Constantinople, made his Collection of all the Canons then received in that Church, among which are the Canonical Epistles of St. Basil. So that when we cite an Epistle of St. Basil, we do not produce the Authority of a single Father, but of the whole Greek Church. This is his Argument, which will do the Doctor's Cause much more Harm than Good; for if he stands to it, his Cause is utterly lost. I examine not now how early St. Basil's Canons were made a Part of the Greek Code, whether in the Time of Johannes Scholasticus, who lived Two hundred Years after St. Basil, or afterward: The first General Council that confirmed them, I believe, was the Council of Trullo, An. 692. And if they had no compleat Authority till that Time, they are no very good Authority or Testimony of the Church's general Practice for the Three hundred Years foregoing. But what is that St. Basil's Canons are made to testify of the Church's Practice? Is it not first, That Hereticks and Schismaticks were only reputed Laymen? Which is true, not because St. Basil said it, or because his Canons were received by the Church Two or Three hundred Years after they were made, but because the Church has decreed the same Thing in all her General Councils, as I have abundantly proved in the following Discourse, not to serve the Doctor's Hypothesis, but to do him more true and useful Service, in setting him right in his Notions about Lay Baptism, so far as concerns the Church's Practice. For, Secondly, the Church never came into St. Cyprian's or St. Basil's Notion in the other Part of it, That the Baptisms of Hereticks or Schismaticks, who were only Laymen, or not so good as Laymen, were therefore to be repeated, because they were Laymen; but expressly determined the contrary, That their Baptisms, if given in due Form, were to be received by Imposition of Hands without Rebaptizing, notwithstanding that they were given by those whom the Church herself accounted no more than Laymen. How then is it possible for St. Basil's Canons to testify that to be the Practice of the whole Church, when the Church, in her General

[a] Origin. Eccles. Book X. Chap. ii. n. 20. &c.

General Councils, does for herſelf ſo evidently teſtify the contrary? I do not accuſe my Friend of Inſincerity, but I cannot wholly acquit him of want of a due Sagacity and Judgment, in making St. Baſil a Witneſs of the Church's Practice in a Caſe, wherein the Church always went againſt him. For tho' ſhe agreed with him in the firſt Propoſition, That Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were no better than Laymen; yet ſhe differed from him in the other Aſſertion, That therefore the Baptiſms of thoſe Laymen (tho' given in due Form) were to be repeated: The one affirmed it, the other denied it: And therefore, unleſs an Affirmation and a Negation be the ſame Thing, we cannot poſſibly ſay, with any Colour of Reaſon or Truth, that St. Baſil's Canons witneſs or affirm that to be the General Practice of the Church, which all the Canons of the Church poſitively deny. But the Ground of the Doctor's Miſtake was this; he did not conſider, that St. Baſil's Canons went one Way in this Particular, and the Canons of the Church another, but haſtily concludes, That becauſe St. Baſil's Canons were received into the Code of the Greek Church, and that Two or Three hundred Years after they were made, therefore the Church Univerſal muſt needs always Practice according to thoſe Canons: Whereas this is a very wrong Concluſion: For even when theſe Canons were received into the Code, the Church did not Practice according to them, but according to her own General Rules, which were directly contrary. Nothing can be plainer than this from the Council of Trullo, which in her Second Canon receives the Canons of St. Baſil among thoſe of Athanaſius, Gregory Thaumaturgus, and many others: And yet ſhe has a Canon of her own, expreſsly contradicting this Canon of St. Baſil, which ſo much Weight is laid upon. For her Ninety-fifth Canon orders ſome Hereticks to be received by a new Baptiſm, and others only by Impoſition of Hands or Conſignation. The Eunomians, the Montaniſts, the Sabellians, the Manichees, the Valentinians, the Marcionites, the Paulianiſts and ſuch others were to be rebaptized, for a Reaſon that every Body knows, Becauſe they obſerved not the due Form of Baptiſm: But the Arians, the Macedonians, the Novatians, the Quartadecimans, the Apollinarians, the Neſtorians and Eutychians, are to be received only by Anathematizing their Errors and Conſignation. This Canon is plainly contrary to that of St. Baſil. Now then, if a Man were to judge of the Church's Practice at this Time, by One of theſe Two Canons, whether of them would it be more proper to take for his Guide, the Canon of St. Baſil, or the Canon of this General Council? I can hardly think any Man ſo weak, as to declare upon a fair Hearing, that this Council intended the obſolete Canon of St. Baſil ſhould take Place of their own Canon juſt then made, and ſtifle it in its very Birth, only becauſe they gave St. Baſil's Canons a decent Reception in the Lump, as they did many others, which were then no Rules of Practice. Sure it muſt be concluded, this Council ſpake the Senſe of the Church at that Time in her own Canon; and if other Councils did the ſame before them, up to St. Baſil's Time, and all againſt St. Baſil's Rule, it muſt be monſtrous to conclude what was the Practice of the Church from St. Baſil's ſingle Canon, rather than from ſo many Canons of General Councils to the contrary. But the Doctor will ask, What general Council has ſaid, that the Baptiſms of Laymen are to be received in any Caſe without Rebaptizing. I anſwer, as many as have ſaid that the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks are to be received, when given in due Form, without Rebaptizing. For they had no other Notion of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, when once degraded or excommunicated, but only either as Laymen or worſe than Laymen, by being caſt out of the Church. This was no private Opinion of St. Cyprian or St. Baſil (as the other Opinion about Rebaptizing ſuch Hereticks was) but it is the Voice of the Church in all her General Councils; it is confirmed by the Decrees and Sanctions of almoſt every Patriarchal, National, Provincial Council: It runs through the Writings of every Catholick Father, who all combine in this one Point againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, That they are no longer true Authorized Prieſts of GOD, but only Laymen, or a Degree below Laymen, as I ſhall abundantly ſhew the Doctor in the Sequel of this Diſcourſe. The plain Conſequence of which is, That the Church in ordering the Baptiſms of ſuch Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be received, muſt needs receive the Baptiſms of Unauthorized Laymen, becauſe ſhe received the Baptiſms of thoſe whom ſhe either made Laymen, or accounted them ſo to be, as is irrefragably proved in the following Diſcourſe. The Controverſy now is brought into a ſhort Compaſs, it turns all upon this one Point at preſent, Whether Hereticks and Schiſmaticks be true Authorized Prieſts of GOD, that can never be diveſted of their Authority by Virtue of an Indelible Character? Or whether by their Apoſtacy, and the Church's Cenſure, they are not rather diveſted of all Miniſterial Authority, and reduced to the State of Laymen, or one Degree below Laymen that continue in the Church? When I have determined this Point by the beſt Authority in the Church, by the Acts and Canons of the firſt Six General Councils, and by ſuch Arguments as are proper to be urged in this Caſe, my Learned Friend and I ſhall have no longer Occaſion to diſpute about this or that private Author, which will ſignify little to be urged on either Side, againſt the whole Stream and Current of the Catholick Church. If I do not ſatisfy him by this plain Hiſtory, let him give me better Proofs for the contrary Part, and I will promiſe him, in Point of Hiſtory, to become his Convert.

BUT before I have done with St. Basil, I will make the Doctor Two or Three more Observations out of him, which are obvious enough, tho' he did not think fit to observe them. As first, That St. Basil, or at least St. Cyprian and Firmilian, whose Opinion he relates, were not possess'd with the Modern Notion of the Indelible Character of a Priest: They thought, that when a Bishop or a Presbyter turned Hereticks or Schismaticks, they were no longer Priests, but Laymen; not like Laymen, or parallel to them, tho' that were enough, but perfectly and entirely Laymen, and no Priests: Which is the Foundation of their Argument for Rebaptizing those that were baptized by them. Their Words are very express, λαικοὶ γενόμενοι, that Hereticks and Schismaticks, by breaking off from the Church, become Laymen, and therefore have not the Authority of Priests any longer. Now if we suppose with the Doctor, that St. Basil's Canons were entirely confirmed by the Church Universal, then it is evident the modern Notion of an Indelible Character was no Doctrine of the Catholick Church, no more than it was of St. Basil; but that a Bishop or a Priest may forfeit his Episcopal or Sacerdotal Authority and Power, and be reduced, by the Discipline of the Church for his Crimes, whether Heresy, Schism, or other Crimes, to the State and Condition of Laymen; which I have proved to be true, not because St. Basil said it, or because his Canons were received by the Church, but because it was the constant and avowed Doctrine and Discipline of the Church Universal.

2. WHENCE it follows, Secondly, that such Priests, having lost their Authority, could have no more Power than Laymen to baptize, as St. Basil rightly observes, and that consonantly enough to the Sense and received Opinion of the Catholick Church, of which I shall give a full Account in the following Discourse.

3. AND yet I observe, Thirdly, That as to the particular Case of Schismaticks, whom St. Basil reckons Laymen as well as Hereticks, tho' in his own private Opinion he was for Rebaptizing them as well as Hereticks, yet he is not stiff to that Opinion, but thinks the Custom of the Church in every Country ought to be complied with, whether it were to baptize, or not baptize them again. And he particularly applies this to the Case of the Novatians, and such other Schismaticks as did not err in Faith, and were not wholly broken off from the Church in Fundamentals. Therefore since many Churches in Asia received the Baptism of such by Way of Dispensation, he is not against the receiving of it. So that, in his Opinion, if the Church thinks fit to receive Lay-Baptism, it is in her Power to admit of it. And so he determines not only in his first Canon, but in the Forty-seventh also, in the Case of the Encratitæ.

4. AND therefore I observe in the last Place, That according to these Rules of St. Basil, the Decrees of General Councils and the common Consent and Practice of the Church in these Matters were to be complied with. So that the Council of Nice having received the Baptism of the Novatians, tho' they were both in St. Basil's Opinion, and in Reality, but Laymen; and the Council of Constantinople, not long after St. Basil's Death, having determined the same about the Novatians and several others; in all such Churches as submitted to the Authority of those Councils, no farther Dispute was to be made about this Matter, but either the Directions of the Councils, or the Custom of every Church was to be regarded by all private Men, and no Disturbance to be made upon this Point of Discipline. All which Things considered, it cannot be concluded from St. Basil's Canons, or their Reception in the Church, that Laymens Baptism was generally annulled; but we must necessarily conclude the contrary, That since Hereticks and Schismaticks, both in the Opinion of St. Basil and the Church, were generally voted to be Laymen; and yet the Baptisms of these Laymen were generally received by publick Orders of the Church; that therefore the general Practice of the Church was, to receive the Baptisms of Laymen, if given in due Form, without Rebaptizing. So unhappy is my Learned Friend in his Conclusion from the ancient Fathers, to urge that for his Cause which directly proves the contrary.

SECT. 6. An Account of the Luciferian Heresy. And whether St. Jerom be a Witness of the Churches Annulling the Baptism of Laymen in ordinary Cases.

LET us see whether he be any happier in his other great Pillar and Support of his Cause, which is St. Jerom. The Doctor does not pretend that St. Jerom was wholly on his Side, but only in one Point. He owns St. Jerom allowed Laymen to baptize in Case of Necessity: But then he says he contradicted himself, and spake not the Sense of the Church neither, but only the Private Opinion of Tertullian against the Church; though St. Jerom speaks in Terms plain enough, Quod frequenter, si tamen necessitas cogit, scimus etiam licere Laicis, We know that it is frequently allowed to Laymen to baptize, when Necessity requires it. This sure was not the Allowance of Tertullian, or St. Jerom, but the Allowance of the Church, which authorized Laymen to do it frequently in such extraordinary Cases. Or if they did it frequently without her Authority, it is not to be imagined but that the Church should have made some Decree against it, especially when St. Austin and the Council of Eliberis and several others, had declared for it. Here was Reason enough to expect some general Council should have interposed her Authority (as she did in another Case against the Cyprianists) and have forbidden den Laymen to baptize in any Caſe whatſoever, if it had been againſt the Senſe and Diſcipline of the Church to allow it. But the Doctor does not pretend to give us any General Council to this Purpoſe. But ſtill he will have it, that the Church always rebaptized thoſe that were baptized by Laymen in ordinary Caſes, and that St. Jerom herein is a Witneſs of the Churches Practice. Now, to convince the Doctor of his Miſtake, I will only ask him two plain Queſtions. 1. Whether the Church ever made any general Decree for Rebaptizing ſuch as were baptized in due Form by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; or whether St. Jerom ever ſpeaks of any ſuch Decree? I know my Learned Friend will not aſſert this, becauſe I have proved the contrary before to his Satisfaction. I ask then, 2dly, Whether the Church, by any General Council, ever declared, that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, whilſt they remained Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, were true authorized Prieſts of GOD, or whether St. Jerom ever alledges any ſuch Decree? If he ſays there are ſuch Declarations and Decrees of General Councils, it will be eaſy to produce them, as I have done abundance to the Contrary in the following Diſcourſe. But if he can produce none that ſay this, but all unanimouſly, on the Contrary, declare, that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, are no longer true Prieſts of GOD, but Laymen, or of a lower Order than Laymen in the Church; then it inevitably follows, that the Church, in ordering the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be received, ordered the Baptiſm of thoſe to be received, who were no more than Laymen, in her Opinion. If he ſays, St. Jerom is a Witneſs, that the Church eſteemed Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be true Prieſts of GOD, it will be eaſy to produce his Teſtimony: But then, all that will be gained by it, will be only this, that St. Jerom contradicts the General Councils, and delivers a Private miſtaken Opinion of his own, which, in that Caſe, can be no ſufficient Teſtimony or Evidence of the Church's Senſe, againſt the clearer and ſtronger Evidence of her General Councils.

THIS, without any more ado, will be allowed to be a ſufficient Anſwer to any Thing the Doctor has produced or can produce out of St. Jerom's Dialogue againſt the Luciferians. And ſo I might here put an End to the Diſpute about it. But becauſe that Dialogue is a very intricate Diſcourſe, in the former part of it, and the Doctor has choſen that part of it to be the Foundation of his Aſſertion, I will, for the ſatisfaction of the Learned Reader, make a little farther Enquiry into the Deſign of that Dialogue; and ſtate, as fully and exactly as I can, the Caſe between St. Jerom and the Luciferians. The firſt Riſe of the Luciferian Schiſm is well known to have proceeded from the inflexible Stifneſs and Rigor of Lucifer Biſhop of Caralis in Sardinia, who having been a Confeſſor for the Faith againſt the Arians, in the Time of Conſtantius, thought it unreaſonable, when the Perſecution was over, that thoſe 300 Biſhops, who had ſo far complied with the Arians, in the Council of Ariminum, as to conſent to the dropping of the Word Conſubſtantial out of the Creed, ſhould be allowed to continue in their Places any longer, as having, in his Opinion, betrayed the Faith and the Cauſe of the Catholick Church. Hereupon, as ſoon as the Council of Alexandria, under Athanaſius, An. 362. had determined to receive theſe Biſhops again in their Station, becauſe they found no juſt Reaſon to depoſe them; Lucifer offended at this, in his over-righteous and over-wiſe Zeal made a Separation from the Church, and would no longer communicate either with thoſe Lapſed Biſhops, or thoſe that received them; declaring that the whole Catholick Church was become an Apoſtatizing Harlot, and the Synagogue of Antichriſt for receiving them. This occaſioned ſeveral Queſtions to be debated by St. Jerom; ſome of which he anſwers Categorically and Directly, and alſo upon Catholick Principles; others only Hypothetically, in Purſuance of his Adverſaries Suppoſitions or Aſſertions; and in theſe laſt he does not always ſpeak his own Senſe, or the Senſe of the Church, but only ſhews his Adverſary what muſt follow upon the Advancement of ſuch a falſe Principle or Aſſertion, to drive him to an Abſurdity. If Men will not carefully diſtinguiſh theſe Things, it is impoſſible to underſtand this Dialogue of St. Jerom, or make the Senſe of one Part of it conſiſtent with another.

Now the Queſtions propoſed were ſuch as theſe:

1. WHETHER the Arians and other Hereticks were Heathens? This the Luciferians affirmed, but St. Jerom denied.

2. WHETHER upon this Suppoſition of their being Heathens, they could give ſuch a Chriſtian Baptiſm as needed not to be repeated? This the Luciferians affirmed, but St. Jerom poſitively denied upon that Suppoſition: For no Heathen, none but a Baptized Perſon could give Chriſtian Baptiſm. And yet when the Queſtion was otherwiſe propoſed,

3. WHETHER an Arian Heretick, conſidered abſolutely as a Baptized Perſon, and not upon the Luciferian Suppoſition of being a mere Heathen, could give ſuch a Baptiſm as needed not to be repeated by the Church? Then St. Jerom not only affirmed, but maintained it from Scripture and Councils, that Heretical Baptiſm, when given in due Form, was not to be repeated. By which we may ſee, that St. Jerom affirmed and denied the ſame Thing, upon different Suppoſitions, without any Contradiction.

4. THE next Queſtion was, Whether any beſide a Prieſt could baptize? The Luciferian aſſerted, any Man, an Arian, that is, in his Opinion, an Heathen, one that was no Prieſt, nor Chriſtian, might baptize. But St. Jerom denied all this, and aſſerted, That it was neceſſary a Man ſhould in ſome Senſe be a Chriſtian Prieſt, to qualify him to baptize. But he diſtinguiſhes a double Notion of the Prieſthood, and Caſes ordinary from extraordinary. There is the Sacerdotium Laici, as he calls it, The Prieſthood of a Layman, that is, his Baptiſm, as well as the Prieſthood of a Clerk, which qualified the one to adminiſter Baptiſm in extraordinary Caſes, as the other did in ordinary. And without a Prieſthood of one ſort or other, there could be no Miniſtration of Baptiſm. Therefore if the Arians were Heathen, as the Luciferian aſſerted, their Laicks were to be rebaptized as Gentiles; ſince an Heathen could not be a Prieſt either in the ſtrict or the large Notion of a Prieſt, nor conſequently baptize either in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes. Here again Sr. Jerom diſputes Hypothetically upon the Principles and Aſſertions of the Luciferians.

5. ANOTHER Queſtion was, Whether any Man could adminiſter Baptiſm, who could not give Remiſſion of Sins, and the Spirit with it. The Luciferian affirms it, but St. Jerom denies it. And here, I confeſs, I am at a loſs to underſtand St. Jerom's Reaſoning, and make him ſpeak agreeably to the Doctrine of the Catholick Church: And if my Learned Friend will help me out, he will do both me and St. Jerom a Piece of Service. For I am ſure St. Auſtin always argues againſt the Cyprianiſts and the Donatiſts upon a contrary Notion, That a true Baptiſm might be given without Remiſſion of Sins or the Spirit accompanying it. For Hereticks had not Power to give either Remiſſion of Sins or the Spirit. This was the Deficiency of their Baptiſm; and for this Reaſon all the Councils ordered Hereticks to receive Impoſition of Hands upon their Return to the Church, that they might receive Remiſſion of Sins and the Spirit, which they could not receive before in Heretical Baptiſm; as I have abundantly proved before in the Firſt Part of my Scholaſtical Hiſtory, which the Doctor does not pretend to call in Queſtion. How therefore to reconcile St. Jerom's Notion to the Rule of the Church in this Particular, is beyond my Skill at preſent, and I will thank any one that will do it for me.

6. ANOTHER Queſtion, which indeed is the Principal and Leading Queſtion in this whole Dialogue, though it was only about a Matter of Fact, was, Whether the Biſhops of the Council of Ariminum were really Arians or not? The Luciferian affirmed it, but Jerom utterly denies it, and proves clearly from the Hiſtory and Acts of the Council then extant, and to which he appeals, that they were all Catholick Biſhops, and only ſubſcribed a Catholick Creed in a Catholick Senſe: But Urſatius and Valens, two deceitful and crafty Arian Biſhops, had prevailed upon them, with fair Words, to leave the Word Conſubſtantial out of the Creed, for the Sake of Peace, pretending that then all would be well, and there would be no more Diſputes about Religion. Which they had no ſooner done, but theſe deceitful Arians immediately gave out and boaſted, that they had deſtroyed the Nicene Faith. Which as ſoon as the Biſhops of Ariminum came to underſtand, they with Tears deteſted and abhorred the Fraud, declaring, by all that is Sacred, they never intended to make an Arian Creed, as theſe Miſcreants gave out againſt them. Then ingemuit totus Orbis, & Arianum ſe eſſe miratus eſt; which does not mean, as it is vulgarly miſunderſtood, that theſe 300 Biſhops were Arians, or that the World was turned Arian with them, but that theſe Biſhops were really griev'd that they ſhould, by ſuch a Trick, be brought under the Suſpicion of Arianiſm, who never intended any ſuch Thing. Thus St. Jerom does Juſtice to theſe Catholick Biſhops, in freeing them from the Imputation of Arianiſm, which Lucifer, after Urſatius and Valens, had caſt upon them. He owns they were to blame for leaving out the Word Conſubſtantial, which the Nicene Council had made the Barrier of the Faith; but that they had eſtabliſhed an Arian Creed he utterly denies: And therefore he vindicates the Church againſt Lucifer, in allowing them to continue in their Station. " For why (ſays he) ſhould " they have condemned thoſe who were not " Arians? Why ſhould they divide the Church " [b] whilſt it continued in the Unity of " the Faith? Why ſhould they by their " Obſtinacy make thoſe become Arians, " who were really Orthodox Believers? The " Council of Alexandria (he adds) upon this " Account only condemned the Authors " of the Hereſy, who were not to be ex- " cuſed; but received the reſt upon their " Repentance: Not as if they could have " been Biſhops, if they had been Hereticks; " but becauſe it was ſo manifeſt, that thoſe " who

" who were received, never had been He-" reticks.

In theſe laſt Words St. Jerom ſeems to me to determine two other Queſtions, which were,

7. Whether, upon Suppoſition that thoſe Biſhops had been really profeſt Arians, they ought to have been eſteemed true Biſhops whilſt they were Hereticks? And,

8. Whether, in ſtrictneſs of Diſcipline, the Church would or could have received them to the Station of Biſhops again, upon the Renunciation of their Hereſy, without breaking in upon her own ordinary ſtanding Rule, which was, to deprive all ſuch as fell into Hereſy, of the Office of Biſhops and the Clerical Prieſthood? St. Jerom ſeems to me, plainly to determine theſe two Queſtions in the Negative, in thoſe Words, Non quod Epiſcopi eſſe poſſint, qui Hæretici fuerant, They could not ordinarily be allowed to be Biſhops who had been Hereticks. For this I ſhall ſhew to be exactly agreeable to the Common and Ordinary Rules of the Church, which were, Neither to allow of Hereticks as true Biſhops or Prieſts, whilſt they were Hereticks; nor yet, in ſtrictneſs of Diſcipline, to admit them as Biſhops or Prieſts upon their Return to the Catholick Church, but only to allow them to Communicate in the Quality of Laymen.

9. But then there was another main Queſtion, upon which St. Jerom and the Luciferian are abſolutely divided, which was, Whether the Church, for Weighty and Prudential Reaſons, could not diſpenſe with the Strictneſs and Rigour of her own ordinary Rule of Diſcipline? that is, Whether the Church, if ſhe thought fit, could not give Authority to an Heretical Biſhop, to act as a Biſhop again, upon his Return from his Hereſy to the Church. This was ſtifly denied by Lucifer, and it was the Thing he grounded his Schiſm upon. But St. Jerom, with a great deal of Reaſon and Eloquence, maintains this Diſpencing Power of the Church, and her Prudence in receding ſometimes from the Rigour of Diſcipline, upon juſt and proper Occaſions. He argues this, Chap. 2. from the Practice of the Luciferians themſelves, who admitted Arian Laymen without rebaptizing them upon a Prudential Reaſon, becauſe no one would be converted, if he knew he muſt be Rebaptized; and ſo they ſhould have been the Cauſe of their Ruin, if they had abſolutely rejected them. Hence St. Jerom argues, That if ſuch a Conceſſion was made in receiving a Layman, to ſave a ſingle Soul, there was much more Reaſon to do it, in receiving of a Biſhop who, by his Return, might unite not only a City, but a whole Province to the Church; but if he was refuſed, he might draw many others with him into Deſtruction. He argues farther, Chap. 7. from the Example of the Nicene Council, which allowed Eight Arian Biſhops to continue in their Places, when they might have rejected them without any Danger to the Church: And it were much, if the Church ſhould not be obliged to do that to ſave the whole World, which the Council of Nice did voluntarily, when ſhe had no ſuch Fear or Concern upon her. So that according to St. Jerom, the Church had Power to receive Lapſing Biſhops to their Station again, if Prudential Reaſons required it, though this was receding a little from the ordinary Diſcipline in the Exactneſs and Rigour of it. And this was the Grand Debate betwixt Lucifer and the Church. Lucifer would make no Allowance or Abatement for extraordinary Occaſions, but was for ſtanding ſtiff to the Rule prefixt for ordinary Caſes, whatever was the Conſequence.

10. And this drew him into another great Error, That the whole Church was polluted and prophaned by receiving thoſe Biſhops, whom he thought Arians, into their Office and Station again. This made the whole World become the Devil's Poſſeſſion, and turned the Church into an Harlot's Houſe, and the Synagogue of Satan, and there were no true Chriſtians left but in the Iſle of Sardinia, where Lucifer governed them. This ſtrange uncharitable Opinion St. Jerom excellently refutes and expoſes in the Firſt and Eighth Chapters of this Dialogue.

Hilary the Roman Deacon went one Step farther, and added to all this, that the Church was not only polluted, but that all that were baptized by Hereticks, were of Neceſſity to be rebaptized again in order to make them Chriſtians. Which was more than his Maſter Lucifer had aſſerted. Againſt this St. Jerom diſputes in the Two laſt Chapters of his Dialogue, from the Authority of Scripture, and the Council of Nice, and the Practice of the Church, and the Authority of Lucifer himſelf, who received thoſe that were baptized by the Arians, though he would not conſent to receive the Clergy to their ancient Station. Which ſhews, that when St. Jerom diſputes againſt the Baptiſm of the Arians in the former part of the Dialogue, he ſpeaks not abſolutely his own or the Church's Senſe, but only diſcourſes Hypothetically upon the Principles, Suppoſitions and Aſſertions of his Adverſaries, to ſhew them the Abſurdities and unreaſonable Conſequences of their Opinions; if, as they ſaid, the Arians were Heathens, then they ought to rebaptize thoſe that were baptized by them; for no Heathen could give Chriſtian Baptiſm.

'Tis by this Key, by careful diſtinguiſhing what St. Jerom ſpeaks abſolutely, as his own plain Opinion, from what he diſcourſes only Hypothetically upon the Opinions of his Adverſaries, that any one muſt pretend to underſtand underſtand the eaſy Part of his Diſcourſe; and for that which is extemely difficult in it, as I pretend not to be Maſter of it, ſo I had rather be a Diſciple than a Teacher to others, in what I profeſs not to underſtand; as I do not that Part of his Diſcourſe, where he ſeems to ſay there can be no true Baptiſm without Remiſſion of Sins and the Gift of the Spirit, which I cannot reconcile with the Senſe of the Catholick Church, nor with the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm, which St. Jerom himſelf pleads for againſt Hilary the Deacon. Nor can I reconcile ſome other intricate Diſcourſe of his with the Luciferian, to the common known Rules and Practice of the Church, which yet my Learned Friend takes to be plain Indications, not only of his own Opinion, but alſo of the Church with him, That Lay-Baptiſm, in ordinary Caſes, is wholly Null and Void. Nay, he is ſo confident as to ſay, p. 63. "If it is not demonſtrable from that Dialogue, that St. Jerom "maintained the Baptiſm of Laymen (in ordinary Caſes at leaſt, howſoever it might "poſſibly be allowed in Extraordinary Caſes) "not only to be Unlawful, but alſo wholly "Invalid, and conſequently to be Repeated, "he will yield the Cauſe.

Now one would expect preſently to ſee as plain Words for this, as I had given for the Lawfulneſs of Laymens Baptizing in Caſes of Neceſſity: But in Vain; for all the Doctor pretends to alledge, is not the Aſſertion in plain Terms, but ſome little Appearance of it from two or three Paſſages of St. Jerom, where it is not certain whether he ſpeaks abſolutely either his own Senſe, or the Churches Senſe, but only Hypothetically upon the Suppoſitions of his Adverſaries. The Thing which the Doctor labours to demonſtrate out of St. Jerom, is, That the Arian Biſhops were true Biſhops, and not Laymen: For otherwiſe he knows not how to juſtify the Churches receiving ſuch as were baptized by them without Rebaptizing. Now I cannot but obſerve, in the firſt Place, that he is the moſt unfortunate Man in the World at Demonſtration: For he brings two Demonſtrations which contradict and deſtroy one another. Not long ago we heard him demonſtrating, out of St. Baſil, and that in the Name of the whole Church, that all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were only Laymen; aud here we have him Demonſtrating out of St. Jerom, and that in the Name of the Church too, that the Arian Hereticks are true Biſhops and Prieſts, and not Laymen. Now how will theſe Things conſiſt together? What Diſtinction in the Schools can free them from a Contradiction? And whether muſt the Reader hearken to the Doctor Demonſtrating out of St. Baſil or St. Jerom? For my Part, I have already ſaid, that I think his Demonſtration out of St. Baſil comes nearer the Churches Senſe of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, that they were not eſteemed Biſhops and Prieſts, but only Laymen; not becauſe the Doctor has ſolidy proved it, but becauſe I have, in this Diſcourſe, more ſubſtantially done it for him. And this is a ſufficient Prejudice againſt his pretended Demonſtration out of St. Jerom, in the Opinion of any wiſe and ſober Man, and might be a juſtifiable Reaſon for Diſmiſſing it without any farther Examination. But, becauſe my Friend ſhall not complain of my Incivility, that I would not give both his Demonſtrations a fair Hearing, and becauſe it will be of ſome uſe to the Learned Reader to ſet all Things right about St. Jerom, I will examine it a little more cloſely, and here follow the Doctor, κατὰ πόδα.

HE ſays, P. 64. "If St. Jerom's main To-"pick on which he builds all his Arguments, "was not then the known Senſe and Prac-"tice of the Catholick Church, his Contro-"verſy with the Luciferian was about his own "Private Opinion." And ſo it might be for any Thing the Doctor has ſaid to the Contrary. For I have ſhewed before, that in one Point St. Jerom plainly maintained a Private Opinion againſt the Senſe of the Church, when he ſaid, there could be no true Baptiſm without Remiſſion of Sins and the Grace of the Spirit conferred therein, which tends to diſannul all Heretical Baptiſms whatſoever. And if St. Jerom maintained a Private Opinion in this Point, why might he not do ſo in any other, and particularly in the Point of the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, if that had been really his Opinion, as I think it really was not?

BUT he ſays, this was not only his Opini-"on, but the main Point which he defended, "viz. The Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, and "that ſuch as had been ſo Invalidly bapti-"zed, ought to receive the true Baptiſm of "the Church: And hence, he ſays, it fol-"lows that this Doctrine was at that Time "the known Senſe and Practice of the Ca-"tholick Church." Whether this was the Senſe and Practice of the Catholick Church, we ſhall ſee more hereafter: At preſent I only obſerve, that the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm was not the main Point defended by St. Jerom, if it was defended at all. For any one that reads the Account I have given before of the Queſtions debated by St. Jerom, will eaſily perceive, that the main Point of all, and the very leading Queſtion to all the reſt was, Whether the Biſhops of the Council of Ariminum were really Arian Hereticks or not? And next to that was, Whether there was any Diſpenſing Power in the Catholick Church to receive ſuch Biſhops as lapſed into the Arian Hereſy, into any Clerical Station in the Church again? Theſe were the principal and leading Queſtions in the whole Debate, and the reſt only followed upon them: As whether the Arians and all other Hereticks were mere Heathens? Whether upon that Suppoſition, the Baptiſm of Hereticks was Valid, and not rather to be repeated? Whether any but a Christian Priest could administer Christian Baptism, &c. Therefore the Doctor is mistaken in saying, the Invalidity of Lay-Baptism was the main Point in Dispute, which was no Dispute at all, but only Hypothetical. And he would have done well, instead of blaming me for not carefully reading and considering St. Jerom's Dialogue, or not exactly stating the Dispute with the Luciferians, to have demonstrated to his Reader, that he had been more careful and exactly Judicious in reading it himself, by giving his Reader a full and accurate Account of the whole Matter, which would have been of more use than his two other pretended Demonstrations.

But there is one Thing, though not very material to the Cause, I must blame the Doctor for by the Way, which is, that he sometimes misrepresents me, as here he makes me say, The Arian Priests only were mere Heathens; whereas the Word, only, is thrust in from his own Invention: for I had no Intention to say, the Dispute was about the Priests only, or about the Arian Hereticks exclusive of all others. Again he says, Pag. 66. "I make "it the main Point in Controversy, whether "the Arians were mere Heathens, when in- "deed it was no more than a Thing heed- "lessly asserted by the Luciferian, and what he "yielded up immediately, and therefore the "Merits of the Cause did not depend upon "it." To which I must answer, That my Words are here changed again, A main Point, for one Point, only to make them a Point of Dispute to no purpose; which kind of Writing I desire my Friend to forbear for the future.

But, how does it appear that the Merits of the Cause, on the Side of the Luciferian, no ways depended upon that Point? Why, the Doctor says, he maintains his Cause after he had entirely given that up. Which shews how negligent my Friend was in considering the whole Scope of St. Jerom's Dialogue, at the same Time that he accuses me of want of Care in reading it. For, first, this very Point comes again in Play, and is argued upon, pro and con, by the two Disputants, in the fifth Chapter of the Dialogue. The Luciferian pleads [c] that an Arian Layman might be pardoned, because in the Simplicity of his Heart he took the Arian Church to be the Church of God, and so came thither to be baptized, believing in his own Faith. To which the Orthodox replies, You surprize me with strange News, in asserting, That a Man may be made a Christian by one who himself was no Christian. Does not this still go upon the Luciferian Supposition, that the Arians were no Christians, but Heathens? But suppose again, this Point had been entirely given up by Helladius; the Doctor might have known that this Helladius, the Luciferian Disputant, not only gives up this Point, but all other Points in Dispute, by degrees one after another, before he comes to the End of the Dialogue as owning himself Convicted and Converted by his Opponent. And will the Doctor hence conclude, that these were none of them Points of Dispute between the Catholicks and Luciferians, because this single Luciferian happened to give them all up entirely upon his Conviction? I believe if Dr. Brett should happen to give me up all the Points in Debate between us in this Book, as he has done one or two already, his Friends would hardly allow there were no Points of Dispute remaining, because of his Concessions or Conversion. And yet this is the Way the Doctor takes to make his Reader believe I was plainly mistaken in stating the Controversy between St. Jerom and the Luciferians.

But let us leave Skirmishing, and come to that Point which the Doctor calls the Merits of the Cause, and upon this join Issue with him. He says, P. 66. "That the Publick avowed "Doctrine and Practice of the Luciferian Sect, "was to receive the Arians upon the renounc- "ing their Heresy by Penance, and not by "Baptism, and receiving them all as Laymen, "none as Clergymen: In which Doctrine and "Practice they differed from the Orthodox, "who received the Arian Laymen as Laymen, "and their Clergy as Clergy, according to the "Orders they had received during their Here- "sy: So that an Arian Bishop; if he came over "to the Church, was still reputed a Bishop; a "Priest, a Priest; and a Deacon, a Deacon. "Whereas, if an Arian Bishop, Priest, or Dea- "con, came over to the Luciferians, he was re- "puted to be but a mere Layman.

The Doctor calls this the right State of the Matter, but he quotes no Author for it, and he did well, for he had none for some Parts of it, which are only his own Imagination and Invention, for want of an exact Understanding the Discipline of the ancient Church. What he says of the Luciferians is true; they admitted no Arian Bishops, Priests, or Deacons, but only in the Quality of Laymen: But then it is not true that the Church always, on the other Hand, admitted Arian Bishops, Priests, and Deacons to the same Station they had before, and much less all other Hereticks and Schismaticks whatsoever. For she very frequently denied them this Privilege, and by the Strictness of her ordinary Rules was obliged to do it; and therefore she very often reduced them entirely, by exact Discipline, to meer Lay-Communion, and reputed puted them no other than Laymen, neither before, while they continued in Hereſy, nor after their Return to the Church, as the Doctor will find it fully made out in the following Diſcourſe, and I doubt not to his Content and Satisfaction. This therefore could not be the Diſpute the Church had with the Luciferians. But the Queſtion was, Whether the Church was ſo tied to this Rule of Diſcipline in the exact Rigour and Strictneſs of it, as that ſhe could not, for any Prudential Reaſon, or upon any extraordinary Occaſion diſpence therewith, ſo as to allow an Arian Biſhop, or other Heretick, to become a Biſhop of the Catholick Church without polluting her own Communion? Lucifer ſaid, "The Church had no ſuch diſpenſing "Power to be exerciſed on any Occaſion." And therefore he broke Communion with the Church, for receiving thoſe 300 Biſhops of the Council of Ariminum, whom he thought worthy of Degradation, as Arian Hereticks. But the Church maintained her own Liberty and Power to diſpence with this Rule upon juſt and proper Occaſions: And therefore, as in ſome Caſes ſhe refuſed to receive Arians and other Hereticks among her Clergy, ſo when in Prudence and Charity ſhe found it requiſite, ſhe diſpenced with her Ordinary Rule, and took them in at Diſcretion. This aggrieved Lucifer, and that was the Occaſion of his Schiſm: He was for rejecting all Hereticks; the Church was for rejecting or receiving them at Diſcretion: He denied the Church's Power abſolutely in this Matter; the Church maintained her own Power and Liberty to act in the Affair, as Prudential Reaſons and the Exigencies of the Church ſhould require and direct her. Therefore ſhe did not receive Arian Biſhops, or any other Heretical Biſhops, promiſcuouſly in the State they were in, as the Doctor repreſents, but only as the Exigency of Affairs required: She ſometimes diſpenſed with her Rule, but more commonly reduced them to Lay-Communion; as the Doctor might have learned from the Canons of the Church, and even from St. Jerom himſelf in this Dialogue, if he had not (as uſual) been too haſty in making his Concluſions. For, as I have obſerved before, St. Jerom ſays, in the 7th Chapter of this Dialogue, That in Strictneſs of Diſcipline none were allowed to be Biſhops in the Church, who had once been Hereticks. Therefore the admitting them was not a Thing of Courſe, or Neceſſity, or Univerſal Practice, but only done by Way of Diſpenſation with the ordinary Rule, as a matter of Grace and Favour, or Expediency, as Prudence directed upon proper Occaſions; of which the Church always made herſelf Judge, and reſerved to herſelf the Liberty of acting this Way or that Way, as ſhe thought moſt expedient; which Lucifer, in his Stiffneſs and Moroſeneſs, would not allow. This was the true State of this Matter, whatever the Doctor has ſuggeſted to the contrary.

Now then let us ſee how St. Jerom argues with the Luciferian in Behalf of this Liberty and Power of the Church, and what Advantage the Doctor would fain make of his Argumentation. "Tell me, ſays St. Jerom, "why you receive a Layman coming over "from the Arians, and do not receive a Bi-"ſhop?" The Luciferian anſwers, "I receive "a Layman, becauſe he confeſſes that he has "erred, and the LORD deſireth the Repen-"tance, and not the Death of a Sinner. And "I, ſays the Orthodox Chriſtian, receive a "Biſhop, becauſe he confeſſes that he has er-"red, and the LORD deſireth the Repen-"tance, and not the Death of a Sinner." The Luciferian anſwers, "If he confeſſes that "he has erred, why does he continue a Bi-"ſhop? Let him depoſe himſelf from the "Prieſthood, and I will grant Pardon to the "Penitent." "I will anſwer you in your "own Words, ſays St. Jerom: If a Layman "confeſſes that he has erred, why does he "continue a Laick? Let him depoſe himſelf "from the Prieſthood of a Layman, that is, "his Baptiſm, and I will grant Pardon to the "Penitent. For it is written, He hath made us "a Kingdom and Prieſts unto his FATHER. And "again, An holy Nation, a Royal Prieſthood, a "choſen People. All that is lawful for a Chri-"ſtian is common as well to a Biſhop as a "Layman. He that does Penance condemns "his former Acts. If it be not lawful for a "penitent Biſhop to remain what he was, it "is not lawful for a penitent Layman to re-"main in that State for which he does Pe-"nance. —— We do not act inconſiſtently "with ourſelves; either we receive the Biſhop "with his People, whom he hath made Chri-"ſtians: Or, if we receive not the Biſhop, "we know that we ought alſo to reject the "People.

UPON this the Doctor asks this Queſtion: "Do not thoſe therefore, according to St. Je-"rom's Principle, and the Senſe and Practice "of the Catholick Church in his Time, act "inconſiſtently with themſelves, who are for "Receiving the diſſenting Laymen as Lay-"Chriſtians, and their Teachers alſo in the "Station of Laymen; but will not receive "thoſe who they ſuppoſe make them Chriſti-"ans by Baptiſm, as Clergymen? The Ca-"tholick Church, as he obſerves, did not re-"ceive any upon Repentance without Bap-"tiſm, except they came over from a Sect "whoſe Clergy were alſo received as Cler-"gymen."

IF the Doctor had truly underſtood the Diſcipline of the Primitive Church, he never would have asked ſuch a Queſtion as this. And he might have ſpared his Reflexion, if for no other Reaſon, yet for the Sake of his Mother the Church of England, whoſe known and avowed Practice, and not merely that of any private Men, it manifeſtly reflects upon. But it is not a greater Reflexion on the Church of England, than it is on the Practice of the whole Catholick Primitive Church, which in receiving thoſe who were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, very often received thoſe as Laymen, whoſe Teachers and Baptizers ſhe would not receive as Clergymen, but only in the Station of Laymen, as I intend to give the Doctor full Proof from another Sort of Authorities than what he here inſiſts upon. So that whatever pretended Inconſiſtency there is in the Thing, the Charge lights as heavy upon the whole Primitive Church, as it does upon any others. And yet, after all, If I have Underſtanding of this difficult Paſſage of St. Jerom, (for I will not pretend here to be exact Maſter of it) there is no Ground to make ſuch a Reflexion from his Argumentation. For St. Jerom ſeems here to me not to ſpeak abſolutely and dogmatically either his own Senſe always, or the Senſe of the Church, but to be arguing Hypothetically, and as we now ſay, ad hominem, with his Adverſaries, upon their own Principles and Practice. 'Tis plain enough he does ſo in ſome Expreſſions, as where he ſays, " If " a Layman confeſſes that he has erred, why " does he continue a Laick? let him depoſe " himſelf from the Prieſthood of a Layman, that " is, his Baptiſm, and I will grant Pardon to " the Penitent." This was not according to the Principles or Practice of the Church: For ſhe never depoſed Laymen from their Baptiſm, if once truly baptized by Hereticks; nor does St. Jerom plead for it, but only ſhews his Adverſaries what they ought to do according to their own Principles, who aſſerted, That all Hereticks were mere Heathens, and therefore, according to their Principles, Laymen ought to be depoſed from their Prieſthood, that is, their Baptiſm, as well as Clergymen from their Prieſthood, becauſe if Hereticks were mere Heathens, they could have no Pretence to Chriſtian Baptiſm. And therefore there was as much Reaſon to allow the Church her Liberty to receive Clergymen to their Prieſthood, if ſhe thought fit to do it, as the Luciferians took in receiving Laymen to their Prieſthood, which was their Baptiſm, even when their Principles led them to depoſe them. Therefore he charges the Luciferians as acting inconſiſtently with themſelves, and againſt their own Principles, whilſt the Church acted conſiſtently to her own Principles, which was to uſe her Liberty in receiving Clergymen to their Orders, if ſhe thought it requiſite in her own Wiſdom and Diſcretion. Not that the Church was bound to do this in all Caſes, or elſe reject the People with the Prieſts, as the Doctor pleads: Neither of which he will ever be able to prove to have been the Practice of the Church, either from St. Jerom or any other Author. For, as I ſaid before, it appears evidently in Fact, that ſhe often received Laymen, without obliging them to receive a new Baptiſm, at the ſame time that ſhe rejected the Prieſts that had given them Baptiſm, from their pretended Prieſthood. So that it ſeems pretty plain to me that St. Jerom is here only arguing Hypothetically with his Adverſaries; and if the Doctor would have uſed this Key, he might more happily have unlocked the dark Senſe and Meaning of his Author, and ſpared his unneceſſary Reflexions.

But the Doctor goes on again with St. Jerom, p. 69. " Wherefore I beſeech you, " ſays he, that you either allow him a Right " to offer Sacrifice whoſe Baptiſms you ap- " prove, or reject his Baptiſm, whom you " eſteem to be no Prieſt." Again, ſays he, I " do not at preſent either blame the Arians or " defend them: I keep to my Point. A Bi- " ſhop is received by us for the ſame Rea- " ſon for which a Layman is received." Here the Doctor, by a little Art, drops two Words at the End of the Sentence, which ſhould have been put in, to make the Reader underſtand the Drift of his Author. It ſhould have been, Received by you, meaning the Luciferians. For St. Jerom's Words are, Recipitur à vobis; whereas, as the Doctor has cited them, any one would believe that St. Jerom had ſaid, that a Biſhop was received by the Church for the ſame Reaſon that a Layman was received by her; when indeed St. Jerom ſays quite otherwiſe, " A Biſhop is received by us (Catholicks) " upon the ſame Foot as a Layman is received " by you (Luciferians.") Eadem ratione à nobis Epiſcopum recipi, qua Laicus à vobis recipitur. Which makes a wide Difference in the Matter, as I ſhall ſhew the Doctor by and by.

But he goes on ſtill with St. Jerom: " Therefore according to the Cuſtom of Boys " diſputing together, ſays he, what you ſhall " ſay, I will ſay; what you ſhall affirm, I " will affirm; what you ſhall deny, I will " deny. An Arian baptizes, therefore he is a " Biſhop: He does not baptize; do you deny " him to be a Lay-Chriſtian, and I do not re- " ceive him for a Prieſt. I will follow you " whitherſoever you go: We will both ſtick " in the Mire, or both get out of it." Here the Words, Tu refuta Laicum, & ego non recipio ſacerdotem, ſhould be rendred otherwiſe, " Do " you refuſe to receive the Layman, and then " I will not receive the Prieſt."

A little after the Luciferian argues thus: " A Layman, tho' baptized out of the Faith " of the Church" (ſo the Dr. reads it, Extra " Eccleſiæ Fidem baptizatus, which, in my Books of the Colen Edition, 1616, is, Extra Eccleſiam Fide baptizatus, baptized in the Faith, tho' out of the Church) " is received as a Penitent. " But a Biſhop ſhall not do Penance, becauſe " he is a Prieſt: Or if he ſhould do Penance, " he ceaſes to be a Biſhop. Therefore we " rightly receive a Layman to Penance, and " reject a Biſhop if he will continue in his " Prieſthood." St. Jerom replies, " Prove to " me, that a Layman, coming over from the " Arians, has Baptiſm, and I will not refuſe " to admit him to Penance. But, if he is no " Chriſtian, if he had not a Prieſt who could " make him a Chriſtian, how ſhall a Man do

" Penance,

" Penance, who does not yet believe?" The Luciferian answers, " Do you think it just, " that an Arian should be a Bishop?" " You " prove him to be a Bishop, says St. Jerom, " because you receive him whom he has bap- " tized. In this you are to be blamed, that " you separate from us, and yet agree with us " both in the Faith, and in the Reception of " the Arians.—— We receive a Bishop from " the Arians for the same Reason for which " you receive one baptized by them. We " agree in Faith, we agree in receiving " Hereticks, let us agree in Communion." The Luciferian replies, " Behold, I lift up " my Hands: I yield you have conquered " me."

THESE are the Doctor's long Citations out of St. Jerom, instead of which, one short plain Proposition, asserting the Necessity of Rebaptizing all that were baptized by Laymen, in ordinary Cases, as I had produced one for the Lawfulness of Laymens Baptizing in extraordinary Cases, had been much more to his Purpose. But he pretends not to find any such, or so much as point it out to his Reader; but only makes these two general Observations upon the whole. 1. " That I was " to blame for saying, St. Jerom was silent in " this Matter. 2. That St. Jerom has plainly " enough shewn what was the Sense of the " Catholick Church in this Point. And what- " soever might be his Opinion of Lay-Bap- " tism, in Cases of Necessity, it is certain " he was of Opinion, and the Church with " him, that Lay-Baptism in ordinary Cases, " was wholly Null and Void, and that Per- " sons so pretendedly baptized were not to " be received into the Church as Penitent " Christians, but as Gentiles by Baptism. For " it is evident from him, that if they were " not baptized with Episcopal Baptism, they " received no Baptism at all."

As to his first Observation, I think with Submission, I was so far from being to blame for saying St. Jerom was silent upon the Matter, that I should rather have been to blame if I had said otherwise, unless I could have proved it more Directly, Plainly, and Closely than the Doctor has done. It is an easy Matter to make a Flourish with dark Reasonings and ambiguous Words, as many Men have done with the intricate Part of this Dialogue of St. Jerom; and it is not a very easy Matter to make an ordinary Reader understand him, tho' I tell him he speaks not his own Sense many times, but only Hypothetically, to his Adversaries. Yet I hope the Doctor understands what I mean. Some of the most plausible Words the Doctor has urged are these: Reprobes ejus baptisma quem non existimas sacerdotem, Reject his Baptism whom you esteem to be no Priest. But it seems very probable to me, that St. Jerom here is not delivering Dogmatically his own Opinion, much less the Sense and Practice of the Church, but only shewing the Adversaries what they ought to do upon their own Principles. As any one that reads the whole Passage will easily perceive. The Luciferian had laboured in a long Discourse to prove, " That the Arian Bishops " ought not to be admitted as Bishops in the " Church, because they were the Disciples of " Antichrist, the Enemies of CHRIST, Blind " Guides, Salt without Savour, Idolaters, Sacri- " legious, and abundance more." And he also concluded, " That the Church by admitting " them, had as it were, by a little Leven, " [d] corrupted her whole Mass, whilst to " Day she received the Eucharist at the Hands " of him, whom the Day before she rejected " as an Idolater." To this St. Jerom replies, " Admit that what you say be true, let an " Arian Bishop be the Enemy of CHRIST, " let him be insipid Salt, a Lamp without " Fire, an Eye without Sight: All that you " can gain by this is, That he who has no " Salt himself, cannot season others, that a " blind Man cannot illuminate others, nor he " make others shine, whose own Light is ex- " tinct and his Lamp gone out. But why " then do you complain of the insipid Sea- " soner, while you eat of the Meat which he " has seasoned? Your Church shines by the " Light of his Fire, and do you still com- " plain that his Lamp is gone out? He gives " Eyes to you, and is he himself blind? " Wherefore I beseech you, either allow him " the Liberty of offering at the Altar, whose " Baptism you approve; or else refuse his " Baptism whom you do not esteem to be a " Priest. For it cannot be, that he who is " holy in the Ministration of Baptism, can be " a Sinner at the Altar."

WHO sees not now, that the plain Drift and Design of St. Jerom was to argue with and confute the Luciferians, upon their own Principles; by shewing them, that if an Arian Bishop was qualified to minister true Baptism (which they themselves supposed, for they received his Baptism without repeating it) then he was as well qualified to be a Priest, which he explains by offering Sacrifice

fice at the Altar: If he was qualified to baptize, he was qualified to offer Sacrifice at the Altar. And therefore, upon their Principles, they were obliged either to refuſe the Baptiſm of an Arian Biſhop (which yet they accepted,) or elſe to allow him Liberty of ſacrificing at the Altar, which they utterly refuſed. Whatever St. Jerom's Notions might be in themſelves, here is nothing in all this that clearly diſcovers them to us: For his Diſcourſe is all Hypothetical, and only Argument ad hominem, upon the Principles and avowed Practices of his Adverſaries. He does not ſay, That none but a Prieſt that could offer Sacrifice at the Altar, (which is the Notion of a Prieſt here ſpoken of) could baptize: For then neither Deacons in ordinary Caſes, nor Laymen in extraordinary Caſes of Neceſſity could have done it; for neither of theſe is allowed to offer Sacrifice at the Altar; and yet St. Jerom allows them both to miniſter Baptiſm Authoritatively in thoſe reſpective Caſes: But his Intention was only to ſhew his Adverſaries, that if they allowed an Arian Biſhop to baptize, they ought alſo to allow him to offer Sacrifice at the Altar, ſince a Biſhop or Prieſt cannot be debarred of one of theſe Offices and allowed the other: Either he has a Right to both, or a Right to neither; he cannot be Holy and a Prieſt at the Font in Baptiſm, and at the ſame Time Unholy and no Prieſt at the Altar. This was Rational Diſcourſe to a Luciferian, upon his own Hypotheſis, when the Queſtion was concerning an Arian Biſhop, Whether he had not as much Right to ſacrifice as to baptize? He that allowed the one to a Biſhop, ought in Reaſon to allow the other, or elſe, by Parity of Reaſon, equally to deny him both. But here is nothing poſitively aſſerted, but all upon Suppoſition. He does not here either abſolutely vindicate or condemn the Arian Baptiſm; he does not ſay, an Arian Biſhop has a Right to Sacrifice at the Altar, but only upon Suppoſition that he had a Right to baptize, then he could not be denied to have a Right to Sacrifice alſo. So that here is nothing abſolutely and poſitively determined by St. Jerom, concerning the abſolute Neceſſity of a Prieſt, in all Caſes, to miniſter Baptiſm; unleſs we diſtinguiſh the Prieſthood, as St. Jerom does elſewhere, into the Sacerdotium Clerici, & Sacerdotium Laici, the Prieſthood of a Clergyman and the Prieſthood of a Layman, which is, the Chriſtians Baptiſm: In which latter and large Notion it is neceſſary every Man ſhould be a Prieſt, that is, a baptized Chriſtian, that miniſters Chriſtian Baptiſm: For though the Luciferian was forced to maintain it upon his abſurd Principles, yet St. Jerom and all the Ancients utterly deny, that a Man that was a mere Heathen could give Chriſtian Baptiſm. But I do not think that St. Jerom here, in this Place, intended to determine who was the Miniſter of Baptiſm, but only to infer from the Principle and Conceſſion of the Luciferians, That if an Arian Biſhop had Power to baptize, then he had Power to offer Sacrifice at the Altar alſo: And ſo the Church was vindicated in receiving Arian Biſhops again into Office, even upon the Principle of the Luciferians. He does not here determine, Whether the Arians were true Biſhops and Prieſts or not; though he does elſewhere in the Negative: Nor whether the Church, in ſtrictneſs of Diſcipline, was obliged to receive them to the Epiſcopal Honour again; which in other Places he alſo plainly denies: But he only vindicates the Church's prudential Liberty in receiving them, from the Practice of the Luciferians, who, by the ſame Reaſon that they allowed them to baptize, ought to allow them to ſacrifice at the Altar alſo.

I HAVE been the longer in explaining this ſhort Paſſage of St. Jerom, becauſe the right Explication of it will help as a Key to open the Labyrinth of all the reſt of his dark and intricate Reaſonings, which Dr. Brett has choſen to be the Groundwork of his Demonſtration. This ſhews his Meaning, when he ſays, " I do not at preſent either Blame " the Arians or Defend them: I keep to my " Point: A Biſhop is received by us upon " the ſame Reaſon as a Layman is received " by you. What you ſhall affirm, I will af- " firm; what you ſhall deny, I will deny. " An Arian baptizes, therefore he is a Bi- " ſhop: He does not baptize; do you re- " fuſe to receive the Layman, and I will " not receive the Biſhop." Is not this the Point he ſtill keeps to, to follow the Luciferians and argue with them upon their own Principles? Here is nothing of St. Jerom's poſitive Senſe, or the Church's in all this, but only to catch the Adverſaries in all their Windings and Turnings, upon their own Hypotheſis. Otherwiſe St. Jerom would ſpeak Contradictions, that an Arian was a Biſhop, and not a Biſhop; that he could baptize, and not baptize; that the Church did both receive him, and not receive him.

So again, when he ſays, " Prove to me " that a Layman coming over from the " Arians has Baptiſm, and I will not refuſe " to admit him to Penance. But if he is " not a Chriſtian, if he had not a Prieſt to " make him a Chriſtian, how ſhall a Man " do Penance, who does not yet believe?" St. Jerom does not here deny abſolutely, that an Arian's Baptiſm might be received (for the Church actually received them) but only upon the Hypotheſis of the Luciferians, who ſaid all Arians, as well their Lay-Prieſts as Clergy-Prieſts, were mere Heathens, and conſequently there were no Prieſts of any Kind among them that could give Chriſtian Baptiſm: For a Man muſt be a Chriſtian Prieſt of ſome ſort or other, and not a mere Heathen, before he is qualified to give Chriſtian Baptiſm. So that his ſaying, A Man is no Chriſtian, ſtian, if he had not a Prieſt to make him a Chriſtian, makes nothing for the abſolute Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm in general, (which St. Jerom himſelf plainly allows to Laymen, or Lay-Prieſts, as he calls them, in Caſe of Neceſſity) but only upon the Hypotheſis of the Luciferians, who made all Arians no Prieſts, but mere Heathens.

IN the laſt Place, when the Luciferian demands, "Do you think it juſt that an Arian "ſhould be a Biſhop?" St Jerom replies, "You prove him to be a Biſhop, becauſe "you receive him whom he has baptized." This Anſwer is ſtill made to the Luciferian upon his own Practice. St Jerom does not aſſert, that every Man that baptizes is a Biſhop; for then a Presbyter and a Deacon would be a Biſhop, and a Layman would be a Biſhop, becauſe he baptizes in Caſe of Neceſſity: But he only ſays, if the Luciferians allowed an Arian Biſhop to baptize, their own very Practice proved he might be allowed to exerciſe any other Epiſcopal Acts, and they had no Reaſon to quarrel with the Church, as they did, for admitting Arian Biſhops to officiate in the Church again, when in Prudence ſhe thought it requiſite ſo to do, ſince they themſelves allowed them to exerciſe one Epiſcopal Act, viz. Baptiſm, and that was ſufficient to juſtify the Church in receiving them again to officiate at the Altar; ſince no juſt Reaſon could be aſſigned, why a Biſhop ſhould be allowed to baptize, and not alſo be admitted (if the Church thought fit) to offer Sacrifice at the Altar.

I BELIEVE any reaſonable Man will now ſee the whole Tendency of St. Jerom's Diſcourſe in all theſe Paſſages, that it was not to determine the Point of the Invalidity of Lay Baptiſm, but to juſtify the Church in her Prudence and Condeſcenſion toward the Arian Biſhops, upon the Principles of the Luciferians, as I have explained it. And therefore I cannot yet think myſelf to blame for ſaying St. Jerom was ſilent in this Matter, however Dr. Brett is of a different Opinion.

BUT admit St. Jerom had as clearly delivered his Opinion againſt the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes, as the Doctor imagines: Yet it does not ſo certainly follow from hence, as to amount to a Demonſtration, that the whole Church muſt needs be of the ſame Opinion: For might not St. Jerom miſtake the Senſe and Practice of the Church as well as another Man? Or miſtake her in this Point as well as in ſome others? Might he not miſtake the Senſe of the Church then, as well as either Dr. Brett or I do now miſtake the Senſe and Practice of the Church of England, who deliver contrary Opinions about her, and therefore one of us muſt needs be miſtaken? If St. Jerom had never ſo plainly delivered this as the Senſe of the Church, yet if there be greater Evidence from the Church herſelf, and ſuch Evidence as cannot be contradicted, that it was otherwiſe; then the Teſtimony of the Church herſelf, and not St. Jerom, is to be believed in this Caſe. And that thus it was, I will prove to the Doctor by another ſort of Demonſtration than that which he pretends to. For I will ſhew it plainly from the Hiſtory of the firſt Six General Councils and many others (which in full Conſent with one another are the beſt Evidence of the Church's Senſe and Practice) that ſhe received the Baptiſm of thoſe whom ſhe accounted Laymen. For all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, when once Convicted and Degraded, were no other than Laymen in her Opinion. Which if I ſhew the Doctor plainly to be true, then I hope he will ſubmit to the Force of the Argument, which carries in it the Evidence of a Demonſtration, ſince it is as good Proof as the Nature of the Subject is capable of: And we ſhall need no longer Diſpute or Cavil about St. Jerom or any other Private Author, when the Queſtion is once ſo fully decided by the Supreme Authority of the Church. This therefore is what I will try with the Doctor, and the Gentlemen of his Opinion, in the following Diſcourſe.

SECT. 7. The Teſtimony of Chryſoſtom no Evidence againſt the Baptiſm of Laymen in extraordinary Caſes.

AND here for the ſame Reaſon I might have omitted what the Doctor ſays of St. Chryſoſtom, P. 53. who is the only remaining Author the Doctor pretends to urge for his Cauſe. I had ſaid before, That Dr. Forbes had utterly miſtaken the Meaning of St. Chryſoſtom. For when Chryſoſtom confines the Office of Baptiſm to the Hands of a Prieſt, he only means in ordinary Caſes; otherwiſe Deacons who are no Prieſts, would be abſolutely excluded from it, in all Caſes whatſoever, as well as Laymen: And yet Chryſoſtom allows Deacons to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity; which makes it evident that his Diſcourſe only relates to the Miniſtration of Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes. To which the Doctor replies, That St. Chryſoſtom here by a Prieſt means only a Biſhop. Which, in my Opinion, inſtead of mending the Matter, makes it ſo much worſe. For then, according to Dr. Forbes's Interpretation, no Valid Baptiſm could be adminiſtred but by the Hands of a Biſhop. Yet Dr. Brett ſays, by the Biſhop's Authority Presbyters and Deacons may do it. But I conceive there is ſome Difference between the Biſhop's Hands and his Authority, and ſo Dr. Forbes thought, who makes this Paſſage conclude as much againſt Deacons as Laymen, and that with Reaſon enough, upon his Suppoſition, that none but a Prieſt, with his own Hands actually, can have Authority to baptize in any Caſe whatſoever. For the Hands of a Deacon were not the Hands of a Prieſt, either in the Opinion of Chryſoſtom or Dr. Forbes, whether we underſtand underſtand by a Prieſt either the Biſhop alone, or a Biſhop and Presbyter together. So that this Paſſage, in the Senſe which Dr. Forbes put upon it, holds as much againſt Deacons as Laymen. And Dr. Brett, inſtead of Vindicating Dr. Forbes, runs to another Thing, and tells us, Deacons may have Authority from the Biſhop to baptize, which Dr. Forbes utterly denies. So theſe Gentlemen claſh together, and yet neither of them hit the Truth, becauſe they would not rightly underſtand Chryſoſtom of miniſtring Baptiſm in ordinary Caſes only, which I ſhewed was all that poſſibly could be his Meaning.

But Dr. Brett ſays, "Chryſoſtom's Opinion "is plainly ſo far on their Side, as to ſhew "the Invalidity of all Antiepiſcopal Baptiſms, "all Baptiſms by ſuch as are Uncommiſſioned, "Unauthorized by a Biſhop." To which I anſwer, Though all ſuch Baptiſms ſhould be allowed to be Invalid, yet this is more than the Doctor can prove out of this Place of Chryſoſtom, unleſs mere Silence be a Proof; for Chryſoſtom ſays nothing here expreſsly of Commiſſioned or Uncommiſſioned, Authorized or Unauthorized, Epiſcopal or Antiepiſcopal Baptiſm; but only that Baptiſm cannot be given by any but the Hands of a Prieſt, which I interpret of the ordinary Miniſtration by a Biſhop or a Presbyter; but Dr. Forbes extends it to all Caſes, not only ordinary but extraordinary, and thereby excludes Deacons from the Power of Baptizing, as well as Laymen; Dr. Brett confines the Office of Baptiſm to the Hands of a Biſhop, but ſays he may Commiſſion a Presbyter or a Deacon, yet not a Layman, which is only telling a Man's own Senſe without his Author, for Chryſoſtom's Words make no ſuch Diſtinctions here, and the Doctor ſhould have proved his Senſe of this Place (as I did) from others in the ſame Author, if he had intended to ſatisfy a Judicious Reader.

But the Doctor goes a little farther and ſays, Chryſoſtom does not give his own private Opinion, but the known Judgment and Practice of the Church. Yet the Reader muſt take this upon his Word too, for he offers no manner of Proof of it, but only by ſaying, the Church had confined this Charge to the Epiſcopal Office, and that, he thinks, Invalidated all ſuch Baptiſms as had not the Biſhop's Commiſſion. Now this is the Thing to be tried between the Doctor and me, Whether all Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Baptiſm that was adminiſtred by Perſons who were no actual Prieſts, but Laymen, was declared wholly Invalid and Void, and as ſuch ordered to be repeated by the Church. The Doctor affirms it upon the Teſtimony of St. Cyprian, St. Baſil, St. Jerom, and St. Chryſoſtom, which I have now examined; and I deny it upon the ſtrongeſt Evidence of all the General and Particular Councils of the Church, whoſe Decrees and Orders muſt be owned to be the moſt convincing Proof of the Church's Senſe and Practice. From which I ſhall ſhew, That the Church received the Baptiſm of ſome Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who never had any true Orders from any Epiſcopal Ordination; and the Baptiſm of others, whom ſhe herſelf Degraded, and took their Orders from them, leaving them altogether in an Unauthorized State, and diveſted of all Sacerdotal Power; not having ſo much as the Name, much leſs the Dignity and Authority of Prieſts, but entirely reduced to the State and Quality of Laymen. If I can prove theſe Things to my Friend in a Way of the plaineſt Demonſtration to his Satisfaction, I hope I ſhall have no farther Diſpute with him, whatever I may have with others, upon this Subject, becauſe I know him to be an Ingenuous Man, and he has promiſed to yield the Cauſe upon fair and rational Conviction. And here I will do him that Juſtice to ſay, He has managed the Diſpute with as much Strength and Learning as the Cauſe would bear, and with as much Good Manners and Chriſtian Temper as any Diſputant in the preſent Age; for which he is truly to be commended, and will not fail thereby to advance his Reputation with thoſe, who cannot otherwiſe fall in with his miſtaken Notions, which happen to run ſo croſs to the General Senſe and Practice of the Catholick Church.

CHAP. I.

That Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, when once they are Convicted, and legally Cenſured, are no longer Authorized to miniſter Baptiſm, or officiate as true Prieſts and Miniſters of GOD and the Church; but that thenceforth all their Acts are Unauthorized and done only by Uſurpation.

This proved from the Hiſtory of the firſt Six General Councils, and their Proceedings againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and other Delinquents.

SECT. 1. How Meletius was Depoſed and Diveſted of all Miniſterial Authority, by the Council of Nice.

THE Firſt General Council was the famous Council of Nice, which all Men Reverence, and which alone were ſufficient to put an End to this whole Diſpute. This Council was called by Conſtantine in the Year 325, to allay the Flames that had ſometime before been raiſed by Meletius and Arius in the Church. Meletius was Biſhop of Lycopolis in Egypt, who had for a long time headed a Schiſm of his own making, againſt the Biſhops of Alexandria, his lawful Metropolitans. The Occaſion of his Schiſm was this: Meletius, in the Time of the Diocletian Perſecution, had denied the Faith and offered Sacrifice to Idols; for which, and ſome other Reaſons, he was, according to the Laws of the Church, depoſed by [a] Peter Biſhop of Alexandria, who preſently after ſuffered Martyrdom.

tyrdom. Meletius, inſtead of ſubmitting to this legal Cenſure, raiſed a Schiſm upon it, firſt againſt Peter, then againſt Achillas and Alexander his Succeſſors; ordaining Biſhops and Prieſts throughout Egypt and Thebais, to ſtrengthen his Faction; and this he continued to do to the Time of the Council of Nice. The Council therefore, to correct this Preſumption, and confirm the Sentence which before had been paſſed upon him, made this peremptory Decree againſt him, which is in their Synodical Epiſtle ſent to the Churches of Alexandria, Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, and recorded by Socrates [b] and Theodoret, "That Meletius ſhould have no manner of "Power or Authority, either of Ordaining "or making Elections; that he ſhould be "confined to his own City, and neither ap"pear in the Country, nor in any other "City upon ſuch an Occaſion, but only re"tain the bare Name and Title of his Dig"nity. And for ſuch Biſhops and Presbyters "as had been ordained by him, they ſhould "not be admitted to officiate as Miniſters "in the Catholick Church, till they were "Μυστικωτέρα χειροτονία βεβαιωθέντες, Confirmed or "Authorized by a more Sacred Impoſition "of Hands, together with the Approbation "and Allowance of the Biſhop of Alexandria." Which Valeſius and Du Pin, and other Learned Men, take to imply a new Ordination: However, it certainly implies a new Authority and Confirmation from the Church, and ſuppoſes that all their pretended Miniſterial Offices before were done without competent and juſt Authority, and only by mere Uſurpation: And if they continued to act as they had done before, all their Miniſterial Acts would be Unauthorized, eſpecially after ſuch a Formal and Judicial Degradation by the greateſt Power of the Church in a General Council. This, I think, is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day, That either the Council of Nice had no Authority from GOD, by the Power of the Keys, to deprive Meletius of his Authority, for his Contumacy and juſt Deſerts; or elſe that Meletius had no Authority, after this, to act as a Biſhop of the Church; nor any of his Accomplices, who only derived from him, any Authority to perform any Miniſterial Offices, till they had firſt received a more competent Authority from the Catholick Church. And yet the Council made no Decree that the Baptiſms of all theſe ſhould be annulled, and that ſuch as came over from them ſhould be rebaptized again; as ſhe did in the Caſe of the Paulianiſts, in her Nineteenth Canon: Becauſe though the Meletians and Paulianiſts were equally diveſted of the Church's true Authority to miniſter Baptiſm or any other Sacred Office, yet the one baptized in the Form of the Church, and the other did not, which was the Reaſon of this Diſtinction. And it plainly ſhews the Senſe of the Nicene Fathers, that they did not think a Baptiſm that was given in due Form, was neceſſarily to be repeated, becauſe given by a Perſon who had no competent Authority to give it: For then they would have ordered the Meletians to have been rebaptized, as well as the Paulianiſts; which yet neither they nor any other Council have done; nor is there to be found any Inſtance of ſuch a Meletian's Rebaptization, that I know of, in all Ancient Hiſtory.

AFTER this Decree Meletius, as ſoon as he came back to Lycopolis, went on in his own Way, in Contempt of the Council, ordaining Biſhops to propagate his Schiſm, as he had done before. For as Baronius obſerves out of Athanaſius [c], he made Arſenius Biſhop of Hypſele in Thebais, and Sozomen [d] adds, that a little before his Death he Ordained one John to be his Suceſſor at Lycopolis. Now will any one ſay, that Meletius had Authority to ordain theſe Men, when the Council had taken all Power and Authority from him? If not, then Meletius was no true Prieſt or Miniſter of GOD and his Church, but all his Acts were Unauthorized, and done only by Uſurpation.

SECT. 2. How Arius was Depoſed and Anathematized by the ſame Council.

THE ſame Council ſhewed her Authority a little farther in the Condemnation of Arius, and thoſe Biſhops that joined with him in his Hereſy: For they not only Depoſed them, but Anathematized them alſo. Arius himſelf had been once or twice Depoſed before by Alexander, his Biſhop, and declared Excommunicate or Anathematized in a full Synod of Egyptian Biſhops. Socrates [e] ſays, Alexander called a Synod of many Biſhops, where Arius, and thoſe that embraced his Opinions, were Depoſed: and Alexander wrote a Synodical or Encyclical Epiſtle, to give notice to all other Churches. This Epiſtle is recorded by Socrates, wherein it is ſaid, That they were caſt out of the Church, and Anathematized, and declared to be Aliens both from the Church and the Catholick Faith. And Alexander ſays, He therefore intimated the Fact to other Churches, that they might do as became Chriſtians, that is, ſhew their Averſation to all ſuch as ſpake againſt CHRIST, or held ill Opinions of him, as Men that were Enemies to GOD, and Deſtroyers of Mens Souls; and that they might not bid them, God Speed, and ſo become Partakers in their Sins, as St. John words it. Epiphanius [f] takes Notice of the ſame, and ſays, Alexander tick and Authoritative Acts had reinstated them.

IN the sixth Canon all who shall pretend to evacuate or set aside any of the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, if they be Bishops or Clerks, they do totally fall from their Order, τῆ ἰδίᾳ παντελῶς ἐκπίπτειν βαθμῷ, and if Laymen, they are Excommunicate. And can Men have the Authority of Priests or Bishops, when they are totally fallen from their Order? No certainly, no more than Laymen have a Right or Authority to demand the Communion, whilst they are Excommunicate by the Council.

THE last Canon decrees, That if any one use the Impious Creed of Theodorus of Mopsuestia, proposed by Charisius in the Council, or any other Creed beside that of Nice, if they were Bishops, they were deprived of their Episcopal Order, and if Clerks, deprived of their Clerical Order, ἀλλοτρίους εἶναι τοὺς ἐπισκόπους τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, καὶ τοὺς κληρικοὺς τοῦ κλήρου, and if Laymen, they were Anathematized, or under the Sentence of the greater Excommunication.

THESE seven are all the Canons which the Council of Ephesus made, and we see they are all upon this one Point, to take away the Ministerial Authority of Bishops and Priests from them, in Case of Heresy or any such Crime, for which they incurred the Censures of the Synod: And a Man may as well say, That Black is White, as say, That the Council of Ephesus thought these Men had still the Authority of Ministers of CHRIST, when they, by the Authority of GOD and CHRIST, had taken their Authority from them. And yet the Baptisms given by such Men in this Unauthorized State, were not repeated: the Persons they baptized, while they were divested of their Ministerial Power, were not rebaptized when they came over to the Church, but only received with Imposition of Hands and Confirmation, as I have shewed, particularly of the Nestorians, in the First Part of this Scholastical History, to which I refer the Reader.

SECT. 5. How the Council of Chalcedon Deposed Eutyches and Dioscorus and their Adherents.

COME we now to the fourth General Council, the Great Council of Chalcedon, where above Six-hundred Bishops met, under Marcian the Emperor, An. 451. to condemn the Heresies of Eutyches and Dioscorus, who denied the Consubstantiality of CHRIST's Humane Nature with that of ours, as Arius had denied the Consubstantiality of his Divine Nature with that of the Father. Eutyches had been once Condemned before in the Council of Constantinople under Flavian, An. 448, the Acts of which Council are inserted into the first Action or Session of the Council of Chalcedon. There we find the first Sentence of Deprivation passed upon him in these Terms, by Flavian and 56 Bishops and Archimandrites: "We decree him, by the Pow-"er of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, whom he "hath Blasphemed, to be deprived of his "Priestly Order [e], and our Communion, "and the superintendency of his Monastery; "and all those who converse with him, to "be obnoxius to the same Excommunicati-"on." And there they call him only, A Quondam Presbyter, ὁ πάλαι πρεσβύτερος, as supposing him to be no longer a Presbyter after he was thus Deposed from his Order. This Decree indeed was pretendedly cancelled by the Second Council of Ephesus, commonly called, The Latrocinal Synod, or, The Synod of Robbers, because it turned the Temple of GOD into a Den of Thieves, by Condemning Flavian, and Absolving Eutyches [f], at the Instigation of Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria. But the Attempt of this Synod was quickly reversed by the Authority of the Great Council of Chalcedon, which Condemned both Dioscorus and Eutyches in a very remarkable Manner. Dioscorus is often Deposed in these Forms: Διόσκορον ὁ Θεὸς καθεῖλεν, GOD [g] hath Deposed Dioscorus; CHRIST hath Deposed Dioscorus [h]; CHRIST hath Deposed the Murderer: The Holy Synod hath divested him of Episcopal Dignity [i] and Deprived him of all the Honour and Ministry of the Priesthood.

AND it is farther remarkable, that in the Sentence of Deposition pronounced against him, they declare him Deprived of all Sacerdotal Grace and Office without hopes [k] of Restitution, because he contumaciously contemned the Citations and Admonitions of the Synod. Liberatus takes Notice of the same Things in his Account of this Council. He says, The whole Council [l] cryed out, GOD hath Deposed Dioscorus, GOD hath Deposed the Murderer. And that they gave it in Command to the Clergy of Alexandria then present at Chalcedon, that they should not henceforward ward esteem him a Bishop, but look upon him as one entirely Degraded from his Order. And because some thought that Dioscorus might recover his Bishoprick again, they published an Edict, declaring Dioscorus to be irrecoverably deprived of his Honour. Can any Thing be more Solemn, Full, or Authentick than this Deposition? which is said to be done by GOD and CHRIST; which deprives him not only of Episcopacy, but of all Ecclesiastical Ministry and Sacred Function; which orders his own Clergy to look upon him as no Bishop, but as an Abject or Castaway, irrecoverably degraded, without hopes of Restitution; that he was expelled the College of Bishops, and the Order of the Priests, and had now not so much as the Name or Appellation of a Bishop left him. Can any Man think they took him for an Authorized Minister of CHRIST, after they themselves, by the Power of CHRIST, had so solemnly Unauthorized him, without hopes of Restitution? Whatever there may be in the Indelible Character of a Bishop or Priest, it is certain this Council did not think it authorized him to Act as a Bishop, after so full and ample a Deposition. Though we should suppose it preserved him in a Capacity to minister as a Priest, without a new Ordination, if ever the Council should think fit to restore him to his Ministerial Authority again; yet he could not be said to minister with Authority, whilst he remained in that deposed State, and all the Power of Heaven and Earth had taken his Authority from him. And yet we no where read, that the Baptisms given by Dioscorus or his Adherents, were at any Time Repeated; or that any Eutychians were rebaptized upon their Return to the Catholick Church.

THE Condemnation of Eutyches himself was Parallel to this of Dioscorus. I shall but trouble the Reader with one Instance of it, out of the Edict of the Emperor Marcian, where he Confirms the Acts and Sentence of the Council against him. In Crab's Edition it is inserted into the third Session of the Council, p. 866. But in Labbe's Edition it is found at the End of all the Acts, among other Records relating to this Council; and it is in these Words: "By this Law [m] we decree, That they "who are deceived by the Error of Eutyches, "shall have no Bishop, nor Presbyter, nor "have, nor create, nor name any Men Clerks; "and that Eutyches himself shall be totally de"prived of the Name of Presbyter, of which "he is unworthy and divested. But if any "shall presume, against this our Order, to "create Bishops or Presbyters, or other "Clerks, both they that create such Clerks, "and they that are so created, or assume to "themselves the Degree of Clerks, shall have "their Goods Confiscated, and be confined to "perpetual Banishment." Now then, if according to the Sentence of the Council, and this Ratification of it, Eutyches and his Adherents were so deprived of all Ministerial Offices, that they were not so much as to have the very Name of Bishops or Presbyters allowed them, nor might create any under those Titles: What Authority could the Eutychians have after this to minister Baptism, or perform any Acts of the Ministerial Function? They might do the Things indeed, but they had no Authority to do them: They were as much Usurpers of the Office as the merest Layman. All the Difference was, that the one never had Authority, and the other once had Authority, but forfeited and lost it, and, by their Heresy and Obstinacy, reduced themselves to a State and Condition one Degree below Laymen, by suffering themselves to be legally Anathematized and cast out of the Communion of the Church. And yet after all, the Canons assure us, That they who were baptized in due Form by these unauthorized Usurpers, were not rebaptized, but only had their Deficiencies supplied and compleated by Imposition of Hands and a proper Form of Confirmation.

I COULD give other Instances to the Purpose out of the remaining Acts of this Council, but I chuse rather to say something of its Canons; among which there are no less than Eight, which specify certain Crimes for which a Clerk is deposed or fallen from his Order. The second Canon is against Ordination for Money, in which Case both the Ordainer and Ordained, and also any other who is Instrumental or a Mediator in the Crime, if he be a Clerk, is deprived of his Order, Τῆ ὀικείᾳ ἐκπιπτέτω βαθμῷ. So if a Clerk forsake his own Church without Leave, by the Tenth Canon he incurs the same Censure, Ἐκπίπτειν τῆ ἰδίᾳ βαθμῷ. If a Bishop procure his See by a Pragmatick Sanction, to be erected into a Metropolis to the Prejudice of his lawful Metropolitan, by the Twelfth Canon he makes himself liable to the like Degradation.

BY the Eighteenth Canon, Clergymen who are found guilty of Treason, or Conspiracy against the Civil Government, are wholly to be degraded from their Order, Ἐπιπίπτωσαν πάντη τῆ ὀικείᾳ βαθμῷ.

BY the Twenty-second Canon, Clergymen who commit Robbery upon the Goods of a deceased Bishop, are liable also to be deposed.

AND they who under Pretence of Marriage take Women by Force, or give Assistance to to any that do ſo, are by the Twenty-ſeventh Canon ſubjected to the ſame Cenſure.

THE Twenty-ninth Canon ſays, It is Sacrilege to degrade a Biſhop to the Order of Presbyter: But if a juſt Cauſe removes him from the Epiſcopal Function, then he ought not to retain the Place of a Presbyter.

NOW upon all theſe Canons I deſire to know, Whether if a Clerk be formally and judicially depoſed from his Order, as theſe Canons ſuppoſe, he has then any longer Authority to exerciſe the Miniſterial Offices of his Function? To ſay, He has Authority ſtill, ſeems to fly in the Face of all theſe Canons, and cut the Sinews of all Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and leave the Church without a juſt Power of Cenſure. But ſuppoſing him to have no Authority after ſuch a Depoſition, what if in Spite and Contradiction to theſe Canons, he will go and joyn with Hereticks, or ſet up a παρασυναγωγὴ, Conventicle of his own, erect an Altar againſt an Altar, and there baptize, and perform all other Acts of the Miniſterial Function, as many degraded Biſhops and Presbyters did: The Queſtion is, Whether all Perſons baptized by ſuch a degraded, unauthorized Biſhop or Prieſt, were rebaptized by the Catholick Church? If they were, my Learned Opponents might eaſily have produced ſome Order of one of theſe General Councils to have proved it: If they were not rebaptized, as it is evident they were not; then it is reaſonable to conclude, as I here do, that the bare Want of Authority in the Adminiſtrator of Baptiſm, did not wholly annul or make void the Baptiſm that was given in due Form by an Unauthorized Perſon; but had its want of Authority, with its other Deficiencies, ſupplied by the Authority of the Church in a ſubſequent Impoſition of Hands and Confirmation; as is clearly evinced from the Hiſtory of theſe Four firſt General Councils, compared with what has been ſaid before of the Method of receiving ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks into the Communion of the Catholick Church. This Argument, I think, carries with it the Conviction and Strength of a Demonſtration. The Baptiſm of Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, is the Baptiſm of Unauthorized Perſons, according to the Senſe of the Four firſt General Councils.

BUT the Baptiſm of Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, if miniſtred in due Form, was always received by the Church without Rebaptizing.

THEREFORE the Baptiſm of Unauthorized Perſons, if miniſtred in due Form, was always received by the Church without Rebaptizing.

SECT. 6. Of the Condemnation of Anthimus and Severus in the Council of Conſtantinople, under Mennas, An. 536.

BUT I go on with the preſent Hiſtory. There are Two Synods of Conſtantinople which lay ſome Claim to the Title and Appellation of the Fifth General Council, both of them in the Time of Juſtinian, the former under Mennas, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, An. 536, and the other under Pope Vigilius, An. 553. In Crab's Edition of the Councils, that under Mennas has the Name of the Fifth General Council; but in Labbe that Title is given to the latter. I ſhall joyn them together, and out of both we ſhall be ſure to have a General Council. That under Mennas, was called againſt Anthimus, Biſhop of Trebiſond; Severus, Biſhop of Antioch; Peter, Biſhop of Apamea; and Zoaras, a Monk; with other Hereticks, who went by the Name of Acephali, and were a Branch of the Eutychian Hereſy, but they were called Acephali, that is, without Head, becauſe the firſt Authors of the Sect at Alexandria, ſeparated from their Biſhop, and held Conventicles, and gave Baptiſms in private Houſes, which are therefore frequently called, Παρασυναγωγαὶ, and Παραβαπτίσματα, in the Acts of this Council. Anthimus was firſt condemned by Pope Agapetus, whoſe Epiſtle was read in Council, declaring him [n] to be neither worthy the Name of a Catholick, nor the Name of a Prieſt. And this Sentence was ratified and confirmed over and over again by the Council, who more ſolemnly pronounce [o] him to be caſt out of the Prieſthood, and diveſted for the future of all Sacred Appellation, Dignity, Energy or Power whatſoever. And in another Place, [p] Excommunication is added to the Sentence of Depoſition: So that nothing could be wanting to deprive him of all manner of Sacerdotal Authority and Power. The like Sentence of Depoſition was pronounced againſt Severus, by Four ſeveral Synods, whoſe Synodical Epiſtles are related and approved in this Council, viz. the Synod of Jeruſalem, the Synod of Tyre, the Synod of Syria Secunda, and a former Synod of Conſtantinople, whoſe [q] Sentence runs in theſe Words: "We ſubject this Severus to a perpetual Anathema, and deprive him of all Honour, Name, "Dignity, Operation or Power belonging to "a Prieſt or a Chriſtian, and exclude him "from the Holy Communion, according to "the Canons." After this Depoſition Juſtinian publiſhed an Imperial Edict againſt them, which which is ſtill extant among his Novels [r], wherein he confirms all that had been done by the Church in the Depoſition of Anthimus, Severus, Peter, and Zoaras, and their Accomplices, forbidding them to hold Conventicles, or to baptize, or give the Euchariſt, or preach, or do any other Office of the Sacerdotal Function. Now it is well known, that notwithſtanding both the Deprivation of ſo many Synods, and the Imperial Edicts againſt them, theſe Men ſet up Conventicles, and adminiſtred Baptiſm therein. For Complaint was made of this againſt Zoaras the Monk, in the Council under Mennas [s], and he and his Accomplices were again Cenſured upon it by the general Sentence of the Synod. But thoſe Cenſures did not extend to the Rebaptization of all ſuch as had been baptized by theſe unauthorized Perſons. The Hereticks were indeed diveſted of Miniſterial Power, but thoſe whom they baptized were received as the Laws directed the Eutychians ſhould be, by Impoſition of Hands, without Rebaptizing, upon their Repentance.

SECT. 7. How the Defenders of the Tria Capitula were degraded in the Fifth General Council of Conſtantinople.

THE other Council of Conſtantinople under Juſtinian, An. 553. which in the new Editions of the Councils, now bears the Title of the Fifth General Council, conſiſted of One hundred ſixty-five Biſhops, who were called together to condemn the Tria Capitula, i. e. Three noted Books, which the Neſtorians made great Uſe of to defend their Hereſy, which were, The Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſtia; The Epiſtle of Maris to Ibas the Perſian; and, The Reflexions of Theodoret upon Cyril of Alexandria. Here alſo the Errors of Origen were condemned. But all theſe were dead Men and gone to another World to anſwer for themſelves. All therefore that the Cenſures or Anathema's of the Council could ſignify to them, was little, ſave only as they were of Uſe to the Living, to deter them from embracing or encouraging the Errors of the Dead. And, to do this effectually, they made a ſolemn Decree, That if any one [t] endeavoured, either by Teaching or Writing, to propagate Tenets contrary to what had been piouſly determined in the Council; if he were a Biſhop or a Clerk, he ſhould be deprived of his Epiſcopal or Clerical Order; or if he were a Monk or Layman, he ſhould be Anathematized. Now here it is very obvious for any one to obſerve, that as being Anathematized deprives a Monk or Layman of all the Power and Privilege of Church-Communion, that belongs to a Layman; ſo the Depoſing of a Biſhop or Clerk from his Epiſcopal or Clerical Office, deprives them of all the Authority and Privilege that belongs to Clerical-Communion: And the Pretence of an Indelible Character does no more ſecure any Authority to them in the one Caſe, than it does in the other. For as the Indelible Character of Baptiſm does not give a Layman Authority and Right to challenge Communion, whilſt he ſtands legally excommunicate by the Church; but only a Right to be reſtored to Communion again, when he truly repents, without a new Baptiſm: So the Indelible Character of Ordination does not give a Biſhop or Prieſt any Authority to challenge to himſelf the Power of Clerical-Communion, that is, Authority to perform the Office of Biſhop or Prieſt, ſo long as they are legally degraded by the Church: but only a Power or Capacity to officiate again without a new Ordination, if the Church ſhall think fit to give them Authority ſo to do, by a Relaxation of her Cenſures, and Permiſſion to return to their ancient State again; which upon great Neceſſities the Church ſometimes did, but this not very often. Now if this be the Truth of the Caſe; then all the Defenders of the Tria Capitula and the Errors of Origen, were truly diveſted of Clerical Authority by this Council: And yet their Παραβαπτίσματα, their unauthorized Baptiſms, were not repeated: For we never read of any Neſtorian or Eutychian, who were baptized in due Form, that were rebaptized in the Church.

SECT. 8. How the ſixth general Council of Conſtantinople depoſed and anathematized the Monothelites.

THE Sixth general Council was held at Conſtantinople, under Conſtantius Pogonatus, An. 680. Here met 289 Biſhops to condemn the Hereſy of the Monothelites, which were another Branch of the Eutychians, ſo called, becauſe they aſſerted but one Will in our SAVIOUR, thereby undermining and deſtroying the Perfection of his Humane Nature. This Hereſy had for ſome Time prevailed, both at Rome and Conſtantinople: For Pope Honorius was a Defender of it, who is therefore, together with Sergius, Cyrus, Paulus, and ſeveral others frequently Anathematized after Death in the Acts of this Council. But that which we are to enquire into is, What Cenſures here paſſed upon the Living. And among theſe we have the Depoſition of Macarius Biſhop of Antioch, and Stephen a Monk, one of his Presbyters. In the eighth Seſſion, Macarius, whom they call the new new Dioſcorus, and the new Apollinarius, is ordered [u] firſt to be diveſted of his Pall and deprived of his Biſhoprick. Then, in the Ninth Seſſion, the Sentence is formally pronounced againſt him and Stephen his Diſciple, in theſe Words: "We de- "clare you deprived [w] of all Sacerdotal "Dignity and Miniſtry." And upon this Stephen was immediately driven out of the Council. In the twelfth Seſſion, after having heard all that Macarius had to ſay, he is again declared juſtly and canonically deprived of his Archiepiſcopal Habit, and all Power of Teaching from the Doctors Chair, [x] that he might not ſpread his Hereſy any farther. And whereas he had preſumed to ſay, If he was cut in Pieces, Limb from Limb, and caſt into the Sea, he would not own two Wills or two Operations (ἐνεργείας) in CHRIST; the Council therefore declares him Synodically Depoſed and Anathematized alſo, and wholly without Right to ſit ἐν ἱερατικῷ θρόνῳ, in the Sacerdotal Chair for the future.

IN the Fifteenth Seſſion, one Polychronius, a Monk, pretended to work a Miracle, by raiſing the Dead, in Confirmation of the Monothelite Doctrine: Which he having attempted in vain, the Council condemned him as an Impoſtor, and a Blaſphemer, and a manifeſt Heretick, declaring him to be deprived of all the Order [y] and Miniſtry of a Prieſt. And ſo having Depoſed him, the Holy Synod cried out, Anathema to Polychronius and his Accomplices. Anathema to Macarius, Stephanus, and Polychronius. The Trinity hath Depoſed theſe Three. Ἡ Τριὰς τοὺς τρεῖς καθεῖλεν.

AT the End of the Sixteenth Seſſion they are all again Anathematized with Honorius, and the reſt of the Hereticks that were Dead before. And in the Cloſe of the Eighteenth Seſſion, having read the Nicene and Conſtantinopolitan Creeds, the Council concludes, That whoever preſumed to compoſe any other Faith, or propoſe, or teach, or hand down any other Creed to new Converts, turning either from Gentiliſm, Judaiſm, or any Hereſy; or offered to introduce any new Terms, contrary to what the preſent Council had agreed upon; if they were Biſhops or Clerks, they ſhould be deprived [z] of their Epiſcopal or Clerical Order: And if Laymen, be Anathematized, or caſt out of the Church.

IN Conſequence of theſe Decrees, all ſuch Biſhops as herded with Macarius and the Monothelites, are declared to be out of the College of Biſhops, by Pope Agatho and his Roman Council, whoſe Synodical Epiſtle [a] to this Council is related in the Fourth Seſſion. And Conſtantine Pogonatus, the Emperor, in his Sacra, or Edict, where he confirms the Acts of the Council, uſes a like Expreſſion, where he ſays, "The Council had baniſhed [b] all "ſuch Heretical Prieſts from the Sacerdotal "Fold; that is, from the Confraternity and "Society of the Sacred Order." In like manner as Leo the ſecond Biſhop of Rome, writing to this ſame Emperor, concerning the Proceedings of the preſent Synod againſt Macarius and his Accomplices, ſays, "That "Macarius being found to be a Wolf [c] in "Sheep's Cloathing, andand a Thief and a "Robber, inſtead of a Shepherd, was by the "true Shepherds of CHRIST's Flock, (mean- "the Sixth General Council) abdicated as a "Waſter and Deſtroyer: For they depoſed "him from his Prelatical Dignity, and his "Diſciple Stephen, with Polychronius, the new "Simon Magus, from the Honour of their "Prieſthood.

How could a Degradation be expreſſed in more ample and ſignificant Terms than theſe? They are Depoſed not only from the Honour and Chair, but from the Miniſtry, the Order, and the Offices of the Prieſthood; from Preaching and all other Operations belonging to the Sacred Function. And they are Depoſed not only by Man, but GOD: For the HOLY TRINITY Depoſed them, and being ſo, they were no longer owned by the reſt of the Biſhops, as Fellow-Biſhops or Fellow-Miniſters, or ſpiritual Brethren, but looked upon as Wolves, and Thieves, and Robbers, who could not be admitted into the College of Biſhops, till ſome wonderful Change was wrought in them. And is it poſſible to think, that Men of this Character, under all the Diſadvantages of Hereſy, Excommunication, and Depoſition from their Order by the TRINITY itſelf, ſhould ſtill be looked upon as true Miniſters of GOD; as ſtill inveſted with a ſufficient Authority to perform any Miniſterial Acts, by Vertue of an Original Ordination implanting a Power in them, that no Power on Earth could wholly take from them? If the Power of the Church was not ſufficient to deprive them of this pretended Authority, yet ſure the Power of the HOLY TRINITY, the Fountain of all Spiritual Authority and Power, muſt be owned All-ſufficient to take away the Authority, which it at firſt gave them. And then we have as full Proof, that theſe Eutychian Hereticks were diveſted of their whole Miniſterial Authority, as can poſſibly be given

To what has been ſaid of the Six General Councils, I ſhall add the Senſe of the Council of Trullo, which is, as it were, but an Appendix to the two laſt of them. For, becauſe no Canons of Diſcipline were made in thoſe Two Synods, this Council was called on purpoſe, An. 692, or, as Petavius computes, An. 707, under Juſtinian the Second, to ſupply the Defects of the two former Councils, whence it had the Name of Quiniſextum, the Fifth and Sixth Council together. There are above Thirty Canons in this Council, which order Biſhops and Clerks to be Degraded for ſeveral Crimes there ſpecially noted: But I ſhall only mention two or three that are a little more remarkable. In the Twenty-firſt Canon ſome Criminals are ſubjected to a total and perpetual [d] Depoſition, and thruſt down to the Place and State of Laymen, there to exerciſe themſelves in Repentance for ever, without Hopes of Reſtitution. In the Twenty-ſecond Canon, if a Biſhop or any other Clerk is Simoniacally Ordained for Money [e], they that are Ordained, and they that Ordained them, are both ordered equally to be Depoſed. And in the next Canon, every Clerk is ſubject to the ſame Penalty, that takes Money for Adminiſtring the Communion, as guilty [f] of a Simoniacal Error and Wickedneſs. In the Twenty-ſixth Canon, a Prieſt that marries unlawfully, though it be by Ignorance, is allowed to retain the Honour of his Chair, but he muſt forbear all Sacred Offices: He muſt neither give [g] the Bleſſing Publickly nor Privately, nor diſtribute the Body of CHRIST to others, nor do any other Miniſterial Act. And a Reaſon is given for all this, Becauſe ſuch an one wants a Cure for his own Wounds, and the Bleſſing of Sanctification himſelf, and he cannot impart that to others which he himſelf wants, but he muſt weep out his Sins before the LORD by a perpetual Repentance.

Now upon theſe Canons, I would ask theſe plain Queſtions: Whether Prieſts, totally degraded, and thruſt down to the Place of Laymen, could be ſuppoſed, by this Council, to act, after this, as Authorized Miniſters of CHRIST? Whether Biſhops or Prieſts, Depoſed for Simony, were ſtill inveſted with the true Rights and Power of the Miniſterial Function? Whether that which makes an Ordination Void as ſoon as it is given (as Simony does) doth not likewiſe deprive a Man of Sacerdotal Authority, when he is afterward found Guilty of it, and legally Depoſed for it by the Church? And, Whether a Man, who is Lawfully forbidden, by the beſt Authority in the Church, to do any Miniſterial Act whatſoever, can be ſaid to perform thoſe Acts by the Church's Authority in Oppoſition to her lawful Commands? He that can reconcile theſe Things by the Help of two Words, called, Indelible Character, may enjoy his Opinion, for me, without Contradiction. I ſhall not think it worth while to diſpute eternally with any one, who has ſuch an infallible Way of ſolving Difficulties by hard Names, or reconciling Contradictions by ſome dark and unintelligible School-Diſtinction. I hope I have plainly made it appear, to all unprejudiced Men, that there is no Foundation for aſſerting, That Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Prieſts, and Prieſts caſt out of the Church with Anathema, are authorized Miniſters of the Church of CHRIST, from the Hiſtory of the firſt Six General Councils. The Conſequence of which is, That the Baptiſms given by ſuch Unauthorized Perſons could not be Valid by Vertue of any true Miniſterial Authority reſiding in ſuch Perſons, who were really and truly diveſted of it; but they muſt be received by the Church upon ſome other Principle, ſince it is certain ſhe never allowed the Miniſterial Authority of Hereticks, and yet received their Proſelytes by Impoſition of Hands without Rebaptizing.

CHAP. II.

The ſame Aſſertion proved from Patriarchal, National, and Provincial Councils, and from the Writings of Private Fathers, with ſeveral Arguments drawn from their Teſtimony. The firſt Argument, That ſome Hereticks, whoſe Baptiſm was received, never had Originally any real and true Ordination to the Miniſterial Office and Function: Conſequently they could be no other than Unauthorized Perſons. This particularly proved upon the Novatian Hereticks.

SECT. 1. A ſhort Reference to ſuch Patriarchal, National, and Provincial Councils, as agree with the forementioned General Councils.

AFTER the Hiſtory of the Six General Councils, it will be needleſs to trouble every ordinary Reader with a particular Account of every Patriarchal, National, and Provincial Synod upon this Subject. and yet there is ſcarce one of theſe in all the Tomes of the Councils, where the ſame Thing is not as plainly aſſerted. The Learned and Inquiſitive Reader, that will be at the ſame Pains as I have been, may ſatisfy himſelf by having Recourſe to them; for whoſe Eaſe I will here give him a ſhort Index or Reference to ſuch Councils and Canons, as will give him Satisfaction upon this Subject. There are ſome Provincial Councils, which are taken into the Code of the Church Univerſal, and ſo are of the Nature of General Councils by their Confirmation. Such are the Council of Ancyra, Can. 1, 2, 10, 14. The Council of Neocæſarea, Can. 1, and 8. The Council of Antioch, Can. 1, 3, 4, 5, 10, 11, 12, 13. Others are large Patriarchal Councils, next to General ones. Such are the Council of Sardica, Can. 1, 2, 4, 20. And the African Code, Can. 11, 15, 25, 27, 28, 31, 71, 81. In citing which Canons I follow the Edition of Ehinger Witeberge, 1614. To theſe may be added thoſe which are called the Apoſtolical Canons, becauſe they were generally received in the Greek Church, Can. 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 20, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 35, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 83. In all which Canons the Sentence of Depoſition is pronounced againſt all ſuch Clerks, as were found guilty of the ſeveral Crimes particularly ſpecified in them. Other Councils were only National or Provincial; ſuch as the Council of Eliberis, Can. 51, 76. The firſt Council of Arles, Can. 13, 22. The ſecond Council of Arles, Can. 14, 15. The firſt Council of Carthage, Can. 2, 14. The Council of Aquileia, where Palladius the Arian was Depoſed by St. Ambroſe. The Council of Colon. Agrippin. where Euphratas Biſhop of Colon was Depoſed for Arianiſm. The fourth Council of Carthage, Can. 48, 49, 50, 56, 57, 60, 68, 69. The Council of Turin, Can. 2. The fifth Council of Carthage, Can. 3, 11, 12, 13. The firſt Council of Toledo, Can. 2, 4, 5. The Council of Milevis, Can. 18, 19, 22, 25. The Council of Ries, Rhegienſe, Canon. 1. The Council of Agde, Can. 1, 9, 49, 50, 60. The firſt Council of Orange, Can. 21. The Council of Rome, under Hilary, Can. 3. The Council of Tarraco, Can. 2, 10. The Council of Epone, Can. 22. The Council of Lerida, Can. 5, 12, 16. The Council of Valentia in Spain, Can. 3. The Council of Girone, Gerunda, Can. 11. The ſecond Council of Toledo, Can. 3. The ſecond Council of Orleans, Can. 4, 8, 9, 13. The third Council of Orleans, Can. 2, 6, 7, 8, 15, 19, 26. The fourth Council of Orleans, Can, 10, 17. The fifth Council of Orleans, Can. 4, 10, 11. The fourth Council of Toledo, Can. 30, 44. The firſt Council of Bracara, Can. 32, 37. The eighth Council of Toledo, Can. 3, 4, 7, 8.

IN theſe Canons there are almoſt an Hundred particular Crimes ſpecified, for which Biſhops and Clerks might be Depoſed from their Office and Function. What then, if ſuch Clerks ſhould pretend to Officiate after they were Degraded, ſhall it be ſaid, that ſuch Perſons were ſtill Authorized Miniſters of CHRIST, when the Church, in the Name of CHRIRT, had Unauthorized them, and, as ſome of them expreſs it, Unordained them? When the Church had cancelled their Miniſterial Authority, had they ſtill Authority, in Spite of the Church's Power, to act as lawful Miniſters of GOD? or, Were all theſe Canons made to no other purpoſe, but to ſhew how inſignificant the Church's Power and Diſcipline was; and how much Superior the Indelible Character of a Prieſt was, which could maintain his Authority, let the Church do what ſhe would to Deprive him of it? Whatever ſome Mens Notions may be of the Prieſthood, I queſtion not, the generality of ſober Readers will have more honourable Sentiments, than to think that a Wicked or Impious and Heretical Prieſt cannot poſſibly do any Thing to forfeit his Authority, if he has but once had a Regular Ordination: Or that the Church cannot juſtly Deprive him of this Authority, if he does ſuch Things as make him liable to a total and perpetual Deprivation. This were ſuch an Affront to all theſe Councils, and their Authority, that I cannot think it needful ful to ſay any Thing farther to any Wiſe Man to convince him of the Unreaſonbleneſs and Abſurdity of ſuch an Aſſertion. Therefore, inſtead of being more particular in the Hiſtory of theſe ſeveral Councils, I will ſumm up the Force of them and other Private Writers in ſome proper Arguments, to ſhew, That all the Baptiſms which the Church anciently received, were not given by true Authorized Miniſters; which, without any farther Enquiry, muſt infallibly put an End to the Queſtion about Lay-Baptiſm.

SECT. 2. The firſt Argument founded upon the Novatians wanting a true Ordination.

THE firſt Argument I ſhall draw from the Ancient Councils and Fathers, to this Purpoſe, is founded upon the Novatians wanting a Real and Lawful Ordination. That the Church received their Baptiſms, is a Matter clear beyond all Diſpute, and I know my Learned Antagoniſts will not pretend to queſtion it: But, that theſe Novatians had a lawful and true Ordination, is not ſo clear, but rather, from ancient Hiſtory and Rules, it is clear to the contrary. For Novatian himſelf, who was the Father of the Novatians, was never Ordained a True and Lawful Biſhop, but only was a Biſhop in Pretence: Therefore all ſuch Miniſters as derived the Original of their Orders and Authority from him, were only pretended Miniſters, like their Founder. I know the Gentlemen with whom I now Diſpute, will not offer to deny this, ſuppoſing Novatian was no true Biſhop: But they will ſay that Novatian was a true Biſhop, becauſe he had Three Biſhops to Ordain him. And indeed if the Hands of Three Biſhops was all that was neceſſary to the true Ordination of a Biſhop, then it could not be denied that Novatian was a true Biſhop. But theſe Gentlemen cannot be ignorant, that to a true Ordination ſomething elſe is required beſides the Hands of Three Biſhops: There are ſome Perſonal Qualifications requiſite in the Party Ordained, and many Canonical Preſcriptions to be obſerved in making a true Biſhop, elſe his Ordination is Null and Void, ab Origine. For what if Three Biſhops ſhould combine to ordain a Child of Three Years old, as the Popes have done Some at ſeven, would ſuch an Impoſition of Hands paſs for a true Ordination? What if Three Biſhops ſhould be wrought upon by Simony to ordain a Man, who had no manner of Epiſcopal Qualifications? What if Three Biſhops ſhould firſt be made Drunk with Wine, and then forced, againſt all Rules, and againſt their own Wills, to lay Hands on a Vile Wretch, who had not the leaſt Pretence to an Ordination, would this be thought to give him the true Power and Authority of a Biſhop, or be looked upon as ſuch in any Part of the Catholick Church? What if Three Biſhops ſhould illegally concur to ordain a Man an Anti-Biſhop into a full See, where another was legally Ordained already, and in juſt and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Church, would this Intruder be eſteemed a true Biſhop in any Part of the World but Utopia, becauſe of ſuch a pretended Ordination? And yet this was, in a great Meaſure, the Caſe of Novatian. He had nothing beſides his Age to qualify him to be Ordained a Biſhop, of all the Particulars that have been mentioned.

SECT. 3. That Novatian was never a true Biſhop, proved firſt, becauſe he had only a Simoniacal and Forced Ordination.

FOR firſt, his Ordination was not only againſt his own Oath, but Simoniacal, and Forced into the Bargain. Some indeed have ſaid, that he was ordained only by Novatus a Prieſt: But that is a Miſtake, for it is owned he had three Biſhops to ordain him. But then their manner of Proceeding was ſuch as no Rules could juſtify: The Ordination which they gave him was Null from the very firſt: Becauſe theſe Three Biſhops, being fetched from the fartheſt Corner of Italy, had nothing to do to ordain Novatian a Biſhop at Rome, without a Regular and Synodical Election. They were made to believe, before they came there, that they ſhould have a Synod of Biſhops to joyn with them: But when Novatian had got them into his Poſſeſſion, he ſet ſome of his Party to make them Drunk, and ſhut them up Priſoners, and then at Four a-Clock in the Afternoon he compelled [b] them by Force to give him the Biſhoprick by an Imaginary, and Deluſive, and Vain Ordination, as Cornelius the true Biſhop words it in his Epiſtle to Fabian, Biſhop of Antioch, where he gives him an Account of the whole Proceeding; rightly concluding, that by this wicked Craft and Treachery, he uſurped a Biſhoprick, which did by no Right belong to him. And therefore this Epiſcopacy was only taken to himſelf by Robbery; it was not given him from Heaven [i]. Not long after, One of thoſe Three Biſhops, as Cornelius adds, returned to the Church, confeſſing and bewailing his Crime. Whom Cornelius, at the Interceſſion of all the People, received into Communion, but only as a Layman, ἐκοινωνήσαμεν ὡς λαικῷ, and the other Two he depoſed, and ordained Two Succeſſors in their Room, and ſent them to their reſpective Places. This is alſo alſo taken notice of by Cyprian [k], who ſeems to ſay this penitent Biſhop's Name was Trophimus, who brought back with him a great Multitude of People from the Schiſm to the Church; which made his Admiſſion ſo much the eaſier, becauſe he made ſome ſort of Satisfaction for his Crime thereby: Yet he was admitted only to communicate in the Order of a Layman, and not allowed any longer to retain the Place of a Prieſt. Nothing can be plainer, than that, by this Account, Novatian's pretended Ordination did not make him a true Biſhop, nor give him Epiſcopal Authority to ordain others. For if one of his Ordainers was, for his Crime, degraded and made a Layman; and the other Two not allowed ſo much as the Privilege of Communicating as Laymen, but were wholly Excommunicated and caſt out of the Church, we cannot ſuppoſe, that Novatian, who was the Cauſe of all this, could have the leaſt Pretence to a true Ordination, nor conſequently any Authority, as from Heaven or the Church, to act as a Biſhop, and give others Ordination. For not only Cornelius and Cyprian, who might be ſuppoſed to be Parties againſt Novatian, but all the ancient Canons, declare ſuch ſort of Simoniacal, Irregular, and Forced Ordinations, to be Void and Null from the Beginning. Which are Things, I preſume, ſo well known, [l] that I need not inſiſt upon them.

SECT. 4. This proved farther, becauſe he intruded himſelf into a full See.

BUT there was another Reaſon which utterly annulled the Ordination of Novatian, and made him no true Biſhop; and that was, that, againſt all the Laws of the Catholick Church, and Rules of Catholick Unity, he intruded himſelf into a full See, where another was regularly and divinely choſen before him. This is the Argument ſo much inſiſted on by Cyprian in particular, to prove him no true Biſhop. Thus in the forecited Epiſtle to Antonian, ſpeaking of the Difference between the Ordinations of Cornelius and Novatian, he freely, after this manner, gives his Judgment of them both: "Cornelius, ſays he, was made Biſhop by the "Approbation [m] and Judgment of GOD "and CHRIST; by the Teſtimony of almoſt "all the Clergy, and the Suffrage of all the "People that were preſent, and the College "of Ancient and Good Biſhops; when no one "had been ordained before him, when the "Place of Fabian, that is, when the Place of "Peter, and the Epiſcopal Chair was empty: "Which being once filled according to the "Will of GOD, and confirmed by all our "Conſent and Approbation; whoever after "that is minded to be made Biſhop, is a Fo-"reigner and an Alien; he has not the Or-"dination of the Church, who holds not "the Unity of the Church; whoever he be, "or whatever he boaſts, or aſſumes to him-"ſelf, he is a Prophaner, an Alien, a Foreign-"er. There cannot be a ſecond Biſhop after "the firſt: Therefore whoever is made a Bi-"ſhop after the firſt, which ought to be ſin-"gly done, he is not a ſecond Biſhop, but "none at all." It is impoſſible to expreſs in plainer Words, that Novatian was not a true Biſhop, tho' he had Three Biſhops to give him a Theatrical and Deluſory Ordination. Cyprian a little after, in the ſame Epiſtle, joyns both theſe Arguments together, to prove him to be no Biſhop, becauſe he was Simoniacally ordained, and becauſe [n] he was an Adulterous and Extraneous Biſhop, made after another had been ordained in the Church by Sixteen Fellow-Biſhops: And therefore he charges him with ſetting up an Human Church, inſtead of a Divine, and ſending new Apoſtles into every City, to maintain the Foundations of his new Inſtitution: In ſhort, all theſe were Falſe Biſhops, becauſe they were ſuper-ordained (by one who himſelf had no Power) over other Biſhops that had before been regularly ordained in every City and Province, and who both for their Age and Faith, and Fortitude in Sufferings and Perſecution, were without Exception. Cyprian often repeats and inculcates this Argument in his other Epiſtles, that there could not [o] be another Biſhop after the firſt was legally made; that he was an adulterous Biſhop [p] and and a contrary Head, not in the Church, but out of it, ſince he was ordained againſt the Rule of the Divine Inſtitution and Catholick Unity, only by the Prevalency of a Faction. With much more to the ſame [q] Purpoſe, which, after ſuch plain Teſtimonies, I need not cite at length to ſatisfy a Judicious Reader. But, that this may not ſeem to be the private Opinion only of Cyprian or Cornelius, as Perſons who wrote out of Prejudice to Novatian, I will ſhew it to be agreeable to the General and Standing Rule of the Catholick Church, That a Man is no Biſhop, who is ſuper-ordained over another Biſhop, into a full See, which the other is Legally and Divinely poſſeſs'd of. This is the Ground upon which the Council of Aquileia [r] pronounced Valens the Arian to be no Biſhop, becauſe he was ſuper-ordainded at Petavio, while Marcus the true Biſhop was living. Upon this Ground the Ordination of Majorinus the firſt Father of the Donatiſts, was reckoned Null, becauſe he was ſuper-ordained a Pretended Biſhop at Carthage, when the See was Legally filled before by Cæcilian. For this made the Schiſm, and ſet up Altar againſt Altar, and therefore the Ordination of Majorinus [s] was unlawful, as Optatus words it. This was one Reaſon why the Council of Nice diſannulled the Ordinations of thoſe Biſhops, whom Meletius had Schiſmatically ſuper-ordained in Egypt, when the Sees were filled with Catholick Biſhops before: This he did to ſtrengthen his Party, but the Council decreed all theſe ſhould be reordained before they were admitted to ſerve in the Catholick Church, as we have heard before in the Hiſtory of that Council. The next General Council of Conſtantinople, upon the ſame Ground, declared Maximus the Cynick to be no Biſhop (tho' he had Seven Biſhops to ordain him) becauſe his Ordination was only a Super-ordination into a full See, of which Gregory Nazianzen was Legally poſſeſs'd before: And they not only annulled his Ordination, but all thoſe that were ordained by him, as I have ſhewed in the laſt Chapter, from the Fifth Canon of that Council. For the ſame Reaſon all the Biſhops in the World, who defended the Council of Chalcedon, declared unanimouſly in their Anſwer to Leo the Emperor, upon the Caſe of Timotheus Ælurus the pretended Biſhop of Alexandria, who had gotten himſelf firſt Superordained into the See of Proterius, and ſhortly after, by his Faction Murdered him; they declared, I ſay, this Timotheus not only to be no Biſhop [t], but to be deprived of the Name of a Chriſtian, as Liberatus informs us from the Synodical Epiſtles, that were then, from ſeveral Parts of the World, ſent to the Emperor upon it. Some of theſe are yet remaining at the End of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, one or two of which it will not be amiſs here to tranſcribe. In the Synodical Epiſtle of the Biſhops of Phœnicia Secunda to the Emperor, they thus expreſs themſelves [u] concerning this Timotheus, That he was a Wicked Tyrant, and by no means ever made a Biſhop, but was only an Adulterous Invader of the Church; one who, by the Blood of the true Biſhop, was minded to ſettle himſelf in the Church which CHRIST Redeemed with his own Blood; one that was no Shepherd of CHRIST's Flock, but an Inſupportable Wolf; not a Father, but a Paricide or Murderer of his Father, meaning the true Biſhop; Not a Bridegroom, but an Uſurper of the Marriage-Chamber. Such an one they declare they could not call a Biſhop. In another of theſe Synodical Epiſtles [w] from the Biſhops of Helenopontus (which the Printed Copies read corruptly, Helleſpontus) a great many Reaſons are given why the Ordination of this Timotheus never made him a true Biſhop; becauſe he was in the firſt Place actually Depoſed from the Office of Presbyter, by his own Biſhop Proterius, and an Egyptian Synod; then again he had but two Biſhops to ordain him, which was not a Canonical Number; and farther theſe two were under the ſame Sentence of Depoſition with himſelf; and laſtly, this Ordination was made while Proterius the true Biſhop was living, and actually performing the Duties of the Epiſcopal Function. Such Intruders as theſe therefore were only Wolves or Adulterers, and not true Shepherds or Biſhops, in the Language of the ancient Councils. Some Councils [x] peremptorily forbid all ſuch Super-

Supero rdinations, or Superpoſition of one Biſhop over another, except it be in the Place of one who is legally depoſed for ſome Capital Crime. And other Councils declare [y] all ſuch Superordained Uſurpers to be Wolves, and not Biſhops; no nor to deſerve the Name of Biſhops, as the great Council of Sardica ſpeaks in this behalf, concerning Gregory, who was intruded into Alexandria, in the Room of Athanaſius; and Baſil of Ancyra, in the Room of Marcellus; and Quintianus of Gaza, in the Place of Aſclepius. So that it is as evident as Words or Authorities can make it, that according to the Rules and Diſcipline of the ancient Church, not only in the Cyprianick Age, but in the following Ages alſo, the Ordination of a Man into a full See, legally poſſeſs'd and occupied by another, was a Null Ordination from the Beginning; and ſuch an one was not a Biſhop, but an Unauthorized Intruder, a Wolf, an Adulterer, an Alien and Foreigner, and no Prieſt in the Eye of the Catholick Church. Whence it follows, that Novatian being one of this Sort, had no Pretence to the Name or Authority of a Biſhop, and conſequently all ſuch as were ordained by him, either Biſhops or Prieſts, to ſtrengthen his Faction, were in no better Condition: For they could have no more Authority than they derived from him, which was really none at all, if there be any Weight in the Account that has now been given of his Ordination. And yet the Baptiſms of theſe Novatians were by Order of ſeveral General Councils received, as given in due Form, in the Name of the TRINITY, tho' by Perſons who, upon many Accounts, had no Miniſterial Authority to give them. I hope now my Learned Friend Dr. Brett will own this is home to the Point, That the Church received the Baptiſm of ſuch Hereticks as adminiſtred it in due Form, tho' they never had a real, but only a pretended Ordination. If he asks, Why then the Council of Nice did not order the Novatian Biſhops and Prieſts to be reordained? I anſwer, Some Learned Men think ſhe did make ſuch an Order in her Eighth Canon, which appoints them to be received among the Catholick Clergy by Impoſition of Hands, χειροθετουμένους αὐτοὺς μένειν ἔτως ἐν τῷ κλήρῳ. But I am not ſure that Impoſition of Hands, in that Place, means the Impoſition uſed in Ordination. If the Doctor thinks it does, he has his Anſwer. But one Thing I am ſure of, that without a Reconciliatory Impoſition of Hands to unite them to the Church, the Novatians had no Authority to act as lawful Miniſters of the Church: And whether the Church gave them new Ordination or not, ſhe certainly gave them the Authority of a new Commiſſion, which they had not nor could have before, whilſt they were involved in ſuch a Schiſm, as could afford them no real, but only pretended Ordinations. But for as much as the outward Form of Ordination was given them in Pretence, tho' without any competent Authority in the Ordainers, the Church perhaps might have her Reaſons to omit the outward Ceremony, and ſupply what was deficient in their Ordination, by adding her own Authentick Commiſſion and Authority upon their Reconcilement to the Church. But whether it was one Way or other, we are aſſured in Fact, they were never truly and authentically ordained in their Schiſm, becauſe they had no real, but only a pretended Ordination, given them by Perſons who, by the Rules of the Church, had no Authority to give it.

CHAP. III.

Argument 2. That Hereticks are not authorized Miniſters of GOD, becauſe when they fall into open and profeſs'd Hereſy, they ceaſe to be true Chriſtian Prieſts, and become Wolves and Antichriſts, inſtead of true Shepherds and Governors of the Flock of CHRIST.

SECT. 1. That a lawful Ordination does not ſecure a Man in the Poſſeſſion of a perpetual Authorized Prieſthood, unleſs he obſerve the Rules of the Prieſthood.

HAVING thus far ſhewed, That ſome Hereticks were not true authoritative Miniſters of GOD, becauſe they never had a juſt and proper Call or Ordination to the Prieſthood: I will now, to gratify my Learned Adverſaries Hypotheſis, ſuppoſe with them (not granting it) that all the ancient Hereticks had a true and lawful Ordination: Yet I aſſert, that it does not hence follow, that they were true Authorized Prieſts of GOD. For the Prieſts of GOD are bound to walk by certain Rules, which are neceſſary to preſerve their Authority; and unleſs they preſerve thoſe Rules, they forfeit their Authority; and it is not merely the Privilege of a lawful Ordination that that can ſecure them in the perpetual Poſſeſſion of an Authorized Prieſthood, if they do ſuch Things as unqualify them for the Miniſtry of the Goſpel. There are, it may be, near a Hundred ſeveral Crimes, ſpecified in thoſe ancient Canons, to which I have referred the Reader in the Beginning of the laſt Chapter, for which a Prieſt who had received a lawful Ordination, might be finally degraded and depoſed, and thereby forfeit all the Right and Title he could pretend to have, to act with Authority in any Part of the Miniſterial Function. And among theſe Crimes, Hereſy was always reckoned the chief, becauſe it ſtruck at the very Foundation of Religion; that is to ſay, the Faith which was once delivered to the Saints. Therefore a Prieſt once plainly convict of open and profeſs'd Hereſy, was no longer deemed a true and lawful Prieſt, or allowed to act with the Authority of a Miniſter in the Church. The very People were bound in Conſcience to fly from ſuch for their own Security; for they were Wolves, and not Shepherds; Antichriſts, and not true Miniſters of CHRIST.

SECT. 2. This proved from Cyprian, who declares Hereticks to forfeit both the Name and Authority of Prieſts.

A Man cannot look into the Writings of St. Cyprian, but he will ſee this, almoſt in every Page of him: For he always oppoſes the Prieſts of GOD, and Hereticks, as Diametrically contrary to one another; ſtiling the latter Adulterers, Impious, Sacrilegious Uſurpers, who ſet up a Prieſthood only of humane Invention, contrary to the Divine and Evangelical Inſtitution; and aſſume to themſelves ſuch Powers, as did by no Right belong to them. Thus, in one of his Epiſtles [a] to his People at Carthage, he complains of the Five Schiſmaticks who joined with Feliciſſimus, that they left the Prieſts of the LORD, and ſet up a new Sacrilegious Inſtitution againſt the Diſcipline of the Goſpel. A little after he ſays, "There was but one Church, and one "Chair, founded by CHRIST himſelf in the "Perſon of Peter. And another Altar [b] "could not be erected, nor a new Prieſt-"hood that was already ſettled. Whoſoever "gathers elſewhere, he ſcatters abroad. What-"ever Prieſthood is ſet up by human Fury, to "the Violation of the Divine Inſtitution, is "Adulterous, Impious, Sacrilegious. There-"fore depart from the Contagion of theſe Men, "and avoid their Preaching as a Cancer and "a Plague." Could he that ſaid thus much of Schiſmaticks, think Hereticks to be Prieſts of GOD, who are ſo much worſe than Schiſmaticks, by how much they ſtrike more Directly at the Foundation? Tho' they were regularly Ordained at firſt, yet, according to Cyprian, their Hereſy or Schiſm deſtroys their Title, and their Succeſſion becomes only an humane Inſtitution, which cannot make Prieſts without GOD's appointing. Therefore he calls all ſuch as are Ordained [c] by Hereticks, falſe Biſhops, and falſe Prieſts; Adverſaries of the LORD and Antichriſts [d]; Rebels and Enemies, for receding from Charity and the Unity of the Church; and worſe than Heathens and Publicans, for ſetting up falſe Altars, and illegal Prieſthoods, and ſacrilegious Sacrifices, and adulterated Names. In ſhort, He denies all ſuch to be Prieſts; they are the Enemies of [e] Prieſts; they only uſurp other Mens Offices, which by no Right belong to them. Therefore the Council of Carthage, under Cyprian, determined, that all ſuch pretended Prieſts [f] loſt what they received before, by vertue of a Legal Ordination; and that all ſuch as were Ordained by them, upon their Return to the Church, were only to be received as Laymen [g]. I know my Opponents will not pretend to deny this to have been the Opinion of Cyprian and the whole Council of Carthage. Nay, they will readily joyn Firmilian and St. Baſil to them. For they know St. Baſil ſays, Cyprian and Firmilian pleaded for the Rebaptization of ſuch as were Baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks upon this Principle, That Hereticks were not Prieſts, and therefore had no Authority to Baptize, or Ordain, or Abſolve, or perform any other Office of the Sacerdotal Function. They could not then think, there was any ſuch Vertue in the Indelible Character of a Prieſt, as to preſerve his Sacerdotal Authority entire in him, after he was turned Heretick or Schiſmatick, or was legally Degraded by the Church. Thus far therefore we ſeem to be agreed. But then they will ſay, if Cyprian's Principle was true, why ſhould not his Conſequences be received alſo; That thoſe who are baptized tized by Hereticks, and thoſe who are baptized by Laymen (both which are Prieſts of the ſame Authority, that is, none at all) ſhould be Rebaptized? I anſwer, Becauſe Wiſer Judges than either they, or I, or even Cyprian himſelf, that is, the General Councils and Fathers of the Catholick Church, have determined otherwiſe. And therefore our Queſtion at preſent is not, Whether Hereticks were to be Rebaptized: (For that is determined already beyond Contradiction:) But only, Whether Hereticks acted with the true Authority of Prieſts, when they Baptized others, in the Opinion of Cyprian and of the Catholick Church? That they did not act as true Authorized Prieſts, in the Opinion of Cyprian, is already cleared, and granted by my Opponents alſo. So that all I have now to do, is to ſhew the ſame of the Fathers and Councils of the Church in after Ages.

SECT. 3. From the Council of Aquileia under St. Ambroſe.

AND here we have the Teſtimony of St. Ambroſe and a whole Council of Italian Biſhops, who met at Aquileia to Depoſe Palladius and Secundianus two Arian Biſhops, An. 381. the ſame Year that the Macedonians, and Apollinarians, and Maximus the Cynick, were Depoſed in the General Council of Conſtantinople. Now this Council, in their Synodical Epiſtle to the Emperors Valentinian and Gratian, acquainting them with their Proceedings againſt thoſe Arian Biſhops, tell them they had abdicated them from the Prieſthood: For it was not [b] fit that they ſhould lay any Claim to be Prieſts under him, whoſe Divinity they had denied. In the Acts of the Synod every Biſhop pronounces his particular Sentence againſt them. St. Ambroſe and Valerian in theſe Words, I judge [i] Palladius an Alien from the College or Society of Prieſts. Juſtus in theſe Words: I think Palladius can no longer [k] be called a Prieſt, nor be reckoned among Biſhops. Felix of Jadera: I judge him by no means to be either a Prieſt [l] or a Chriſtian. Theſe Biſhops had not ſuch an Opinion of the Indelible Character of a Prieſt, whatever there may be in it, as to think that an Arian Heretick had any longer the Authority of a Prieſt of CHRIST, whoſe Divinity he denied; But they thought he might be abdicated from the Prieſthood, and therefore they deprived him of it, that he might no longer, under the Name of a Prieſt, deceive the People.

SECT. 4. From the Council of Colonia Agrippina.

ABOUT the Year 346, another Council was held at Colonia Agrippina, by the famous Servatius Tungrenſis, and ſeveral other Biſhops, againſt Euphratas, Biſhop of Colen, whom they likewiſe depoſed for maintaining the Arian Hereſy. The Form of his Depoſition runs much in the ſame Terms, as in the Council of Aquileia. Maximinus Trevirenſis, who preſided in the Council, declares it manifeſt [m] that he cannot be a Biſhop. Others ſay, He is legally depoſed from his Epiſcopacy by the Rules of the Goſpel. Servatius ſpeaks more expreſsly, "That he cannot be a "Chriſtian Biſhop, who with a ſacrilegious "Mouth denies CHRIST to be GOD." Valentinus Biſhop of Arles ſaid, He could be no Biſhop, who, for denying CHRIST to be GOD, had not ſo much as Right to Lay-Communion. The ſame is ſaid in the Acts of Servatius, which are added by Crab at the End of the Acts of this Synod: That it was his Opinion, That if this Euphratas [n] was allowed to do Penance, it ſhould not be as a Biſhop, but rather as a Layman. To which all the reſt of the Biſhops conſenting, immediately thereupon Euphratas, in their Style, is ſaid to be unordained, or to have his Ordination cancelled; which appears to be done by Degrading him to the Order of Laymen.

SECT. 5. From an Italick Council, under St. Ambroſe, An. 381.

SUCH another Sentence was paſſed upon the Apollinarian Hereticks, in an Italick Council under St. Ambroſe, An. 381. Whether this was the foremention'd Council of Aquileia, or Milain, or ſome other, is not certain: For all that Labbe could find of it, is only two Synodical Epiſtles of Theodoſius the Emperor; in the firſt of which there is this Decree mentioned, as made againſt the Apollinarians in that Council: "That if any Prieſt was "convict of that new Hereſy, he ſhould loſe "[o] both the Office and Name of a Prieſt, "as

" as having loſt that which makes Prieſts, " that is, the Magiſtery of Catholick Doc- " trine." What can be plainer than the Evidence given in theſe Councils againſt Hereticks having any Pretence to Sacerdotal Authority after their Depoſition? They may be leſs than Laymen; for they may be Anathematized and caſt out of the Church: But more than Laymen they cannot be, although they repent and be reſtored to the Communion of the Church, ſo long as they are diveſted both of the Name and Office of Prieſts, which was the uſual Puniſhment of Hereticks, according to the Sentence and Decrees of theſe ancient Councils.

SECT. 6. From the Roman Council of 90 Biſhops under Damaſus, An. 369.

SUCH another Council was held under Damaſus at Rome, Anno 369. where Ninety Biſhops met to condemn Auxentius and other Arian Biſhops. In their Synodical Epiſtle to the Biſhops of Illyricum, which is both in Theodoret and Sozomen, and the Tomes of the Councils, [p] they threaten to deprive them both of their Communion and the very Name of Biſhops. Which certainly implies, that they thought they had Power to take away the Authority of Prieſts from them, ſince they would not leave them ſo much as the very Name remaining.

SECT. 7. From the Teſtimony of Domnus, Biſhop of Antioch, and John Caſſian.

AND as they thus treated Hereticks, ſo did they alſo Catholick Prieſts, who committed Crimes worthy of Depoſition, if they continued obſtinate in them. Thus Liberatus obſerves concerning the Proceedings of Domnus, Biſhop of Antioch, with the Presbyters and Deacons of Edeſſa, who came to accuſe Ibas their Biſhop before him. Ibas had Excommunicated them for pretending to make Information againſt him. From this unjuſt Excommunication Domnus the Patriarch ordered them to be Abſolved; but yet upon this Condition, That if they ſtirred a Foot [q] out of Antioch before the Feſtival of Aſcenſion which was then at Hand, they ſhould be Depoſed from their Orders. It ſeems this Patriarch had no other Notion of the Orders of a Prieſt or Deacon, but that if they did things unworthy of their Order, they might have their Orders taken from them, and it was not the pretence of an Indelible Character could ſecure the Authority or Name of a Prieſt to them, againſt the Authority of their Patriarch, who preſumed he had a Legal Power to Depoſe them from their Orders. And that this was the ſtanding Rule of the Church of Antioch, is farther evident from what Caſſian ſays upon occaſion of Neſtorius's turning Heretick. Neſtorius was Born, and Bred, and Baptized, and Ordained at Antioch; and it was the Profeſſion of his Faith, according to the Antiochian Creed, which made him both a Chriſtian and a Prieſt. But when he once had loſt this Faith, Caſſian [r] ſays, he then loſt all that he gained by his Faith: For the Sacrament or Myſtery of his Prieſthood, and his Salvation too, depended both equally upon the Truth of his Creed. So that he forfeited his Prieſthood, as much as he did his Salvation, when he turned Heretick, and Apoſtatized from the Faith in which he had been baptized.

SECT. 8. And Pope Innocent.

IN the Church of Rome they never received any one as a Prieſt who was brought to do Publick Penance: And for this Reaſon, thoſe that were Ordained by Hereticks, were reckoned no Prieſts among them, to the Time of Pope Innocent, who ſays, " Where Penance was neceſſary, as it was in " receiving ſuch as were Ordained by Here- " ticks, there the Honour of Ordination could " [s] have no Place." But, on the contrary, they maintained, that he that had loſt his Honour, could not give the Honour of the Prieſthood; nor could one Ordained by Hereticks receive any Thing, becauſe the Giver had nothing in him to give. Therefore it was the Cuſtom of the Roman Church, to receive thoſe that came over from Hereticks only to Lay-Communion by Impoſition of Hands, but not to allow them the leaſt Honour of the Clergy [t]. For though this was diſpenſed with in ſome extraordinary Caſes of Neceſſity, in ſome other Churches, yet he ſays it never prevailed at Rome. Whence it is evident, they thought that neither ther they that Lapſed into Hereſy, nor they that were Ordained by Hereticks, had any Title to the Honour of the Prieſthood.

SECT. 9. And Pope Simplicius.

SIMPLICIUS, Biſhop of Rome, had the ſame Opinion of Delinquent Clerks, that they might loſe the Authority of the Prieſthood: For writing to John Biſhop of Ravenna, who had Ordained ſome Clerks againſt their Will, he tells him, "That for "this [u] he deſerved to loſe his Privilege, "for abuſing the Power that was commit-"ted to him. And if he perſiſted Contuma-"cious in this Practice, the Power of Ordina-"tion ſhould be wholly taken from him." In another Epiſtle [w] to Florentius, Equitius, and Severius, three Italian Biſhops, he has occaſion to cenſure one Gaudentius, Biſhop of Aufinium, for Oradining againſt the Canons, for which Crime he declares him deprived of all Power of Ordaining for the future, and thoſe that were Ordained illegally by him, to be Depoſed. Could it then be ſaid, that theſe Biſhops had ſtill Authority to ordain, when all Power and Authority of Ordaining was wholly taken from them? Or that thoſe Prieſts who were illegally Ordained by them, were true Authorized Prieſts, that were Depoſed as ſoon as they were Ordained, and never allowed to exerciſe any Part of the Miniſterial Function? We ſee no difference here made between thoſe that once had a true Ordination, and thoſe that had not: For when they were once totally Depoſed, they were all equally deprived of the Power and Authority of the Prieſthood.

SECT. 10. And Pope Vigilius.

POPE Vigilius is as peremptory as his Predeceſſors, that a Synod of Biſhops has Power to take away all Miniſterial Office and Power from a Delinquent Biſhop or Clerk: And by Vertue hereof he himſelf, with a Synod of Biſhops, deprived Theodore, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, declaring him diveſted and deſpoiled, as well of Sacerdotal [x] Honour and Catholick Communion, as of all Epiſcopal Office and Power; and that henceforth he had nothing to do but to weep out his Sins by Repentance. They that made Canons in this Stile againſt Hereticks and other Criminal Clerks, could not poſſibly think they were Authorized Prieſts, after ſuch Legal and Formal Depoſitions, which took from them both the Office and the Name, and the Power and Authority of the Prieſthood. But it will ſtill be ſaid, over and over again, by thoſe againſt whom I diſpute, that theſe were not mere Laymen: By which if they mean, Men that never had any ſort of Ordination at all, either Real or Pretended, I grant they were not, nor could be mere Laymen: For it were an abſurd Contradiction to ſay, that they had received an Ordination, and yet never had one. But the Thing I aſſert is this, that a Man who had a true Ordination, if for Hereſy or any other Crime he was legally Depoſed, he had no longer the Divine Power of an Authorized Prieſt; becauſe the ſame Divine Authority which gave him his Authority by Ordination, by Deordination takes it away from him; and ſave that it cannot be ſaid he never had an Ordination, in all other Reſpects he was a Layman, and all his pretended Miniſterial Offices were of no more Authority or Effect, than thoſe of a Layman, becauſe he was wholly diveſted of all Clerical Authority; and either reduced to the State and Communion of Laymen, if Penitent; or elſe, if he remained Contumacious and Impenitent, he was ſet one Degree below Laymen, that is, totally Excommunicated and caſt out of the Church. Of which Points of Diſcipline toward Hereticks and Delinquent Clerks in the ancient Church, I have given ſome Hints already, and ſhall now more fully demonſtrate the Truth of them in the Two following Chapters.

CHAP. IV.

Argument 3. That Hereticks and Degraded Clerks, were not Authorized Prieſts in the Account of the Ancient Church, becauſe, by her Diſcipline, they were reduced to the State and Communion of Laymen.

SECT. 1. No Perſons who were obliged to do publick Penance, allowed to be of the Clergy.

AS a farther Proof of the Poſition at firſt laid down, That Hereticks and Degraded Clerks could not act with the Authority of Prieſts, but only as Laicks, in the Miniſtration of Baptiſm or any other Sacred Office, I here obſerve, That by the Cenſures of the Church, they were reduced to the State, and Name, and Communion of Laymen. And this upon Suppoſition only that they were penitent, and ſubmitted to the Church's Diſcipline: For otherwiſe they were Anathematized with the greater Excommunication, and not allowed the Benefit even of Lay-Communion in the Church. Lay-Communion then was a Privilege allowed to Hereticks and Degraded Clerks upon their Repentance; but more than this was not ordinarily granted them: If any Man for any ſcandalous Crime, was obliged to do publick Penance, this cut him off from Clerical Communion ever after, by the ſtrict Diſcipline which continued for ſeveral Ages in the Church. Upon this Account, as I have obſerved and proved in another Place [a] from many Teſtimonies of Siricius, Innocentius, Gennadius, the Second Council of Arles, the Council of Agde, the Firſt Council of Toledo, the Fourth Council of Carthage, the Council of Gerunda, Optatus and St. Auſtin, if any had done publick Penance in the Church, for any ſcandalous Crime, that very Thing did for ever, according to the Rules and Diſcipline of thoſe Times, render that Perſon uncapable of Holy Orders; or if he was ordained by Miſtake, as ſoon as the Thing came to be known, he was depoſed by a Rule of the Fourth Council of Carthage, Can. 68. for not declaring that he had been a Penitent, at the Time of his Ordination. So in like manner, any Clerk, who had received a juſt and Canonical Ordination, if after that he lapſed into any Crimes that required him to do publick Penance, as Hereſy, Idolatry, Murder, Adultery, and many the like, was thereby utterly excluded from all Clerical Communion, and reduced as entirely to Lay-Communion, as any one that had at firſt been irregularly ordained.

SECT. 2. All Degraded Perſons reduced, at leaſt, to Lay-Communion.

NOR was it only publick Penitents among the Clergy that were thus treated, but likewiſe all others, that were totally degraded for any Crimes whatſoever. Though they were excuſed doing publick Penance, becauſe they thought a ſingle Puniſhment of Degradation was ſufficient for ſuch Crimes; yet they were ſtill debarred all Clerical Communion, and only treated as Laymen for ever after in the Church. This is ſo evident to all that are acquainted with ancient Hiſtory, that I would not ſpend Time to prove it, were not the Gentlemen I am dealing with, ſo Rigid as to exact ſuperabundant Proofs from Fathers and Councils for every Thing I have aſſerted againſt them. Let us ſee then, for their Satisfaction, what Evidence there is, that Hereticks and Degraded Clerks, whether ſubjected to publick Penance or not, were all reduced to the State of Lay-Communion.

SECT. 3. This proved from Cyprian and his Cotemporaries, Cornelius and the Council of Carthage.

I BEGIN with the Teſtimony of Cyprian, and his Cotemporaries, Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, and the Fathers aſſembled under Cyprian in the Council of Carthage. We have had ſomething of Cyprian's Judgment about this Matter before, upon the Caſe [b] of Trophimus, one of the Three Biſhops that ordained Novatian, who, upon his Acknowledgment of his Error, was admitted into the Church again, yet not allowed to take upon him the Office of a Prieſt, but only to Communicate in the Quality of [c] a Layman. And ſo Cornelius, ſpeaking of the ſame Perſon, ſays, He received him into [d] Communion only as a Layman. Which does not mean, that he was only like a Layman, but that he was now a Layman, and not a Prieſt, as Cyprian more diſtinctly expreſſes it. In another Epiſtle, Cyprian, with a whole Synod of African Biſhops, conſiders the Caſe of Baſilides and Martial, Two Spaniſh Biſhops, who had lapſed into Idolatry in Time of Perſecution: "Theſe Men at firſt, he ſays, "depoſed [e] themſelves voluntarily "for

" for their Crimes, and desired only to be ad" mitted to Penance, and thought it Favour " enough to be admitted to Communion as " Laymen. But afterward they repented of " their Repentance, and would have been ad" mitted again as Bishops, which would by no " means be allowed them: For such Men did
" but in vain attempt to be Bishops [f], since " it was a clear Case, that they ought not to " preside over the Church of CHRIST, or " offer Sacrifice to GOD: Especially when
" it had been so decreed, not only by the " African Synods, but by Cornelius at Rome,
" and all the Bishops of the whole World,
" that such Men might be admitted to Pe" nance indeed, but never more lay any " Claim to the Order of the Clergy, or the " Honour of the Priesthood." Here, I think, if ever, there was Universal Consent of all the Bishops in the World upon the Point in Debate: They all decreed to a Man, That a Bishop or Priest, that was justly deposed for Idolatry, was no longer an Authorized Bishop or Priest, nor to be reckoned of the Order of the Clergy, but to be treated only as a Layman. I challenge the World to give a plainer Proof of Universal Consent in this Case: And if the Opposers of the Validity of Lay-Baptism, and Defenders of Rebaptization, will produce as Authentick a Testimony of Universal Consent for their Thesis, I will promise in Point of History, to subscribe to their Opinion.

BUT I go on with Cyprian, who, in another Epistle to Pope Stephen [g], says, " It " was agreed upon by common Authority and " Consent, That if any Presbyters or Dea" cons, who were first ordained in the " Catholick Church, did afterward turn " Traitors and Rebels against the " Church, or any others that were promo" ted among Hereticks, by the prophane Or" dinations of false Bishops and Antichrists,
" against the Rule of CHRIST, did take
" upon them to offer false and sacrilegious
" Sacrifice, out of the Church, in Opposi" tion to the one Altar of GOD; that neither " of these, upon their Return to the Church,
" should be received upon any other Condi-
" tion but this, That they should be Lay" men, and communicate only as such, and " account it enough to be admitted to the " Church's Peace, who had been the Ene" mies of Peace, but not allowed to retain the " Armour of their Ordination and Honour,
" with which they had fought against her."
It is impossible to say in plainer Words, that Hereticks and Degraded Clerks are not Priests, but only Laymen, or that such as are ordained by Hereticks, who are only false Bishops and Antichrists, are only Laymen, and to be treated as Laymen, upon their Return to the Church. I shall but mention one Place more in Cyprian, which relates the Case of one Fortunatianus, an African Bishop of Assuræ, who had Lapsed either into Idolatry or the Novatian Schism, for which he was deposed, but afterward would have acted as a Bishop again; whom Cyprian therefore violently opposed, writing to the Church of Assuræ, and telling them how much he was offended, that Fortunatianus [h] their Quondam Bishop, should after his Fall and Ruin, attempt to be restored to his Office, and act as a Bishop again; and, when he ought only to give himself up to Prayers and Tears, Day and Night, to implore GOD's Mercy, and make Satisfaction for his Offence, he still presumed to lay Claim to the Priesthood, which he had betrayed; as if it was lawful for a Man to minister at the Altar of GOD, who before had stood at the Altar of the Devil. This evidently goes upon the same Principle, That a Bishop, once deposed for Idolatry or Heresy, was never after to be reputed a Bishop, or to meddle with any Part of the Episcopal Office, but to do Penance for his Crimes, in order to be received to Communion as a Layman. And upon this Principle it was asserted in the Council under Cyprian [i], That as Hereticks and Schismaticks were to be rebaptized, so all that were ordained by them, were only to be received as Laymen. And indeed, upon this very Principle, if St. Basil says true [k], both Cyprian and Firmilian required Hereticks and Schismaticks to be rebaptized, because their Baptism was no other than the Baptism of Laymen. So that they must needs suppose, that Hereticks

[k] Basil. Can. 1.

Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were only Laymen, elſe the Foundation of their Argument had been faulty. And tho' they drew a wrong Concluſion from that Principle, which the Church, in after-Ages, by her General Councils, corrected; yet ſhe never denied their Principle, but acted ſtill in Conformity to it, reducing Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, to Lay-Communion, except where ſome intervening Neceſſity and extraordinary Occaſion required her to relax her Diſcipline, as in the Caſe of the Novatians and Donatiſts, and ſome few others, in order to make up the Church's Peace, and put an end to an inveterate Schiſm. Of which I ſhall make full Proof in purſuing the ſubſequent Practice of the Univerſal Church, by which it will evidently appear, that the ordinary Way of treating Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and Degraded Clerks, was, according to the Cyprianick Age, to reduce them ſtill to Lay-Communion.

SECT. 4. And from the Apoſtolical Canons.

THIS appears from thoſe Canons which go under the Name of, The Apoſtolical Canons, if we allow thoſe to be of later Date than Cyprian. For in two of thoſe Rules there is this Direction. In the fifteenth Canon it is ordered, That if any Clerk run from his own Dioceſe to another, and refuſe to return again at the Command of his own Biſhop, he ſhall be Degraded from his Miniſtry, and only be allowed to Communicate as a Layman, ὡς λαϊκὸς κοινωνείτω. And in the Sixty-ſecond Canon it is ſaid, if any Clerk, through Human Fear of a Jew, or Greek, or Heretick, denies himſelf to be a Clerk, he ſhall be Depoſed, and upon his Repentance be admitted to Commuicate only as a Layman, ὡς λαϊκὸς δεχθήτω. By which any one may judge, that being Depoſed from the Miniſtry, and being made a Layman, are Words of the ſame Importance, according to the Senſe of thoſe ancient Canons. See alſo Can. 9. al. 12.

SECT. 5. And the Council of Eliberis.

WE have the ſame Rule in the ancient Council of Eliberis, which orders, That if a Deacon ſuffered himſelf to be Ordained, when he was conſcious to himſelf of having committed a Mortal Sin, if he confeſſed it voluntarily of himſelf, he ſhould be admitted to Communion after three Years Penance: But if another detected [l] him, he ſhould do Penance for five Years, and then only be admitted to Lay-Communion.

SECT. 6. And the Council of Sardica.

SUCH another Canon we have in the Great Council of Sardica, where the Caſe of two faulty Biſhops, Muſæus and Eutychian, was examined, and a Decree to this purpoſe made upon it, That neither of them ſhould thenceforth aſſume to themſelves the Name of Biſhops, nor be eſtemeed as ſuch: But if they [m] deſired Lay-Communion, it ſhould not be denied them.

SECT. 7. And the Council of Agde.

A like Decree was made in the Council of Agde, for the French Churches, where it is ordered, That if a Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, committed a Capital Crime [n], or falſified a Deed, or gave a falſe Witneſs, he ſhould be Depoſed from the Honour of his Office, and be thruſt into a Monaſtery, and there, as long as he lived, have only the Privilege of Lay-Communion.

SECT. 8. The Council of Orleans.

THE third Council of Orleans has two Canons to the ſame purpoſe. The firſt concerns all the Clergy, from Biſhops down to Subdeacons, who are forbidden to cohabit with their Wives, under Pain of being Depoſed from their Office, according to the Decrees of former Canons, and being Reduced [o] to Lay-Communion. The other forbids all the ſame Orders of the Clergy to exerciſe Uſury, under the ſame Penalty, threatning, that if any one preſume to tranſgreſs their Decrees, he ſhall be Degraded [p] from his Order, and only be admitted to Communion; that is, to Lay-Communion: For no other Communion can here be meant, ſince he was excluded from Clerical Communion by his Degradation.

SECT. 9. The firſt Council of Toledo.

THE firſt Council of Toledo has ſuch another Canon about Subdeacons, That if any of them marry a third Wife, he ſhall be Excommunicated for two Years, and then being reconciled by Penance, be admitted [q] to Communicate only as a Layman. And in the next Canon, a Presbyter or a Deacon

SECT. 10. The Council of Hippo, and St. Austin.

THE Council of Hippo in Africk, made the same Order about the Donatists [s], That they should only be received in the Number of Laymen. And though this Rule was afterward dispensed with for the Sake of Peace, and to put an end to the inveterate Schism of the Donatists; yet St. Austin [t] plainly tells us, That in Strictness of Discipline this would not have been allowed with any other View but only that of Peace. For he thus answers the Objection of the Donatists, who pertly demanded of him, How it came to pass, that, if it was necessary in Order to Salvation for a Donatist to repent of his being out of the Church and against the Church, notwithstanding this the Donatist Clergy and Bishops were suffered to continue in their Station after their Repentance? To this he replies, That this would not have been allowed, because, in truth, it ought not to have been allowed, but only that the Consideration of Peace makes some Compensation and Atonement for it. Therefore the Donatists ought rather to turn this Objection against themselves, and grieve the more humbly and heartily, that they lie in such a Death of Schism, as that nothing can revive them but making such a Wound in the Discipline of their Catholick Mother. For this was the ordinary Rule of the Church, that no one, after he had done Penance for any Crime, should either be promoted to the Office of a Clerk, or return to his Office, or continue in his Office; which was done, not to make Men despair of Pardon, but to keep up Discipline in its just Rigour and Strictness. Otherwise we should dispute against the Power of the Keys committed to the Church, of which it is said, Whatsoever ye loose upon Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. But lest Men should proudly repent of their Crimes in Hopes of Ecclesiastical Promotion, this Severity was wisely agreed upon, That after a Man had done Penance for any damnable Crime, he should not be made a Clerk, that by despairing of Temporal Promotion, the Medicine of Humility might work a more sincere and effectual Cure in him. But in such Cases as these, when by Reason of great Dissensions and Schisms, it was not one or two single Persons that were in Danger, but whole Multitudes that lay prostrate and slain, then something was to be abated of the strict Severity of Discipline, that Charity might come in to assist in the Cure of greater Evils.

I HAVE transcribed this whole Passage of St. Austin, to shew, both what was the ordinary Strictness of the Church's Discipline in in this Case, and what those Reasons were that sometimes obliged her to alter her Measures upon extraordinary Occasions. By which it appears, that notwithstanding such Dispensations upon great Exigencies, her ordinary and standing Method was to reduce Hereticks and Schismaticks, and other Delinquent Clerks to the State and Communion of Laymen.

SECT. 11. The Decrees of Pope Innocent.

FOR the Practice of the Church of Rome, we have the Testimony of Pope Innocent, who was Cotemporary with St. Austin. For we have heard him declare before, in the last Chapter, n. 8. That it was the constant Custom of the Roman Church, to receive those that came over from Hereticks, only to Lay-Communion by Imposition of Hands, but not to allow them the least Honour of Clerical Promotion.

SECT. 12. And Siricius.

POPE Siricius mentions the same Discipline, as exercised upon all such Clerks as had, against Canon, either married a Widow, or a second Wife: They were to be deprived of [u] all Ecclesiastical Dignity, and only admitted to Lay-Communion. And St. Jerom says the same of Heretical Bishops, in his Dialogue against the Luciferians, cap. 7.

Hoc non fieret, quoniam revera, quod fatendum est, fieri non deberet, nisi Pacis ipsius compensatione sanaretur. Sed sibi hoc dicant, & multo maxime humiliter doleant, qui in tanta morte præcisionis jacent, ut isto quodam vulnere Matris Catholicæ reviviscant. —— Ut enim constitueretur in Ecclesia, ne quisquam post alicujus Criminis pœnitentiam Clericatum accipiat, vel ad Clericatum redeat, vel in Clericatu maneat, non desperatione Indulgentiæ, sed rigore factum est Disciplinæ: alioquin contra Claves datas Ecclesiæ disputabitur, de quibus dictum est, Quæ solveritis in terra, soluta erunt & in Cœlo. Sed ne forsitan etiam de cæteris criminibus, spe honoris Ecclesiastici animus intumescens superbe ageret pœnitentiam, severissime placuit, ut post actam de crimine damnabili pœnitentiam, nemo sit Clericus, ut desperatione temporalis altitudinis medicina major & verior esset humilitatis. —— Verum in hujusmodi causis, ubi per graves dissensionum scissuras non hujus aut illius hominis est periculum, sed populorum Strages jacent, detrahendum est aliquid severitati, ut majoribus malis sanandis charitas sincere subveniat.

SECT. 13. And St. Basil.

AMONG the Canons of St. Basil, there is one to the same purpose, "That such Clerks as "committed mortal Sin should "be Degraded, or Deposed from their Or- "der, but be still allowed to Communicate "[w] as Laymen. Because, except in some "special Cases, a Clerk was not to be pu- "nished doubly for the same Fault, that "is, both by Deposition and Excommunica- "tion.

SECT. 14. And the Council of Trullo.

ALL this is confirmed by a Canon of the Council of Trullo, which says, "When De- "linquent Clerks are Degra- "ded by a Compleat and Perpetual Depositi- "tion, they are then thrust down to the "Place [x] of Laymen." So that we have as good Proof of the Discipline of the Church, upon this Head, as need be required.

Now then, upon the whole Matter, let any Impartial Man judge of the Sense and Practice of the ancient Church, in reference to the Admission of such Baptisms, as were given in due Form by Unauthorized Laymen. If the Church had no other Opinion of Hereticks, and Schismaticks, and Degraded Clerks, but as of Unauthorized Laymen; and yet admitted the Baptisms of all such so far, as not to repeat them again by Rebaptization: Does it not plainly follow, that she admitted the Baptisms of those, who, in her Opinion, were only unauthorized Laymen? If any one says, they were reduced to Lay-Communion, but yet were Authorized Priests, and not Laymen, he must first answer Cyprian, and all the other Bishops of the World, who say, in the plainest Terms, that they are not Priests, but Laymen; not like Laymen, but really so. And then he must shew likewise, how a Man can be said to have the Authority of a Priest, when GOD and CHRIST and the best Authority in the Church, have taken away his Authority from him. And when this is done, there will remain another Difficulty behind, How a Man can be said to be an Authorized Priest, who is not a compleat and perfect Layman: As no Heretick, or Degraded Clerk, after they are Anathematized for their Obstinacy, can be said to be: For they are not only reduced to the Communion of Laymen, but sunk one Degree below Laymen, by being Excommunicate or cast out of the Church: For no Man is a compleat Layman, but he that is in full Communion with the Church: which Hereticks and Schismaticks, and Degraded Clerks are not, after Excommunication is once added to their Deprivation, as it sometimes was when they persisted Obstinate and Contumacious against the Discipline of the Church: Of which I shall give a more distinct and full Account in the following Chapter.

CHAP. V.

Argument 4. That Hereticks, and Schismaticks, and Degraded Clerks, were not accounted Authorized Priests, because they were sometimes thrust down one Degree below Laymen, by being Anathematized and cast out of the Communion of the Church.

SECT. 1. That no Man is reckoned a compleat Layman but he that is in full Communion with the Church.

ALL that has been said in the last Chapter, of Hereticks and Schismaticks, and Degraded Clerks being reduced to the Communion of Laymen, goes upon Supposition of their being penitent, and that they quietly submitted to the Church's Discipline, when they were corrected for their Faults: For, in that Case, the Church, in her Punishments, shewed them some Favour, when they did not add Obstinacy and Rebellion to their other Crimes; she thought it enough to punish ordinary Crimes in Penitent Clerks by the single Punishment of Degradation from their Orders, and Reduction of them to Lay-Communion, and did not proceed to the utmost Severity of Excommunication with them, unless for some higher Crime of a more malignant Nature, or unless they proved Refractory and Contumacious against her Censures. There are some ancient Canons which give particular Direction about this Matter, That a Delinquent Clerk should not be punished twice for the same Fault, in ordinary Cases [a], that is, he should not be degraded and cast out of Lay-Communion also. But then, this was upon Supposition, that he submitted quietly to the

the Church's Cenſure, and that his Crimes alſo were not of ſuch a Nature as to require a more ſevere Judgment and Condemnation. For otherwiſe both theſe Puniſhments might be inflicted on him; he might not only be deprived of Clerical-Communion, but of Lay-Communion alſo, and, at the ſame time that he was caſt out of his Orders, be caſt out of the Church, and be cut off entirely from all Communion whatſoever. And this was ſinking him one Degree below a Layman: For no Man was accounted a compleat Layman, but he that was in full Communion with the Church, and had a Right to participate with the Faithful in all Holy Offices, and particularly the Holy Euchariſt, or Oblation, which was the τὸ τέλειον, the Conſummation of all, and that which made a Man a perfect and compleat Chriſtian. For without this a Man was only an imperfect Chriſtian, and in an incompleat State, and ſcarce to be reckoned of as a perfect and proper Member of the Church. Upon this Account all Catechumens were reckoned but imperfect Members of the Church (tho' they had, in a large Senſe, the Name of Chriſtians) becauſe, while they remained unbaptized, they had no Right to the full Communion of the Faithful. In like manner all Excommunicate Perſons were at moſt but incompleat Chriſtians, by being cut off from the Communion of the Church; they were but a ſort of dead Members, till they revived again by Repentance, and were reſtored by Virtue of the Right which Baptiſm gives them to be admitted to Communion again upon Confeſſion and Satisfaction. And in this State, all ſuch Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks were ſuppoſed to be, who underwent a double Puniſhment, and had Excommunication added to their Depoſition. They were, by this Means, ſhut out of the Church, and denied the Privilege even of Lay-Communion. So that they were not ſo much as compleat and perfect Laymen, but one Degree lower than Laymen, having loſt their preſent Right to full Communion, and retaining little more beſides their Baptiſm to entitle them to the Name of Chriſtians. It is not eaſy to conceive then, how they ſhould be eſteemed true Authorized Prieſts by the Church, whom ſhe herſelf excluded from the Privilege of true compleat Chriſtian Laymen.

SECT. 2. Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, ſometimes denied alſo the Privilege of Lay-Communion.

BUT now, that the Church did many times exerciſe this double Cenſure, and inflict both the Puniſhment of Depoſition and Excommunication upon them, will be no hard Matter to be made appear. For, not to mention now how often Hereticks are laid under Anathema by the Six General Councils, of which I have given a full Account in the Firſt Chapter of this Book, nor how unanimouſly all the Ancients delare all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be out of the true and perfect Communion of the Holy Chtholick Church; nor how often Hereticks are ſaid to be no Chriſtians, no Church, nor Members of the Church, meaning thereby Chriſtians in the adequate Senſe, and Perſons in full Communion with the Church: I ſay, not to inſiſt upon any thing of this, at preſent, it will be ſufficient to ſhew, That Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, were ſometimes, after their Depoſition, alſo formally Excommunicated by the Church, and denied even the Communion of Laymen.

SECT. 3. This proved from the Teſtimony of Cyprian.

THIS is evident from what Cyprian ſays of Evariſtus, one of the Three Biſhops that pretended to ordain Novatian, "That for his Crime he was "ſo far degraded, as of a Biſhop not to be ſuf-"fered to continue in the State and Quality "[b] of a Layman: He was not only de-"prived of his People and his See, but "wholly baniſhed the Church, becauſe he "continued obſtinate in his Schiſm, and did "not, as Trophimus had done, ſubmit him-"ſelf by Confeſſion and Penance, that he "might be received to Communion as a "Layman." This was the Difference the Church then made between theſe two Criminal Biſhops, who were concerned in the Ordination of Novatian: They were both depoſed from their Order, and reckoned no Biſhops; but the one was received into Church-Communion, upon his Repentance, as a Layman; whilſt the other was wholly caſt out of the Church for his Impenitency, and not allowed to enjoy either the honourable Title or Communion of a Layman. He was now leſs than a Layman, who a little before was a Biſhop in the Catholick Church.

SECT. 4. And the Apoſtolical Canons.

AMONG the Apoſtolical Canons, there are ſome which forbid a Clerk to be puniſhed doubly for the ſame Crime in all Ordinary Caſes, as has been obſerved before; yet there are two Caſes ſpecified, in which Excommunication is to be added to Depoſition. The firſt is the Caſe of Simony, which was a Crime of that high Nature, that if a Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon was found guilty of it, both he that was ordained, and he that ordained him, were not only [c] to be degraded, but to be cut off entirely from all Church-Communion whatſoever, as Simon Magus

[b] Cypr. Ep. 49. al. 52. ad Cornel. p. 96. Didicimus Evariſtum de Epiſcopo jam nec Laicum remanſiſſe, Cathedræ & Plebis extorrem, & de Eccleſia Chriſti exſulem.

[c] Canon. Apoſt. c. 29. Καθαιρεῖσθω καὶ αὐτὸς, καὶ ὁ χειροτονήσας, καὶ ἀκοπτέσθω παντάπασιν καὶ τῆς κοινωνίας.

Magus was by Peter. The [d] other Caſe was much of the ſame Nature, If any Biſhop made uſe of the Secular Power (by which Learned Men underſtand, the Heathen Magiſtrate) to obtain a Church, and thereby gets Poſſeſſion of it, he ſhall be both Depoſed and Excommunicated alſo. There was no Favour for ſuch Men, they muſt be rejected, not only from Clerical Communion and Dignity, but from the common Privilege and Communion of Laymen.

SECT. 5. The Council of Colen.

THIS was the Cenſure that was paſſed upon Euphratas the Arian Biſhop of Colen, who, becauſe he would not recant his Hereſy, was Depoſed in the Council of Colen, An. 349. There every Biſhop gives his particular Vote againſt him, and one of them thus expreſſes his Condemnation: [e] "I a- "gree to the Determination of the Synod, "That Euphratas neither can be a Biſhop, nor "ought to receive the Communion of Lay- "men.

SECT. 6. The Council of Sardica.

THE Council of Sardica has two very remarkable Canons upon this Subject, pronounced by the Mouth of the Famous Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba, who preſided in this Synod. The firſt is made againſt ſuch Biſhops as, thro' Covetouſneſs or Ambition, without any Legal or Synodical Call, removed themſelves from one See to another, from a leſs City to a greater: To correct which Exorbitancy with a juſt Severity, it is there decreed [f] that ſuch Biſhops ought not to have ſo much as the Communion of Laymen. And again, in a ſecond Canon, If any Biſhop pleaded that he was called by the Vote of the People, that being found to be only a Pretence, ſuch a one [g] ſhould not be admitted to Lay-Communion, not even at the Hour of Death. Theſe Fathers ſurely could not take thoſe for Authorized Biſhops, whom they laid under ſuch a terrible Anathema, that they did not think them worthy of the Churches Peace, in Extremis, but denied them the common Viaticum of Laymen, at their laſt Hour.

SECT. 7. The Council of Eliberis.

THE Council of Eliberis has ſuch another Canon concerning Deacons, that ſuffered themſelves to be Ordained, when they knew themſelves guilty of ſome Mortal Sin, that if it had been detected beforehand, would have hindred their Ordination: If ſuch a one confeſſes his Fault voluntarily, then after three [h] Years Penance he might be admitted to Communion; but if he was detected by another, then he ſhould do five Years Penance, and after that only be received to Lay-Communion at the laſt. And in another Canon they decreed, That if either Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon was found guilty of Fornication commmitted after his Ordination, ſuch an one [i] for the Scandal and Heinouſneſs of his Crime, ſhould not be admitted to Communion, no, not at his laſt Hour. There are a great many other Canons in this Council, which deny Communion to the very laſt, to all ſuch Criminals in general, as are there ſpecified in them: And tho' the Clergy be not particularly named, yet doubtleſs they were included in the Number, when ſuch Crimes as Lapſing into Idolatry [k] are ordered to be puniſhed with perpetual Excommunication, without Readmiſſion at the laſt Hour. For we cannot ſuppoſe theſe Canons were more favourable to the Clergy than to others, ſince we have found this ſame Council inflicting the ſame Penalty upon them upon other Occaſions.

SECT. 8. The Council of Rome under Felix III. An. 487.

I will conclude theſe Collections with the Teſtimony of a Roman Council held under Felix III. An. 487. Here the Caſe of ſeveral Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons came to be conſidered, who had ſubmitted themſelves to be rebaptized by the Arians in Africk, during the Time of the Vandalick Perſecution: And the Determination that was made upon it was this: That for ſo doing [l] they ſhould be ſubjected to a perpetual Penance all their Lives, and not be allowed to be preſent either at the Prayers of the Faithful, ful, or the Prayers of the Catechumens, but only be reſtored to Lay-Communion at the Hour of Death.

Now then if ſuch Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, were denied the Communion of Laymen, and only allowed it at the Point of Death, and ſometimes not that neither; it is plain, they could not be true Authorized Prieſts, becauſe they were ſunk one Degree below Laymen in the Church: Unleſs any one will ſay, That a Man may be an Authorized Prieſt of the Church, who is not ſo much as an Authorized Layman of it. Yet the Church never made any Order for Rebaptizing ſuch as were Baptized by theſe Men, but received them as ſhe did others, only by Impoſition of Hands and Confirmation. Which is a certain Argument to prove, that ſhe did not repeat the Baptiſm of Laymen, ſince ſhe received not only the Baptiſm of thoſe whom ſhe herſelf made Laymen, but thoſe alſo whom ſhe thruſt one Degree below Laymen, by ſubjecting them to Excommunications and Anathema's, and denying them the Benefit and Privilege of Lay-Communion in the Church.

CHAP. VI.

The Objection taken from the Notion of an Indelible Character imprinted in the Ordination of a Prieſt, examined, and ſhewed to be of no Force againſt the former Allegations. With an Account of the firſt Original and Meaning of that Term in the Writings of the Church.

THERE is but one Objection againſt all that has been ſaid in the foregoing Diſcourſe, which has occaſionally been anſwered already: But becauſe to ſome, it ſeems to carry more Weight than really it does, becauſe of the Ambiguity of the Terms, I will here give it a diſtinct Conſideration. The Objection is this: That there is an indelible Character imprinted on a Man when he is Ordained a Prieſt, which no Hereſy, or Schiſm, or Degradation, or Excommunication can obliterate: Therefore, tho' they may ſuſpend him from the Exerciſe, yet they cannot take away from him the Power and Authority of the Prieſthood. The Antecedent of this Argument is, in ſome Meaſure, true, if rightly explained and underſtood: But the Inference or Conſequence drawn from it is altogether falſe: and unleſs it be falſe, the Catholick Church has always been under a great Miſtake, to pretend to take away the Power and Authority of Prieſts from them; nay, the Power of GOD and CHRIST himſelf could not do it, if this Notion holds true: For the Church always pretended to act by the Authority of GOD and CHRIST, that is, by the Power of the Keys committed to her, in taking away the Miniſterial Authority from ſuch Prieſts as deſerved her Cenſures. So that if the Church could not do it, GOD and CHRIST could not do it, or elſe the Church was to blame, to aſſume a Power which did not belong to her. But the Truth of the Matter is, that the Indelible Character of a Prieſt's Ordination, implied no ſuch thing in the Opinion of the Ancients, as this Objection ſuppoſes. For they never imagined, that a Prieſt, by Virtue of any ſuch Character, could preſerve his Miniſterial Authority, in Spite of all the Cenſures of the Church inflicted on him; that he was a Prieſt when they made and called him no Prieſt, and reduced him to the Order and Quality of a Layman; that he was a Prieſt when they Excommunicated and Anathematized him, and caſt him not only out of Clerical-Communion, but all Church-Communion, and ſometimes would not allow him ſo much as the Communion of a Layman, at the Point of Death. There muſt be a ſtrange Vertue in Indelible Character indeed, if it could preſerve Sacerdotal Authority in a Prieſt, after ſo many Attempts of the Church to deprive him of it. It is therefore worth enquiring, Whether there be not ſome Miſtake in this Matter, and whether the wrong Notion ſome have entertained of the Nature of an Indelible Character, do not lead them into Errors about it? Now the beſt Way to come by the true Notion and Import of this Term, is to examine, firſt, What it was taken to ſignify in Baptiſm? For an Indelible Character was always ſuppoſed to be imprinted as much in Baptiſm as in Ordination; tho' I do not remember that any ancient Council expreſsly uſed that Term about either, but only ſay ſomething that may be reckoned equivalent to it: And that is this, as it relates to Baptiſm: That a Man who is once truly baptized, can never do any thing that can ſo far eraſe or cancel his Baptiſm, as that he ſhall need, upon any Occaſion, to be rebaptized with a ſecond Baptiſm. Thus far the Ancients believed an Indelible Character in Baptiſm. Tho' a Man turn his Back on Chriſtianity, and totally Apoſtatize and fall away from the Profeſſion feſſion of it; tho' he turn Heretick or Schiſmatick; tho' he Excommunicate himſelf, or be Excommunicated by the Church; tho' he embrace Paganiſm or Judaiſm, or any other oppoſite Religion; tho' he curſe and blaſpheme CHRIST in a Synagogue or in a Temple, as many of the old Apoſtates did; tho' he become a Julian or an Ecebolius, and trample under Foot the Son of GOD, and count the Blood of the Covenant an unholy Thing, and do deſpite to the Spirit of Grace; yet, after all, if this Man turn again to Chriſtianity, he was not to be received by a ſecond Baptiſm: His Repentance and the Church's Abſolution was ſufficient in that Caſe to reinſtate him in his ancient Profeſſion, and he was not to be rebaptized to be made again a Chriſtian. The Church had but one Baptiſm for the Remiſſion of Sins, and the Vertue of that was ſo far Indelible, that is would always qualify the Man that had received it, to be admitted to Communion again after the greateſt Apoſtacy, only by a true Repentance and Reconciliatory Impoſition of Hands, without Rebaptizing. This was what the Ancients underſtood by what we now call the Indelible Character of Baptiſm. But they were far from thinking, that a Man who was ſuch an Apoſtate had any Right or Authority, whilſt he was an Apoſtate, to challenge any of the common Privileges of a Chriſtian: They did not think, whilſt he was a Pagan or a Jew, that he was properly a Member of the Chriſtian Church ſtill, becauſe of his Baptiſm; or that he had any Right to be called Chriſtian, or to be admitted to the Prayers of the Church, and much leſs to the Communion with other faithful Laymen: And yet, after all, there was ſo much of a Chriſtian in him, by Virtue of his Baptiſm, that he needed not to be baptized again as a mere Jew or Pagan. His Baptiſm was ſuch as nothing could obliterate; it would remain with him when he was an Apoſtate, and either go to Hell with him to his Condemnation, or bring him back to Heaven and the Church by the Way of Repentance, not Rebaptization. Now if any one ſhould ask, Whether ſuch an Apoſtate, while he continued an Apoſtate, was a Chriſtian? The Anſwer muſt be in the Negative, or, at leaſt, with the Qualification of a common School Diſtinction of, Simpliciter, & ſecundum Quid. For, Simply and Abſolutely ſpeaking, it would be incongruous and againſt Propriety of Speech, to call an Apoſtate, Jew, or Heathen, or Turk, a Chriſtian: For Words and Names, when they have no Limitation to any more particular Meaning, are to be taken, in ſenſu famoſiori, according to the common Senſe in which they are uſually underſtood. Now by a Chriſtian, properly ſpeaking, we mean a Man in perfect and full Communion with the Chriſtian Church. Therefore an Apoſtate from Chriſtianity is never Abſolutely and ſimply called a Chriſtian, but an Apoſtate, whether it be Jew, or Pagan, or Mahometan, or under any other Denomination. But yet there is ſomething of a Chriſtian in this Apoſtate, that is, his Baptiſm; in Reſpect of which he is not ſo perfectly a No-Chriſtian, as one that never was baptized: And if in this Reſpect only, in ſuch a qualified Senſe, any one will give him the Title of an Apoſtate Chriſtian, which is, as the Schools ſpeak, only a Chriſtian Secundum Quid, in Reſpect of the Baptiſm which he once received in the Chriſtian Church, and which will for ever continue with him; I cannot think it worth while to contend about Words or Names, when Men are otherwiſe agreed about the Import and Signification of them. Let him be a Chriſtian in this Senſe, yet he has no Right or Authority, till he Repents and is reconciled, to join in Communion with true Chriſtian Laymen, notwithſtanding the Indelible Character of his Baptiſm. And they who would fain make ſomething more of this Character, either underſtand not what it means, or what has been the true Diſcipline of the Chriſtian Church in Reference to the Reiteration of Baptiſm.

SECT. 2. That the Indelible Character of Ordination is of the ſame Nature.

HAVING ſeen the whole Myſtery that is contained under this hard Word, Indelible Character, in Baptiſm: Let us now examine, Whether it be not much after the ſame Manner in the Indelible Character of Ordination. A Prieſt when he is ordained, receives ſuch a Conſecration to a Miniſterial Office by Impoſition of Hands, as needs not upon any Occaſion to be a ſecond Time repeated, to eſtabliſh him in the Execution of ſuch an Office. There is the Indelible Character of it, the very ſame as is in Baptiſm; a Man needs no more to be reordained, than to be rebaptized. But what if a Prieſt ſhould turn Idolater or Apoſtate, and offer Sacrifice at the Heathen Altars, inſtead of the Altar of GOD? Would he preſerve the Authority of a true Chriſtian Prieſt, or the Name and Office of a Prieſt, whilſt he was actually engaged in ſuch Diabolical Prevarication? Would the Vertue of Indelible Character have been thought to extend ſo far as this, by the ancient Councils of the Church? They who ſay ſo, and would perſwade the World to believe ſo, muſt firſt reconcile Contradictions, and ſhew how a Man can have the Authority of a Prieſt when his own Apoſtacy, and GOD and the Church, by her Cenſures, have taken his Authority from him. Let them produce as good Proofs for that, from ancient Councils, as I have produced to the Contrary, and then, perhaps, the Notion of an Indelible Character may ſeem to have more Weight in it than I have repreſented. But, till that be done, I believe the World will hardly be perſuaded, that an Apoſtate Prieſt retains the Right and Authority of a true Chriſtian Prieſt, any more than an Apoſtate Layman retains the Right and Authority of a true Chriſtian

Christian Layman. A Priest indeed may be admitted, if the Church thinks fit, to Clerical Communion again, without a new Ordination, as a Layman may be admitted to Lay-Communion, without a new Baptism: But that is all that an Indelible Character can signifie in either. It does not give Authority to an Apostate Priest, to act as a Priest of GOD, whilst he continues an Apostate, and is deprived by GOD and the Church of all Authority of the Priesthood. If the Church, in some great Exigency, receives such an one to his Office again (which she never did but upon some very extraordinary Occasion) in that Case there was no need of a new Ordination, but only to relax her Censures, and give him that Authority again, which his Crimes and her Censures had taken from him. And this was parallel to the Case of Baptism. There was no need to baptize a Man a second Time, in order to admit an Apostate to the Communion of Laymen: In like Manner, there was no need to ordain a Man a second Time, in order to admit him to Clerical Communion. The Way of Admission was the same in both; it was done by Repentance and Absolution, without Rebaptizing the one, or Reordaining the other. So that the Notion of an Indelible Character could signify no more in the one Case, than it did in the other. Therefore, as an Apostate Layman had not the Right and Authority of a Lay-Christian, whilst he continued an impenitent Apostate, notwithstanding any Force of the Indelible Character of his Baptism; but might be admitted to the Privilege of Lay-Communion again without Rebaptizing, when the Church thought fit to loose him from his Bonds, and reconcile him by the Power of the Keys committed to her: So in like Manner, an Apostate Priest had not the Right and Authority of a Christian Priest, whilst he continued an Apostate, notwithstanding any Force of the Indelible Character of his Ordination; but only was in a Capacity to officiate again without Reordaining, if the Church should find it necessary to employ such an one again, by restoring him to the Authority which by her Censures she had taken from him. And unless this be allowed, we make plain Nonsense of all the ancient Councils, and charge them moreover with Tyranny and Usurpation, in pretending GOD's Authority to take away the Name, and Office, and Authority of the Priesthood from Delinquent Clerks, when no such Power or Authority was committed to them. And there is an End too of all the Discipline of the Church, as to what concerns the Censure of her Delinquent Clergy: She may curb and correct her Laity, and deprive them of all Right and Title to the Communion of Christian Laymen; but all her Censures are but a Brutum Fulmen against the Clergy. For if after she has degraded a Priest, and said, He neither is, nor shall be a Priest; shall neither have the Name, nor Office, nor Dignity, nor the Authority of a Priest, but only Act and Communicate as a Private Layman: If after she has also Excommunicated a Contumacious Priest, and by casting him out of the Church, reduced him to a State one Degree below a Layman; notwithstanding all this, that Priest can pretend, that by Vertue of this Indelible Character, he is as true an Authorized Priest, after all the Thundrings of the Church against him, as he was before: What then becomes of all the Power and Discipline of the Church, and all her Authority to censure and silence Offending and Apostate Priests? A Censure, it seems, may affect the Conscience of a Priest, but not his Authority: That will remain entire to him by Vertue of his Indelible Character, let the Church use what Authority she will to deprive or degrade him. I wish the Defenders of this Unlimited Power, would not undermine the Authority of the Church, whilst they are so seemingly zealous to defend the Authority of the Priesthood. I desire them to read over all the Canons of the Ancient Councils, as I have done upon this Occasion, and then see whether they can find any one single Canon, that places any such Vertue in an Indelible Character as is here pretended.

SECT. 3. The Name of Indelible Character not to be found in any ancient Council.

INDEED the Name of Indelible Character, never so much as occurs once expresly in any Act or Canon of an ancient Council. And they who have been most inquisitive after its Synodical Establishment, are at a Loss to find it any where else but in the Council of Florence or the Council of Trent: Which is an Argument that the Councils knew nothing of it. But if they did not own the Name, they might, however, own the Thing in other Terms. Yes, in a qualified Sense, as I have explained it. They owned, That a Man who was once truly baptized, whether in the Church or out of the Church, whether by a true Authorized Catholick Priest, or by an Heretical Apostate, could never want a second Baptism to reconcile him to the Church after any Transgression. And they likewise owned, That a Man who was once truly ordained a Priest, could never want a second Ordination to qualify him to officiate as a Minister in the Church, if the Church thought fit to receive him into Office again, and give him her Authority and Commission to Act, after any great Apostacy or Censure. But they never said, That when they had bound an Apostate under all the Bonds of Anathema and Excommunication, and divested him of all Clerical Power and Authority, that still he had the Authority of a Priest, when they had taken it from him. Such a Notion of Indelible lible Character, I will venture to affirm, is not to be met with in any ancient Council.

SECT. 4. In what Sense St. Austin owns and allows it in Heretical Priests.

THE Fathers indeed very often call Baptism by the Name of Σφραγὶς and Σημεῖον, which we may translate indifferently a Seal, or a Sign, or a Mark, or a Character. And in St. Austin the Term Character Dominicus, and Character Regius, The LORD's Character, and The Royal Character, is frequently used when he speaks of Baptism. But then by this they mean, Baptism itself only; and not any distinct Character, or Quality, or Spiritual Sign impress'd upon the Soul, and that distinct from Sanctifying Grace too, as the Modern Schoolmen love to word it: For it was only another Name for Baptism, which was the Mark or Character by which compleat Christians, who devoted themselves to CHRIST, were distinguished from Jews and Pagans, who had no such Character upon them. And therefore so far as Baptism was Indelible, so far this Character was Indelible, but no farther. St. Austin used the same Term about Ordination, and he makes the Indelibility both of Baptism and Ordination, as I conceive, to consist in this, That a Man once truly baptized or ordained, tho' he turn Apostate, never needs a second Baptism or a second Ordination. "It is manifest, says he, "that Baptism [a] remains inseparably in the "baptized Person, because whatever Depth "of Iniquity, whatever horrible Gulph of "Sin he falls into, tho' it be into the Ruin "of Apostacy, he never wants Baptism; and "therefore whenever he returns by Repen"tance, his Baptism is not repeated, because "he is judged not to want it." This he often repeats in his Books against the Donatists [b]; and observes farther, that [c] Cyprian himself, and all that followed him, were of the same Opinion: Which appears from [d] several of Cyprian's Epistles, and the Council of Carthage held under him: For tho' they rebaptized such as were baptized by Hereticks and Schismaticks, yet they never rebaptized any that had been baptized in the Church, tho' they Lapsed, or Apostatized, or fell from the Church into any Heresy or Schism; because they supposed, with St. Austin, that no Crime could so far obliterate or extinguish Baptism, as to make an Apostate need a second Baptism. And as an Apostate Layman could not need a second Baptism to make him a compleat Lay-Christian, but only Repentance and Absolution, to reinstate him in full Communion with the Church; so an Apostate Clergyman, tho' he was reduced to Lay-Communion, or fallen below it, could not need a new Ordination, but only the Church's Commission and Authority to release him of his Bonds, and invest him with Clerical Power again; which she did by Absolution, or the Power of the Keys, and not a new Ordination. Thus far therefore St. Austin [e] and all the Ancients allow both Baptism and Ordination to be given inseparably to those to whom they are given: They are Indelible so far as that neither of them need to be repeated upon Apostates: But that Apostates, whilst they remain Apostates, are still true Authorized Priests, is a Doctrine not to be met with in any ancient Council of the Church, nor private Writer.

BUT it may be said, That Modern Writers take Indelible Character in another Sense, and extend it so far as to preserve the Authority of a Priest in him, even after the Church has Degraded or Excommunicated him by her lawful Censures. But who are those Modern Writers? Either those of the Popish or Protestant Communion. For the Popish Writers, I own, They make quite another Thing of the Indelible Character, from what the Ancients did, tho' they can scarce tell an intelligent Reader, what they mean by it. Some call it a Spiritual Relation, others a Spiritual Quality imprinted on the Soul, as an Effect of Baptism, distinct both from the External Sacrament, and the Internal Sanctifying Grace of it. Which is a sort of abstruse Language the Ancients were not acquainted with. But whatever the Nature of it be, they are thus far agreed with the Ancients, that the Indelibility of it consists in this, That a Baptism once truly given, needs not upon any Occasion to be repeated. As to the Character of a Priest given him in his Ordination, they seem still to recede farther from the Doctrine of the Ancients. For it does not suffice them to say, It is such an Indelible Character as may qualify a degraded Priest to officiate again without a new Ordination, if the Church think fit to recall him to his Station: But they will have it to be a perpetual Spiritual Power or Authority impress'd upon the Soul of a Priest, which no Removal from his Office can take from him: For

For ſo Bellarmin [f] the great Oracle of the Romiſh Church, in expreſs Terms, delivers it as the Catholick Opinion. Which is as contrary to the common Sentiments of the ancient Church, as the Doctrine of the Council of Trent is contrary to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the firſt Six General Councils; which take away all Power and Authority from Degraded Clerks, till the Church thinks fit to reſtore them to their Authority again, by a Relaxation of her Cenſures. There is a plain Oppoſition and Contrariety in the Stile and Language of the ancient Church to this Modern new Doctrine. "We deprive a wicked Prieſt of the Power "and Authority of his Prieſthood," ſay the ancient Councils. No, ſays Bellarmin, "That ye cannot do; ye may remove him "from his Office, but ye cannot take away "his Spiritual Power; that remains imprinted on his Soul by an Indelible Character." "We make him no Prieſt," ſay the ancient Councils, "we leave him not ſo much as "the Name of a Prieſt; we reduce him from "the Order of Prieſts to the Order of Laymen." Hold there, ſays Bellarmin, "None "but modern Hereticks do this: It is not "in the Power of the Church to make a "Man who is one Day a Prieſt, the next Day "to become a Layman." Is not this to make Hereticks of all the ancient Church, and to talk in a Stile they were utterly Strangers to? Unleſs any one will ſoften Bellarmin's Words, and ſay, He means no more by his perpetual ſpiritual Power and Character of a Prieſt, than that the Church may recall him to his Office again if She pleaſes, without giving him a new Ordination.

BUT, in the groſs Senſe of the Words, it is not more contrary to the Doctrine and Practice of the ancient Church, than it is to the general Stream and Current of Proteſtant Writers. Bellarmin himſelf owns this: For he ſays, All the Hereticks of theſe Times, (by whom he means all the Proteſtants, from the Days of Wickleſ to his own Time) deny this Character, [g] as he deſcribes it. For they will have the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry to be only a ſimple Office, which may be given and taken away again; ſo that a Man may be to Morrow a Layman, who is to Day a Miniſter and a Paſtor. This was then the general Senſe of the Proteſtants about this new Roman Character, if Bellarmin do not miſrepreſent them. And that he did not much wrong them, appears from the Oppoſition which they preſently made to the Council of Trent, as ſoon as ſhe had framed her Canon about this Indelible Character, with an Anathema (as if it had been the greateſt Point of Faith) againſt thoſe that did not believe it. Calvin wrote his Antidote, and Chemnitius his Examen of the Council of Trent, and they both reject and refute it as a Modern Fiction. Calvin ſays, "It was a Fable "firſt invented in the Schools of the ignorant Monks [h], and that the Ancients "were altogether Strangers to it: And that "it had more of the Nature of a Magical Inchantment, than of the ſound Doctrine of "the Goſpel in it. And therefore it might "be rejected with the ſame Facility that it "was invented." Chamier confirms his Notion of the Novelty of it at large, not only from the Fathers, but from the Schoolmen themſelves [i], from Durandus, and Scotus, and Gabriel Biel, and De Rubione, and Cajetan, who all confeſs, that there are no Footſteps of it to be found, either in Scripture or Antiquity, but that it is wholly owing to the Authority of the Church, and that not very ancient neither. For it is obſervable, that Peter Lombard knew nothing of it: He never mentions any other Character but the Character [k] of CHRIST in Baptiſm, by which he means only the External Form of Baptizing, In the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, which Form or Character is owned to be ancient enough, but is far from being that internal Quality which is pretended to be imprinted on the Soul. He that would ſee more of the Proteſtant Allegations and Oppoſitions againſt this Novelty, may conſult Chemnitius [l], and Rivet [m], and Vorſtius [n], and Gerhard [o], and Alting [p], and Perkins, and Ameſius [q], and ſuch others as have written particular Diſſertations againſt it. I ſhall only trouble the Reader with one of them, the Famous Turretin, who was a Man of great Judgment and Learning in this laſt

Age. His Account of the Matter, as it is ſummed up by his Contractor Riiſſenius [r], is this, That the three Sacraments, of Baptiſm, Confirmation, and Orders, according to the Popiſh Doctrine, imprint a Spiritual and Indelible Character on the Soul; which is given as the Reaſon why they cannot be reiterated or repeated. But we reject this Device as a Fiction, and we ſay, The Faithful indeed have a double Seal or Character, the one internal, which is the Obſignation of the Holy Spirit, whereby they are ſealed to the Day of Redemption; the other external, which is Baptiſm, by which we are diſtinguiſhed from Turks, Jews, and other Infidels; but beſide theſe we acknowledge no other Character. Nothing now, I think, can be plainer than this, that the Indelible Character ſo much contended for by the Romaniſts, is a meer Fiction, and contrary both to the Senſe of the Proteſtants, and the Doctrine of the Primitive Church; which both allow an Indelible Character, as that ſignifies the outward Form of Baptiſm, or Form of Ordination, that needs not to be repeated; but utterly deny any other Character imprinting a Spiritual Power on the Soul of a Prieſt, whereby he is Authorized to perform Sacerdotal Offices perpetually, notwithſtanding any Depoſition or Excommunication. The Proteſtants are ſo far from allowing this, that ſome of them think an Ordination may, without Sacrilege, be repeated: So Calvin, Chemnitius, Alting, Balduin; and it is obſervable, that at Geneva, they repeat the Ceremony of Ordination upon the Removal of a Miniſter from one Church to another, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew formerly in a Diſcourſe [s] of another Nature. And they who do not think this either neceſſary or convenient, or that even an Apoſtate or heretical Prieſt ſhould be reſtored to his Office by a new Ordination, do not yet maintain that a Man is an authorized Prieſt, after he is totally degraded from his Office by the Authority of the Church; but that the Church has Power to take away all Sacerdotal Authority from ſuch a Delinquent Prieſt, if ſhe ſees it neceſſary, and reduce him to the State of a Layman; and that this was actually the Diſcipline and Practice of the Primitive Church in many Caſes; as I have repreſented it, I hope, to the Satisfaction of all ingenuous Readers, and the Conviction of ſome of my erring Brethren, who perhaps would more edify the Church, if they would bear a Part with me in carefully Studying and Explaining the ancient Diſcipline of the Church, inſtead of entangling themſelves and others with the perplexed and intricate, and ſometimes dangerous Notions of the Schoolmen. Chamier, I am ſure, makes no Scruple to affirm, That by the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, a criminal Prieſt might be degraded from his Order, and be made a Layman. For explaining the ancient Notion of Reducing Clerks to Lay-Communion, (which Bellarmin and ſome others ignorantly underſtand of Communion only of one Kind, according to the Modern Phraſe) he ſays, "It was ſo denominated neither from the Place, nor from the Species, nor from the Time, but from the Perſon that received it, becauſe he that before [t] was a Clerk, and in the Nomenclature of Clerks was now a Layman, and in the Order of Laymen." Upon the whole Matter then, we now ſee clearly, that according to the ancient Church, and in the Opinion of the Proteſtants, a criminal Clerk might be degraded from his Order, and be made a Layman, notwithſtanding the Popiſh Pretence of an Indelible Character imprinting a Spiritual Power on his Soul, which the ancient Church knew nothing of, and the Proteſtant Schools reject and refute as a novel Invention. The Conſequence of all which is, That a Clerk, ſo degraded, is no longer an authorized Prieſt, or publick Miniſter of the Catholick Church, but a private Man, in the Order of Laymen: And all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, that are formally degraded by the Church, are in this Predicament, that is, in the Order and Quality of Laymen; only with this Difference, that if the Church, in any great Exigency, thought fit to recall them to their former Station, ſhe did not think it neceſſary to give them a new Ordination; but only a new Commiſſion or Authority, which they wanted before. And yet ſhe never rebaptized ſuch as were in due Form baptized by theſe Men, in their unauthorized State. From whence it plainly follows, that ſhe received the Baptiſm of unauthorized Lay-men, becauſe ſhe received the Baptiſm of thoſe whom ſhe her ſelf made Laymen, by taking all clerical Authority from them. Which was the Thing I deſigned to ſhew. And how ſolidly and fairly, without any any Artifice or Sophiſtry, but the plain Dint of Hiſtorical Truth, I have proved this beyond Exception. I now leave it to the Judgment of every Impartial Reader; only repeating the Argument once more for Memory's Sake.

THE Baptiſm of Depoſed Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, is the Baptiſm of Unauthorized Perſons, either made Laymen, or ſet one Degree below Laymen, according to the general Senſe of the Catholick Church.

BUT the Baptiſm of ſuch Depoſed Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and Degraded Clerks, and Excommunicated Clerks, if miniſtred in due Form, was always received by the Catholick Church without Rebaptizing.

THEREFORE the Baptiſm of Unauthorized Perſons, Laymen, or one Degree below Laymen, if miniſtred in due Form, was always received by the Catholick Church without Rebaptizing.

THE firſt Propoſition in this Argument has been fully made out in this Diſcourſe; and the ſecond Propoſition, in the former Part of this Hiſtory, even to the Satisfaction and Content of the Adverſaries themſelves, who have nothing to object againſt it. And if both the Premiſes ſtand good, it will be impoſſible to ſhake the Concluſion.

SECT. 7. What Submiſſion is due to the Judgment of the Catholick Church, in ſuch Points of Diſcipline as Rebaptizing and Reordaining.

ALL I ſhall add farther in this Chapter, is only a ſeaſonable and uſeful Reflection on what has hitherto been ſaid, in Relation to the Opinion and Judgment of the Catholick Church upon this Subject, viz. That a great Deference is due to her Wiſdom and Authority in all ſuch Controverted Points of Diſcipline, as thoſe of Rebaptization and Reordination of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks and other Unauthorized Laymen, both becauſe they are Matters of Diſcipline, and becauſe they ſeem not to be ſo fully and expreſly determined in Scripture. The Council of Nice ordered the Meletians to be reordained, but the Novatians and Donatiſts were received without it: And yet the Ordinations of the Meletians were as good as the Donatiſts, and ſomething more Canonical than the Novatians: But it became every private Man to comply with theſe different Determinations, and not break or diſturb the Peace and Communion of the Church upon either Account, but to ſubmit to her Authority and Wiſdom in both, as preſuming ſhe had good Reaſons and Authority in both Caſes to order Matters as ſhe judged moſt conducing to the common Intereſt of the Publick. So if ſhe had Determined, that all Perſons baptized by Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or other Unauthorized Laymen, ſhould have been rebaptized, I think every wiſe and good Man ought to have complied with this Rule of Diſcipline, rather than break Communion upon it: But ſince ſhe has at all Times determined the contrary, I judge it not a ſmall Crime, at this Time of Day, for any Private Man to oppoſe his own Sentiments to the common Senſe and Practice of the Univerſal Church, which can have no other Effect but to raiſe a Flame, and diſturb her Peace, and fill Mens Heads with endleſs Scruples about their Baptiſm. If it were not for the Apprehenſion of ſuch Miſchiefs, I would never have given my ſelf the Trouble to have made ſuch a Laborious Search into the ancient Diſcipline and Practice of the Church upon this Head: And I think it now high Time to put an End to ſuch a Diſpute, after all Things have been ſo fully diſcuſſed and ſet in ſo fair a Light, that have any Relation to it. And therefore I intend to take my Leave of this Subject, if the Adverſe Party will ſuffer me to go on quietly with a more neceſſary Work, (in which I have already made ſome Progreſs, and I hope not without general Benefit and Satisfaction to the Church) as ſoon as I have reſolved a few Difficulties, concerning the Ordinations, Baptiſms, and Communion of Hereticks, which may perhaps fall in the way of an Intelligent Reader.

CHAP. VII.

A Reſolution of ſome Difficulties concerning the Communion of Hereticks, and their Baptiſms and Ordinations.

SECT. 1. Whether it be lawful to hold Communion with Heretical Prieſts before they be degraded.

THE firſt Difficulty may ariſe concerning holding Communion with Heretical Prieſts. For if, according to the Doctrine of the Ancients, they be not true Authorized Prieſts, but only Laymen, or a Degree below Laymen; then it ſeems unlawful to hold Communion with them in any Miniſterial Acts whatſoever. And yet in Two Caſes there ſeems almoſt a Neceſſity to do it. 1. When they are not yet fully Diſcovered or Cenſured by the Church. 2. When a whole Church is turned Heretical, and there are no other but ſuch Prieſts to hold Communion with. The firſt of theſe Caſes has no great Difficulty in it: For the Ancients allow, that till Hereticks be fully manifeſted, convicted and cenſured by the Church, Men may innocently communicate with them. The Caſe often happens to be, as it was in the Strugglings of the Arian Hereſy: Hereticks pretend to be Catholicks, and ſhelter themſelves under Catholick Terms, and profeſs their Faith in the ſame Creeds and Form of Words as Catholicks do, at the ſame time that they put an Equivocal and Heretical Senſe upon them. This was the ſubtle Artifice of the Politick Arians, called Euſebians, from their Ringleader Euſebius, Biſhop of Nicomedia, all the Time of Conſtantine, and of ſome of them in the Time of Conſtantius. They durſt not oppoſe the Council of Nice formally and directly, and therefore they uſed her Creed, and ſpake and taught as other Catholicks did, in the Form of Sound Words, and contented themſelves to put their own private Heretical Senſe upon them. Nay, many of them, when they had got the Word Conſubſtantial thrown out out of the Creed in the Time of Conſtantius, under Pretence of Peace, durſt not yet, in plain Terms, propoſe the Arian Blaſphemies to the People, but ſpake in Scripture Terms, and Words ſeemingly expreſſing the Catholick Faith, which the People underſtood only in the genuine Catholick Senſe, whilſt they had their own fallacious and inſidious Meaning to put upon them. Now tho' theſe Men were Hereticks before GOD, yet they were not ſo in the Eye of the People, who honeſtly took them to mean as they ſpake, without any fraudulent Senſe or Equivocation. And ſo long the People were thought excuſable in Communion with them, becauſe they did not Communicate with them in their Errors, but Intentionally only in the Catholick Faith. But when the Hereticks were once plainly detected and convicted, then it was no longer lawful for the People to joyn with them, but to fly from them as Wolves in Sheeps Cloathing, and avoid them as Miniſters of Antichriſt, and Angels of Satan, who, by a Diabolical Subtilty and Malice, only had tranſformed themſelves into Angels of Light. This is the Reſolution which St. Hilary gives of this Difficulty, with a particular reſpect to the Caſe of Auxentius, the Arian Biſhop of Milan, and Urſatius, and Valens, who pretended to ſpeak Orthodoxly, and profeſſed their Faith in ſuch Terms, as ſeemed to carry in them nothing but the ancient Catholick Doctrine, but they had an inſidious Meaning, which the innocent People could not always diſcover: "They "aſcribed to CHRIST, ſays Hilary [a], the "Name of GOD, becauſe this was alſo given "to Men. They confeſſed him to be truly "the Son of GOD, but only as every one "elſe is made truly the Son of GOD, by "the Sacrament of Baptiſm. They allowed "him to be before Time and Ages, becauſe "this may be ſaid of Angels and the Devil. "So in Reality they aſcribed nothing more "to CHRIST the LORD, than what was "proper to Men or Angels. His peculiar "Property they denied, That he was CHRIST "the true GOD, that is, of the ſame Divi-"nity with the FATHER. But all this Im-"piety was for a long Time coloured over, "and carried on by Fraud and Artifice. And "ſo it happened that the People of CHRIST "were not mortally hurt under the Prieſts of "Antichriſt, whilſt they thought their Faith "and Meaning had been agreeable to their "Words. They heard CHRIST called GOD, "and they ſuppoſed him to be truly ſo. "They heard him called the Son of GOD, "and they thought the Verity of a Son "was implied in the Nativity of GOD. They "heard him ſaid to be before all Time, and "they thought that being before all Time "was the ſame Thing as being Eternal. So "the Peoples Ears were much more Pious "than the Hearts of the Prieſts." Thus far therefore they Communicated with the Hereticks, ſuppoſing them to be Orthodox and Sincere according to their outward Expreſſions. But when once it was made appear to them, that they were Hereticks indeed, then Hilary tells them, "They ought no long-"er to Communicate with them as Miniſters "of CHRIST, but to avoid [b] them as "Antichriſts, as Angels of Satan, as Ene-"mies of CHRIST, as Devils, though by the "Emperor's Favour, they were in Poſſeſſion "of

" of the Churches. They ſhould not be ſo " much in Love with Walls and Buildings, " as to think the true Church of GOD was " confined to them, and for their Sakes have " Peace with the Arians. For Antichriſt him- " ſelf was to ſit within the Walls of the Church. " So that Mountains, and Woods, and Lakes, " and Priſons, where the Prophets of GOD " were caſt, were ſafer Places than the Build- " ings of the Church in ſuch a Condition. " Therefore depart, ſays he, from Auxentius, " that Angel of Satan, that Enemy of CHRIST, " that wicked Deſtroyer, that Denyer of the " Faith, which he made Profeſſion of before " the Emperor, in ſuch a manner as to deceive " him, and ſo deceived him as to blaſpheme " CHRIST. Let him gather as many Sy- " nods as he pleaſes againſt me; Let him " Proſcribe me as an Heretick by Publick Ti- " tles, as he has often done already; Let " him ſtir up the Anger of great Men as " much as he will againſt me; yet he ſhall " never be any better, in my Opinion, than " a Devil, becauſe he is an Arian. Nor will " I ever deſire to be at Peace with any but " thoſe, who, according to the Rule of the " Nicene Fathers, Anathematize the Arians, and " Preach CHRIST to be the true GOD." By this one Inſtance, (to which I could add many more) it is eaſy to judge, how far it was deemed Innocent to hold Communion with undetected Hereticks, and where the Bounds of that Communion end, viz. when Hereticks openly declare themſelves, and are convicted of their Errors againſt the Catholick Faith, then they were no longer to be Communicated with as Prieſts of GOD, but to be avoided as the Prieſts of Antichriſt, as Angels of Satan, as Deſtroyers of the Faith, with whom no Peace could ſafely be maintained, tho' they were in Poſſeſſion of the Churches.

SECT. 2. Whether it be lawful to Communicate with Hereticks, when a whole Church is Heretical.

BUT what if the whole Church ſhould turn Hereticks, would it be lawful in that Caſe to Communicate with them? I anſwer, If by the whole Church, be underſtood the whole Catholick Church, the Suppoſition is not to be allowed. For the whole Catholick Church never was totally involved in any damnable Hereſy. In the greateſt Prevalency of the Arian Faction the whole Church was far from being overſpread with that Error, as a Learned Perſon has [c] undeniably demonſtrated againſt thoſe that ſuppoſe it. And it is but a vulgar Error, to ſay, That the Council of Ariminum was a Council of Arian Biſhops, or that the whole World upon that turned Arian: For tho' St Jerom's Teſtimony is Commonly alledged for that, yet I have had Occaſion heretofore [d] to ſhew the Contrary from St. Jerom himſelf, who vindicates the Biſhops of Ariminum, as Catholick Biſhops, but only inſidiouſly impoſed upon by Urſatius and Valens, the ſame that St. Hilary complains of, who pretended to be true Catholicks, and offered a Catholick Creed to the Council, which they ſubſcribed in a Catholick Senſe, tho' theſe ſubtil Arians put their own fraudulent and equivocal Senſe upon it. Which, as ſoon as the Catholick Biſhops underſtood, they declared their Abhorrence of the Fraud, and utterly deteſted their Communion. Which is a more pregnant Evidence ſtill, that the Face of the whole Catholick Church was never totally overſpread with Arianiſm. Nor can it be ſhewed, that in the darkeſt Times of Popery the whole Catholick Church was ſunk into the Dreggs of Popiſh Errors: For, to ſay nothing of the Eaſtern Churches, which never came under the Romiſh Yoke and Tyranny, I have made it appear, in the Firſt Part of this Scholaſtical Hiſtory, that there were ſufficient Numbers among the Albigenſes, which never ſubſcribed or fell in with the Romiſh Idolatry and Corruptions. And I do not find any of my Oppoſers inclined to call this in Queſtion. So that the Suppoſition of the whole Catholick Church's having, at any Time, fall'n into damnable Hereſy, is a Suppoſition in Fact without any Foundation. But if by the whole Church, be meant only the Aggregate Body of ſome particular Church, as that of Rome, then there is no Abſurdity in ſuppoſing, that ſuch a whole Church may fall into damnable Hereſy: And if the Queſtion then be, Whether it was Lawful to join in Communion with ſuch an heretical Church? It will eaſily be reſolved by the foreſaid Anſwer of St. Hilary: If Men are not well apprized of any Hereſies maintained in ſuch a Church, ſo far her Communion may be Innocent to them, as the Communion of thoſe Arian Biſhops was to the Catholicks that Hilary mentions: But if they are known Hereſies, the Communion of heretical Prieſts is to be avoided, and Catholick Communion to be preſerved with the reſt of the Church in a ſpiritual Union with them, when a Man has no Opportunity corporally to join with them. But if Men, thro' invincible Ignorance, join in heretical Communion, which they, thro' want of Judgment, ſuppoſe ſtill to be Orthodox and Innocent, as perhaps it was the Caſe of many in the dark Times of Popery, and may be ſo ſtill in many Countries where nothing but Popery is profeſſed; what Allowance GOD will make for ſuch honeſt Ignorance, is beſt known to himſelf, and it belongs not to us poſitively to determine. The Church always made a Diſtinction betwixt Hereſiarchs and their Followers; between the Guides and the People; and

[c] Bull. Defenſ. Fid. Nicæn. in Epilogo.

[d] Origin. Eccleſ. Lib. 6. cap. 3. n. 10. p. 365.

and between ſuch as were born and bred in the Church, and afterwards Apoſtatized into Hereſy, and thoſe that received their Errors from the Tradition and Seduction of their Parents. Inſomuch that St. Auſtin goes ſo far in his great Charity, as to ſay, "That "they who defend [e] a falſe and perverſe "Opinion without any pertinacious Animo- "ſity, eſpecially if by any audacious Pre- "ſumption of their own they did not firſt "invent it, ſuch Men are not to be rec- "koned among Hereticks." He means, I ſuppoſe, they have not the Formality of Hereſy in them, Pride and Obſtinacy, as commonly the firſt Seducers have, and therefore they may, perhaps, find Favour with GOD, who knows the Sincerity of their Hearts, and we may Judge charitably of them, at the ſame Time that we do not think it Lawful to join in Communion with them.

SECT. 3. Whether, in any Caſe, it be Lawful to deſire the Baptiſm of Hereticks.

THE next Difficulty may ariſe concerning the deſiring of Baptiſm from the Hands of an heretical Prieſt, where a Catholick cannot be found to do it. Shall a Man, in that Caſe, rather die without Baptiſm, than receive it from the Hands of ſuch a Prieſt? The Queſtion has no Difficulty at all in ordinary Caſes: For the ancient Rule was very plain, That where a Catholick Prieſt might be had, no Man might have Recourſe to a known Heretick [f] under Pain of Excommunication. If it be ſaid, That Conſtantine was baptized by Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, who was an Arian: I anſwer, That Euſebius profeſſed himſelf a Catholick all the Time that Conſtantine lived, and he durſt do no otherwiſe, for fear of Baniſhment: So that Conſtantine did not deſire Baptiſm of him but only upon Preſumption of his being a Catholick; and if Euſebius prevaricated and was a ſecret Heretick, that was nothing to Conſtantine, who judged him to be a Catholick, and in the Simplicity of his Soul deſired Baptiſm of him as a Catholick, and not as an Arian. For otherwiſe it is not to be imagined, that a Perſon ſo zealous againſt Arianiſm as Conſtantine, would ever have ſubmitted to have been baptized by an Arian, ſo much againſt the Rule the of Church, in an Ordinary Caſe, when many other Catholick Biſhops might as eaſily have been procured to do it. But the Difficulty of the Queſtion is in Caſes of Extremity, when a Man is born or lives in a Country, where there are none but Hereticks, and muſt either die without Baptiſm, or receive it from them: What is to be done in ſuch an Exigency? St. Auguſtine reſolves this Caſe plainly, without any Heſitation, "That if "a Man is [g] compelled by extreme Ne- "ceſſity, where he cannot have a Catholick "to give him Baptiſm, to take it at the "Hands of one who is not in Catholick "Unity; in that Caſe he ſhould be rekcon- "ed as a Catholick, tho' he died immediate- "ly, becauſe he was in Heart and Mind a "Catholick, and would have been baptized "in Catholick Unity, if there had been any "Opportunity to have done it. If ſuch an "one lives, and corporally joins himſelf to "the Catholick Congregation, from whence "in Heart he never departed, we not on- "ly not diſallow what he has done, but ſe- "curely and truly commend him for it: "Becauſe he believed GOD to be preſent "in his Heart, where he preſerved Unity, "and would not depart out of this Life "without the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which "he knows to be GOD's, and not Men's, "whereſoever he finds it. But if any one, "when he might receive it in the Catholick "Church, by ſome Perverſeneſs of Mind, "chuſes rather to be baptized in Schiſm, tho' "he afterward deſign to return to the "Church, becauſe he is certain the Sacra- "ment will profit him in the Church, but "not elſwhere: This is a perverſe and wicked "Man, and ſo much the more perniciouſly "ſo, by how much the more knowing he "is." St. Auſtin gives the ſame Reſolution, [h] in Caſe a Man receives Baptiſm from a Schiſmatick in extreme Neceſſity at the Point of of Death: "This Baptiſm is advantageous to "him, becauſe he receives it with a Heart "and Mind never ſeparated from the Ca- "tholick Unity of the Church: Whether "he lives or dies, he is ſpiritually in the "Church, and therefore this Baptiſm is of "Advantage to him." So that Caſes of Neceſſity make many Things innocent and allowable, which in ordinary Caſes are ſtrictly prohibited by the Laws of GOD and Man. The Reſolution of this Caſe may perhaps be of ſome Uſe to all ſuch, who are Baptized in Countries where the Church is overrun with Hereſy and Schiſm; and to thoſe who are baptized in Infancy, by the Force of their Parents carrying them to Hereticks or Schiſmaticks for Baptiſm, when they might have had it in the Church: Tho' the Parents cannot plead Neceſſity in that Caſe, yet the Children perhaps may be allowed to do it; and the Church accept their Plea, when they deteſt their Parents Iniquity, and return unfeignedly to the Unity of the Catholick Church.

SECT. 4. Whether the Ordinations of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks may be accepted by the Church without Reordaining.

THE laſt and greateſt Difficulties ſeem to be about the Ordinations of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and ſuch degraded Biſhops as are diveſted of their Authority to Ordain. For if they are not true Authorized Miniſters in that State, but, at the beſt, only in Lay-Communion; as they have no Authority to baptize, ſo neither can they have any juſt Authority, in ſuch a State, to ordain. But then the Queſtion is, What if they do ordain in ſuch a State? Of what Force are their Ordinations? How did the Church receive pretended Clerks ſo ordained? Did ſhe wholly diſannul their Ordination, and give them a new Ordination; or only ſupply what was Deficient in them, by adding her own Authority and Confirmation? To this I anſwer, The Church uſed her Liberty in this Matter, to receive or reject ſuch Ordinations, as ſhe thought expedient, and judged moſt neceſſary in the preſent Exigency of Affairs. She received the Ordinations of the Novatians and the Donatiſts, without Reordaining, at the ſame time that ſhe rejected the Ordinations of the Meletians, and would admit none of their Clergy to officiate in the Church without a new Ordination: And yet Meletius, the Father of the Meletians, was once a regular Archbiſhop in the Church, if that had been ſufficient to have given a perpetual Authority to his Ordinations; But Navatian, the Father of the Novatians, and Majorinus, the firſt Founder of the Donatiſts, were never truly ordained Biſhops in the Church, and conſequently never had true and lawful Authority to ordain others. There muſt therefore needs be ſome other Reaſon, why the Church was more favourable in the Caſe of the Novatians and Donatiſts, than ſhe was in that of the Meletians: For it could not be becauſe the Ordinations of the Novatians and Donatiſts were originally more Authentick than the other, ſince it appears from the Obſervation I have made upon the Hiſtory of both, that they were rather leſs Authentick, as deſcending from thoſe who were never Ordained themſelves true Biſhops in the Church. But the Truth of the Matter ſeems to be this, The Church never eſteemed any of theſe Three Sects to be lawful Miniſters, either Biſhops, Prieſts, or Deacons, but only in the Condition of Laymen, according to the Rules and Diſcipline of the Church then prevailing; but becauſe they retained the outward Form of Ordination, as they did the outward Form of Baptiſm, though they had no Authority to give the one more than the other, the Church uſed her Liberty, either to reject their Ordinations wholly, or to confirm them by her own Authority, as ſhe judged expedient for the Reclaiming thoſe Sects, or promoting her own Welfare and Peace, as the Exigency of the Caſe required. Therefore ſhe rejected the Ordinations of the Meletians, and would admit none of them to officiate in the Church, till they received a new Ordination; becauſe the Meletians had joyned Intereſt with the Arians, and deſerved a more ſevere Cenſure. And they were but an upſtart Sect, not inveterately rooted, nor far ſpread, and therefore might more eaſily be obliged to ſubmit to the Church's Diſcipline. But the Novatians and Donatiſts never ſided with the Arians, but generally joyned with the Church in oppoſing them, and therefore the Church was a little more inclined to ſhew Favour to them. Beſides, they were become firm and inveterate Sects, which had ſpread themſelves in many Parts of the World, and gained great Strength, ſo that there was little Hopes of Reducing them by the Strictneſs and Exactneſs of Diſcipline: Therefore the Church, in this Exigency, to regain them more Univerſally, thought it moſt conducing to the publick Intereſt of Religion to abate ſomething of the Rigour of her own Diſcipline upon this Occaſion, which otherwiſe would not have been allowed, but only for the Sake of Peace. For, in Strictneſs of Diſcipline, no one ordained or baptized by Hereticks, was ever to be admitted to Clerical Dignity in the Church, either by Virtue of his former Ordination, or by a new one: But, for prudential Reaſons, the Church ſometimes diſpenſed with theſe Rules, and admitted ſome by a new Ordination and ſome without it, but both the one and the other by a new Commiſſion and Authority, which they had not, nor could have in Hereſy or Schiſm: For out of the Church there was no juſt Authority either to baptize or to ordain, as has been abundantly proved before; but the Authentick Performance of theſe theſe Things belonged only to the Miniſters of the Church. If it be asked, How the Church could admit ſuch to officiate without a new Ordination? I anſwer, Upon the ſame Ground that She admitted them without a new Baptiſm: For the outward Form of Ordination had been given them before, tho' by Perſons who had no Authority to give it: And, though no juſt Authority could be conveyed by ſuch unauthorized Ordainers, yet the Church did not think fit, in ſuch Exigencies, always to repeat the outward Form of Ordination, but only ſupplied what was deficient in it, by her own juſt Authority and Commiſſion granted to them; which was thought ſufficient to compleat an unauthorized and incompleat Ordination, as the Unction of Chriſm or Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation, was thought ſufficient to compleat an unauthorized and incompleat Baptiſm. But why then did not the Church obſerve this Method, in receiving all Hereticks to Clerical Dignity without a new Ordination? Why did ſhe not admit the Meletians and others without reordaining, as well as the Novatians and Donatiſts? I anſwer, Becauſe this was Matter of Prudence and Diſcretion, and the Church uſed her Authority and juſt Liberty, in diſpenſing her Commiſſion to others out of the Church, in ſuch a manner as ſhe in her Wiſdom judged moſt convenient for the Reduction of Hereticks, and Preſervation of her own Peace; which are the great Ends to be aimed at in all Parts of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: And it is but fair to let the Church judge for herſelf, what is fitteſt to be done in all ſuch Caſes. And if Men would conſent in Modeſty to be guided by this Rule, we ſhall need Diſpute no longer about Rebaptizing thoſe who are baptized by unauthorized Baptiſm, whether adminiſtred by Hereticks or other Laymen, ſince this has been ſo fully determined by the Univerſal Conſent and Practice of the Catholick Church, in her firſt Six General Councils, and all others that have ſaid any thing upon the Subject, except thoſe of the Cyprianick Age, which are no Balance againſt the Counterpoiſe-Judgment of the Church in all Ages.

AN APPENDIX:

CONTAINING

Some REMARKS on the Author of the Second Part of Lay-Baptiſm Invalid.

CHAP. I.

A ſhort Way to end the Controverſy with this Author about Unauthorized Baptiſm, by ſhewing his great Ignorance of the ancient Diſcipline of the Church, whilſt he ſuppoſes the ancient Hereticks to be true Authorized Prieſts in Actual Commiſſion, when the Church had reduced them to the State of Laymen.

WHEN I had finiſhed the foregoing Diſcourſe, there came to my Hands an Anonymous Treatiſe, called, The Second Part of Lay-Baptiſm Invalid: Wherein the Author pretends to ſhew, That the ancient Catholick Church never had any Eccleſiaſtical Law, Tradition, or Cuſtom for the Validity of Baptiſms performed by Perſons who never were commiſſioned by Biſhops to baptize: All proved from Mr. Bingham's Scholaſtical Hiſtory of Lay-Baptiſm, and from other Evidences not produced by that Hiſtorian. I muſt no longer call this Author by the Name of Mr. Lawrence, for he is very angry at my Incivility, (as he pleaſes to term it) for doing ſo before; when yet I thought no Harm in doing that, which his greateſt Friends do every Day, and ſpeak of him in all publick Places of Concourſe, with a Deſign to honour him under that Appellation and Diſtinction. But the Gentleman is out of Humour with me upon other Reaſons, and therefore takes any Occaſion to expreſs his Anger and Reſentments againſt me, for being really ſo uncivil as to pretend to underſtand Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and the Diſcipline of the Church better than himſelf, and for being a little too free in correcting his Miſtakes, and expoſing the dangerous Conſequences and Abſurdities of ſome of his Opinions. But however it be, I will neither trouble myſelf nor the Reader any farther about his Name, but ſtick to the Merits of his Cauſe, and ſhew him that he has made as groſs a Miſtake about the Senſe and Practice of the ancient Catholick Church (after all his Pretences to Councils and Fathers, and the general Aſſiſtance of all his Friends) as when he ſaid, A Major Propoſition was a Minor or an Aſſumption:

tion: And therefore if he will be but as Ingenuous in retracting one plain Error as another, our Controverſy will be at an end, and he will trouble the World no more with ſuch tedious Accounts of ancient Hiſtory, to ſo little Purpoſe. I will not ſay of him as he ſays of his Learned Adverſaries (in his Preface, p. 2.) "That if they make falſe Arguments to defend Error, he ſhall not eſteem "ſuch their Methods to be only Miſtakes, "but ſomething worſe, conſidering the Greatneſs of their Knowledge." I have more Charity for him than this comes to, tho' he has ſo little for others; and believe that when he turned a Minor Propoſition into a Major, and thereby made Lucifer a Witneſs to an Aſſertion which he never dreamt of, that it was only an undeſigned Miſtake: But yet there are two Things which I cannot but a little wonder at. 1. That ſo Learned and Acute a Man as Dr. Hicks, ſhould carefully read over his Papers, and never obſerve ſuch an Heap of Blunders, till an Adverſary came more kindly to diſcover them. And, 2. That this Gentleman ſhould be ſo ſevere and uncharitable in his Cenſures of other Mens Intentions, who needs ſo much Candor and Charity to put a favourable Conſtruction upon his own. For any Man's Knowledge is great enough to tranſcribe aright the Words of an Engliſh Writer; and if he tranſcribes them wrong in favour of his own Opinion, would not an untoward Critick, of an ill-diſpoſed Temper, be apt to ſuſpect the worſt, and uncharitably conſtrue it to be ſomething more than a Miſtake, when outwardly it bears ſuch a Face of an ill Deſign to impoſe upon his Readers? Now if this Gentleman would not be pleaſed to have baſe Suggeſtions inſinuated againſt himſelf, he ought to have ſo much Candor and Charity, as not cauſeleſly to inſinuate the like againſt others, and repreſent them as Abettors of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and of thoſe who would diſſolve and take away the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, and of CHRIST's Authority here on Earth, and of all Revealed Religion too; which are his kind Suggeſtions in the End of his Preface, p. 21. concerning the Principles of thoſe, who only labour to defend the Principles and Practices of the Catholick Church againſt his own Heterodoxies and Novelties in Opinion. Some of theſe Learned Men he thus Characterizes, have been as zealous Oppoſers of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and written as Learnedly and Judiciouſly in Defence of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, and CHRIST's Authority on Earth, and Revealed Religion, as either he or any of his Aſſiſtants can pretend to do: But ſomething, true or falſe, was to be inſinuated againſt their Integrity, to frighten young Students in Divinity from Reading and Conſidering their Works, as if he and his Friends were the only Men that could teach them ſound Divinity after Seventeen hundred Years Experience. And yet I will give the World a plain Demonſtration, that he has ſaid much more for the Honour and Encouragement of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and more Diſhonourable things againſt the true Power of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, and the Authority of the Church, (which he pretends to be defending) than any of thoſe that have appeared in Defence of the Church's Power and Authority againſt him.

To come cloſe to the Point, the Thing I mean is this: The Author aſſerts, over and over again, both in his Preface and his Book, That according to the Diſcipline of the Ancient Church, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, even when they were cut off and caſt out of the Church, were ſtill allowed to be true Authorized and Commiſſioned Prieſts, inveſted with full Power, Authority, and Right to baptize; and that upon this Principle only the Church allowed of the Validity of their Baptiſm, becauſe they were then Prieſts in Commiſſion, and not in the State of Laymen.

Now I affirm and maintain on the contrary, that both theſe Aſſertions are as falſe, as for a Man to ſay, That Black is White, or, That a Major Propoſition is a Minor. And if this Author will pleaſe to peruſe the foregoing Diſcourſe with any tolerable Ingenuity and Candor, he will receive abundant Satisfaction as to both the Particulars I maintain againſt him. The Queſtions are Matters of Fact, upon which the whole Controverſy turns and depends: viz. Whether Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, under the Cenſures of the Church, were reputed to be actually Prieſts in Commiſſion, with full Power, Authority, and Right to baptize; or were not rather deprived of their Commiſſion and Authority, and reduced back again to the State of Laymen? And then, Upon what Foot the Church received the Baptiſms of ſuch Men? (For that ſhe received them upon ſome Foot or other in Fact, there is no Diſpute); but the Queſtion is, Whether ſhe received them as the Baptiſms of true authorized Prieſts, not deprived of their Commiſſion; or as the Baptiſms of uſurping Prieſts, deprived of their Commiſſion, and reduced to the State of Laymen? The determining theſe Queſtions of Fact aright will determine the whole Diſpute I have with this Author concerning the Senſe and Practice of the ancient Church. For if Heretical Prieſts have no better Title to the true Authority of the Chriſtian Prieſthood than Laymen; if they loſe the Commiſſion which they once had, by the Cenſures of the Church, and are reduced to the State of Laymen; then, I hope, this Author or any one will own, that the Church, in receiving the Baptiſms adminiſtred by ſuch Perſons, in ſuch a State, received the Baptiſms of thoſe whom ſhe eſteemed not true Authorized Prieſts, or Prieſts in actual Commiſſion, but but only Laymen. To quibble now about their once having received a Commiſſion which other Laymen never had, will here be to no purpoſe: For if they may forfeit and loſe their Commiſſion, then it is the ſame thing whether they had or had not a Commiſſion; ſince their Acts, after they have forfeited their Commiſſion, and are legally deprived of it, are as much Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned, as thoſe who never had any Commiſſion at all, that is, the meereſt Lay-men.

Now then, this is the Thing which I will fairly try with this Author, and all his Learned Aſſiſtants, to put a ſhort End to this whole Debate, Whether thoſe Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts, whom the Ancient Church formerly cenſured and degraded, were, during that Cenſure and State of Degradation, reputed to have the Authority of true Prieſts of GOD, and remain Undeprived of their Commiſſion notwithſtanding the Church's Cenſure? This Author affirms it, I abſolutely deny it, and will prove my Poſition to him univerſally, and in ſuch a manner as he ſhall not be able to contradict it.

FOR, firſt of all, he owns and confeſſes, without ſcruple, (p. 53.) that all the Cyprianiſts were entirely of this Opinion, "That He-"reticks and Schiſmaticks were but as Lay-"men; that they had no Power, Authority "or Right to baptize." Thus far we are exactly agreed. The Proofs he has alledged out of Cyprian are full and convincing enough, and almoſt the very ſame that I have produced in the foregoing Diſcourſe. So that we can never diſpute farther about the Opinion of the Cyprianick Churches, as to this Particular, Whether Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, after they are formally cenſured, be Commiſſioned Prieſts, or only Uncommiſſioned Laymen. When the Church, by her lawful Power, withdraws their Commiſſion, then they are no longer Authorized Prieſts, but only in the State and Condition of Laymen, becauſe the Church has withdrawn her Authority and Commiſſion from them.

BUT then this Author pretends, that the other Churches in the Cyprianick Age were of a different Opinion, and had a different Diſcipline; and that the Catholick Church alſo, in after Ages, had other Sentiments of Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts, and eſteemed them to be actually true Authorized and Commiſſioned Prieſts, even when they were under their Errors and the Church's Cenſures. Now theſe are our Author's Grand Miſtakes, which all the Learning and Aſſiſtance of his Party will never clear him of: And I require him either to make good his Aſſertions (which I am confident he can never do) or elſe confeſs his Errors, and put an End to this whole Debate, ſo far as concerns the Hiſtory of the Church, and then he may diſpute, for me, with whom he pleaſes. I do not charge him, as he does his Learned Adverſaries, with any wicked or deſigned Miſtakes, but reckon he was led into them by the Information and Authority of others, who themſelves ſeem not to have duly conſidered the exact Diſcipline of the ancient Catholick Church. For I have made it appear as plain in the foregoing Diſcourſe, as the Nature of any Subject is capable of, as plain as that a Major Propoſition is not a Minor, that all the Churches in the World, in Cyprian's Time, were entirely of Cyprian's Opinion, as to this Particular, That Heretical and Schiſmatical Prieſts were not truly and properly Prieſts (however they might equivocally bear the Name) whilſt they were formally under the Churches Cenſures; but were only treated in the Quality and Condition of Laymen, or leſs than Laymen, if they were Excommunicated and caſt out of the Church. And I have made it farther appear, That the Catholick Church, in after Ages, never departed from this Opinion, if we may judge of her Senſe by the Decrees of General or Particular Councils, and the Declarations of Private Fathers, all concurring in the ſame Opinion. I have ſhewed Dr. Brett, and this Author with him, That Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, writing to Cyprian, declares it to be the Senſe, the unanimous unconteſted Senſe of all the Biſhops in the World, That Criminal Biſhops, ſuch as Idolaters and Hereticks, once formally declared and cenſured, were no longer to be reputed Prieſts, but Laymen. And if the Catholick Church agreed with them in after Ages, here is as full Conſent as can be required in any Caſe againſt theſe Gentlemens Aſſertions. I will repeat nothing that I have ſaid before, but only add the ample Teſtimony of St. Ambroſe, who, in his Books of Repentance, againſt the Novatians, plainly ſpeaks the Senſe of the whole Church upon this Matter of Sacerdotal Authority and Power; denying the Novatians and all other Hereticks to have any Right or Authority to perform any Sacerdotal Acts, ſuch as Binding and Looſing, or Retaining and Forgiving Sins. "For this Pow-"er, ſays he, is permitted to the Prieſts [a] "alone. Therefore the Church rightly claims "it, becauſe ſhe has true Prieſts: But Hereſy "cannot claim it, becauſe it has no Prieſts "of GOD. And whilſt Hereſy cannot claim "it, it pronounces Sentence againſt itſelf,

[a] Ambroſ. de Pœnitent. Lib. 1. c. 2. Jus enim hoc ſolis permiſſum ſacerdotibus eſt. Recte igitur Eccleſia vendicat, quæ veros ſacerdotes habet; Hæreſis vendicare non poteſt, quæ ſacerdotes Dei non habet. Non vendicando autem ipſa de ſe pronunciat, quod cum ſacerdotes non habeat, jus ſibi vendicare non debeat ſacerdotale.

"that whilſt it has no Prieſts, it cannot lay "claim to Sacerdotal Power." Can any Words be plainer than theſe, to prove, that Hereticks are no true Prieſts, or Prieſts of GOD? Or that there are no true Prieſts but only in the Church, however the Novatians or other Hereticks might pretend to that Name? Could any one more fully or emphatically expreſs himſelf againſt the Novatian Hereticks, if he had a mind to ſay, They were no Prieſts, becauſe they were Hereticks, and conſequently could lay Claim to no Part of the Sacerdotal Authority and Power? I ſhall deſpair of underſtanding any Man, if this be not the plain Senſe of St. Ambroſe.

Now then, I would ask our Author, How came it to paſs, that the Baptiſms given by theſe Novatians (who are thus Poſitively declared to be no Prieſts, nor to have any Sacerdotal Authority or Power) came afterward to be received both by the great Council of Nice, and the whole Catholick Church after it, as Valid, ſo far as not to need the outward Form to be repeated by Rebaptization? It could not be becauſe they were Prieſts: For they were no Prieſts, nor inveſted with any Sacerdotal Authority as Prieſts of GOD, as St. Ambroſe peremptorily determines. If therefore their Baptiſm was received as Valid, it is plain, it muſt be upon ſome other Reaſon than their having Sacerdotal Authority, for they had none: And that ſhews alſo, that the Authority of the Adminiſtrator is not ſo abſolutely Eſſential to the Outward Form of Baptiſm, as our Author makes it, in the Opinion of the ancient Church; ſince they received the Baptiſms of thoſe whom they reckoned to be no Prieſts, nor inveſted with any Sacerdotal Powers, as is evident in this Caſe to a Demonſtration.

OUR Author muſt now have Recourſe to his uſual Evaſion, by which he can anſwer a Book in two Words, and ſay, That St. Ambroſe here ſpeaks only his own Private Senſe of the Novatians and other Hereticks, and not the Publick Senſe of the Church. But I have already precluded him from this little Subterfuge, by ſhewing at large, that this was not the Private Senſe of St. Ambroſe, but the Voice of the whole Church; the Senſe of the Cyprianiſts, (which he himſelf owns) and the Senſe of Cornelius and all the Biſhops of the World in the Time of Cyprian, who had no Diſpute with Cyprian, upon this Point; the Senſe of the Ante-Nicene and the Poſt-Nicene Fathers together; the Senſe of the Six General Councils, and all the Provincial Councils that have ſaid any Thing againſt Hereticks: They all agree with St. Ambroſe in this, That Hereticks are no true Prieſts, or Prieſts of GOD, nor inveſted with any Sacerdotal Right, Authority, or Power; but that if they had originally any Commiſſion given them by the Church, inveſting them with Sacerdotal Authority, they loſe that Authority, when the Church withdraws her Commiſſion by her Cenſures. And then it is all one whether ever they had Sacerdotal Authority or not: It is certain they had none by the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, when once ſhe had recalled her Commiſſion, and taken their Authority from them; which ſhe thought ſhe had Power and Authority to do: And then in that Caſe Hereticks had no more Sacerdotal Authority than the meereſt Unauthorized Laymen. All this I have made as plain to our Author, as that a Major Propoſition is not a Minor; and therefore I hope he will be as Ingenuous as he was before, and own himſelf to have made an undeſigned Slip, in repreſenting the Diſcipline of the Ancient Church quite otherwiſe than it appears to be, and what a Man muſt ſhut his Eyes upon, and wink hard, not to be convinced of.

I WOULD not have our Author now quibble with me again, about thoſe who never received any Sacerdotal Commiſſion from Biſhops, and ſay the Caſe of the ancient Hereticks and theſe Men is not parallel. For if Men loſe the Commiſſion they once had, they have no more Sacerdotal Authority by Vertue of that Commiſſion, than they who never had any Commiſſion at all; and therefore, in this Reſpect, their Caſe is parallel: The one has no more Sacerdotal Authority than the other; the only Difference is, that the one never had a Commiſſion or Authority, the other once had it, but afterward forfeited and loſt it; and then they were in the ſame Condition with thoſe that never had it; they were equally no Prieſts, equally deſtitute of Sacerdotal Power. This our Author owns to have been the Senſe of the Cyprianiſts; and I have ſhewed him (what he did not apprehend before) that it was alſo the general Senſe of the whole Catholick Church in all Ages.

BESIDES, I have obſerved and proved in the ſecond Chapter of the foregoing Diſcourſe, that the Novatian Hereticks, of whom we are now diſcourſing, never had any real and true Epiſcopal Ordination among them; their firſt Founder Novatian was only a Nominal and Falſe Biſhop, a No-Biſhop, by all the Rules and Diſcipline of the Catholick Church; whereby his pretended Ordination was diſannulled from its firſt Original: Whence he himſelf being no Biſhop, could give no Epiſcopal or Sacerdotal Authority to others, againſt the Rules of the Catholick Church.

THIS I have there proved from very plain Evidences; to which I ſhall only add now, the Teſtimony of Pacianus Biſhop of Barcelona, who wrote againſt the Novatians, An. 370. ſeveral Epiſtles, wherein he maintains, that Novatian was never truly Ordained a Biſhop, but was only a Nominal Biſhop, a Falſe Biſhop, ſhop, a No-Biſhop, [b] becauſe he had no proper Ordainers, no lawful Conſecration; his Conſecration was againſt all ordinary Rules; he was not ordained by the Biſhops of the Province; but by the Letters and Inſtigation of ſome pretended Confeſſors; and that when the See was full, and another Biſhop legally ordained before him. So Novatian had only the Name and Title of a Falſe Biſhop, not the Right and Power of a True one. He alſo aſſerts, that the Novatians had no true [c] Prieſts among them, rightly Conſecrated. Therefore, though they might give pretended Ordinations, and call themſelves Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, yet they were but Nominally ſo, being deſtitute of that Original Power in their firſt Founder, which he ought to have had, to have handed down a Succeſſion of Prieſts among them. For ought then that appears to the contrary, theſe Novatians were in the ſame Condition with thoſe who never received any true Sacerdotal Commiſſion at all, and therefore muſt be ranked in the ſame Claſs with Uncommiſſioned Laymen. All the Difference is, they pretended to a Formal Ordination, and a Divine Commiſſion, and the Authority of Prieſts (which mere Laymen do not uſe to do in the Church); but the Church made no Account of theſe Pretences, but treated them as Laymen in a double Reſpect, both becauſe they firſt wanted a true Ordination and Commiſſion originally; and, ſecondly, becauſe though they had had once a true Commiſſion and Authority, yet they had forfeited their Title to all Sacerdotal Authority and Power, by becoming Hereticks, and falling under the Church's Cenſure.

I KNOW indeed this Author pretends, Pag. 198. that the Council of Nice acknowledged the Novatians "to be true Prieſts and "not Laymen; Perſons deſtitute of Commiſ-"ſion, but ſtill Biſhops, Prieſts, and Dea-"cons, with an indeleted, unrepealed Com-"miſſion to baptize. And ſays, p. 202. "That "they and other Hereticks and Schiſmaticks "had the Church's Lawful Authority and "Commiſſion to baptize." Which would be very ſtrange indeed, that the Church ſhould firſt by her Diſcipline vacate the Commiſſion of Hereticks, and take away their Authority from them; and ſay particularly of the Novatians, that they were no true Prieſts of GOD, nor had Sacerdotal Authority, nor yet any true Ordination or Commiſſion from the beginning; and yet, after all, ſay likewiſe, as the Author repreſents it, that theſe very Hereticks were ſtill true Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, with the Church's Lawful Authority and Unrepealed Commiſſion to baptize, and conſequently perform all other Spiritual Offices of the Miniſterial Function. This would be monſtrous indeed, that the Church ſhould ſo contradict herſelf upon the very ſame Article of Diſcipline in Relation to the ſame Perſon. But the truth of the Matter is, our Author underſtood not the Church's Diſcipline in this Point, and therefore he makes a woful Miſrepreſentation of it. The Council of Nice, or any other Council never allowed the Novatians to be true Biſhops, Presbyters or Deacons, during their Hereſy or Schiſm; but looked upon them as falſe Prieſts, deſtitute of Sacerdotal Power, and the Church's Lawful Authority and Commiſſion to baptize: But if they were willing to return to the Unity of the Church, then they might enjoy thoſe Honourable Stations by the Churches Authority and Commiſſion, which they had only in Pretence, without any Legal Authority or Commiſſion, laid claim to before. This was not to ſay, that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were true Prieſts of GOD, inveſted with the Church's Authority and Commiſſion, whilſt they remained in Hereſy or Schiſm, Degraded and Diveſted of all Sacerdotal Authority by the Church's Cenſures: For this were a manifeſt Contradiction in itſelf, and utterly inconſiſtent with the Proceedings and Diſcipline of all the ancient Councils: But the meaning is, that they who before were only Nominal Prieſts, ſhould now by the Churches Favour have the Authority of Real Prieſts, and act by her Commiſſion in the ſame Station that they had uſurped before, in Contradiction to all the Laws and Rules of the Catholick Church, which with one Voice declare Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to be no true Prieſts of GOD, whilſt they continue in that State, whatever this Author pretends to the contrary.

WE need not now diſpute what Names they were to be called by, whether Prieſts or Laymen: If they had loſt the Church's Commiſſion and Authority, they were as much unqualified, for that Time, as to any Acts, Intents or Purpoſes of the Sacerdotal Power, as the meereſt Layman, who never had any Authority or Commiſſion from the Church. Our Author owns it was ſo by the Diſcipline of the Cyprianick Churches, and I have proved that it was ſo by the Diſcipline of all Churches. And till our Author diſproves this, the Charge will lie upon him, that he has groſsly miſtaken and miſrepreſented the Practice and Diſcipline of the ancient Church, by by putting the Authority and Commiſſion of true Prieſts of GOD into the Hands of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which the ancient Councils unanimouſly agree to take from them.

I MAY now appeal to his own Conſcience and the World, to decide, which of us looks moſt like an Abettor of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, or pleads moſt for the Power of the Church, and the Authority of the Prieſthood; He who againſt the Senſe of all the ancient Church, puts the Power of the Prieſthood, and the Commiſſion and Authority of the Church into the Hands of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and makes them true Prieſts of GOD; or I, who, in Compliance with the Rules and Diſcipline of the ancient Church, ſhew all theſe Things may be denied them, and all theſe Powers and Privileges taken from them? His Aſſertions tend to the Detriment and Diſhonour of the Church's Power, and the Debaſement of her Authority, by ſaying (and that againſt Truth and Fact too) "That "all the ancient Churches, except the Cy- "prianick, allowed Hereticks and Schiſmaticks "to be true Prieſts of GOD, to be true Bi- "ſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, even whilſt they "were declared Hereticks, and under the "Church's Cenſures." Which is ſuch a Reproach to the ancient Diſcipline, and ſuch a Stretch upon the Truth of ancient Hiſtory, that one would think a Man had never looked into a Volume of the ancient Councils, that could be guilty of ſo grand a Miſtake, and make ſuch a Diſhonourable and Partial Repreſentation of the Church's Diſcipline, when there is ſcarce a Council in all the Tomes, but what might have taught him otherwiſe. Therefore, as well for the Honour of the ancient Church, as to ſhew this Gentleman and his Friends their Error, I have ſhewed at large, from inconteſtable Evidences, (from the Hiſtory of General and Provincial Councils, Authorities that cannot be turned off by the little Artifice of ſaying, they are only Private Authors that ſpeak their own Private Senſe) that the ancient Diſcipline was not ſo favourable to the Prieſthood of Hereticks as this Author ſuppoſes. And now let the World judge, who has ſaid moſt for the Honour of Sacerdotal Powers, or who is the greateſt Favourer of Heretical Pretenſions.

BUT this Author and Dr. Brett were both of them very ſenſible, that unleſs Hereticks were allowed to have Sacerdotal Authority and Powers, their Cauſe was infallibly loſt. For then it will undeniably follow, that Men who were no authorized Prieſts, but Laymen, might adminiſter the Outward Form of Baptiſm, ſo far Valid as not to need Repeating. For it cannot be denied that the Baptiſms given by theſe ancient Hereticks, who were no Authorized Prieſts by the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, but Unauthorized Laymen, were notwithſtanding received by the Church without Rebaptization. The Conſequence of which is very plain, that then the ancient Church, all except the Cyprianiſts, did receive the Baptiſms of thoſe whom ſhe eſteemed to be no Prieſts: And it matters not what Names they were called by, whether Unauthorized Prieſts or Unauthorized Laymen; for it is not Names we are diſputing about, but the Authority and Powers of the Men, who took upon them to adminiſter the Outward Form of Baptiſm. If they had not the Church's Authority and Power, they were not the Church's Prieſts; and if they were not the Church's Prieſts they were no Prieſts of GOD: If the Church diſcarded them from all Miniſterial Authority and Power, from all Sacerdotal Office and Function (as ſhe certainly did) then they might call themſelves Prieſts, and pretend to the Rights, and Authority, and Commiſſion of Prieſts ſtill, but the Church made no other account of them but as of Nominal or Falſe Prieſts, as of Uncommiſſioned Prieſts, diveſted of all Authority and Commiſſion, and reduced to the State of Laymen.

IF theſe Things ſtand good (as I am confident they will with all Impartial and Unprejudiced Men, by the Strength of the Evidences in the foregoing Diſcourſe) then there is an End of the Diſpute between me and this Gentleman, about the Senſe and Practice of the Ancient Church, relating to the Adminiſtration of the Outward Form of Baptiſm, by Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Perſons. For if Hereticks, who loſe their Commiſſion which they once had, be as much Unauthorized thenceforward, as any Laymen who never had a Commiſſion, their Caſe, as to Actual Sacerdotal Authority and Power, is then the ſame: And if their Baptiſms were received by the ancient Church only by Impoſition of Hands or Confirmation, that is, by compleating what was deficient for want of Authority, not repeating what was actually done, tho' without Authority; then it muſt be owned, that the Baptiſms given by Perſons who had no actual Authority or Commiſſion (call them what you pleaſe, Uncommiſſioned Prieſts or Uncommiſſioned Laymen) was received by the ancient Catholick Church without Rebaptization. Which is the Thing I have undertaken to ſhew, againſt Dr. Brett and this Author; and I hope I have done it with as good Proofs as the Nature of an Hiſtorical Subject is capable of, to the Evidence of a Demonſtration. And if either of them can bring better Proofs for their Aſſertions than I have done for mine, they ſhall not fail to have my Aſſent upon rational Conviction. Only I deſire now they would obſerve their own Rules, and ſtick to the Conditions they impoſe upon me, that is, give us the Senſe of the Church from her publick Acts, from her General and Provincial Councils, as I now have done, and not from from any dark and ambiguous Expreſſions of private Writers.

I ALSO deſire they would not diſpute any more about Words, nor charge me with Contradictions where there are none. To avoid which beforehand, I think fit to obviate Two Exceptions which I know they will be inclined to make, as if I had contradicted myſelf upon this Subject.

THE firſt is, That in the former Part of my Scholaſtical Hiſtory I have ſaid, That the uſurped Baptiſm of Laymen was not decreed to be valid by the Determination of any General Council: And now I pretend to prove, That the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks is but the Baptiſm of Laymen, by the Determination of all the General Councils; which carries the Face and Appearance of a Contradiction. But this will eaſily be cleared among Wiſe and Ingenuous Men, by diſtinguiſhing the ſeveral Acceptations of the Word Laymen, which may be taken either firſt, for Catholick Laymen, who never had any Pretence to Sacerdotal Authority or Commiſſion in the Church; or, Secondly, for Heretical Laymen, who pretended to have a Sacerdotal Commiſſion, when they really had none; ſuch as I have ſhewed the Novatians to be in the ancient Church: Or, Thirdly, for ſuch Laymen as once had a true Sacerdotal Commiſſion, but were afterward deprived of their Commiſſion, by the ſame Power of the Church which firſt gave it, and ſo were reduced to the State and Condition of Laymen again. Such Laymen were all the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks that had received a legal Ordination in the Church, but afterward were deprived of their Authority and Commiſſion for their Crimes, their Obſtinacy and Rebellion, by the Church's Cenſures. Such Laymen, our Author confeſſes, all Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were made by the Diſcipline of the Cyprianick Churches; and ſuch Laymen, I ſay, they were made by the Diſcipline of the Church Univerſal in all Ages. Now when I ſaid before, That the uſurped Baptiſm of Laymen was not decreed to be Valid by the Determination of any General Council, I ſpake of Laymen in the firſt Senſe, in the vulgar and common Acceptation, as denoting Laymen in the Church, who lay no Claim to Sacerdotal Powers peculiar to the Clergy of the Church. And I do not yet remember any General Council that has directly determined any thing for or againſt the Validity of Baptiſm adminiſtred by ſuch Laymen. But in the ſecond Senſe I think the Council of Nice has determined the Validity of Laymens Baptiſm, becauſe ſhe received the Baptiſm of the Novatian Hereticks, who pretended to have a true Sacerdotal Commiſſion, when they really had none. And in the third Senſe I have ſhewed, That ſeveral General Councils admitted of the Baptiſm of Laymen, becauſe they admitted the Baptiſm of Hereticks, whom they themſelves deprived of all Sacerdotal Authority and Commiſſion, and reduced to the Quality of Laymen. So that there is no Contradiction in all this, when Matters are rightly adjuſted and diſtinguiſhed.

THE other Exception I would obviate againſt beforehand, is in relation to what I have ſaid about Heretical Prieſts, in determining whether they be Prieſts or Laymen. In the Firſt Part of the Scholaſtical Hiſtory I aſſerted, That Heretical Prieſts were, in ſome Senſe, allowed to be Prieſts, and their Ordinations to be Valid, even after Degradation. The Meaning of which I explained to be this, That if they were once truly ordained, the Church did not intend by her Cenſures ſo far to cancel or annul their Ordination, as to make it neceſſary, when ſhe recalled them to their Office again, to give them a new Ordination. And thus far I ſtill allow the Character of a Prieſt, degraded for Hereſy by the Cenſures of the Church, to be Indelible, that is, that the Church, upon his Repentance, needs not give him a new Ordination. But I did not intend hereby to ſay, that Heretical Prieſts could not be legally deprived of the Authority, and Power, and Commiſſion of Prieſts; or, that the Church never ſo deprived them; or, That when they were actually ſo deprived of all Authority and Commiſſion, they had ſtill the Authority of GOD and the Church, and were in actual Commiſſion as lawful Prieſts to baptize, or perform any other Sacerdotal Acts, notwithſtanding their Deprivation. And therefore when I aſſert in this Book, That Hereticks were deprived of all Authority and Commiſſion actually by the Church, and during their Hereſy denied all Sacerdotal Powers, as much as any other Laymen; I take this to be no Contradiction to what I ſaid before, but fairly conſiſtent with it, in the Underſtanding of any intelligent and unprejudiced Reader. And therefore I deſire our Author not to multiply Diſputes about hard Terms, with a Deſign to involve and cloud my Diſcourſe under Pretence of Contradictions, but to conſider fairly what I have now offered from the ancient Diſcipline of the Church, to prove that Hereticks may be deprived of all Sacerdotal Authority, Commiſſion and Power; and that they were actually ſo deprived by the Rules of all the ancient Councils, which yet allowed the Validity of their Baptiſms ſo far as not to repeat them by Rebaptization. If this Author can ſhew, either, 1ſt, That the Baptiſms of Hereticks were rejected univerſally, by the unanimous Vote of all the ancient Councils; or, 2dly, That thoſe Hereticks whoſe Baptiſms were received, were true Prieſts of GOD, in actual Commiſſion and Authority when they baptized, and not reduced to the Condition of Laymen by the Cenſures of the Church; then I will own he has the Truth of ancient Hiſtory on his Side: But if he can fairly make make out neither of these Things, then my Assertions will stand good, 1, That the ancient Church did receive the Baptisms of such Hereticks as administred it in due Form. 2. That those Hereticks were not reputed to be true Priests of GOD, but destitute of Sacerdotal Authority and Commission when they administred such Baptisms: And that therefore, 3dly, The Baptisms of Persons destitute of Sacerdotal Authority and Commission, when they administred them, were received by the Catholick Church without Rebaptization. These are the Things I assert and maintain, and this Author may now try his Skill in Ecclesiastical History to prove them to be otherwise.

OUR Author owns, That this was the Principle and Discipline of all the Cyprianick Churches, that Hereticks and Schismaticks were deprived of their Authority and Commission, and thenceforward not to be reputed Priests, but Laymen: They had no regard to the modern Notion of the pretended Indelible Character of Priests, but thought, that if Priests did Things unworthy of their Character, their Sacerdotal Authority and Commission might legally, by the Power of the Church, be taken from them: And thence they concluded, that the Baptisms of Hereticks and Schismaticks were Null and Void, because they were given by Persons who had lost their Sacerdotal Authority and Commission. Now, I say, the Catholick Church entirely agreed with the Cyprianists in their Principle and Discipline, That Hereticks were actually deprived of all Sacerdotal Authority and Commission by the authentick Power of the Church and her legal Censures: But she differed from them in the Inference or Conclusion which they deduced from it: For whereas the Cyprianists said, The Baptism of Hereticks is Null and Void, because Hereticks are deprived of that Sacerdotal Authority and Commission which perhaps they once might have from the Church, and were now not Priests but Laymen: the Catholick Church concluded otherwise, That tho' Hereticks were truly deprived of Sacerdotal Authority and Commission by the Censures and Authority of the Church, yet the Baptisms given by them in that State were not wholly Null and Void, if given in due Form, nor so far Invalid as to need the outward Form to be repeated by Rebaptization. The Difference was not in their Principle, it is plain then, nor in their Discipline about Heretical Priests, but in the different Conclusions they drew from it: The one said, The Baptisms of Heretical Priests are Null, the other said, they were not Null, whilst they both agreed in this, That Hereticks were not true Priests of GOD; but deprived of all Sacerdotal Authority and Commission by the Discipline and Authority of the Church.

IT is plain now to any ordinary Capacity, that if Matters stood thus in the Catholick Church, she must needs receive the Baptisms of Persons destitute of Sacerdotal Authority and Commission; for they could not have a Divine Commission, when GOD and his Church agreed to take it from them: And if they had no Commission, they were not true Priests, however they might sometimes equivocally bear the Name and Title; which are not the Things we are disputing about, but the Qualifications and Authority of the Persons. For let them be called Priests or Laymen, they were certainly Men destitute of a Commission, when all Sacerdotal Authority was taken from them; and if the Church received the Baptisms of such Men, it is evident she received the Baptisms of unauthorized and uncommissioned Persons; who were destitute of a Commission, not because they were originally without it as other Laymen (tho' some Hereticks might be so) but because they were deprived of it by the just Powers and Discipline of the Church. This I have fully proved against Dr. Brett, and I reckon it a sufficient Answer to any thing this Author has pretended to offer farther concerning the Sense and Practice of the ancient Church, who makes no new Discoveries, but only represents Things with a little more Artifice, and that not always the most laudable, as will appear in the Sequel of this Discourse.

CHAP. II.

Containing Remarks on our Author's Preface.

SECT. 1. That Unauthorized Baptisms, and Invalid Baptisms are not of the same Import in the Sense of the ancient Church.

HAVING shewed our Author's Grand Mistake in supposing all the ancient Hereticks to be true Priests in actual Commission, against all the Discipline of the ancient Church, I now proceed to make such Remarks on the remaining Part of his Preface and Book, as shall seem necessary to set Matters in a just Light to every candid and unprejudiced Reader. Pag. 3. of his Preface he is offended that I charge him with a great Error in confounding the Terms of Unauthorized Baptism and Invalid Baptism together. And for any Thing he has said to clear himself, I still charge charge him with the ſame Error, in going againſt the Senſe of the ancient Church, who diſtinguiſhed between Unauthorized Baptiſms and Invalid Baptiſms, and reckoned many Baptiſms to be Unauthorized, which ſhe did not eſteem Invalid; particularly the Baptiſms of Hereticks, who had no actual Commiſſion, as true Authorized Prieſts, when ſhe had taken away their Commiſſion from them; thoſe Baptiſms ſhe eſteemed Unauthorized, but not Invalid, ſo as to need repeating by Rebaptization. And our Author muſt firſt ſhew, that Hereticks were true Authorized Prieſts by the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, and in actual Commiſſion at the Time they pretended to baptize, before he will clear himſelf of the Error I charge upon him. For it is not ſufficient to ſay, they once had a true Commiſſion, unleſs he alſo ſhew, that they had never loſt their Commiſſion by being deprived of it by the Cenſures of the Church. For if they had loſt their Commiſſion at the Time they pretended to baptize, they were as much Unauthorized as thoſe who never had any Commiſſion at all. And yet the Church received the Unauthorized Baptiſms of theſe Unauthorized Men, and did not pronounce them wholly Null and Void, but received the Perſons ſo baptized by them, without Rebaptization. Which ſhews, That Unauthorized Baptiſm and Invalid Baptiſm were not Terms of the ſame Import in the Senſe of the ancient Church, however our Author is pleaſed to make them ſo, which is the Thing I charge upon him.

SECT. 2. This Author's Reaſons for the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm, very different from thoſe of the Primitive Church.

IN the next Place, Page 6. he complains that the reſt of the Churches in the World "would not concur with Cy-"prian, nor agree with him, "to make Fruſtrate and Void, "during their Hereſy and "Schiſm, the Commiſſion once "received by their Heretical and Schiſmatical "Subjects." This grand Charge againſt the Univerſal Church I have already ſhewed to be a grand Miſtake: For all the Churches in the World did thus far concur with Cyprian, as to make Fruſtrate and Void the Commiſſions of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, during their Hereſy and Schiſm: Only they did not conclude with him, that therefore the Baptiſms of Hereticks are abſolutely Invalid, and to be repeated again, as being given by Perſons out of Commiſſion; which was a wrong Inference of Cyprian's, in which the Catholick Church never would concur with him. But our Author is very confident, that the Reaſon why the Churches differing from Cyprian, did not make Void the Baptiſms given by Hereticks, was only becauſe thoſe Churches had no Laws to take away the Sacerdotal Commiſſion of Hereticks from them. Which is not only ſaid without Proof, but againſt the glaring Evidence of ſo many Laws of General and Provincial Councils which I have now produced, to ſhew, that the Church abounded with ſuch Laws, which were actually put in Execution upon Hereticks, upon every proper Occaſion, vacating their Commiſſions, and taking away all Sacerdotal Authority from them. And I am amazed to think, how any Man could converſe with ancient Councils, and not obſerve this, which almoſt occurs in every Page of them.

SECT. 3. This Author's Notion about the Invalidity of Heretical Baptiſm, unbaptizes the whole Church of England.

BUT for all this our Author will ſtill have it, that the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm depended upon Hereticks having a true Commiſſion, not vacated or taken away during their Hereſy or Schiſm. For theſe are his Words, Pag. 7. "Thoſe "Churches held ſuch Baptiſms to be Valid "in themſelves, as to their Miniſtration, and "ſo do I too, becauſe there was no want of "Commiſſion." Now, if I rightly underſtand him, this is as much as to ſay, That if Hereticks have not a Commiſſion, their Baptiſm is Invalid. I cannot ſee but that by our Principles it muſt be ſo. And therefore unleſs he can ſhew, that the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks had a Lawful and Unvacated Commiſſion, during their Hereſy or Schiſm, he muſt needs conclude their Baptiſm was Invalid. And then I will venture to ſay again, That ſuch Notions concerning the Invalidity of Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm, do Unchurch and Unbaptize the whole Church of England, however angry our Author is for bringing ſo heavy a Charge againſt him. He ſays, I ſhould have named his black Notions in his own Words. And I did ſo in my Remarks upon him, Pag. 153, &c. But if he was pleaſed to overlook it, that was his Fault, and not mine.

NOW the Charge was this: That he had then declared himſelf freely for the Cyprianick Notion of the Invalidity of Heretical and Schiſmatical Baptiſm; and withal declared, that Baptiſms of the Church of Rome were the Baptiſms of a Church that was overrun with abundance of damnable Doctrines and Practices, and had but little of ſolid or ſubſtantial Religion to be found in her Communion. Upon which I told him plainly, That if the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were Invalid, and the Church of Rome were an Heretical and Schiſmatical Church; and the Church of England had her Baptiſms originally from that Church, and no other; that then the Conſequence muſt be, that all the Baptiſms of the Church of England were Invalid, and that there was no true Baptiſm adminiſtred by her Prieſts, any more than by any others. Now to free himſelf from this Charge, he thinks fit to ſay, "He be" lieves the Baptiſm of Hereticks to be Va" lid in ſuch Churches, as did not by their

" Diſcipline vacate or take away the Com-
" miſſion of Hereticks from them." But then I tell him his Suppoſition is utterly falſe; there were anciently no ſuch Churches, as left Hereticks and Schiſmaticks in poſſeſſion of their Authority and Commiſſion; and I have proved my Aſſertion by as undeniable Evidences as can be given: And therefore, till he diſproves them, and proves his own Suppoſition by ſtronger Evidences, the Charge I bring againſt him, muſt reſt upon him; and, whether he will repent of and retract his Unchurching Principles or not, I ſee yet no Reaſon to take off the juſt Reproach which is laid upon him. I can be as civil to his Perſon as he deſires, but if he advances ſuch falſe Aſſertions and Poſitions, as reproach the Univerſal Church and the Church of England together, he muſt excuſe me, if I think myſelf in common Juſtice bound to ſhew him his Miſtakes, and with ſome Reflection on his Principles do Juſtice to our common Mother.

SECT. 4. The Exceptions of our Author againſt the new Form of Confirmation, which was propoſed to the Convocation, conſidered.

HIS next Exceptions are Pag. 8 and 9, againſt the Propoſal I humbly offered to our Superiors, legally aſſembled in Convocation, concerning a peculiar Form of Confirmation, for ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. He hopes our Superiors will diſtinguiſh between ſuch Hereticks as received an Epiſcopal Commiſſion, and thoſe that never had one. I think neither he nor I need direct our Superiors what is fit and proper to be done in this Caſe. But I will make bold to tell him again, That if Hereticks loſe their Commiſſion which they once had; if their Commiſſion be vacated by the Cenſures of the Church, and taken from them by the ſame Authority that gave it; then their Sacerdotal Authority and Powers are not ſo vaſtly different from thoſe who never had a Commiſſion, as he imagines. For he himſelf owns, That a Commiſſion once received, and afterwards vacated, was reduced to an equality with a No-Commiſſion ever received at all, by the Diſcipline of the Cyprianick Churches. And I have made it appear, That this was the Caſe of the ancient Hereticks, by the Diſcipline of all Churches. So that whatever Forms of Confirmation were made for Perſons baptized by thoſe Hereticks, muſt needs be for Perſons baptized by ſuch Men as had no Actual Commiſſion, but antiquated, vacated, and taken from them. And where then is the mighty Difference between ſuch a vacated Commiſſion and no Commiſſion at all? But our Author cannot yet believe, that the ancient Hereticks had their Commiſſions ſo vacated and taken from them by any other beſide the Cyprianick Churches. He had beſt therefore enquire a little farther into this Matter, and give himſelf and the World a little more rational Satisfaction, before he is too Dogmatical and Peremptory in directing his Superiors, and fixing Diſtinctions to be Rules to their Proceedings.

BUT he has a pleaſant Exception behind, againſt the Form of Confirmation which I ſubjoined as an Exemplar. He ſays, " It was only " the Product of the Ninth Century, and wants " the noble Character of what is Catholick, " that is, Antiquity, Univerſality, and Con-" ſent." I am a little at a Loſs here to know what this Gentleman would have, eſpecially when he adds, " That I might with as much " Reaſon have given an Inſtance of Image-Wor-" ſhip and Invocation of Saints from the Second " Council of Nice." But why ſo much Anger againſt an Innocent Form of Prayer? Or why, to make it anſwer the End for which I propoſed it, muſt it needs have Antiquity, Univerſality, and Conſent? Have we now any Apoſtolical Liturgies? Or any particular Forms of Prayer, except the Lord's-Prayer and ſome few others in Scripture, which may pretend to this noble Character and a general Reception over all the Church in all Ages? A Man may as reaſonably object againſt ſome of our Common-Prayers, that they are taken out of the Maſs-Book, as this Author does againſt this Form, becauſe it is only fetched from the Ninth Century, when every one knows Prayers of the ſame Senſe and Kind, tho' not of the ſame Length and Words, may be found among the firſt Orders that were made by General Councils for the Reception of thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks, into the Communion of the Church. But if our Author is not more ſparing in ſuch Objections as theſe, I ſhall be obliged to be a little more ſparing in my Anſwers.

Page 11. WE have ſomething more Candid and Ingenuous from him. He confeſſes he made an undeſigned Slip, when he miſtook a Minor Propoſition for a Major, and therefore brought Lucifer upon the Stage as a Witneſs for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, and St. Jerom as aſſerting the ſame by the Authority of the Nicene Council: He civilly thanks me for helping him to correct theſe Miſtakes; and I hope I ſhall have his Thanks again for ſetting him right once more about the Prieſthood and Commiſſion of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, when I ſhew him that it was vacated and taken from them, during their Hereſy and Schiſm, by the univerſal Conſent and Vote of the whole Catholick Church. After which I ſhall have no longer Occaſion to diſpute with him, about Unauthorized or Uncommiſſioned Baptiſm, from the Hiſtory of the Church; ſince all the World will own, that a vacated Commiſſion miſſion and a No-Commiſſion are pretty near a Parallel; and if the Church received the Baptiſms of thoſe as Valid, whoſe Commiſſion ſhe had vacated, ſhe might as well receive the Baptiſms of thoſe who never had any Commiſſion at all, becauſe they were both actually and equally without Commiſſion when they pretended to baptize; the one, as never having had any Commiſſion, the other as having loſt their Commiſſion by the Church's Cenſures.

SECT. 6. How our Author confounds Valid Baptiſm and Saving Baptiſm together.

BUT our Author alters his Stile in the ſame Page, and, inſtead of Thanks, charges me with Captiouſneſs and Cavilling, only becauſe I deſired to know, in what Writing of the Stephanians he found this maintained, That they who had received Baptiſm from Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, were in a State of Salvation? He ſays, "Any one who has looked into "Cyprian's Works muſt know, that Stephen Bi"ſhop of Rome did hold, That ſuch bapti"zed Perſons were in a State of Salvation, "for they eſteemed them to have been Va"lidly baptized; and ſure they who held Men "to have been Validly baptized, eſteemed "them to have been in a State of Salvati"on, otherwiſe what ſignified the Validity "of their Baptiſm?" To which I anſwer, without Captiouſneſs or Cavilling, that it ſignified thus much, That they were not to be rebaptized when they came over to the Catholick Church; but it did not ſignify, That they were in a State of Salvation while they continued in Hereſy and Schiſm: For theſe Things are very different from one another: St. Auſtin, and all the Catholick Church, defended the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm againſt the Donatiſts, but they did not tell them or any other Hereticks, that therefore they were in a State of Salvation while they were Hereticks, becauſe they had a Valid Baptiſm; for then it had been in vain to exhort them to come over to the Catholick Church in order to be ſaved. So that unleſs Pope Stephen had ſome very peculiar Notion of the Salvability of Hereticks, different from the reſt of the Church, he could not be of the Opinion our Author fathers upon him: For there is no Conſequence in our Author's Proof. Stephen believed the Baptiſm of Hereticks to be Valid, ergo, he believed Hereticks to be in a State of Salvation: For Men may have Valid Baptiſm, and yet be in a State of Damnation, as Hereticks out of the Church, and ſuch wicked Men as Simon Magus in the Church: Which is ſo plain, that I will not ſtand longer to diſpute it with our Author, but leave it to the Reader to judge who is the moſt cavilling Perſon, I who diſtinguiſh Valid Baptiſm from Saving Baptiſm, with all the Ancients; or he who, to make good his Charge againſt Pope Stephen, thus admirably confounds different Things together.

SECT. 7. That Heretical Baptiſm is properly Anti-Epiſcopal by our Author's own Conceſſions.

I HERE paſs over two or three Things, as not worth Diſputing any longer about them; as, Whether Athanaſius was repreſented by our Author to be of Cyprian's Opinion; and what Number of Biſhops there was in the Council of Arles, thirty-three or two hundred; and paſs on to a more material Queſtion, Whether the Baptiſm of Heretical Biſhops was not eſteemed the Baptiſm of Falſe Biſhops, or No-Biſhops, and all their Miniſtrations reckoned Anti-epiſcopal? Our Author ſays, p. 15. "I muſt needs know that the "Novatians, and other Hereticks and Schiſ"maticks began their Hereſies and Schiſms "in Epiſcopacy." But I am ſo far from knowing this, that I hope to make our Author know the contrary: For I have made it more than probable in the foregoing Diſcourſe, Chap. II. That Novatian himſelf, the firſt Founder of the Novatians, was never truly ordained a Biſhop, but his Ordination was declared Null and Void by the Catholick Church, ab origine; becauſe, tho' he had Three Biſhops to give him a pretended Ordination, yet it was done in ſuch a manner, againſt ſo many ſtanding Rules of the Catholick Church, that the Church declared it a Void Ordination from the very firſt, and he was never admitted into the College of Biſhops, but eſteemed a Falſe Biſhop, a Counterfeit Biſhop, a No-Biſhop from the beginning. By our Author's own Rules then he could be no true Biſhop, becauſe the Catholick Church declared him to be a falſe One. Our Author ſays farther, "That thoſe firſt Heretical and "Schiſmatical Biſhops ſo ordained, had not "their Orders nulled and voided by thoſe "Churches that allowed their Baptiſms." But I have evidently proved the contrary, to a Demonſtration, That thoſe Heretical and Schiſmatical Biſhops had their Commiſſions repealed and vacated, not only by the Cyprianick Churches, which annulled their Baptiſms, but by the Roman Churches, and the whole Catholick Church, and the Biſhops of the whole World, who allowed their Baptiſms to be Valid, ſo far as not to need repeating. They took away their Commiſſions and Authority from them, and declared them to be Falſe Biſhops, Counterfeiting Biſhops, and No-Biſhops; and though they called themſelves Biſhops, yet they were really no Biſhops in the Eye of the Church, becauſe ſhe had taken away their Commiſſion, and reduced them by her own Authority to the State of Laymen. Our Author owns, the Church had ſuch a Power to Vacate their Commiſſions, and that the Cyprianick Churches did actually exerciſe this Power upon them: In which Caſe he allows, that Heretical Biſhops ſhops were Un-Biſhoped, by being deprived of their Commiſſions by the Diſcipline of thoſe Churches, and reduced plainly to a State of Laymen. Now I have proved to him farther, that this ſame Power was claimed and actually exerciſed by all the Churches in the World againſt Heretical Biſhops; that they did deprive them of their Commiſſions, diveſt them of their Authority, take away all Epiſcopal and Sacerdotal Power from them, and then declare them henceforward to be no Biſhops nor Prieſts, but in the State of Laymen. So that upon this Suppoſition, that their Commiſſions were vacated and taken from them, it follows upon our Author's own Principles and Conceſſions, that theſe Heretical Biſhops were no longer true Authorized and Commiſſioned Biſhops or Prieſts of God, but Uncommiſſioned Laymen; being deprived, by the Authority of the Catholick Church, of that Commiſſion which they were once poſſeſſed of.

AND now let our Author or any other Man judge, whether the Baptiſms of theſe Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were not upon this Suppoſition, the Baptiſms of No-Prieſts, and Anti-epiſcopal Baptiſms, and the Baptiſms of Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Laymen. I do not ſay Laymen that never had a Commiſſion, (that our Author may not quibble) but Men that were actually deprived of their Commiſſion by the Biſhops of the Church, and ſet themſelves up againſt Biſhops after they were reduced to the State of Laymen. If ſuch Baptiſms were not Anti-epiſcopal, I know not what Anti-epiſcopal means; or what are Uncommiſſioned Baptiſms, if the Baptiſms of theſe Men were not Uncommiſſioned, when their Commiſſion was taken from them. Our Author now will not pretend to take Sanctuary, as ſome of his Friends do, in that bold Aſſertion againſt the Authority of the Church, That a Prieſt is a true Prieſt, ſtill in Authority, let the Church do what ſhe will to take his Commiſſion from him, and bring him back to the State of a Layman. For our Author owns, the Church both has and ought to have ſuch a Power; and that the Cyprianick Churches did actually exerciſe this Power upon Hereticks by their Diſcipline, Vacating the Commiſſions of Heretical Biſhops and Prieſts, and leaving them deſtitute of all Sacerdotal Authority in the Condition of Laymen: So that the only Queſtion remaining between this Author and me, is, Whether the reſt of the Churches of the World did actually exerciſe the ſame Power againſt Heretical Biſhops and Prieſts? For if they did, they plainly made them Laymen: And then if any of thoſe Laymen ſet up againſt their Biſhops, or the College of Biſhops, pretending to baptize without regaining a Commiſſion from them, their Baptiſms in that Caſe muſt needs be Anti-epiſcopal Baptiſms, the Baptiſms of Falſe Prieſts, or No-Prieſts, as having no Commiſſion, but a vacated and repealed one, and the Baptiſms of Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Laymen. I would ſpeak as plainly as I can upon this Head, becauſe the whole of our Diſpute depends upon this ſingle Point: And, if our Author will fairly try it out, we will lay aſide all other Debates, and ſtick to this, and let Truth prevail on that Side which appears to have the cleareſt Evidences and ſtrongeſt Reaſons. 'Tis a Queſtion of Fact and Hiſtory, that may eaſily be decided by the publick Records of the Church, the Acts of her General and Provincial Councils in all Ages, which contain her Proceedings againſt Hereticks, whereby it may eaſily be diſcovered whether ſhe vacated the Commiſſion of Hereticks, and took their Sacerdotal Authority from them or not. If ſhe did not vacate their Commiſſion, then I will yield the Cauſe to this Author: But if I have made it appear, that ſhe did vacate their Commiſſion, and deprive them of all Sacerdotal Authority, then I expect he will as civilly give up the Cauſe to me. That the ancient Hereticks were not true Biſhops and Prieſts in lawful Commiſſion, but Anti-epiſcopal Uſurpers, acting without, and againſt the Commiſſion of the true Biſhops of the Church; and that their Baptiſms conſequently were not the Baptiſms of true Commiſſioned Prieſts, but the Baptiſms of Anti-epiſcopal, Uncommiſſioned, Unauthorized Laymen, made ſuch by the Church's Cenſures. And I deſire no more to be allowed me, to prove, that the ancient Catholick Church received as Valid, without Rebaptizing, ſuch Baptiſms as were given in due Form, by Men, who at the time of Baptizing had loſt their Commiſſion, and were not then true Prieſts of GOD in actual Commiſſion, but at that inſtant Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Laymen.

SECT. 8.
That our Author's Charge upon his Adverſaries, of Diſſolving the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, equally reflects upon the Principles and Practice of the whole Catholick Church in all Ages.

I SHALL make but one Obſervation more upon our Author's long Preface, and that is the Sting in the Cloſe of it. "To conclude my long Preface, ſays he, "I leave this with "our Reverend Hiſtorian, as "he is a Clergyman, and do "affirm, that it is a Propo"ſition very eaſy to be proved "againſt any Man whatſoever, "That if Baptiſm performed by Perſons who "were never really and truly Commiſſioned "by Biſhops to baptize, and who act herein "rebelliouſly againſt, and in Oppoſition to "the Divine Right of Epiſcopacy, be Good "and Valid Baptiſm; then Authoritative "Preaching, Adminiſtring the other Sacra"ment, the Power of Excommunicating, of "Binding and Looſing, of Retaining and "Abſolving Mens Sins, and all the Spiritual "Functions of the Clergy, are alſo Good and "Valid,

" Valid, when attempted by Unauthorized, " Never-Commiſſioned Lay-Perſons: The " Conſequence of which, is the utter Diſſo- " lution and taking away the Neceſſity of the " Chriſtian Prieſthood, therefore of CHRIST's " Authority here on Earth, and ſo of all Re- " vealed Religion too; which is a dreadful " Conſideration; and much more ſo, if any " who ought to be the Guardians of theſe " Sacred Things, ſhould endeavour by their " Writings and Preaching, to eſtabliſh the " dangerous Premiſes, from whence ſuch pro- " phane Conſequences do naturally flow."

OUR Author had done much better to have proved this ſolidly, than to have barely ſaid it, and threatned what he could do: For no one will believe him, but only thoſe who take every thing upon his Word meerely becauſe he ſays it. Let the Conſideration be as dreadful as it will, I not only ſay, but have proved to our Author, that it neither affects me, nor the Biſhops of the preſent Church (who are moſt of them involved in the ſame Accuſation) any more than it does the whole Catholick Church, which allowed the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm, at the ſame time that ſhe deprived Hereticks of their Sacerdotal Commiſſion, and eſteemed them really and truly no more Prieſts, during their Hereſy, (tho' they once had a Commiſſion) than the moſt Unauthorized Layman, who never had any Commiſſion at all. And therefore, with a little Variation of neceſſary Terms, I ſhall draw up his Accuſation againſt the primitive Church, as near as may be, in his own Words: If Baptiſm performed by Perſons, who are really and trully deprived of their Commiſſion to baptize by the Biſhops of the Catholick Church, and who act after ſuch Deprivation, rebelliouſly againſt, and in Oppoſition to the Divine Right of Epiſcopacy, be Good and Valid Baptiſm, as the ancient Church aſſerted, then Authoritative Preaching, Adminiſtring the other Sacrament, the Power of Excommunicating, of Binding and Looſing, of Retaining and Abſolving Mens Sins, and all the Spiritual Functions of the Clergy, are alſo Good and Valid, when attempted by Unauthorized Prieſts, whom the Church makes Laymen by depriving them of their Commiſſion: The Conſequence of which is, the utter Diſſolution, and taking away of the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, therefore of CHRIST's Authority here on Earth, and ſo of all Revealed Religion too. Now if this Rant of an Argument would only be reckoned an inſignificant Slander in any one that ſhould level it againſt the known Practice of the primitive Church, in allowing the Baptiſm of Hereticks to be Valid, when they were deprived of their Commiſſion by the ſame Power that firſt gave it: I leave every one to judge what Name the ſame Accuſation deſerves, when brought againſt others, who are only relating and defending the Practice of the ancient and preſent Church againſt the Pretences of Modern Innovators. Our Author will not pretend, there is any great Difference between a Vacated Commiſſion once received, and a No-Commiſſion never received at all: For as to actual Authority, it is equally wanting in both: But he will ſtill ſay, The primitive Church never vacated the Commiſſion of thoſe Hereticks whoſe Baptiſms ſhe received as Valid; which, when he has ſaid it over a Thouſand times, will be no nearer Truth, but a grand Miſtake of his own, or ſome others, who abuſed his Credulity in informing him ſo; and the more he repeats it, the more he will only abuſe himſelf and the World in Ecchoing forth their wrong Information.

I COULD ſay a great deal more, to ſhew the Weakneſs and Abſurdity of this his Inſinuation; but what I have already ſaid is ſufficient, with all Wiſe and Good Men, to vindicate the Guardians of Sacred Things from ſo vile an Aſperſion; which reflects ſo much Diſhonour on his lawful Superiors, and ſo much Reproach on the ancient Catholick Church, with whom I take it to be an Honour to be reproached by this Author, only for advancing the ſame Principles as the Catholick Church did, which he falſely charges with the Conſequence of Diſſolving all Revealed Religion, and the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood; as if there was no Neceſſity of lawful Prieſts, becauſe there may be ſome Uſurpers; ſome Hereticks that have loſt their Commiſſion, and ſome that never had a Commiſſion; whoſe Baptiſms can confer no Graces of the Spirit, for which there is a Neceſſity of lawful Prieſts, but may give the outward Form in ſuch a manner, as the Church thinks fit not to repeat by Rebaptization. Let him Declaim as long and as loud againſt this as he pleaſes, and call it a Diſſolving of the Neceſſity of the Chriſtian Prieſthood: It is only what I expected at his Hands, who inſults the Fathers of his Church with Contempt and Scorn, and under the Profeſſions of Reſpect to Prieſts, treats all thoſe rudely who are not his Followers and Admirers. All I ſhall ſay farther at preſent, upon this Head, to this Accuſer of the Brethren, is only, The Lord rebuke thee.

CHAP. III.

Remarks on our Author's First and Second Chapters.

SECT. 1. That the allowing the Baptisms of Usurpers to be Valid, is not abetting or encouraging their Usurpations.

HAVING thus far copiously considered our Authors Preface, I shall be more sparing upon his Book, because the main Controversy about Uncommissioned Baptism is already determined. Our Author's first Chapter is spent in a sharp Invective against the Usurpers of Sacerdotal Powers, and the Abettors and Encouragers of those Usurpations. In which I know no one that has engaged in the present Controversy, to be really concerned, though he would gladly insinuate and fasten the Charge upon them. He begins his Book by telling his Readers, "That the Occasion "of it is a most novel and unchristian Usur- "pation, attempted at the Reformation, and "since that Time to this Day, by Men who "never received any Divine Commission; "and who yet, in Opposition to, and Rebel- "lion against their Spiritual Sovereigns, re- "fusing to receive any such Commission from "them, endeavour to advance themselves into "the High-Priests and Priests Office, and to "minister in such Holy Things as GOD has "appropriated to that Sacred Commission, "which he gives to Men for that Purpose. "And this they do, not upon the Pretence "of Necessity, arising, as some suppose, from "the want of such as are Commissioned, "but in an obstinate perverse Resistance "against CHRIST's Spiritual Vicegerents, un- "dervaluing and trampling upon that Autho- "rity wherewith he has invested them."

Now, whatever there may be in this Accusation, it affects most his own Friends, I mean those who hold the same Opinions with our Author about Rebaptizing, that is, the Followers of Cartwright in England, and the Calvinists beyond Sea: For we of the Church of England are not concerned in any such pretended Usurpation. Yes, our Author says, "We adhere to, and encourage them in their "Usurpations, we concur with and abett them, "because we affirm there is some Validity in "such pretended Ministrations." But if this were to be called abetting or encouraging Mens Usurpations, I could much more plausibly prove our Author guilty of abetting and encouraging Hereticks and Schismaticks: For he maintains, That the Baptism of the ancient Hereticks and Schismaticks was not only Good and Valid, but ministred with as good Authority and Divine Commission, as that of the Catholick Priests: Which Assertion puts those Usurpers upon an equal Foot and Level with the true Priests of GOD, and the Authorized Baptizers of the Church, when yet I have evidently proved, that the ancient Hereticks were all of them destitute of Commission, and Anti-episcopal Usurpers. again, if there be any Force in his Accusation, then 1st, it holds equally against all the Church of England, and her whole College of Bishops ever since the Reformation, who have constantly admitted such as were baptized by these Usurpers, without giving them a new Baptism. So that if allowing the bare Validity of their Baptism be an abetting and encouraging of Usurpers, the whole Church of England has been involved in this Crime from the Beginning of the Reformation. 2. His Accusation holds equally against the Primitive Church, for allowing the Validity of the Baptisms of the Novatians, who were not only deprived of their Commission as Hereticks, but originally destitute of Episcopal Commission, having, as I have proved, never received a true Episcopal Ordination. 3. It involves the whole Primitive Church in the same Crime of abetting or encouraging Usurpers, because she allowed the Validity of the Baptisms of those Hereticks, whom she deprived of their Commission by her own Authority, and esteemed them no Priests after that, but mere Usurpers. For these Men, only changing the Terms, Having never received a Divine Commission, into, Being deprived of their Divine Commission, were as liable to the Character which our Author gives of Unchristian Usurpers, as those against whom he levels it: "For they were deprived of "their Divine Commission, and yet in Op- "position to, and Rebellion against their "Spiritual Sovereigns, they endeavoured to "advance themselves into the High-Priests "and Priests Office, and to minister in such "Holy Things as GOD had appropriated to "that sacred Commission, which he gives to "Men for that purpose; and this they did, "not upon the Pretence of Necessity, aris- "ing from the want of such as were Com- "missioned, but in an obstinate perverse Re- "sistance against CHRIST's Spiritual Vicege- "rents, undervaluing and trampling upon that "Authority wherewith he had invested them." "These Hereticks, after they were deprived of all their Divine Commission by CHRIST's Spiritual Vicegerents, without receiving any other Commission from them, in a Opposition to, and Rebellion against them, took upon them the Sacerdotal Office of Baptizing, without Authority, and against Authority, and yet the primitive mitive Church received the Baptiſms of theſe Uſurpers as Valid, ſo far as not to repeat the outward Form by Rebaptization. Now then, according to our Authors Way of arguing, the Primitive Church was guilty of abetting and encouraging Heretical and Schiſmatical Uſurpers, becauſe ſhe ſo far allowed the Validity of their Baptiſms. But if this be a Slander upon the Primitive Church, then it is equally ſo upon all thoſe who maintain the Validity of Uſurpers Baptiſm, no farther than the Primitive Church did; who put no Sacerdotal Authority into the Hands of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks (as our Author does) but take it away from them; who aſcribe no Spiritual Effects to Heretical or Unauthorized Baptiſms, but call upon Men to reconcile themſelves to the Church, in order to be made Partakers of Grace and Salvation. This is not to abett or encourage Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or Uſurpers, but to lay the due Weight and Load of their Crimes upon them; to condemn their Uſurpations, to deny their Authority, and exhort them to forſake a bad and unauthorized Way, and return to the true authorized and effectual Way of the Church. Which ſhews how much our Author overſhot himſelf in his Zeal, when he went about to form ſuch a groundleſs and falſe Accuſation againſt his Innocent Brethren, that reflects Diſhonour upon the Church of England, and the whole Catholick Church, and even upon himſelf too, who ſtands up for the Sacerdotal Authority of thoſe Hereticks, whom the ancient Church declared to be no Prieſts, but Uſurpers. And this is the only Obſervation and Remark I have Occaſion to make upon his firſt Chapter.

HE begins his Second Chapter with ſaying, "That I grant the Thing diſputed for, "as a Divine, but deny it as an Hiſtorian, "becauſe I ſay, a Power or Commiſſion to "authorize Men to baptize, was neceſſary "to preſerve the Church according to the "Order of CHRIST in future Ages." This Author has a notable Talent of finding out Contradictions where there are none. For wherein do I make my Divinity and Hiſtory contradict one another? If it was the Order of CHRIST, that there ſhould be a ſtanding Miniſtry in his Church, authorized to baptize, then it was neceſſary, there ſhould be ſome Perſons ſtill in Commiſſion to authorize ſuch a Miniſtry to baptize: This I call obſerving the Order or Rule which CHRIST has appointed in his Church, to preſerve it with ſuch an authorized ſtanding Miniſtry in it: But now if ſome Men who are not authorized, take upon them to baptize without Commiſſion, and the Church thinks fit not to repeat the outward Form of Baptiſm given by ſuch Uſurpers; does that make it unneceſſary, either that there ſhould be a ſtanding authorized Miniſtry, or that there ſhould be thoſe who have Commiſſion to authorize others, becauſe a Valid Baptiſm may be given, ſo far as concerns the outward Form, ſometimes by an Uſurper? I believe the Primitive Church underſtood the Order of CHRIST as well as any of us: But yet ſhe did not think, that becauſe ſhe admitted the Baptiſms of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, who were deſtitute of a Commiſſion, that therefore there was no Neceſſity of a ſtanding authorized Miniſtry, or of Perſons in Commiſſion to authorize others to baptize according to the Order of CHRIST, becauſe there were ſome that baptized without the Authority of the Church, and ſo againſt his Order; but ſhe thought theſe two Things might conſiſt together; the outward Form of Baptiſm adminiſtred ſometimes by Unauthorized Perſons, did not deſtroy the general Neceſſity of a ſtanding authorized Miniſtry in the Church. So that whatever Contradiction our Author fancies in my Accounts, as an Hiſtorian and a Divine, will unavoidably fall as much upon the Catholick Church, and an equal Charge be brought againſt her Judgment on the one hand, and her Practice on the other. And in ſuch Society I ſhall not be concerned to fall under our Author's Cenſure.

SECT. 2. That ſome Diſcretionary Power was ſuppoſed to be in the Hands of Biſhops in Commiſſioning Perſons to baptize.

HIS next Diſcourſe againſt the Author, under the Name of St. Ambroſe, p. 6. I paſs over, becauſe as I laid no Streſs upon him before, ſo I intend to multiply no Diſputes about him. But our Author ſays, p. 10. "That I found the Principle "of Biſhops Power to authorize Laymen to "baptize, upon the pretended Relation of that "Author." Which is a wrong Information, that may perhaps ſatisfy ſuch of his Readers, as intend to read his Book, and not mine: But it will ſatisfy no others: For I found nothing upon the Fact as related by that Author, but only ſay, The Ancients went upon the ſame Principle, which I prove another Way: My Words are theſe, "Though "no other Writer among the Ancients has "ſo plainly expreſſed his Mind upon this "Point, as this Author under the Name of "St. Ambroſe; yet it is plain, all of them, who "maintained the Power of Biſhops to autho-"rize Deacons and Laymen to baptize, or, "at their Diſcretion, to reſtrain them from "it, muſt needs go upon the ſame Principle, "viz. That ſuch a Power was lodged in "the Hands of the Biſhops of the Church, "as the Apoſtles Succeſſors, to authorize "what Men ſhould baptize, and in what "Caſes, according as they ſhould think ne-"ceſſary in their Wiſdom and Diſcretion, "for the greater or leſſer Exigencies of the "Church: And I there give this Reaſon for "it, Becauſe without this Principle it will "be impoſſible to account for the Practice

" of the ancient Biſhops, who ſometimes re-" ſtrained Deacons from Baptizing as well as " Laymen, and ſometimes granted Authority
" to them both." Scholaſt. Hiſt. p. 5. Now our Author had done much better, if he had accounted for thoſe Practices of the Ancients ſome other Way, ſince he did not like the Account which I gave, rather than Criticize upon mine ſo cauſeleſly and to ſo little purpoſe.

SECT. 3. Whether Deacons were accounted Prieſts and the Ordinary and Standing Miniſters of Baptiſm.

BUT this is not the only falſe Criticiſm our Author is guilty of in ſome Places. For he asks immediately, " Why
" are Deacons here ranked
" with Laymen, among thoſe
" who are not ſtanding Mi-
" niſters to baptize? Did not Mr. Bingham
" reckon them before as ſtanding Miniſters?"
p. 3. I anſwer, No; I only ſaid, They had a Commiſſion from the Apoſtles to baptize; but whether that was for ordinary or extraordinary Caſes I determined not; Philip's Baptizing the Eunuch, was in an extraordinary Caſe, when no one elſe could do it: And a Commiſſion for ſuch a Caſe does not make a Man a ſtanding ordinary Miniſter of Baptiſm; otherwiſe Laymen, who had a Commiſſion for extraordinary Caſes, would have been ſtanding Miniſters. But he ſays, p. 17. I was of another Opinion when I wrote my Origines, for there I call Deacons, Prieſts, and ſhew from Optatus and Dr. Hicks, that the Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons, had all their Share in the Chriſtian Prieſthood. He cites abundance of my Words, but he forgets one Thing, That I was then delivering the Opinion of the Ancients on both Sides the Queſtion, and that I ſaid the Opinion of Optatus was not the general and received Opinion, but that which prevailed moſt, was, That they were not Prieſts but Levites. Here I ſhall be conſtrained to tranſcribe a Paragraph in my Origines, which our Author was pleaſed to overlook. The very Title of it is, That Deacons were not generally called Prieſts, but Miniſters and Levites; And the Words are as follows, " That I may not ſeem
" to impoſe upon my Readers I muſt obſerve,
" that the Name of Prieſt was not gene" rally given to the Deacons, by thoſe that " eſteemed them a Sacred Order; but they " are commonly diſtinguiſhed from Prieſts, by " the Names of Miniſters and Levites. Thus
" St. Jerom diſtinguiſhes them from the Prieſts
" of the Second Order, that is, from the " Presbyters, by the Title of Levites. The " Author of the Queſtions upon the Old, " and New Teſtament, under the Name of " St. Auſtin, and Hilarius Sardus under the " Name of St. Ambroſe, are more poſitive and
" expreſs in denying them the Name of " Prieſts. Non ſunt Sacerdotes. And Salvian,
" though he acknowledges their Miniſtrati-
" on and Function to be about Holy Things,
" yet he gives them but the ſame Title of " Levites, and that in Contradiſtinction to
" the Prieſts. And ſo frequently in the Coun" cils, the Names Sacerdos, and Levita, are
" uſed as the peculiar diſtinguiſhing Titles of " Presbyters and Deacons. The Fourth Coun" cil of Carthage ſpeaks more expreſsly, that " Deacons are not ordained to the Prieſt-
" hood, but only to the miniſtring Office,
" or inferior Service, &c. whence ſome Learn" ed Men (Habertus and Biſhop Fell) conclude,
" againſt Optatus and St. Auſtin, that Deacons,
" were in no Senſe allowed to be Prieſts:
" Whilſt others (Rigaltius and Dr. Hicks) with " Optatus, diſtinguiſh the ſeveral Degrees of " the Prieſthood, and reckon, that though
" Deacons were not abſolutely called Prieſts, " becauſe that was the appropriate Title of " Biſhops and Presbyters, whoſe Miniſters and " Attendants they were; yet Deacons ſome-
" times performed ſuch Offices, as did enti-
" tle them to a lower Degree of the Prieſt-
" hood. Having thus fairly ſtated and re-
" preſented the Matter on both Sides, I muſt
" leave the Judicious Reader to determine for
" himſelf, which Opinion has the ſtrongeſt
" Reaſons." So far my Origines. Book II. Chap. xx. n. 2. p. 259. By which the Reader may now judge, how far I contradict myſelf when I ſay, the Ancients did not generally allow Deacons to be Prieſts, nor the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm. For it is plain they were divided about theſe Matters, and the greateſt Part held the Negative Side of the Queſtion: And ſo many of them as did not believe Deacons to be Prieſts, nor the ordinary Miniſters of Baptiſm, and yet allowed them, in ſome Caſes, to baptize, could not, ſurely, think the Hand of a Prieſt ſo indiſpenſibly neceſſary in all Caſes, as that it could be no Baptiſm, if given by any other Perſon, unleſs they ſpake egregious Contradictions. But I believe our Author takes the Words, Prieſt and Sacerdotal Power, in a larger Senſe than thoſe Ancients did, who diſtinguiſhed Prieſts from Deacons, as our Church does alſo when ſhe diſtinguiſhes the Three Orders, of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons: For he makes every Man a Prieſt, and inveſted with Sacerdotal Powers, who has the Commiſſion to baptize, either in ordinary or extraordinary Caſes whatſoever. For he ſays in his Preface, Pag. 17. " If " there can be any ſuch thing as the giving
" of a real Authority to Laymen to baptize,
" then, when Authorized, they'll ceaſe, in " that reſpect, to be Laymen, having (if " they can have) a Sacerdotal Power to " baptize in want of the Clergy; which " will make ſuch their Baptiſms to be Sa" cerdotal, Authorized Baptiſms, and ſo not " properly Lay-Baptiſms ".

Now

NOW ſo long as we are thus divided about Terms, we are but diſputing and wrangling in the dark about Prieſt and Prieſthood to no purpoſe. The Ancients commonly mean by a Prieſt, a Presbyter, who, in his Ordination, receives a Sacerdotal Power not belonging to a Deacon; and the ordinary Miniſtration of Baptiſm is by moſt of them made Part of this Power: But our Author, by a Prieſt underſtands any one who has a Commiſſion to baptize in any Caſe whatſoever, as well a Deacon and a Layman (ſuppoſing him to have received ſuch a Commiſſion) as a Presbyter, whom the Church has uſed to call a Prieſt in Oppoſition to a Deacon. And whilſt the Ancients mean one thing by a Prieſt, and our Author another, it is better to diſmiſs this Diſpute, and come to ſomething that is more certain; to take Prieſt in our Author's Notion, and then enquire, Whether none but a Perſon in Commiſſion can adminiſter the outward Form of Baptiſm ſo far Valid as not to need to be repeated?

SECT. 4. That many Uncommiſſioned Baptiſms were anciently confirmed by Biſhops without Rebaptizing.

'TIS a Maxim with our Author, Pag. 10. "No Pow-"er, no Baptiſm; no Com-"miſſion in the Adminiſtra-"tor, no Baptiſm in the Re-"ceiver." Upon which he challenges me and all the World, Pag. 11. to produce any Inſtances of ſuch Baptiſms pretended to be confirmed by Biſhops, where the Commiſſion (which he calls eſſential) was wanting. Again he repeats his Challenge, Pag. 12. "What Presbyters among the Ancients did "ever offer to baptize, as abſolute and in-"dependent of Biſhops? Mr. Bingham has "not produced any ancient Inſtance of ſuch "modern Rebels: No, the Schiſmaticks of "old adhered to, and depended upon ſome "Biſhop or other." Now I have anſwered this Challenge, as Providence would have it, before it was made: For I have ſhewed, that the Irregularity of the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks conſiſted in the want of Commiſſion: For their Commiſſion was taken from them; and then it is all one as if they never had any Commiſſion at all: As he that loſes his Eyes, is as much blind, and without Eyes, as he that never had any Eyes at all. I have proved this ſo ſubſtantially in the foregoing Diſcourſe, that it effectually ſilences all his little Quibbles that follow in the next Pages about circumſtantial and eſſential Irregularities: For the Want of a Commiſſion is (according to him) an eſſential Irregularity in a Prieſt or Presbyter. But why then do I call ſuch an one a Presbyter, when he is out of Commiſſion? Why, only to give him ſome Name to know him by: For I agree he is no true Presbyter when he is out of Commiſſion. And therefore it is no ſuch hard Matter to come by my Meaning, as he pretends it to be, Pag. 14. I mean, one who once had the Commiſſion of a Preſbyter, but afterward was deprived of it for his Hereſy and Schiſm, by the Authority and Diſcipline of the Church, whoſe Act of Miniſtration is ſinful in this very Act, becauſe now he acts without Commiſſion. This is the Presbyter I am enquiring about, what Validity there was in Baptiſms adminiſtred by him, after he had loſt his Commiſſion, and ſet up to act againſt the Authority of his Biſhop or the Church, that had taken his Commiſſion from him. He was now no real Presbyter, but only in Name, becauſe he had loſt his Commiſſion. How then came his Baptiſms to be reputed Valid for all that, when he was Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned? That is my Enquiry. And now let our Author miſtake my Meaning again if he can. He muſt now ſay, either there never was an Heretical or Schiſmatical Presbyter ſo deprived of Commiſſion in the ancient Church; or, that his Baptiſms given after ſuch Deprivation, were never received as Valid. Either of which will be to purpoſe, if he can really make them good, againſt ſo many Evidences, and ſo authentically atteſted, as I have given to the contrary. But nothing ſhort of this will ſignify any thing in the preſent Caſe, where we are enquiring about the Validity of Baptiſms given by Uncommiſſioned Perſons.

SECT. 5. The neceſſary Diſtinction of the Ancients, between an Authoritative and a meerly Valid Baptiſm confounded by our Author.

OUR Author's Hypotheſis will not ſuffer him to diſtinguiſh between an Authorized Baptiſm, and a mere Valid Baptiſm, becauſe he thinks all Baptiſm Null and Void that is given without Authority. But the Ancients diſtinguiſhed betwixt the two Sorts of Baptiſm, and reckoned the one to be founded on the Lawful Authority of the Adminiſtrator, but the other not ſo. Therefore our Author only trifles and impoſes upon himſelf and his Readers, Pag. 16. when he charges me with Inconſiſtencies and Contradictions, becauſe when I ſpeak of Authoritative Baptiſm, I ſay the Ancients founded it upon a Commiſſion; and when I ſpeak of mere Valid Baptiſm, I ſay they did not found it upon Sacerdotal Powers; becauſe they reckoned the Baptiſms of an Heretical or Schiſmatical Prieſt, who was deprived of his Commiſſion, to be Valid notwithſtanding: Which Things, in the Opinion of the Ancients, were fairly conſiſtent together. But then he ſays, Pag. 20. "If I "would have done any thing here to the "purpoſe, I ſhould have produced Authori-"ties, who allowed of the Validity of Baptiſm "in the Name of the TRINITY, admini-"ſtred by Heretical, Schiſmatical, and other "Irregular Prieſts; I ſhould have given an

" Hiſtory of ſuch Ancients, nulling and ma" king void the Commiſſion of thoſe Prieſts
" during their Hereſy, Schiſm, or other Ir" regularity: But as yet I have given no
" ſuch Inſtance, and he is confident I never " will. For 'tis notorious, that thoſe ancient " Churches which allowed of the Validity of " thoſe Baptiſms, did alſo acknowledge the " Holy Orders of the Baptizers, and eſteem-
" ed their Epiſcopal Ordination to be good
" and valid. " Now the Reader will beſt judge of this, when he has conſidered the Evidences I have produced in the foregoing Diſcourſe, to prove Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, and degraded Prieſts to be deprived of their Commiſſion; to be no true Prieſts of GOD in that State of Deprivation, but Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Prieſts, or Laymen. The two Authorities our Author produces, Pag. 21. out of the Council of Nice and the African Codex, are nothing to his Purpoſe: For they do not ſay, that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were allowed to be true Authorized and Commiſſioned Prieſts, during their Hereſy or Schiſm, but that they ſhould be admitted to officiate in the Clerical State, upon their Return to the Church; and then they had the Church's Commiſſion, which they had been deprived of during their Hereſy or Schiſm: And this was only a particular Favour allowed to the Novatians and Donatiſts, by way of Indulgence and Diſpenſation with the common Rule, which was to keep Hereticks and Schiſmaticks for ever deprived of Clerical Promotions and Sacerdotal Powers. But our Author, being ignorant of the Strictneſs of Diſcipline in the ancient Church, did not diſtinguiſh between her common and ordinary Rule, and the particular Indulgences and Diſpenſations that were granted in ſome Caſes, when the Neceſſities of the Church required her to relax a little of her uſual Severity and Diſcipline; which She did in the Caſe of the Novatians and Donatiſts, to encourage them to return to the Unity of the Church; not allowing them to have been true Prieſts, whilſt they were out of the Church, but favouring them with a Lawful Commiſſion, when they returned into her Boſom; which Favour was denied generally to other Hereticks, who ſtill ſtood deprived of their Commiſſion for their former Rebellions and Oppoſitions to her, even after they were reconciled, and admitted to Lay-Communion, of which I have given numerous Inſtances in the foregoing Diſcourſe.

IT will therefore ſtand good againſt our Author, that thoſe ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were deprived of their Commiſſion, during their Hereſy and Schiſm: And then, according to his own Principles and Confeſſion, they were no Prieſts in that State, when their Commiſſion was taken away by that very Authority, that is, the Epiſcopal Power which firſt gave it. I will put the whole Iſſue of the Debate upon this ſingle Point: For he and I are now well agreed, that the Merits of the Cauſe are contained in it. So that if it appears, that the Sacerdotal Power and Commiſſion of thoſe ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks was actually taken from them by the ſame Epiſcopal Power which firſt gave it; then our Author profeſſes he will own, that they were no longer Authorized Prieſts by Vertue of any Indelible or Indeleted Character remaining in them. For our Author in this is more ingenuous and favourable to the Proteſtant Cauſe than ſome others: He owns that the Character of a Prieſt may be ſo far deleted or blotted out for his Crimes, that all actual Power, Authority, Commiſſion, and Rights of a Prieſt, may be taken from him, by the ſame competent Power which firſt inveſted him with them. And if it be undeniably proved, that this was actually the Caſe of the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, as I am confident it is proved by the beſt of Evidences in the foregoing Diſcourſe, as clear as the Sun at Noon-Day; then the Ground of the Diſpute is entirely at an end, and our Author will confeſs, that Baptiſm was anciently given by ſuch Unauthorized and Irregular Prieſts as had actually no Commiſſion.

AND therefore, for this Reaſon, I will wave at preſent making any farther Reflections upon our Author's Account of ancient Hiſtory; not becauſe he has ſaid any thing of Moment to take off the Force of the Arguments and Authorities I urged to prove my ſeveral Aſſertions, but becauſe the Method he and I are now agreed upon, is a more likely and compendious Way to terminate this Diſpute, by bringing Matters to a ſingle Point, and examining the Truth of that by the moſt publick Acts and authentick Records of the Church. Here we ſhall have no ſuch great Occaſion to wrangle about private Authors ſpeaking their own private Senſe: (Which is our Author's Way of anſwering all that I have ſaid in two Words, though he himſelf obliges the World with no other Authors:) For the Councils will be allowed on all hands to be the publick Voice of the Church, and therefore, to make ſpeedy Diſpatch of this Diſpute and bring it to a ſhort Iſſue, I have choſen to prove my Theſis from the Proceedings of the General and Provincial Councils againſt Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which are Proofs that are liable to no Exceptions of this Kind, ſo long as they are the Genuine Acts of the Councils they pretend to be, and are underſtood by us in the Genuine Senſe and Meaning of them. Let theſe then be the Dernier Reſort and final Enquiry, as to what concerns ancient Hiſtory upon this Point, between me and this Author. And let him remember, that the only Queſtion now is, Whether the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks had not their Commiſſion miſſion vacated by the ſame Epiſcopal Power and Authority which at firſt gave it? If the Reader deſires to ſee an Anſwer to what this Author urges from St. Jerom, St. Baſil, and St. Chryſoſtom (which are the only Authorities which ſeem to carry any Colour of an Argument in them) he may find it in the Entrance of the foregoing Diſcourſe, where I ſtate the Controverſy with Dr. Brett, and ſhew how he miſtakes the Senſe of each of them; and particularly, that Baſil's Opinion, of Hereticks being diveſted of their Commiſſion and made Laymen, is agreeable to the Senſe of the whole Catholick Church, and therefore utterly Deſtructive of our Author's contrary Notion and Aſſertion.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Greek Church, and the Churches of the Reformation.

SECT. 1. That the ancient Greek Church had ſeveral Laws before the Eighth Century, determining the Validity of Uncommiſſioned Lay-Baptiſm.

I HAVE now but one Thing more to conſider with our Author, which is the Reflections he makes upon the Account which I gave of the Modern Greek Church, and the Churches of the Reformation. I began my Account of the Modern Greek Church, with the Canons of Nicephorus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who lived in the Beginning of the Ninth Century: And I thought it was very proper to give an Account of the Modern Practice of the Greek Church from Modern Writers. But our Author takes Occaſion hence to obſerve, p. 212. "That for the firſt Eight Hundred "Years, that Church had no Rule, Eccle- "ſiaſtical Law, or Cuſtom, whereby to "determine the pretended Validity of any "Lay-Baptiſms whatſoever." I hope by this time our Author is a little better informed and ſatisfied, when he has conſidered how many ancient general Councils, during that Term of 800 Years, by their Eccleſiaſtical Laws and Rules, determined the Validity of Heretical Baptiſm; and how many of the ſame Councils, with many others, determined likewiſe, that thoſe very Hereticks were deprived of all Sacerdotal Power, Authority, and Commiſſion, and conſequently in the State of Unauthorized Laymen; as I had ſufficiently intimated in the former Part of my Scholaſtical Hiſtory, and have now more ſubſtantially proved in this. Therefore his Harangue about the great Extent of the Greek Church, and how ſignificant a Part it was of the Catholick Church, is only againſt himſelf; though he deſigned it as a ſpecious Pretext to impoſe upon his Readers. And for the Authorities of St. Baſil and St. Chryſoſtom, which are ſo often produced for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, I have ſhewed before in Staing the Controverſy with Dr. Brett, that they make nothing to his Purpoſe.

SECT. 2. The Authority of the Canons of Nicephorus vindicated from our Author's Exceptions.

HE next runs out againſt Nicephorus, as a zealous Promoter of the Superſtition of Image-Worſhip, and ſays, p. 214. "That his Authority "is of no more value in this "Caſe of Lay-Baptiſm, than "it is in the other of the Uſe of Images in "Divine Worſhip." I did not deſire it to be of any greater value: I produced it only to determine a Queſtion of Fact, not of Right, Whether Lay-Baptiſm, in any Caſe, was then allowed in the Greek Church? The Queſtion was not, Whether it was Lawful or Unlawful in it ſelf, but whether it was then the Practice of the Greek Church: And his Teſtimony is ſufficient to decide this to be their Practice, though their Practice might chance to be againſt a Divine Law, which is another Queſtion. So if the Queſtion had been about Image-Worſhip, as to Fact only, Whether it was then ſet up in the Greek Church; the Teſtimony of Nicephorus, or the Second Council of Nice, had been good in this Caſe to have proved the Fact, though not ſufficient to have juſtified the Lawfulneſs of the Practice. But our Author cunningly confounds theſe Queſtions of Fact and Right together, and labours artificially to work his Reader into an ill Opinion of Nicephorus, only to ruin his Credit as an Hiſtorian.

BUT if this will not ſucceed, he would have his Reader believe, theſe Canons were only the private Dictates of Nicephorus, not made in any Authentick Council at all, p. 215. eſpecially not in the Council of 270 Biſhops An. 814. I am not much concerned what Council they were made in, though I think it as likely to be in the Council of 270 Biſhops as any other. But that is not the Queſtion. Were they not Canons of the Greek Patriarch? And were the Canons of the Patriarch of no Force in the Greek Church? If not, how came Harmenopulus to make uſe of them as Canon-Law, in a Collection of Rules to direct Men in their Practice? This one Reaſon is of more Weight with me than all our Author's little Criticiſms to the contrary; who, if Nicephorus and his Canons had been for his Turn, could have ſaid as many pretty Things in their Favour, as now he does to their Prejudice, only to byaſs his Reader againſt them. He could have ſaid, That Patriarchs did not uſe to make Canons but in Synod; or if otherwiſe, yet their Power was ſo ample and extenſive, that their Canons were of Force through all the Churches, under their Juriſdiction. But now theſe Canons are not the declared Authentick Senſe of the Greek Church; and that for another Reaſon, p. 220. Becauſe ſome Greek Writers wrote boldly againſt the Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm in any Caſe whatſoever, which it is reaſonable to believe they would have been more tender of oppoſing, if it had been the general Senſe and Practice of the Greek Church. As if our Author, or I, or our Readers, knew none at this Day, who write boldly againſt the approved lawful Senſe and Practice of the Church of England, without any Tenderneſs for the ſtanding Rules and Orders of the Church. 'Tis low Waters with a Man, and his Invention is almoſt exhauſted, when he is forced to make uſe of ſuch pretty Arguments as theſe.

BUT he returns upon us again with St. Baſil, St. Chryſoſtom, and the whole Greek Church, for 800 Years, p. 221. In anſwer to which I have ſhewed him before, that St. Baſil's Canons, which he ſays were Part of the Canon-Law of the Greek Church, pronounce Hereticks to be no more than Laymen: And the Greek Church for 800 Years did the ſame; and yet received the Baptiſms of thoſe Laymen without Rebaptization. Which is another ſort of Demonſtration of the Senſe and Practice of the Greek Church, than any our Author pretends to give us.

AT laſt he comes to the poor Shift to tell his Readers, pag. 221. that Nicephorus was wrought upon by the Emiſſaries of the Church of Rome, to introduce this Novelty into the Greek Church; "And that gave juſt Occaſi-
"on to others of the Greek Church, who were "jealous for the Truths of Chriſtianity, to "give that Church timely Warning of dan"gerous Romiſh Novelties creeping in among "them; of which Number Georgius Hamarto-
"lus, Glycas, and Theodorus Scutariota, appear "to have been, in vigorouſly oppoſing the "pretended Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm, which "was firſt ſtarted only in the Latin Church."
This Pretence of being wrought upon by Romiſh Emiſſaries, ſerves our Author at all Turns, when he has nothing elſe to ſay to leſſen the Credit, or elude the Teſtimony of any Writer; and we ſhall have more of it by and by, againſt the modern Greeks. Here I obſerve only, how he gives Characters of Men, juſt as they ſeem to favour or not favour his own Opinions. The Authority of Nicephorus was not worth a Straw, becauſe he was a zealous Defender of Image-Worſhip; but Hamartolus and Glycas, though they were as zealous Defenders of Image-Worſhip as Nicephorus, are honeſt Men, jealous for the Truths of Chriſtianity, only becauſe they vigorouſly oppoſed the pretended Lawfulneſs of Lay-Baptiſm. When Men can be thus partial in giving Characters of Men, I think it matters not much, what they ſay for or againſt them: And therefore the Canons of Nicephorus will ſtand good ſtill, as Rules for the Greek Church, notwithſtanding all theſe little Pleas of our Author againſt them.

SECT. 3. Our Author's diſingenuous Way of Anſwering the Modern Greek Writers.

IN the Year 1166, I obſerved there was a Council at Conſtantinople, which denied the Validity of Baptiſm given by pretended or falſe Prieſts, who counterfeited Orders, pretending to be Prieſts when they were not ſo. Our Author upon this, ſays, I can produce no Councils for 1200 Years that would have determined otherwiſe than this Council did in this Matter; when yet I have ſhewed him, that moſt of the ancient Councils ſaid, Hereticks were no Prieſts, but falſe Prieſts, pretending to be Prieſts when they were not ſo; and yet they did not order ſuch Perſons as were baptized by them, to be rebaptized, as this Council did. I ſaid farther concerning the Decree of this Council, That it had not ſaid any thing particularly about the Invalidity of Laymen's Baptiſm in extraordinary Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity; and therefore it might conſiſt with the Canons of Nicephorus, which only reſpected ſuch Caſes. To this our Author replies, "That the Power of Baptizing was commit"ted only to thoſe who were veſted with a
"Prieſtly Power, and Laicks have no ſuch
"Power or Authority given them," P. 230. But now our Author forgets what he had ſo often aſſerted before, "That upon Suppo-
"ſition a Layman could have the Biſhop's
"Authority and Commiſſion to baptize in an "extraordinary Caſe of Neceſſity, he would,
"in that Act, and for that Time, ſo far be
"a Prieſt, and inveſted with Sacerdotal Pow"er, and not be in that Act a mere Uncom-
"miſſioned Layman." And why might not this Greek Council be of our Author's Mind, and think Laymen that were Commiſſioned to baptize in a particular Caſe, to be Prieſts in that Act, and not mere Laymen? And if ſo, there is no Contradiction between the Canons of Nicephorus and this Council. For they both allow the Baptiſms of Men inveſted with Sacerdotal Powers.

BUT however it was, I ſhewed that the Greeks practiſed according to the Rules given in the Canons of Nicephorus to this Day, and this I proved from undoubted Evidences of Hiſtorians and others, who give an Account of

of their Practice. To ſmother which glaring Evidence, our Author firſt betakes himſelf to his uſual Art of leſſening the Authority of the Witneſſes, by ſaying, p. 236. "They were "no more than particular Men, and their "Authority of no Importance." As if a Number of credible Hiſtorians agreeing together, were not ſufficient Authority to ſhew us what was the Practice of any Church, when the Queſtion was only about a Matter of Fact, and not Right; and no contrary Evidence is ſo much as pretended to confront or contradict them. "But 'tis very notorious, "our Author ſays, 2dly, That in theſe lat-"ter Ages the Greeks are, by the Craft and "Subtilty of the Romiſh Emiſſaries, divided "into two Parties." Why did he not then produce the Teſtimony of ſome of that Party, who were againſt the Popiſh Doctrine, as he calls it, of allowing Laymen to baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity? Or why did he not prove particularly of the Authors I produced, that they were influenced or bribed by the Jeſuits to deliver falſe Hiſtory in Favour of the Romiſh Pretenſions? Were they divided into two Parties upon this Point, and yet all wrote unanimouſly on one Side only? Or how does he prove that thoſe that wrote, were all in the Romiſh Intereſt? He entertains his Readers, by way of Blind, with a long Story about the Jeſuits Uſage of Cyrillus Lucaris, which is nothing to the Purpoſe. For this Author is not concerned in the Diſpute, one Way or other. He ſhould have ſhewed, that the Teſtimony of Jeremy the Patriarch was gained only by the Art of ſome Romiſh Emiſſaries. Inſtead of this, he tells us, "The Patriarch was diſ-"pleaſed with the Lutherans, for believing "Invocation of Saints to be vain and fri-"volous, and for deſpiſing that Adoration "which was paid to their Images and Holy "Relicks," Pag. 238. And what then? Is it likely, that he who was diſpleaſed at the Lutherans, would have repreſented the Greek Church, as agreeing with the Lutherans, if it was really otherwiſe? Nothing can be more improbable than this: And therefore I cannot but imagine our Author was in a ſort of Maze and Confuſion when he wrote it, ſince nothing could have been ſaid more directly againſt his Purpoſe. But he adds, "Mr. Bingham might "with as good a Grace have produced that "Patriarch's Teſtimony for theſe Popiſh Cor-"ruptions, Invocation of Saints, and Adorati-"on of Images, and Relicks, as for the other." And where had been the Harm of that, I pray, if any one had made a Queſtion, Whether Invocation of Saints, and the Worſhip of Images had been the Practices of the Greek Church? Could we have had a better Evidence for Matter of Fact in ſuch a Caſe, than the Teſtimony of one of their own Patriarchs? Does not our Author himſelf quote a Greek Council, and ſome others before that, for the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm? And why might not he with as good a Grace have produced the ſame Authors for the Worſhip of Saints and Images? No doubt he might, if the Queſtion had been only, Whether Saints and Images had then been Worſhipped in the Greek Church? Their Teſtimony in this Caſe, to determine a Matter of Fact, had been as good and certain as any other. Why then does he quarrel with me for doing that which any one may do, and which he himſelf has done, without any Offence or Imputation? I know not, in truth, how he ſhould determine Matters of Fact, unleſs from ſuch Authors as have particularly wrote about them.

AFTER he has laſhed the Patriarch, he turns off all the other Inſtances I gave, by ſaying, p. 238, "That they are of ſo Mo-"dern a Date, that we have Reaſon to be-"lieve, they are no better than the mere "Effects of ſome Greeks, being too much in-"fected with the Superſtitions of the Church "of Rome." If theſe Modern Greeks had been of his Side, then they had not been too Modern for his Purpoſe. But if they were only ſome Greeks infected with the Romiſh Superſtitions, why did he not produce others not infected with them, to tell us what was the Practice of the Non infected Greek Church in the Point of Lay-Baptiſm? As it happens, our Author is very unlucky in his Obſervations on the Character of theſe Modern Greeks. For the chief of thoſe Writers, which I quoted, were ſo far from being Latinized Greeks, that they were profeſs'd Oppoſers of the Romiſh Uſurpations. Gabriel Severus Archbiſhop of Philadelphia, is often railed at by Leo Allatius for Writing in Defence of the Greeks againſt the Latins, and particularly againſt the Pope's Supremacy, which is the grand Uſurpation and Corruption of the Romiſh Church. It was a little unfortunate therefore in our Author, ſo careleſly and without conſidering, to rank that Archbiſhop among thoſe Greeks that were Favourers of the Romiſh Church, when he was ſo great a Stickler againſt it. He is no happier in applying his Character to Metrophanes Critopulus: For this Writer was out of the Reach of Romiſh Emiſſaries and Jeſuits: He was a Student in Oxford, ſent into England by Cyrillus Lucaris, and by him recommended to the Protection and Patronage of Archbiſhop Abbot, who will not be ſuſpected to have inſtilled into him any of the Romiſh Corruptions. How then could our Author with any Modeſty ſay, The reſt of the Inſtances I had given were out of Latinized Greeks, when it is ſo plain they were moſt directly contrary? And why ſhould he not vouchſafe his Readers one Modern Greek Writer, Latinized or Unlatinized, that gave a different Account from what I did of the preſent Practice of the Greek Church? That had been the fair Way of Anſwering, by Confronting and Diſproving my Authorities by better and more credible Allegations. But he knew this was not to be attempted, and yet resolving to outface the Sun at Noon-Day, he betakes himself to another Method, to invalidate the Evidence by falling foul upon the Character and Reputation of the Persons: Which yet proves as unfortunate, as it was disingenuous; for the Persons he assaults were Men of a quite different Party and Character to what he represents and labours to fasten on them; being no Latinized Greeks, but stiff Opposers of the Romish Church in all the ancient Points controverted between them.

COMMEND me rather now to the honest Ingenuity of Dr. Brett, who being sensible there was no withstanding so many undeniable Evidences and unquestionable Allegations, chose rather to confess he had nothing to oppose or say against them, for want of Books to make a just Enquiry. But this Author would not so give up the Cause; he pretends there was a Party among the Greeks, the true Unlatinized Greeks, that would Depose and Vouch for him: But when he comes to produce his Authorities and tell the Evidence, there is not one appears in his Behalf; even the Unlatinized Greeks, as well as the rest, are all against him. And therefore with what Success this bold Undertaker has adventured to advance one Step farther than Dr. Brett, and walk where he thought it not safe to tread, I now leave to the Judgment of every Sensible and Ingenuous Reader.

SECT. 4. That the Reason of the Greeks Practice was not their Opinion of the absolute Necessity of Baptism for Dying Infants.

I HAVE but one Remark more to make upon our Author in relation to the Modern Greek Church. He says, p. 239. "That the Reason of "this Practice of some of the "Greeks, is the uncharitable "and cruel Opinion, which "some of the Romanists hold of Infants dy-"ing without Baptism, and which those "Greeks have learned from them." Now our Author knows very well, that this Opinion about Infants was the Doctrine of St. Austin and other Latin Fathers, long before the Roman popish Writers were in being: For he himself charges St. Austin with it, and reckons it the Reason also why he allowed Laymen to baptize in Case of Necessity. Why then might not the Greeks have it from St. Austin, as well as from the Fryars and Jesuits of the Romish Church? But the Opinion of the absolute Necessity of Baptism for dying Infants was not the Reason of allowing Laymen to baptize: For Laymen were allowed to baptize Adult Persons, as well as Infants, in Cases of Necessity; and yet St. Austin had not that Opinion of the absolute Necessity of Baptism for Adult Persons, that he is commonly supposed to have of it for Infants; because he particularly excepts two Sorts of Adult Persons, as the rest of the Catholick Writers commonly do, from the Severity of the Sentence, viz. 1. Such Catechumens as died Martyrs, baptized in their own Blood: And, 2. Such of them as made Profession of a true Faith and a sincere Repentance, and died without Baptism, not in any Contempt or Neglect of it, but by some extreme Necessity, which debarred them from it, when they most earnestly desired it. They who represent St. Austin's Opinion otherwise, I will make bold to say, are ignorant of his Doctrine, which ought not to be spoken of without this necessary Distinction between Infants and Adult Persons. Now then to found the Opinion St. Austin had of the Lawfulness of Laymens Baptizing Adult Persons in Cases of Necessity, upon the Doctrine of the Absolute Necessity of Baptism for Infants, is doing Wrong to St. Austin, because it is certain, this Reason will not extend to Adult Persons, unless St. Austin had entertained the same Notion of them, as he did of others. And that he did not, I shall have Occasion to shew very plainly in the next Volume of my Origines, which is now preparing for the Press. If then St. Austin did not found the Lawfulness of Laymens baptizing in Cases of Necessity upon the Opinion of the absolute Necessity of Baptism for Infants, but upon some more general Reason, that equally extends to Adult Persons also; it is more than probable the Greeks did so too, as I shall be inclined to think, till I see better Reasons than any our Author has offered to the contrary.

BUT I will presume to ask our Author two Questions farther. 1. How he is assured, that this uncharitable and cruel Opinion about Infants dying without Baptism, was embraced by the Greeks at all? And, 2. Why he ascribes it only to some of them, and not to the rest? If he says, They must needs be of this Opinion, because they allowed Laymen to baptize in Cases of Necessity; I answer, That that is no Reason at all: For many Men allow Laymen to baptize in such Cases, who yet were never tinctured with that Opinion: As the Lutherans, who hold, that Infants dying unbaptized may be Saved as well as Adult Persons: And some of the Romanists, by his own Confession; for he makes this cruel Opinion not to be the Doctrine of all the Romanists, but only of some of them. If then some of the Romanists, and all the Lutherans could allow Laymen to baptize in Cases of Necessity, without making any such cruel Doctrine, about Infants dying unbaptized, to be the Reason and Foundation of it, Why might not the Greeks do so too? Since it does not necessarily follow, that the Reason of allowing Laymen to baptize, is any such cruel Opinion, of Infants dying without Baptism. But admit some to be of this Opinion; How does it appear, that it is only the Opinion of some of the Greeks, and not of all? Our Author

Author produces the Teſtimony of neither Side, to make good his Aſſertion. And if he ſays, It muſt needs be ſo, becauſe it was only ſome of the Greeks that allowed Laymen to baptize in Caſes of Neceſſity, but not all of them: I have already ſhewed that to be falſe; for the Unlatinized Greeks allowed this Liberty to Laymen, as well as the Latinized: And therefore if the Reaſon of this Allowance was only the cruel and uncharitable Opinion of Infants Dying unbaptized, it muſt either be aſcribed to them all or none. But whether they held this Opinion or not (which I diſpute not with our Author) it is plain, this was not the neceſſary Reaſon of allowing Laymen to baptize, ſince that might be done without holding any ſuch cruel and uncharitable Opinion. So little Strength or Solidity is there in any Part of our Author's Account of the Greek Churches, either in Point of Hiſtory, or in Point of Reaſon, after Thirty Pages ſpent upon it.

SECT. 5. Of the Moſcovite or Ruſſian Churches.

NEXT for the Moſcovite Churches, I gave an Inſtance of their Rule from one of the Canons of John their Metropolitan, which orders, That Children, in Caſe of Neceſſity, ſhould be baptized without a Prieſt. Now, inſtead of confronting this, by producing ſome contrary Canons, he only ſays, p. 241. "This was one "ſingle Man's Authority; no Synod or Coun-"cil mentioned wherein this Canon was "made." And that it was not the general Opinion of thoſe Churches, he concludes from the contrary Practice of the People. But, till he produces ſome contrary Canon, of equal Weight and Force with this of their Metropolitan and Patriarch, his ſaying ſo will not paſs for a ſufficient Anſwer. He ſuppoſes this Metropolitan made an Innovation in the Church, and the People tenacious of their ancient Cuſtom, would not ſubmit to his novel Canon, or Injunction. But this is all precarious, and a mere Suppoſition without Proof: Therefore it lies upon him to ſhew, that the Moſcovites, who had their Religion from the Modern Greeks, had originally contrary Rules of Diſcipline ſettled in their Churches; and then it will look a little more probabable that this John, whom they called their Prophet, was an Innovator; tho' ſtill it will be ſomething harſh and uncouth to joyn ſuch diſagreeable Epithets together, and give one and the ſame Man the Titles both of Prophet and Innovator. I ſhould rather think, the Churches at firſt very readily complied with the Directions of their Prophet, but afterwards his Rules came to be neglected by the Degeneracy and Corruptions of the People. Our Author thinks otherwiſe: But till he produces ſome Authentick Canon to confront this, I cannot come into his Opinion.

SECT. 6. No farther Diſpute about the Lutheran Churches.

NEXT for the Lutheran Churches, he owns the Account I gave of them to be true: But he ſays, p. 247. "They "have no Catholick Principle "whereon to found their Practice, and that "their Reaſons are very weak, inſignificant "and falſe," Which is not now the Queſtion, for we are only conſidering Matters Hiſtorically, and ſo long as he owns what I delivered before to be true in Fact, we will enter into no farther Diſpute about them.

SECT. 7. Nor about Zuinglius and the Helvetian Churches.

FOR the ſame Reaſon we need not ſtand about the Opinion of Zuinglius or the Helvetick Churches: For he acknowledges the Account to be true; only he cries out, Popery, Popery! becauſe no Prohibition was laid upon Men in Caſes of Neceſſity, nor any Order made for Rebaptizing thoſe who were Irregularly baptized by others. But if this be Popery, it was the Popery of the primitive Church, which, neither by General nor Provincial Councils, laid any Prohibition upon Men in Caſes of Neceſſity, nor made any Order for Rebaptizing thoſe that were irregularly baptized by others; but, on the contrary, made many Orders both in General and Provincial Councils againſt Rebaptizing thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, though thoſe Hereticks and Schiſmaticks were determined to be no Authorized Prieſts, but Uncommiſſioned Laymen.

SECT. 8. That the Calviniſts do, in ſome Caſes, own the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm.

IN ſtating the Opinion of Calvin, our Author finds ſeveral Faults with my Account. Firſt, He ſays, I wrong tranſlate Calvin's Words, Adeoque ab ipſo fere Eccleſiæ exordio, uſu receptum fuit, ut in periculo mortis Laici baptizarent, ſi miniſter in tempore non adeſſet: This only implies a Received Cuſtom, not a generally prevailing Cuſtom, he ſays, that Laymen ſhould baptize in Danger of Death, and that not always, but only almoſt from the Beginning of the Church. But what Difference there is between a Received Cuſtom, and a generally prevailing Cuſtom, I think we had beſt leave to the Criticks to determine. If Calvin had expreſſed his Mind never ſo clearly, it would have weighed little with our Author: For he thinks Calvin was deceived, in allowing the Cuſtom to be ſo early received as he fancies, that is, from near the Beginning of the Church.

BUT Secondly, he is very confident I am miſtaken in ſaying, That Calvin does not peremptorily pronounce ſuch Baptiſms abſolutely Null and Void, but the contrary: The Proof I gave of this was from the Words of Calvin, cited by Archbiſhop Whitgift, to the

ſame Purpoſe, againſt Cartwright: Viz. " It is " ſufficient for us to know the Hand and Seal " of the LORD in his Sacraments, by whom- " ſoever they be delivered." In Anſwer to this, our Author ſays, p. 251. " That if the " Word Whomſoever, as Archbiſhop Whitgift has " it, muſt be taken in its full Extent and " Meaning, then Calvin will be made to eſteem " as Good and Valid all the pretended Bap- " tiſms of Laymen and Women, Jews, Turks, " Infidels and Pagans, which is plainly a No- " velty of corrupt Popery. And Calvin will " be made to ſpeak inconſiſtently with him- " ſelf, and to contradict his own Principle, " which was, That Lay-Baptiſm was not law- " ful in any Caſe whatſoever." Our Author here again confounds Unauthorized and Invalid Baptiſm together, and hence concludes, that becauſe Calvin thought all Lay-Baptiſm to beUnlawful, therefore he muſt needs think it abſolutely Invalid, and of Neceſſity to be repeated. Whereas he was not of that Opinion, but thought, if it had the Hand and Seal of the LORD, that is, the outward Form of Baptiſm duly adminiſtred, it was not neneceſſary to repeat it, eſpecially in a confuſed and diſorderly State of the Church, where many Things were to be tolerated, which which were not proper to be endured in a well-regulated and exactly Diſciplined Church. He did non think the Lawfulneſs of the Adminiſtrator to be abſolutely an Eſſential Part of Baptiſm, but only a neceſſary Circumſtance, which ought to be obſerved in all Well-diſciplined Churches; which yet might be diſpenſed with in a Diſſipated State of the Church; and in ſuch Caſes, tho' adminiſtred by Laymen, he thought there was no Neceſſity of repeating it by Rebaptization. Our Author has already been ſhewed this by another Hand [d] out of one of Calvin's Epiſtles [e], part of which I ſhall here again tranſcribe. Adulterinum Baptiſmum cenſemus, qui adminiſtratus eſt à Privato homine; Ac in Eccleſia rectè compoſita tolerabilis non eſſet hæc temeritas. Sed quia id apud vos inter principia contigit, ante reſtitutum Eccleſiæ Ordinem, & rebus adhuc confuſis; non tantum Errori danda eſt venia, ſed ferendus eſt qualiſcunque Baptiſmus, modo ne in exemplum trahatur, quod ſemel perperam geſtum eſt. Nam in Eccleſiæ Diſſipatione multa Deus condonat, quæ nullo modo admittere fas eſſet in Eccleſiam bene ordinatam. Olim cum vitiata eſſet Religio, haud dubie multis vitiis & corruptelis implicita Circumciſio fuit; quam tamen iteratam fuiſſe non legimus, quum Populus revocaretur ad purum cultum: Ergo anxie diſquirere neceſſe non eſt, ac ne expedit quidem, in omnes Circumſtantias, quæ innumeros ſcrupulos gignerent. Proinde quod ignovit Deus ſub Papatu, nos quoque ſepeliamus. Nunc ubi de vero Baptiſmi uſu admonita fuerit Eccleſia, quod pugnaret cum Chriſti Inſtitutione, pro nihilo ducendum eſſet, ac de integro baptizandus, qui pollutus fuerit profana aſperſione. " We judge that Baptiſm to be adul- " terated or vitiated, which is adminiſtred by " a private Man; and this Temerity in a well " ordered Church ought not to be tolerated. " But becauſe this happened among you in " the Beginning of the Reformation, before " the Order of the Church was well reſto- " red, and while Things were in Confu- " ſion, this Error is not only to be pardon- " ed, but any Baptiſm to be admitted, pro- " vided the Irregularity of what was once " done, be not drawn into Precedent or " Example for the future. For in the Diſ- " ſipation of the Church, GOD pardons " many Things that are not to be admitted " of in a well ordered-Church. Heretofore, " when Religion was corrupted, no doubt " many Faults and Corruptions had crept " into Circumciſion; yet we do not read " that it was repeated, when the People " were called back to the Purity of Religi- " on. It is therefore neither neceſſary nor " expedient to be too anxious in our Enquiries " into all Circumſtances, which may raiſe " innumerable Scruples. And therefore what " GOD pardoned under the Papacy, let us " alſo bury. Only now that the Church " is inſtructed in the true Uſe of Baptiſm, " what is repugnant to CHRIST's Inſtituti- " on, is to be accounted as nothing; and " he is to be baptized again, who has been " polluted by a profane Waſhing."

HERE it is plain Calvin does not make the Publick Miniſter ſo abſolutely Neceſſary and Eſſential to Baptiſm, as that all Baptiſms miniſtred by private Men in all Caſes, and eſpecially in a grand Diſſipation of the Church, are of Neceſſity to be repeated. For he adviſes againſt the Repetition of ſuch Baptiſms, as, in the Infancy of the Reformation, were given by Popiſh Laymen. But in a well-ſettled Church, his Opinion was, that by the Rules and Diſcipline of ſuch a Church, ſuch Baptiſms ſhould be ordered to be repeated.

AND this I ſhewed alſo was the Opinion of Dr. Alting, an eminent Leader and Profeſſor in the Palatine Churches, That Baptiſms given by Laymen in ſome Exigencies, as that of a Diſſipation of the Church, were not of neceſſity to be repeated. But our Author replies, p. 255. " What ſignifies the Saying of " one Man, when, according to Mr. Bingham, " the Churches of the Palatinate commonly " follow the contrary Doctrine? And the " Doctor talks inconſiſtently with himſelf " too, whilſt he acknowledges the ſame Bap- " tiſm to be illegitimate and unlawful." Our Author uſes here a great deal of his uſual Artifice

[b] Letter to the Author of Lay-Baptiſm Invalid; by a Country Clergyman. Lond. 1713. p. 33.

[e] Calvin. Epiſt. p. 209. Edit. Amſt. 1667.

Artifice and Slight of Hand in this Anſwer. For he has an excellent Talent at Miſrepreſentation. 1ſt, He would perſuade his Readers, that I ſay, The Palatine Churches commonly follow the contrary Doctrine to that which was delivered by Alting; when yet I ſay nothing of the Palatine Churches but what makes them plainly agree together. But 2dly, Alting was but one Man, and a Doctor of no Moment in this Affair. Yet our Author did not think fit to oblige his Reader with a Doctor of as little Moment to confront him, or his Opinion, about the Validity of Lay-Baptiſm in Time of Perſecution, or Diſſipation of the Church: In which Opinion he was not ſo ſingular as our Author imagines: For, as we ſee, he followed Calvin in the Reſolution of this Point, and, in a manner, tranſcribed his Arguments taken from Circumciſion, and Baptiſms adminiſtred by Laymen, under the Papacy, which they both call Baptiſms in a Diſſipation of the Church. And this makes it probable to me, that this was then the current Doctrine both of the Genevans and the Palatine Churches. But he ſays, 3dly, That Alting contradicts himſelf, in affirming ſuch Baptiſms to be Valid and not neceſſary to be repeated, whilſt yet he acknowledges them to be Unlawful and Illegitimate, and therefore Falſe and Invalid. But, by our Author's Leave, this Contradiction is none of Alting's, but only fathered on him by our Author's own Inference, whoſe Principles lead him to conclude all unauthorized and unlawful Baptiſms to be Invalid, which is not aſſerted either by Alting or Calvin, as we have ſeen in the ſeveral Teſtimonies alledged from them: So that thus far, if theſe Men ſpake the Senſe of the Genevans and Palatines, they are both contrary to our Author.

BUT, after all, the Determination of the Queſtion about the Baptiſm of Unauthorized Laymen, depends not upon the Senſe or Practice of the Reformed Churches, but upon the Senſe and Practice of the Primitive Church, to which this Author and I appeal; and when the Reader fairly conſiders the Evidences produced on both Sides, for and againſt the Authority and Commiſſion of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, Baptizing whilſt they were in their Hereſy and Schiſm, he will be beſt able to judge for himſelf, where the Truth lies; Whether the ancient Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, whoſe Baptiſms were received, were true Prieſts, in Actual Commiſſion, never Vacated by the Church, as this Author aſſerts; Or whether, as I have maintained in the foregoing Diſcourſe, they were really and truly deprived of their Commiſſion by the Authority and Diſcipline of the Church, and left in the State of Unauthorized and Uncommiſſioned Laymen. The deciding this Queſtion decides the whole Diſpute, and therefore this is the only Material Thing to be examined between me and this Author. I have already produced the Evidences for my Aſſertion, and leave him and the World to judge of the Force of them, having no farther Concern in the preſent Diſpute, but to clear the Truth of ancient Hiſtory, and ſhew what was the Diſcipline and Practice of the Primitive Church, which I ſuppoſe, in this Queſtion, will have its Weight with all Sober and Unprejudiced Readers.

Council of NICE.

SOME Readers might now perhaps expect, that having finiſhed another Volume of the Antiquities of the Church, I ſhould purſue again the Controverſy of Lay-Baptiſm with Mr. L——, Volume after Volume, as often as he thinks fit to demand it. But when a Controverſy begins to ſpend itſelf in mere Wrangling, and Equivocations, and tedious Repetitions, and Perſonal rude Reflections, and feigned Charges of Contradictions, only to ſwell out a Book without much Edification to the Reader; I think it high time to put an end to ſuch a Debate; and therefore I ſhall give a ſhort and final Anſwer to his laſt Book, by making two or three Obſervations upon the moſt material Parts of it. 1. Upon his Notion of Indelible Character, and his Artifice in pretending that I agree with him in owning it, and contradict myſelf upon it, and allow all that he contends for. 2. Upon his Notion of Laymen, and Lay-Communion; and of a Man's having a Right to give the Communion, who has no Right to receive it. Which I ſhall ſhew to be nothing but a ſplendid Equivocation, to dazle the Eyes of his Readers. 3. Upon his looſe Notions of the Power and Effects of Church Laws and Authority in annulling Uncanonical Ordinations; aud particularly the Ordination of Novatian the Heretick. 4. Upon his Senſe of the Nicene Canon, which he pretends, allowed the Novatians to be true Biſhops and Prieſts, during their Continuance in Hereſy and Schiſm. As to his Flowers of Rhetorick, indecent Reflections, and ungentile Inſinuations, which he every where interſperſes, to leſſen the Character of his Adverſary and his Writings; as theſe have no Relation to the Merits of the Cauſe, nor any ways affect the preſent Diſpute: So I think it below me to take Notice of them: And if his Admirers are pleaſed with his Way of Writing, they may enjoy the Pleaſure of it for me without Contradiction.

1. THE firſt Thing I take Notice of, is his Notion of the Indelible Character of a Prieſt, which he ſuppoſes to have ſuch a Virtue in it, as to preſerve the Power and Authority of a Prieſt, even after the Church has Depoſed, Degraded, and Excommunicated him, and done all She can to take away his Sacerdotal Power

Power by withdrawing her Commiſſion from him. Now ſuch a Notion of Indelible Character, I have every where denied and utterly rejected: And therefore all his Quotations out of my Writings, as if I had owned an Indelible Character in his Senſe, are a mere Equivocation, and manifeſt Impoſition upon the Credulity of his Readers. The Indelible Character which I have owned, is the External Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands, which may remain upon a Man, when the Church has withdrawn her Commiſſion, and taken away all Sacerdotal Power and Authority from him. And the Meaning of this is no more, than that when the Church thinks fit to recall ſuch a Man to his Office, and reſtore him to the Power and Authority of a Prieſt again, She does it not by a new Impoſition of Hands ordinarily, but only by a new Commiſſion. This may be illuſtrated by the Example of the Roman Emperors treating their Soldiers, from whoſe Practice the Name of Indelible Character was firſt taken. When the Emperors took any Soldiers into their Service, they were uſed to ſet a Mark or Character upon their Bodies, to ſignify to whoſe Service they belonged. Now if any Soldier turned Rebel againſt his Prince, the Emperor immediately withdrew his Commiſſion, and took away his Office, Power, and Authority from him; But ſtill his Initial Character, which he had at his firſt Entrance, remained with him, even after the Man was turned Rebel, and diveſted of all Authority by his Prince: And if the Emperor had Occaſion to recall ſuch an one again into his Service, he needed not to do it by a new Character, which ſtill remained upon the Rebel, but only by granting him a new Commiſſion, and thereby reſtoring him to the Office, Power and Authority of a Soldier again. In this Caſe it would be abſurd to ſay, That a Soldier who turns Rebel, has his Prince's Authority and Power, when the Prince has withdrawn his Commiſſion from him, becauſe he ſtill retains the Imperial Mark or Character upon him; which then ſignifies no more, but that only the Man is turned Renegado againſt his Prince, till ſuch time as the Prince is pleaſed to reſtore him to his Office and Power again: and then the ſame Character will ſtill ſerve to be the Mark of a lawful Soldier, which in the time he ſtood diveſted of Authority and without Commiſſion, was only the Indication of a Rebel. After the ſame manner it is with Chriſtians: The Soldiers of JESUS CHRIST, when they are firſt entred into his Service, are ſigned and marked with the Waſhing of Baptiſm, which is the Character of the LORD, that diſtinguiſhes them from Jews and Gentiles. If after this they turn Rebels or Apoſtates, they are no longer entitled to the Spiritual Rights and Privileges of Chriſtian Communion; yet ſtill they retain their external Character, their firſt Waſhing of Baptiſm, which after the greateſt Apoſtacy, when they return to their Obedience, is never a ſecond time repeated. And ſo likewiſe, when they are entred into a higher Degree of CHRIST's Service, his Miniſtry or Sacerdotal Office, they are ſigned or marked with another external Character, which is, Impoſition of Hands; together with which they receive a Commiſſion, Power and Authority to act as his Miniſters in the Sacerdotal Function. If after the Reception of theſe, they turn Rebels againſt CHRIST, and become Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Apoſtates, or Vile and Flagitious Men; the Church, who firſt gave them their Commiſſion, Power and Authority in the Name of CHRIST, has Power alſo in the Name of CHRIST, to withdraw their Commiſſion, Power and Authority from them: But ſtill the external Character of Impoſition of Hands remains upon them, even after they are turned out of Office, and diveſted of all Sacerdotal Authority by the Church in the Name of the Prince: So that if the Church ſhall think it proper to recall them again into her Service, She needs not to do it by a new external Character, of Impoſition of Hands, but only by a new Commiſſion; thereby inveſting them again with the Power, Authority and Rights of Miniſters, which for their Rebellion She had taken from them. Whereby it plainly appears, That the external Character of a Prieſt, which is called Indelible, and the Commiſſion, Power and Authority of a Prieſt, are very different Things; the one may be taken away, whilſt the other remains; the one is an external Ceremony, which may continue with a Rebel after he is turned out of Commiſſion; the other is a ſpiritual Authority and Power, which can laſt no longer than a Man is allowed to continue in his Office by Virtue of his Commiſſion: Which Commiſſion when it is once withdrawn by CHRIST, or by the Church legally in his Name, the Man has no longer the Power and Authority of a Prieſt, becauſe he is deprived by his Prince of the Commiſſion, which intitled him to it. I believe, there is no ordinary Reader, but what can plainly diſtinguiſh theſe two Things from one another: and yet our Author is pleaſed to confound them together, that he might thence infer, That if the external Character of a Prieſt remained with him after he was degraded, the ſpiritual Power, Commiſſion and Authority of a Prieſt remained with him likewiſe: And that I was guilty of a Contradiction, in allowing the one to remain, and not the other. Whereas the greateſt Part of the Teſtimonies I had cited (which our Author is pleaſed to ſlide over) do ſhew as plainly as Words can expreſs, that the Church did actually withdraw her Commiſſion, Power and Authority from degraded and excommunicated Prieſts, at the ſame time that She left this, which I call the external Character of Impoſition of Hands,

ſtill remaining with them, ſo as not to repeat it when ſhe thought fit to receive them into Office again by the Grant of a new Commiſſion: As the Emperors were wont to receive their Rebel-Soldiers into Office again, not by impreſſing upon them a new Character, but by granting them a new Commiſſion. Our Author himſelf makes no queſtion, but that in the Time of Cyprian, the Church did totally withdraw her Commiſſion, Authority and Power from degraded Prieſts, and thereby reduce them to the State and Condition of Laymen: But yet ſhe recalled ſome of theſe to their Station again; not by giving them a new Impoſition of Hands, but only a new Commiſſion. As appears in the Caſe of Maximus, the Roman Presbyter, who had been the chief Inſtrument in procuring the pretended Ordination of Novatian, and was one of the principal Men in the Schiſm: Whilſt ſome others, both Biſhops and Presbyters were reduced to the unalterable State of Laymen, there to continue without Hopes of Reſtitution, this one Man had this peculiar Favour ſhewed him (in Conſideration that he had been a Confeſſor for the Name of CHRIST) that he was reſtored to his Clerical Office again, upon his Submiſſion and Return to the Church. Yet we do not find that he was admitted again by any new Impoſition of Hands, but only by a new Commiſſion, or Precept, empowering him to act with Authority in his former Station. As Cornelius, Biſhop of Rome, who was the Man from whom he received his Commiſſion, gives Cyprian [a] an Account of the whole Tranſaction. By which any one may judge, the Commiſſion was a different Thing from the Impoſition of Hands, ſince the one was neceſſary to be renewed, to reſtore a degraded Prieſt to his Office again, but the other needed no repeating. The Church in after-Ages generally obſerved the ſame Rule, ſhe withdrew her Commiſſion from Delinquent Prieſts, and reduced them (as the Church in the Time of Cyprian and Cornelius had done before) to the State of Laymen: And then they were as much Laymen, as thoſe in the Time of Cyprian, becauſe they were deprived of their Commiſſion in the ſame Words and Form as thoſe in the Time of Cyprian: But yet the Church ſometimes reſtored to theſe their Prieſtly Office again, as Cornelius did to Maximus, not by any new Impoſition of Hands, but by granting them a new Commiſſion, and inveſting them with a new Authority and Power, which they were deprived of by the Church's Cenſures. So that when our Author has laboured never ſo much, to prove that a degraded Prieſt has ſtill the Church's Commiſſion, Authority and Power to act as a Prieſt, becauſe he once received an Impoſition of Hands, which is an external Character, that he needs not receive again; his Labour is all to no Purpoſe: For 'tis the Commiſſion and Authority we are enquiring after, Whether a Man can be ſaid to retain his Commiſſion and Authority, when the Church has declared in the plaineſt Terms, that ſhe has taken all Commiſſion and Authority from him? Let him retain, if you pleaſe, his external Character of Impoſition of Hands upon him; let him be one that needs not a new Impoſition of Hands to reſtore him to the Prieſtly Office again: Yet he needs a new Commiſſion, if he was deprived of it, and muſt have a new Authority, before he can act as an authorized Prieſt again. His Indelible Character will not preſerve his Authority, when the Church by her juſt Authority has taken his Commiſſion from him; no more than a Rebel-Soldier can be ſaid to War by the Authority of his Prince, when his Prince has once taken his Military Commiſſion from him, altho' he retain ſtill his Prince's Signature or Character that was given him at his firſt Admiſſion. But this Gentleman always takes the Character of a Prieſt for his Commiſſion, Authority and Power: And then it is no wonder he ſhould think, a Prieſt cannot loſe his Authority and Commiſſion, but he muſt loſe his Character alſo. But if the Character of a Prieſt be a different Thing from his Commiſſion, (as a Sign differs from the Thing ſignified, and may be without it, tho' it many times bears it Name) then a Prieſt may loſe his Commiſſion and Authority, whilſt he retains his Character: And a Man who has once received Impoſition of Hands, may always be ſaid to have received the Sign or Character of the Prieſtly Office and Power, and to retain the Sign, even when the Commiſſion and Power is taken from him. If Men will not diſtinguiſh theſe Things, let them enjoy their own Confuſions: But let them not think hereby to preſerve the Commiſſion and Power of degraded Prieſts, by the Amuſement of an Indelible Character, when the Church has once by her lawful Authority taken their Commiſſion from them; nor go on to charge their Adverſaries with Contradictions, which are only of their own inventing.

2. ANOTHER Thing diſputed between this Gentleman and me, is concerning the Notion of Laymen, and Lay-Communion; and about a Man's having a Right to adminiſter the Communion, who has no Right to receive it. This Author, Page 31. of his Preface is very much diſturbed, that I invented a threefold Acceptation of the Word Laymen. 1. Catholick Laymen in the Church. 2. Heretical Laymen, who pretended to have a Sacerdotal Commiſſion, when they really had none. And 3. Such Laymen, as once had a true Sacerdotal Commiſſion, but were afterward deprived ed of their Commiſſion by the ſame Power of the Church, which firſt gave it, and ſo were reduced to the State and Condition of Laymen again. The firſt Sort of Laymen he allows; but the two others are Fancies, he ſays, of my inventing. 'Tis a great Happineſs in an Author, when he can ſay what he pleaſes, and be believed alſo upon his bare Word. He himſelf owns, The Cyprianick Churches made ſuch Laymen as I contend for under the third Head, that is, Such Laymen as once had a Sacerdotal Commiſſion, but were afterwards deprived of their Commiſſion, and ſo reduced to the State of Laymen again. And yet, what he himſelf owns, is now only a Notion of my inventing. What would not a Man give for ſuch a Licence as this, to be able to make that which is Nonſence in an Adverſary's Mouth, be in his own Mouth only an Argument of Learning and Underſtanding? But he ſays, he has proved, That theſe were not Laymen in the Opinion of thoſe Churches who held their Baptiſms to have been Valid. When yet he has not ſo much as tranſcribed, much leſs anſwered that Cloud of Witneſſes I produced upon this Head, for the ſame Reaſon, I preſume, that ſome Hiſtorians tell us, Bellarmin's Works are ſcarce to be met with in Italy, for fear Men who will not read Proteſtant Books, ſhould ſee the Strength of the Proteſtant Arguments in Bellarmin himſelf, and the Weakneſs of his Anſwers. The ſecond Sort of Laymen he turns off, by ſaying, The Novatians, I inſtanced in, were allowed to be Clergymen by the Council of Nice; concerning which, we ſhall ſee more by and by. But what if this were ſo? Can he be ignorant, that there were Forty Hereſies before the Novatians, which perhaps all pretended to have their Clergy and Prieſts, which yet were no Commiſſioned Prieſts, although ſome of their Baptiſms were received by thoſe Churches who diſputed againſt the Cyprianiſts upon this Queſtion? If theſe Men were not Laymen, or at leaſt no Prieſts, I deſire to know what more convenient Name to give them, that we may agree upon Terms, and end diſputing about Names and Words to no Purpoſe.

OUR Author's Notion of a Prieſt's being reduced to Lay-Communion, is another Fancy of his own inventing, and no ways anſwerable to the Deſign of the Diſcipline of the primitive Church. For according to him, pag. 110. "Reducing a Prieſt to Lay-Com-"munion, is no more than to oblige him, "whilſt he is ſuſpended from the Execution "of his Prieſtly Power, to receive the Sa-"crament not among the reſt of the Cler-"gy in the moſt Sacred Place, within the "Rails at the Altar, as was the Cuſtom, "but among the Laity in a more inferior, "or leſs honourable Part of the Church." Whereas it ſignifies a great deal more in the ancient Stile and Language of the Church. For it always denotes the diveſting a Prieſt of his Sacerdotal Authority and Commiſſion, and reducing him to the State and Condition of a Layman; whereof the receiving the Communion without the Rails, was but a variable Token or Appendix. Our Author is forced to own, it ſignified thus in the Writings of the Cyprianiſts: When they ſpeak of reducing a Biſhop or Prieſt to Lay-Communion, in them it denotes the making a Prieſt become a Layman, or reducing him to the State and Condition of a Layman. Why then does it not ſignify the ſame in the Writings of Cornelius, when writing to Fabian, Biſhop of Antioch, concerning the Depoſition of Trophimus, one of the three Biſhops that pretended to ordain Novatian, and giving an Account in what Capacity he was received into the Church again, he ſays [b], ἐκοινωνήσαμεν ὡς λαικῷ, we received him to Communion only as a Layman? When Cyprian ſays of this ſame Trophimus [c], Sic tamen admiſſus eſt Trophimus, ut Laicus communicet, non quaſi locum Sacerdotis uſurpet, That Trophimus was admitted into the Church again, but only to communicate as a Layman, not to take upon him the Place or Office of a Prieſt. Here our Author will allow, That to communicate as a Layman, ſignifies the diveſting Trophimus of his Epiſcopal Commiſſion, and reducing him to the State and Order of Laymen. But when Cornelius ſays the very ſame Thing of the ſame Perſon; and all the Canons of the Church ſay the ſame of other Biſhops and Prieſts whom they degraded, and obliged to communicate only as Laymen; then Communicating as Laymen does not ſignifie their being deprived of their Epiſcopal or Sacerdotal Commiſſion, or their being reduced to the Quality and Order of Laymen, but only their being obliged to communicate among Laymen without the Rails of the Altar, whilſt they were ſuſpended from the Execution of their Prieſtly Power. But I have ſaid ſo much to expoſe this vain Notion of Lay-Communion, from the ancient Canons and Writers of the Church, in the Fourth Chapter of the Second Part of my Scholaſtical Hiſtory (of which our Author thought it the moſt prudent Way to take no notice) that I need only refer an Inquiſitive and Ingenuous Reader to that Chapter for the fulleſt Satisfaction, That whenever the Church ſpeaks of reducing a Prieſt to Lay-Communion, it means ſomething more than bare placing him among Laymen, to communicate without the Rails of the Altar; it means degrading him from his Order, and depriving him of Sacerdotal Authority Authority and Commiſſion, and reducing him to the State and Condition of Laymen.

BUT why then, ſays our Author, do I contradict myſelf, and own that they have ſtill the Character of Prieſts, in ſome Sort upon them? If by the Character of Prieſts, he means the Commiſſion, Power and Authority of Prieſts, (which ſeems ever to be his meaning;) then I deny, and have always denied, that there remains any ſuch Character after a Prieſt is degraded, and reduced properly to Lay-Communion: But if by Character he will content himſelf to mean no more than I do, viz. The external Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands, which may ſometimes be ſeparated from Commiſſion, Authority and Power; as it is in Heretical Ordinations, where a formal Impoſition of Hands is given without any Divine Authority and Commiſſion, which Hereticks have no Power to give; and as it is in all degraded Prieſts, when the Church has withdrawn her Commiſſion from them: Then, I ſay, it is no Abſurdity or Contradiction to ſay, The Commiſſion and Authority of a Prieſt may be taken away, whilſt the external Character of Impoſition of Hands remains upon him, ſo far, as that when the Church thinks fit to give him a new Commiſſion and Authority, She does not think it neceſſary to give him a new Impoſition of Hands; which is all I mean by a new Character. And thus much the Cyprianiſts allowed, when they had deprived Heretical or Schiſmatical Prieſts of their Authority and Commiſſion, and reduced them to the State of Laymen: They did not for all that, when they reſtored them to their Sacerdotal Authority, do it by a new Character, that is, a new Impoſition of Hands, but inveſted and re-inſtated them by a new Commiſſion. As appears by the Commiſſion given to Maximus at his Reſtoration, which Cyprian approved of, though he had been a Ring-leader in the Novatian Schiſm, and the principal Author of all the Confuſion. Juſſimus Maximum Presbyterum locum ſuum agnoſcere, was the Form of his Admiſſion; which implies a new Commiſſion indeed, but no new Impoſition of Hands, to reſtore him to the Authority of his Miniſtration. So that the Cyprianiſts, as well as others, made a Diſtinction between the Character and the Commiſſion, and when they withdrew the Commiſſion, left the Character (in the Senſe that I take the Character) ſtill remaining: For they did not reſtore a Degraded and Ex-commiſſioned Prieſt by a new Impoſition of Hands, but only by a new Commiſſion. Our Author will not diſtinguiſh theſe Things, as I do, with the ancient Church, both Cyprianiſts and others; and that is the ground of all this unneceſſary Squabble, and his frequent repeated Charges of Contradictions, with which he ſhould have charged the Practice of the ancient Church, and not my Repreſentation.

OUR Author has one very pleaſant Notion more about Communion and Sacraments, p. 41. which I dare ſay every Reader will readily own to be only a ſplendid Equivocation. I had Occaſion, in Diſcourſing of ſuch Prieſts as are not only degraded, but caſt out of Lay-Communion by the Church, to ſay of theſe Prieſts, That they who have no Right to receive the Sacraments themſelves, have no Authority to give the Sacraments to others, where nothing can be plainer, than that I am ſpeaking of ſuch Prieſts, as are actually turned out of Office and Church-Communion by the Church's Authority and Cenſures. In anſwer to this, he forms his Reply concerning ſuch Prieſts as are wicked Men in themſelves, but yet are in actual Communion with the Church, and are allowed by her to adminiſter the Sacraments, becauſe the Church has paſſed no Cenſure upon them. And then he quotes the Twenty-ſixth Article of the Church of England, as a Proof, that we may uſe the Miniſtry of wicked Men in receiving the Sacraments, although ſuch Men have no Right (in his Opinion) to receive the Sacraments themſelves. Now what is all this, but a ſplendid Equivocation? I am ſpeaking about ſuch wicked Men, as the Church has actually cenſured, and deprived of all Right to receive the Sacraments, as well as adminiſter them, by excommunicating them after ſhe has degraded them: And he proves, That we may uſe the Miniſtry of ſuch wicked Men, as the Church has neither excommunicated nor degraded, but allowed both to continue in Communion, and miniſter in their Office alſo. Such Men indeed, may be unworthy before GOD either to adminiſter the Sacraments or receive them; but ſo long as the Church, for want of taking Cognizance of them, allows them, in Foro externo, both to continue in Communion and their Miniſtry, ſo long they have an external and preſumptive Right, in Facie Eccleſiæ, and before Men, both to miniſter the Sacraments and receive them. But when the Church by her Authority has once deprived them both of their Miniſtry and Communion, then they have no Right either before GOD or Men to miniſter the Sacraments or receive them. And 'tis of theſe only I am ſpeaking, concerning which Sort of wicked Men, the Twenty-ſixth Article of the Church of England has not a Syllable, and therefore is applied by our Author to no Purpoſe, but only by a mere Equivocation to amuſe an unwary Reader. And of this Sort are moſt of the Anſwers our Author has made to the Arguments which I offered to prove, that degraded and excommunicated Prieſts have not any Right to adminiſter the Sacraments, when once they are formally cenſured and diveſted of their Authority by the Diſcipline of the Church.

3. ANOTHER Obſervation I think it proper to make, is, Upon our Author's looſe Notions of the Power and Effect of Church-Laws in annulling uncanonical Ordinations, and particulalry the Ordination of Novatian the Heretick. I had Occaſion to ſay, The Ordination of Novatian, tho' given him by Three Biſhops, was originally Void, becauſe it was given him againſt ſuch Laws of the Church, as declared that the Ordination of Perſons in ſuch Circumſtances, ſhould be Void. Theſe Laws I inſtanced in, were the Laws againſt Simoniacal and Forced Ordinations; The Laws againſt Ordaining without a Regular and Synodical Election; And the Laws againſt Uſurpation and Intruſion into a full See. To all which our Author anſwers in general, p. 47. That theſe were only Circumſtantial Irregularities, not Eſſential. Which is not the Thing in queſtion; but, Whether the Church had not made ſuch Laws, and declared, that ſuch Irregularities, as were manifeſt Tranſgreſſions of thoſe Laws, ſhould not make an Ordination Void, except the Church herſelf for juſt Reaſons, thought fit to grant a Diſpenſation? It matters not whether they are called Eſſential Irregularities, or Circumſtantial, ſo long as they are ſuch Irregularities, as the Church in her Diſcipline declares ſhall make an Ordination Void: For then the Ordination with ſuch Irregularities muſt be Void, unleſs the Church in ſome ſpecial Caſe, or great Exigency (of which ſhe is the proper Judge) thinks fit to diſpenſe with her own Rules, and accept an Ordination, though given contrary to ſuch Preſcriptions. For I conceive, the Difference between an Eſſential and Circumſtantial Irregularity againſt Church Canons, is not always, that the one makes an Ordination Void, and the other not; but rather, that the Church has Power to diſpenſe with the one, and not with the other: But if the Church does not diſpenſe with the Irregularity committed againſt her own Laws, when they declare that an Ordination given in ſuch Circumſtances ſhall be Void, then the Ordination muſt be Void, whether we call the Irregularity Eſſential or Circumſtantial, becauſe it has not the Church's Diſpenſation. Therefore if our Author would have anſwered any thing to the Purpoſe, he ſhould have proved, Either that there were no ſuch Laws then in being, declaring an Ordination given with ſuch Irregularities as Novatian's was, ſhould be Void; or elſe, that the Church had diſpenſed with her own Laws in this particular Caſe, in Favour of Novatian. For this was Matter of Church-Diſcipline, and the Church has Power to make Laws about Ordinations, and declare what ſhall ſtand Good, and what not: And ſhe has alſo Power to diſpenſe with her own Laws upon juſt and proper Occaſions; but every Heretick and Schiſmatick, who is in Rebellion againſt the Church, as Novatian was, has not therefore a Privilege, whether the Church will or no, to challenge a Diſpenſation.

SUPPOSE Novatian was ordained by Three Biſhops, as our Author and I are agreed he was: Is there no more required by the Laws of the Church toward making a true Biſhop, but only to have the Hands of Three Biſhops veſted with the Power of Ordaining, to be laid upon him? What if Three Biſhops ſhould ordain a Man who was never truly baptized; would that make him a true Biſhop? Our Author indeed thinks ſo, becauſe Three Biſhops inveſted with the Power of Ordaining, laid Hands upon him: But the Council of Nice thought otherwiſe, and therefore decreed, That the Paulianiſts, who were ſo ordained Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, ſhould be both rebaptized and reordained, as is undeniable from the Nineteenth Canon of that Council. So that ſomething more was then thought neceſſary, beſide the Hands of Three Biſhops, to make a Man a true Biſhop of the Church. Some Perſonal Qualifications were required, as that he ſhould be a Chriſtian truly baptized, to make him a Subject capable of a true Ordination; elſe by the Rule of that Council, ſuch a formal Ordination was Void. There were many other Rules of the Church, declaring Ordinations given in irregular Ways to be Void, which more nearly affected the Caſe of Novatian. I could eaſily inſtance in Twenty Things of this Kind, but I ſhall keep to the Particulars I before inſtanced in againſt Novatian. One was, That Novatian was ordained by a mere Stranger without a Regular and Synodical Election, which Sort of Ordinations the Church by her Rules declared Void. Our Author therefore ought to have ſhewed, Either that there was no ſuch Rule in the Church, or that Novatian was not ſo ordained, or elſe, that the Church upon ſome weighty Reaſons, thought fit to diſpenſe with his Irregularity, and make a particular Exception to her Rule in his Favour. Inſtead of this, he only tells us, "This did not Null the "Ordination of Novatian; for if it did, then "the Acts of all Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, done irregularly out of the Places "of their own Juriſdiction, will be Null "and Void; and ſo if a Prieſt baptizes out "of his own Pariſh, intruding into another "Man's Diſtrict, without his Leave and Conſent, or without any Neceſſity at all, the "Baptiſm he adminiſters muſt be Null and "Void, if a Biſhop's Act of Ordination be "Null and Void, for his having performed "it Irregularly out of his own Dioceſe and "Juriſdiction." I cannot but pity Readers that muſt be impoſed upon with ſuch Argumentation as this. The Fallacy of it lies in this, That Things of a different Force, are made to be of the ſame Importance. The Church in one Caſe has made a Rule, That Ordinations given in ſuch an Irregular Circumſtance, as I mentioned, ſhall be Void, and ſhe actually declared the Ordination of Novatian tian Void upon this Account. In other Cases she has declared, That Things done in Irregular Circumstances, though they be Criminal, as done against her Rule, yet shall not be Void, but only the Man shall be liable to a Canonical Punishment for his Transgression. Now can a Man rightly conclude, That because an Irregular Act is Void in one Case, where the Church in her Discipline and Wisdom has declared it shall be Void, that therefore all other Irregular Acts shall be Void in other Cases, where the Church has expressly declared they shall not be Void? As it is in the Case of a Priest's administring Baptism out of his own Parish; the Thing is an Irregular Act, but yet the Church has declared it shall stand Good for all that: But in the other Case, of Bishops Ordaining a Bishop out of their own Province, and that in a Schismatical Way, where one was ordained Regularly before, the Church has declared, That such an Irregular Ordination shall be Void. Therefore these are not parallel Cases, because the Church herself has made an express Difference between them. I dispute not whether the Irregularity of such an Ordination be Essential or Circumstantial: It is sufficient to my Purpose, that the Church declares it to be such an Irregularity as shall make an Ordination Void. Nor is it material to say, That the Church sometimes admitted of such Ordinations, and did not actually Void them: For that only argues, That the Church has Power to dispense with her own Rules, and shew Favour where she thinks it proper. But then it must be shewed, That the Church did dispense with her Rule in this particular Case of Novatian, and actually shewed him this Favour, by owning him as a Bishop of the Catholick Church, notwithstanding his Irregular Ordination, which is the Thing I affirm she never did during his whole Life, but always rejected him as no Bishop, notwithstanding he had Three Bishops to lay Hands upon him, and give him a pretended Ordination.

THE second Thing I urged against the Ordination of Novatian, was, That it was a Simoniacal and Forced Ordination, which Sort of Ordinations the Rules of the Church always directed to be declared Void. Our Author says nothing to the Charge of Simoniacal Ordination, as knowing full well, what the Decrees of the Church have ever been in this Case. But he makes a long Harangue about Personal Iniquities in Ordainers, such as Drunkenness, and being drawn to give Orders by Compulsion, which he thinks, does not make Void an Ordination. "For then, "where shall we find Valid Orders on the "Face of the Earth, since Ordainers are but "Men, and some of them may have been "grievous Sinners in one Age of the Church or "other, and thereby may have broken the Line "of Succession irreparably, so as never to be "made whole again. Nay, if Personal Immoralities in those who are Bishops, do "Null their Episcopal Character, and render the Ordinations performed by them "Null and Void, then it will unavoidably "follow, that we have no Valid Orders in "the Church of England; since Orders were "Originally conveyed to our Clergy by the "wicked immoral Bishops of the Church of "Rome." And here again, he trumps up the Twenty-sixth Article of the Church of England, altogether as pertinently as he did before; for he is only fighting with his own Shadow; all he says, is utterly beside the Question, and therefore to no manner of Purpose, but only to amuse his zealous and unwary Readers. For I am not speaking of such Personal Immoralities, or wicked Men, as the Church has taken no Cognizance of or Censured: They whom the Church allows to be in Office, must be presumed to be the Church's Ministers (though they be wicked Men in themselves, and before GOD, and unworthy of their Office) till such Times as the Church has deprived them of their Office, or declared them uncapable by her Discipline and Censures: But my Question is concerning such Personal Immoralities, as the Church has declared shall make an Ordination Void; such as Simoniacal Practices to gain an Ordination, and the like: And concerning such wicked Men as the Church has found guilty of such Practices and Immoralities, and actually censured and deprived them, and declared their Ordination Void for attempting to obtain an Ordination by such Irregular Practices; as She actually did in the Case of Novatian and his Ordainers, the one of which She deprived of their Office, and declared the Ordination of the other to be Void, because obtained by such Irregular Practices. What is this to wicked Men, of whom the Church has taken no Cognizance; or to such Personal Immoralities, upon which She has passed no Censure? A Priest Simoniacally ordained, may pass for a true Priest in the Face of the Church, and before Men, till such Time as the Church has discovered his Crime, and censured him for it by a legal Proof made against him: But if as soon as he is ordained, the Church is acquainted with his Crime, and by her legal Authority declares his Ordination Void immediately upon it; then either that Man is no true Priest, or else the Church has no Authority to declare such an Ordination Void. Now this was the Case of Novatian: The Church had a Law, That Ordinations obtained by such Irregular Practices as Novatian was guilty of, viz. Simony, Force and Fraud, should be declared Void: And this Law was actually put in Execution against Novatian; no Favour or Dispensation was allowed in his Case; he was condemned by the Governors of the Church throughout the World; and not ſo much as one Biſhop, (except perhaps one or two of his Ordainers, who were now themſelves degraded) ever owned him for a Biſhop, or in Token of it wrote Letters communicatory to him, or received Letters communicatory from him. It was not only the Cyprianick Churches that voided the Ordination of Novatian, but the Churches of the whole World; the Cornelians and Stephanians at Rome; the Churches of the Eaſt and Weſt; the Churches that admitted his Baptiſms without Rebaptizing, as well as thoſe that rebaptized his Proſelytes; they all agreed that he was no Biſhop, though they did not agree to reject the Baptiſms that were given by him and his Party, as utterly Null and Void. Which ſhews how fairly our Author repreſents the Matter, when he ſays no Churches voided the Ordination of Novatian, or other Hereticks, who did not alſo make Null and Void all the Acts of their Miniſtration. When it is as plain as the Sun at Noon-Day, that the Roman Church under Cornelius and Stephen, and all the reſt that ſided with them in the Diſpute about Rebaptizing Hereticks, did never rebaptize the Novatians, though they agreed with the Cyprianick Churches that Novatian was no Biſhop, and concurred with them in Cancelling and Voiding his Ordination. Either therefore Novatian was no Biſhop, as having his Ordination declared Void for ſuch Crimes as the Church thought worthy of ſuch a Cenſure; or elſe the Church exceeded her Power in declaring his Ordination Void by ſuch a Rule, as She had neither Power to make, nor put in Execution.

YET our Author will have it, that ſuch a Rule would Void all the Ordinations on the Face of the Earth, and even thoſe of the Church of England. This is hard indeed, that the Church cannot make a Rule that ſhall Void the Ordination of one Immoral Man, but that muſt needs Void the Ordinations of all the World beſide. But this is a Suppoſition that deſtroys itſelf by its own Abſurdity. For we muſt always ſuppoſe a Church in being, and Governors in it, to put Church-Laws in Execution, before they can operate upon Delinquents to Void their Ordinations. If Laws againſt Delinquents did execute themſelves without any farther Examination or Proceſs, then there might be ſome Colour to aſſert, That Laws made to Void the Ordination of Immoral Men, might ſome time or other in a very corrupt State of the Church have endangered the Ordinations of the whole. But Human Laws do not uſe to execute themſelves: Therefore before they can operate effectually upon Delinquents, we muſt ſuppoſe ſome Governors of the Church to put them actually in Execution: And if they do not, there may be Laws to Void the Ordinations of Immoral Men, which yet will not effectually take Place, becauſe they are not put in Execution againſt them. Now there may be many Reaſons aſſigned, why ſuch Laws are not always put in Execution againſt Delinquents. Sometimes a very heinous Crime, ſuch as a Simoniacal Ordination, is tranſacted in private; and then the Church cannot execute the Law againſt Simony upon ſuch Offenders, becauſe the Fact is a Secret, and no legal Proof can be made againſt it. In ſome Caſes again, the Church herſelf thinks fit to diſpenſe with her own Laws, in Times of great Exigency, or to prevent or cure a dangerous Schiſm, and does not proceed againſt Criminals to the utmoſt Height and Rigor of Her Laws, but allows thoſe Ordinations to ſtand good, which in ſtrictneſs She might Void and Cancel. Sometimes again, there is a great want or neglect of Diſcipline in a very corrupt State of the Church; as it was in the Prevalency of the Papacy; and then many great Offenders may eſcape the Laſh of the Laws, becauſe there is not a ſufficient Spirit of Government to put the Laws in Execution againſt them. In all theſe Caſes, the Laws that appoint Irregular Ordinations to be voided, do not take Effect, either becauſe the Church is ignorant of the Fact, or becauſe for juſt and weighty Reaſons She thinks fit to diſpenſe with her own Laws, or becauſe there is a general Neglect or Corruption in thoſe that are at the Helm, and entruſted with the Execution of them. This ſhews, that the Laws, by which the irregular Ordination of Novatian for his Perſonal Immoralities was made Void, can never deſtroy the Ordinations of the whole Church; becauſe that would ſuppoſe the whole Church firſt to put ſuch Laws in Execution upon every individual Member of her own Clerical Body, and the very Judges to agree univerſally to condemn themſelves; which is a Suppoſition that ſufficiently expoſes itſelf at the firſt View, and deſtroys itſelf by its own Abſurdity. There is therefore no Danger either to the Ordinations of the Catholick Church, or the Church of England, as our Author would inſinuate, from the ſecond Reaſon I gave, why the Church voided the Ordination of Novatian, for the irregular Methods he uſed to obtain it.

MY third Reaſon againſt his Ordination, was, That he intruded himſelf into a full See, where Cornelius was Regularly and Divinely placed before him. Which Sort of Ordinations were ſo much againſt the Laws and Rules of Catholick Unity, that the Church had agreed by ancient Laws to pronounce ſuch Ordinations Void; and accordingly this Law was put in Execution againſt Novatian, and his Ordination was declared Void by the Biſhops of the whole World, Unanimouſly and with one Conſent, becauſe of his Uſurpation. This I proved from the undeniable Teſtimony of Cyprian and Cornelius, and many plain plain Laws and Canons of the Church. To which our Author anſwers ſomething pleaſantly, " That the Deſignation of him to " that full See, was indeed a Nullity, with " reſpect to his being Biſhop of Rome; but " the Ordination of him to be a Biſhop was " not therefore a Nullity." As if a Man, who by his Ordination was particularly deſigned to be Biſhop of Rome, might be allowed to be a Biſhop in any other Place of the World, ſave that to which he was particularly deſigned! And this, againſt the expreſs Will and Declaration of the Church too, which always refuted his Ordination, as Vain, Imaginary, and Deluſive! If he were owned to be a true Biſhop, why did none of the Biſhops throughout the World hold Correſpondence with him as a Biſhop at large, though not Biſhop of Rome? Why did Cornelius ſay, His Epiſcopacy was not given him from Heaven, but only taken to himſelf by Fraud and Robbery? If his Ordination were Divine, Why did Cyprian ſay univerſally, That he was no Biſhop? And does not our Author himſelf labour to prove in other Places, That by the ſtrict Diſcipline of the Cyprianick Churches, the Ordinations and Prieſthood of all Schiſmatical and Heretical Dividers and Intruders were made Void and Null? How then comes Cyprian all of a ſudden now to mean only, by the Nullity of this Epiſcopacy of Novatian, that it was a Nullity purely in his Deſignation to that full See of Rome, but no Nullity in the Ordination of him to be a Biſhop? I hope our Author will not go ſo far in Vindication of Novatian, as to ſay, he was no Schiſmatical Intruder. If then it be allowed, that he was a Schiſmatical Intruder; by the Rule of the Cyprianick Churches, our Author himſelf tells us, his Ordination was made Null and Void: And yet here we are told at a Pinch, That the Nullity was not in his Ordination to be a Biſhop, but in his Deſignation to that full See, with reſpect to his being Biſhop of Rome. Ingenious Men never want Diſtinctions to help out at a dead Lift, but they are ſometimes, like other Men, unhappily involved in Contradictions thereby, which ſhould make them ſparing in the Charge of pretended Contradictions upon others. Our Author is certainly in the Right, when he ſays, Cyprian's Rule voided the Ordinations of Schiſmatical Intruders. And is it not according to this Rule then, that Cyprian ſays, Novatian was no Biſhop? That he ſet up an Human Church, inſtead of a Divine? That his new Apoſtles, which he ſent to moſt Cities to maintain the Foundations of his new Inſtitution, were only Falſe Biſhops? Theſe are not the Words of Men who thought that he had his Epiſcopacy by Divine Right, and only his Deſignation by Human Preſumption. No; they went upon another Principle, That a Man who breaks the Unity of the Church is not to be allowed any Eccleſiaſtical Ordination; Nec habeat Eccleſiaſticam Ordinationem, qui Eccleſiæ non tenet Unitatem, are the Words of Cyprian, alledged by me before upon this Occaſion; which methinks they who talk ſo much of the Principles of the Cyprianick Age, ſhould at leaſt have taken Notice of. Now he that gets himſelf Fraudulently and Simoniacally Ordained into a full See, againſt the Conſent of the whole Catholick Church, does certainly break the Unity of the Church; and that not only the Unity of that particular Church, into which he is ſo ordained, but the Unity of the Church Univerſal, which is linked and united to that particular Church by the mutual Union of the whole College of Biſhops one with another, and the common Ties of Catholick Communion. So that he that breaks the Unity of a particular Church, breaks the Unity of the whole; and every Part of the Church Univerſal thinks herſelf concerned to oppoſe ſuch an Adverſary, and aſſiſt that particular Church on which the Aſſault is firſt made, by denying the Enemy the Privilege of Catholick Communion. Now then, if Novatian broke the Unity of the Roman Church by his irregular Intruſion, which is not conteſted; he thereby broke the Unity of the whole: And then, by Cyprian's Rule, that he that breaks the Unity of the Church, cannot have an Eccleſiaſtical Ordination, it follows, that Novatian had no Eccleſiaſtical Ordination either in the Roman Church, or in any Part of the Catholick Church, by the Laws of Catholick Communion. Nor indeed can it be ſhewed, that ever Novatian was owned for a Biſhop ordained by Divine Right, all his Life-time, by any beſide his own Accomplices, in any Part of the Catholick Church: But plain Condemnations of him, as no Biſhop, occur every where in all the Writers that have ſpoken of him.

BUT our Author ſays, " Deſignation to a " particular Place is only a Circumſtance of " Ordination, the Eſſence of which may be " without the Circumſtance of being poſſeſſed " of a Dioceſe." Let this be ſo. For I will not diſpute with him about what is Circumſtantial or Eſſential to an Ordination. My Queſtion is only, Whether the Church had then any Law to declare the Ordination of a Schiſmatical Intruder to be Void, when he uſed unlawful Means to get himſelf ordained into a full See with this Irregular Circumſtance of Intruſion? And whether the Church did not actually put this Law in Execution againſt Novatian, and declare his Ordination Void upon this Account? It is not at all material to ſay in this Caſe, That the Church has ſometimes allowed of Perſons being ordained to the Epiſcopal Function, without being poſſeſſed immediately of any particular Diſtrict; or that ſhe ſometimes allowed of

Two

Two Biſhops in one City, the one by way of Co-Adjutor to the other in Caſe of Infirmity or old-Age, or to put an End to an Inveterate Schiſm: Of which I have given ſome Inſtances in my Origines, as Exceptions to the common Rules in both theſe Caſes, out of which our Author tries to juſtify the Ordination of Novatian, putting him in the Condition of thoſe who are ordained as Co-Adjutors and Co-Partners to another Biſhop in his Dioceſe, or are ordained at large, ἀπολελυμένως, without being bound to any particular Diſtrict. But alas! this little Evaſion will not ſerve the Turn. For every one certainly muſt needs ſee, though I ſhould not inform them, that the Caſe is very different between a Man doing a Thing with the Church's Allowance and Conſent, by way of Diſpenſation with a common Rule; and his doing altogether againſt her Will, by breaking in knowingly and ambitiouſly, upon her common Rules, with the utmoſt Contempt of her Laws and Diſcipline. The Church, as I ſaid before, may diſpenſe with her own Rules as ſhe pleaſes. And therefore if a Man for juſt and weighty Reaſons (of which the Church is Judge) is ordained a Co-Partner or Co-Adjutor to another Biſhop by the Church's Allowance and Conſent, there is no Harm in it; nor will the Church ever proceed Judicially againſt ſuch a Man, to pronounce his Ordination Void; becauſe though it was done againſt the Letter of the common Rule, yet there was nothing of Contempt in it, nor proper Breach of the Law, as being done by juſt Allowance and Diſpenſation. But Novatian's Caſe was quite otherwiſe: He was neither ordained Co-Partner nor Co-Adjutor to Cornelius in the See of Rome: He had neither the Conſent of the legal Biſhop, who required not his Help; nor the Conſent of the Church, who granted him no Diſpenſation: But againſt a known and ſtanding Rule, which forbad any Man to be ordained by way of Intruſion into another Biſhop's See, under Pain of having his Ordination voided, he not only ambitiouſly and Simoniacally got himſelf ſo ordained, but perſiſted in his Obſtinacy and Contempt of the Laws of the Church; for which, not only the Biſhop of Rome with his Suffragan Biſhops put the Law againſt Simoniacal Intruders in Execution againſt him, declaring his Ordination a Void Ordination; but Cyprian and all the Biſhops of the whole Catholick Church joyned with them, and confirmed the Sentence, never acknowledging Novatian for any thing more than a pretended Biſhop; one whoſe Ordination was only Human, not Divine; whoſe Right to Epiſcopacy was a mere Uſurpation againſt the Laws of the Church and the Laws of Heaven.

IT is in vain for our Author now to go about to whiten this Black-a-more, ſet forth in ſuch dark and diſmal Colours by all the Ancients, by offering to compare him with thoſe Co-Partners and Co-Adjutors, which the ancient Church ſometimes allowed; ſince there is ſuch a vaſt Difference between the Church's Allowance, and not Allowance; between her Diſpenſing with a Law, and Condemning a Criminal by a Law, that they cannot bear any Similitude, or be fairly drawn into a Parallel. And if what I have now diſcourſed ſtand good againſt Novatian, our Author will find no Relief for him in the Council of Nice, which is the laſt Effort he makes toward proving his Ordination to be of Divine Right, whilſt he owns the Deſignation to the Dioceſe of Rome, to be a mere Nullity. For if the Ordination of Novatian was Judicially declared Void by the whole Catholick Church in the Age in which he lived, I do not ſee how the Council of Nice could make it Good, Fifty Years after his Death, unleſs it were by bearing ſome direct Teſtimony to the Divine Right of it, and ſo Diſproving all that ever before was ſaid againſt him.

4. LET us therefore examine, What it is the Council of Nice has ſaid in his Favour. The Council ſays nothing of Novatian himſelf, but has ſomething concerning his Followers, which my Opponents take to be a Juſtification of the Divine Right of Novatian's Ordination. They pretend the Council allowed the Novatians to have derived a true Ordination from their Founder, as a true Biſhop; and that the Council allowed the Novatian Clergy to be true Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, inveſted with a Divine Commiſſion and Authority, during their Continuance in their Herely or Schiſm; becauſe ſhe gives them the Name of Clergymen, Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; and allows them the Privilege of abiding or continuing in the ſame Order they were in before. But if this would prove the Novatians to be true Biſhops, Prieſts, &c. then it would equally prove the Samoſatenians or Paulianiſts, to be true Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons: For the ſame Council ſpeaks of them under the ſame Title of Clergymen, who yet were not ſo much as true baptized Laymen: For by an Order of this very Council, they were not only to be reordained, but alſo rebaptized, becauſe their Baptiſm was ſo Faulty as to need Repeating. Which is a certain Argument, they were not allowed to be properly true Chriſtian Prieſts, tho' they are diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Clergymen, ſince they were not in Strictneſs ſo much as Laymen. I know Mr. L—— and Dr. Brett could eaſily get over this Difficulty, by imagining that Men might be made true Prieſts by Ordination, who never were made true Chriſtian Laymen by Baptiſm: But the Council of Nice thought otherwiſe, and I believe they are the firſt Gentlemen that ever entertained the contrary Opinion, that a Man might be ordained a true Prieſt before he was made a Chriſtian ſtian by Baptiſm. Hereticks indeed, who were never baptized, may have the Name of Prieſts, to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe called Laymen in the ſame Sect, but neither are the one true Prieſts, nor the other true Lay-Chriſtians, before they are baptized, whatever Titles or Denominations are given them. The Council of Nice gives the Paulianiſts the Name of Clergymen, but it does not follow, that therefore ſhe believed them to be truly and Authentically Commiſſioned Prieſts of GOD, becauſe they went by this Name in Contradiſtinction to thoſe among them who went by the Name of Laymen. The Canon relating to them, runs in theſe Words: Concerning the Paulianiſts [d] which return to the Catholick Church, it hath been decreed, that they ſhall be Univerſally rebaptized. But if any of thoſe in this Error were in Time paſt of the Clergy, if they be found Blameleſs and Irreprehenſible, then they ſhall be rebaptized and ordained by the Biſhop of the Catholick Church: But if upon Examination they be found unqualified, then it is convenient that they ſhould be depoſed. Here we ſee the Council gives the Paulianiſts the Name of Clergymen as well as the Novatians, and ſays, if they were not Qualified, they ſhould be degraded from their Order. And yet, I ſuppoſe, it will be agreed on all Hands, unleſs perhaps Mr. L. or Dr. Brett think fit to gainſay it, that theſe Paulianiſts, notwithſtanding their being diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Clergymen, were not true authorized Prieſts inveſted with proper Powers to miniſter in Holy Things, becauſe they were yet unbaptized, and both to be rebaptized and reordained, before they could be admitted as Authentical Clergy of the Church. They had indeed a Formal Ordination among them to the Office of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, which they might derive from their Founder, Paulus Samoſatenſis, who was once a true Biſhop of the Catholick Church: But now this Succeſſion of Biſhops and Prieſts among them, was but imaginary and nominal, partly becauſe their firſt Leaders were degraded for their Hereſy, and diveſted of all Sacerdotal Power and Authority; and partly becauſe they gave Ordinations to uncapable Subjects, that is, to Perſons never truly baptized, who were to be both rebaptized and reordained, before they could be allowed to officiate as true Miniſters in the Catholick Church. So that the giving Hereticks the Name of Clergymen, only for Diſtinction's ſake, when applied to ſuch Sects as ſtill kept up a formal Diſtinction between Clergy and Laity among them, is no Argument that the Church eſteemed ſuch nominal Clergy to be truly Authorized Biſhops or Prieſts; for here the Council of Nice affords us a plain Demonſtration to the contrary. And it were eaſy to make out the ſame Obſervation concerning ſeveral other Sects, whoſe pretended Miniſters went by the Name of Clergy, and were called ſometimes Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, when yet in Strictneſs and Propriety they were not ſo much as true Chriſtian Laymen, having never received a true Chriſtian Baptiſm. Particularly the Cataphrygians and Montaniſts, are ſaid to have had Biſhops among them. Sozomen [e] ſays, The Montaniſts in Phrygia had their Biſhops, as well as the Novatians. And St. Jerom [f] ſays, They had not only Biſhops, but an Order called Cenones, above theſe, and an higher Degree of Patriarchs over them. And yet when we come to examine more ſtrictly what theſe Biſhops were, we find, they were not ſo much as Chriſtian Laymen; for they were never truly baptized, but were ſuch as had need to be admitted into the Chriſtian Church by the Door of Baptiſm. And therefore though they were commonly called Biſhops and Clergy; yet they were in Strictneſs, only nominal and ſuppoſed Clergy, as the Council of Laodicea, which ſpeaks more accurately of them, properly ſtyles them, ordering even their Biſhops to be rebaptized. For, ſays the Canon [g], if any return from the Hereſy of thoſe called Phrygians, though they be of their reputed Clergy, though they be of thoſe called Chief, that is, I conceive, Patriarchs among them, they ſhall be firſt Catechized with all Diligence, and then be baptized by the Biſhops and Presbyters of the Church. Nothing can be plainer, than that though theſe Cataphrygians were ſometimes called Biſhops, yet in truth they were only Nominal Biſhops, and placed in the Rank of Simple Catechumens, a Degree below Laymen, by the Biſhops of the Catholick Church, who were obliged to rebaptize them, before they admitted them to the common Privileges of Lay-Communion. The Photinian Biſhops, who derived their pretended Ordination from Photinus Biſhop of Sirmium, were in the ſame Caſe: Though they are ſometimes in common Speech termed Biſhops, yet they were only ſuppoſed Biſhops;

Biſhops: For they, like the Paulianiſts, were to be rebaptized upon their Return to the Church, as appears from the Sixth Canon [b] of the Second Council of Arles made concerning them. The Manichees alſo had their Apoſtles, and Biſhops, and Presbyters, and Deacons, as St. Auſtin [i] informs us. Fortunatus, againſt whom St. Auſtin wrote one of his Books, was a Presbyter among them, and St. Auſtin more than once [k] gives him that Title. Yet theſe Biſhops and Presbyters were in reality no Chriſtians. For among many other monſtrous Errors, for which St. Auſtin [l] calls them only Pſeudo-Chriſtians, they had wholly rejected Chriſtian Baptiſm [m] as the ſame Author aſſures us, and therefore are always reckoned among thoſe Sectaries, which were to be baptized upon their Return to the Catholick Church. Since therefore in all theſe Inſtances, and Forty more that might be added, it is very plain, That when ſuch Hereticks are called Biſhops, or Presbyters, or Clergymen, it cannot be meant that they were Perſons truly inveſted with Sacerdotal Power and Authority; becauſe, we ſee, theſe Names were ſometimes given, in Compliance with the Characters of Diſtinction that Men aſſumed to themſelves, even to unbaptized Perſons, and ſuch as had no Right in Strictneſs to be called Chriſtians: I think it reaſonable to conclude, That when the Council of Nice calls ſome of the Novatians Clergymen, it does not mean, that they were ſo of Right, but only gives them the Name by which they were vulgarly diſtinguiſhed from ſuch others of their Sect, who went by the Name of Laymen.

BUT how then ſhall we account for that other Expreſſion of the Council, which orders theſe Novatians μένειν ἐν τῷ κλήρῳ, to remain or continue in the Clergy? This our Author thinks, implies that they were in the Clergy of Right before; otherwiſe, to decree that they ſhould continue in the Clergy, would have been ridiculous, ſince no Man can be ſaid to continue in that, which he never was in before. Now I expounded this, by being Received or Allowed to continue Authoritatively among the Catholick Clergy, in the ſame Orders which they had pretendly before. Upon which our Author enters into a Learned Diſquiſition, Whether it was out of Ignorance or Knaviſhneſs, that I expounded the Word, μένειν, by being, Received? To which I Anſwer, That if our Author's Knowledge or Charity had been as great as he pretends, he would have known, or at leaſt charitably imagined, that I had ſome other Author beſide my own Brain for Expounding the Word, μένειν, Received. For indeed, I expounded it juſt with the ſame Ignorance or Knaviſhneſs, as ſome of the Ancients had done before me. Particularly Innocent Biſhop of Rome, who was Cotemporary with St. Auſtin, having Occaſion to conſider this very Canon, expounds it in the ſame manner as I did. Firſt he gives a Verbal Tranſlation [n] of the Canon, which I alſo did, and there both he and I agree to tranſlate μένειν, Let them remain in the Clergy. Afterward he proceeds to expound the Senſe of the Word, and then it is, Let them be Received; if the Latin Word, Recipi, which I hope our Author, as much as he is given to Contradiction, will grant me, do but ſignify to be Received, in Engliſh. The Words of the Canon, according to Innocent's Tranſlation, are theſe: Concerning thoſe, who call themſelves Cathari, that is, Puritans, and ſometimes come over to the Catholick Church, it hath pleaſed the great and holy Synod, that when they have received Impoſition of Hands, they ſhall ſo remain in the Clergy. Then he gives his Expoſition of the Canon in the following Words: But we may ſay, that this Order was made for the Novatians only, and did not appertain to the Clergy of other Hereſies. For if they had defined ſo concerning all others, they would have added, That they who return from the Novatians and other Hereticks, ſhall be Received into their own Order. Where we may obſerve, 1. That to Remain in the Clergy, and to be Received into their own Order, is the ſame Thing. 2. That they were to have Impoſition of Hands, and ſo be received into the Clergy of the Catholick Church. 3. That all other Hereticks had their Clerici, or Clergy, as well as the Novatians. And yet, 4. That this was a peculiar Privilege granted to the Novatian Clergy, and not to the Clergy of other Hereticks. It remains therefore to be enquired, What that that Privilege is, which was allowed to the Novatian Clergy, and denied to the Clergy of other Hereticks. Our Author thinks it was, That the Council allowed the Novatian Clergy to be true Authorized Clergy, whilſt they continued in Hereſy or Schiſm, before they came over to the Catholick Church. Whereas the Council ſays nothing of this; but for as much as there had been an ancient and general Rule in the Church, That no Heretical Clergy ſhould be allowed to bear the ſame Office in the Church, which they had born before among Hereticks, this Rule ſhould be diſpenſed with in Favour of the Novatians, and they by an Act of Grace ſhould be allowed to continue in the ſame Order or Office that they acted in before among Hereticks. This is not to juſtify the Novatian Ordinations, much leſs thoſe of all other Hereticks, who could lay a much fairer Pretence to Epiſcopal Ordination than the Novatians could; but only to grant the Novatians a peculiar Privilege of being admitted to ſerve in the Clerical Office of the Church, which by the general Diſcipline of thoſe Days other Hereticks were denied. The Reaſon of admitting the Novatians, was not that the Novatians had better Ordinations than ſome others that were refuſed; but becauſe the Council was minded to ſhew a particular Favour to the Novatian Clergy, which other Heretical Clergy ſhould not lay claim to. That is, to continue in the Clerical Office by a particular Diſpenſation, while others by the general Rule of the Church were utterly diſcarded. And yet, even this Privilege was not allowed the Novatians in all Places, after the Council of Nice. For at Rome they never admitted any Heretical Clergy to any Clerical Dignity whatſoever in the Church. Which we learn from this ſame Epiſtle [o] of Pope Innocent, which ſays, It was the Law of the Roman Church to give Lay-Communion only, to ſuch as were baptized by Hereticks, when they came over to the Church, but not to admit any one of them to the leaſt Honour of a Clerical Office in the Church. So that whatſoever Ordination the Novatians pretended to, they were not allowed to remain or continue in the Clergy of the Roman Church. Nor were they admitted in other Churches, as being true Authorized Prieſts before in their Hereſy or Schiſm, but were allowed the Favour of a new Commiſſion, to continue them in that Station, which without any Right or Authority they had only uſurped before. And this was a Privilege, which the Council did not grant to all Heretical Clergy; but only to the Novatians and Paulianiſts, upon reſpective Injunctions; obliging the one to have a new Commiſſion, if not a new formal Ordination; and the other to have not only a new Ordination, but alſo a new Baptiſm; becauſe though the Paulianiſts could pretend a better Title to an Epiſcopal Ordination than the Novatians could, yet they were never truly baptized, and therefore were not only to be reordained, but to be rebaptized, before they could be allowed to continue or remain in the Clergy of the Catholick Church.

BUT our Author thinks it were ridiculous in the Council to decree, That they ſhould continue in the Clergy, if they were not in the Clergy before. I own, in Strictneſs, it is not the moſt proper Way of ſpeaking, to prevent a Critical Wrangler from raiſing Diſputes upon it; but yet it is a very common and uſual Way of ſpeaking, almoſt upon all Occaſions: As when we ſay, Men are to be rebaptized or reordained; This, in Strictneſs, would ſignify, that they had been once baptized, or once ordained truly before, otherwiſe, to a nice Critick, it would be ridiculous to ſay, a Man ſhould be rebaptized, who was never baptized before; or reordained, who was never ordained before: And yet this is that ridiculous improper Way of ſpeaking the Church has commonly uſed about theſe Matters. So in like manner, when the Council of Nice ſays, The Novatian Clergy ſhall remain in the Clergy of the Church, our Author may call it ridiculous, if he pleaſes; but wiſer Men will ſtill underſtand it to mean, That they were to be made true Clergymen by the Authority of the Church, who were only Clergymen in Pretence before; as he is ſaid to be rebaptized, who was never truly baptized, but only in Pretence before. But none can better expound the Senſe of the Nicene Council than the Council itſelf, which, in a Parallel Caſe concerning the Paulianiſt Clergy, uſes a Way of ſpeaking, that, according to our Author's Criticks, will be as ridiculous. For in the 19*th* Canon it ſays, the Paulianiſt Clergy, if they were found unworthy, ſhould be degraded. But now a ſharp Critick would ask, How could it be ſaid, without Nonſence, that they were Clergymen, who were never truly baptized or ordained? Or, how could they be ſaid to be degraded from their Clerical Order or Degree, who were never truly in any Order or Degree of the Clergy? As it is plain enough theſe Paulianiſts never were in the Opinion of that Council; and yet it makes no Scruple to ſay, theſe Clergymen ſhould be degraded. What can be the Meaning of this, in the Judgment of any candid [o] Innoc. Ep. 22. cap. 4. Noſtræ Lex Eccleſiæ eſt, venientibus ab Hæreticis, qui tamen illic baptizati ſunt, pe manus Impoſitionem Laicam tantum tribuere Communionem, nec ex his aliquem, in Clericatus honorem vel exiguum ſubrogare.

Reader, but only, that the Council, in a vulgar and large Senſe, calls them by the common Name of Clergymen, becauſe they had ſome Pretence to the Clerical Order by a formal, but fictitious Ordination? And ſays, they ſhould be degraded or depoſed from their Order (which yet they never truly had) becauſe they made ſome Pretence to an Order, which the Church would not allow them to have received Authentically before? The Arabick Tranſlation of this Canon, both according to the Verſion of Turrianus and Abraham Echellenſis, makes this Matter ſomething plainer. I will ſet it down in their own Words. The 17*th* Canon, according to the Verſion of Turrianus, Conc. Tom. 2. p. 296. runs thus: Si quis ex Hæreſi Pauli Samoſatenſis convertatur ad fidem Eccleſiæ, debet iterum baptizari: & in quocunque Gradu Eccleſiaſtico antea fuerit, ſi convertatur dignè, & cum humilitate, & ejus vita anteacta reprehendi non poſſit, ſed laudari potius; reſtituendus eſt in Gradum ſuum, & imponendæ ei manus, ut imponi ſolent ei cui nunquam antea impoſitæ fuerunt, cum benedictione Diaconali, id eſt, quæ fit ſuper Miniſtros Eccleſiæ. Sed ſi aliquis eum accuſaverit, & non fuerit dignus Gradu propter malam fidem & prava opera, non eſt ordinandus. The other Tranſlation of Echellenſis has it thus, Can. 18. p. 322. Iterum baptizandus eſt, quicunque revertitur ad fidem Eccleſiæ Apoſtolicæ ex Hæreſi Pauli Samoſateni. Quicunque vero eorum in aliquo extiterit Gradu, *placueritque ejus reverſio, &c. voluerit*que reſtitui in Gradum ſuum, reſtituat illum Epiſcopus, & imponat ei manum, ac benedicat ut benedici ſolet qui nunquam Diaconalem habuit Benedictionem. At ſi reprehenſibilis extiterit, & Gradu illo indignus habeatur ——— nec ſic reſtituatur, nec ad ipſum admittatur Diaconatum. Here we ſee the Paulianiſts are ſaid to be in an Eccleſiaſtical or Clerical Degree, and are to be reſtored to their Clerical Order, if they were worthy of it: But yet they are to be reſtored to it firſt by a new Baptiſm, and then a new Ordination. And if they were unworthy, they were not to be reſtored to it, even by a new Ordination. What means reſtoring them to their Order in this Place, but only allowing them to be reordained? Or what means degrading them, but only not allowing them to take Orders in the Church? And that by a known Figure called Catachreſis. It certainly does not mean, That they were in any true Order or Degree of the Clergy before, but only that they ſhould enjoy no Privilege of Clergymen, either from their former pretended Ordination, or from any real or authentick Ordination by the Church, which is forbidden to be given them, becauſe they were unworthy of it. We ſee what Work a ſevere Critick might make with this common Expreſſion, and call it ridiculous Nonſence, to ſay, A Man may be degraded, who never had any clerical Degree, from which he might be degraded; ſince, according to our Author's nice Way of Expoſition, no Man can be ſaid to continue in that, or be reſtored to that, or be degraded from that, which he never was in before. And yet thus the Council of Nice expreſſed itſelf in theſe two Parallel Caſes, which a candid Reader may eaſily underſtand; but a Critick will torture them to a very untoward Senſe, if he comes to handle them with any Deſign to ſerve a Purpoſe.

I KNOW not what Impreſſion this Account may have upon our Author; but I believe it will ſatisfy all indifferent Judges, that the Council of Nice in calling the Novatians by the common Name of Clergy, or appointing them to remain in the Clergy, did not intend to reverſe the Judgment of the whole Catholick Church before, which had declared Novatian to be no true Biſhop, and his Followers no true Prieſts; but only gave them the Names by which they were commonly diſtinguiſhed in their own Sect, and allowed them the Privilege of being made Catholick Prieſts by the Church's Authority and Commiſſion; which was a Privilege not commonly granted in thoſe Times, when the Strictneſs of Diſcipline wholly excluded Hereticks from ever attempting to be admitted into the Dignity of any Clerical Order, even after their Return to the Catholick Church.

IF it were otherwiſe, how could St Ambroſe have ſaid, after the Council of Nice, That the Novatians were no true Prieſts, nor could lay any Claim to Sacerdotal Power? If the Council of Nice had declared Novatian to be a true Biſhop, and the reſt that were ordained by Succeſſion from him in their Hereſy, to be true Biſhops and Prieſts; how ſhould it enter into the Head of St. Ambroſe to contradict the Council in ſo plain a Caſe and be peremptory in his Sentence againſt them, when the Council had declared ſo much in Favour of their Prieſtood? Or why ſhould Pacianus in his Diſputes with the Novatians, after the Council alſo, charge them as being no Prieſts, and Novatian himſelf as no Biſhop, if the Council had declared in Favour of their Prieſthood? Is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe, either that theſe Men were ignorant of what the Council had determined, or that they would ſet up their own Opinion in Oppoſition to the Council's Determination? How eaſy had it been for the Novatians to have replied upon them, that their Prieſthood was allowed by the Council of Nice; which was then the greateſt Authority in the Catholick Church?

IF the Opinion of modern Authors ſignifies any thing in this Cauſe, I might add the Judgment of Dr. Maurice [a], and Du Pin [b], who have declared their Sentiments about Novatian, that he never was a true Biſhop. For they rightly obſerve, that the firſt Biſhop who ever broached an Hereſy in the Church, was Paulus Samoſatenſis, Biſhop of Antioch, An. 267. There were Forty-four Chriſtian Hereſies before this, but never a Biſhop among them. Novatian was the Founder of one of theſe Sects, but Dr. Maurice denies that ever he was a Biſhop, or any thing more than a Roman Prieſt. And ſays, the firſt Heretick Biſhop that we find is Paulus Samoſatenſis, who ſucceeded Demetrian in the Biſhoprick of Antioch in the Year 262, and who fell into Hereſy in the Year 267, which was at leaſt 26 Years after Novatian had ſet up his Hereſy in the Church. Now how can this Obſervation ſtand good, if Novatian had been an Heretick Biſhop ſo many Years before? There had at leaſt been one Heretick Biſhop before Paulus Samoſatenſis, which yet theſe Learned Men poſitively deny.

AND what ſhall we ſay of all thoſe other Forty-three Hereſies, that had never a Biſhop among them. What Sort of Succeſſion of Prieſts had they to adminiſter Baptiſm to their Converts? Shall we ſay, They had true Prieſts, who had no Biſhops? Or, ſhall we ſay, their falſe Prieſts never baptized any Perſons but ſuch as were rebaptized when they came over to the Catholick Church? This cannot be. For the very Diſpute that was on Foot in Cyprian's Time, between him and Pope Stephen, about Rebaptization, ſhews, That many of thoſe who were baptized by theſe Hereticks, were received into the Catholick Church, by Impoſition of Hands only, without Rebaptizing. For that was the very Thing contended for by Stephen, and the reſt of the Church, againſt the Cyprianiſts, that ſuch as had been baptized in the Name of the TRINITY by thoſe Hereticks, who retained Baptiſm in its due Form, needed not to be rebaptized upon their Return to the Catholick Church. Now then if there were no Biſhops among thoſe Forty-three Hereſies, I would ask, whether there was any Succeſſion of true Prieſts among them? If there were no Prieſts among them; by whom were thoſe Perſons baptized, who were afterward received into the Boſom of the Catholick Church without any new Baptiſm? Not by true Prieſts certainly, ſince it appears they had none, but only in Name and Pretence, which will not give a falſe Prieſt true Authority and Power. So that, for ought I can ſee, not only the Novatian Hereſy, but all the other Forty-three Hereſies, that aroſe in the ſame Compaſs of Time, were deſtitute of Epiſcopacy and Sacerdotal Power. And yet the Church made no Scruple to receive thoſe that were baptized in due Form in thoſe Hereſies, without Rebaptization.

BUT do we not commonly ſay, That all the ancient Hereticks retained the Orders of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; and that the firſt who diſputed about this Diſtinction of Orders, was Aerius in the Middle of the Fourth Century? This is commonly ſaid indeed; but unleſs it be duly qualified, and taken with a little Diſtinction, it will be far from being true. Theſe ancient Hereſies were not begun by Biſhops, nor had they any real or true Biſhops among them. Some of them had Presbyters, and others only Laymen for their Founders: But they all aped the Diſcipline of the Church, and created to themſelves nominal and fictitious Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons; that they might ſeem to have the Face of a Church, by keeping up the ſeveral Orders of the Clergy among them. Thus, as I have ſhewed before, the Montaniſts had not only their Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons; but their Cenons, and their Patriarchs, or Chiefs, above theſe. And the Manichees had their Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, and their Maſters and Apoſtles, above the reſt. And ſo probably all the other Forty-three Hereſies might imitate the Church in obſerving theſe Diſtinctions of Orders among their pretended Clergy. And ſo this Matter never came to be diſputed. But ſtill among all theſe called Biſhops, there was not one true Biſhop, that could legally derive his Authority and Power from any other Founder than ſuch as were Founders of the ſeveral Hereſies, which were either Presbyters or Laymen. Therefore though there were thoſe who had the Name of Biſhops, Presbyters, and Deacons among them, yet we ſee they were only nominal, fictitious and titular, they were created by an incompetent Power, and ſo were faulty in their firſt Original. So that it was not theſe Three real Orders of Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons; but only the Face and Name of theſe Orders, that they kept up among them. And yet there is nothing more certain, than that many Perſons, who were baptized by theſe Hereticks who had no real Prieſts among them, were, upon their Return to the Church, received without Rebaptization. Some of the Hereticks indeed had wholly rejected Water-Baptiſm; and others had changed or corrupted the Form of it; and all ſuch were rebaptized: But the reſt, who retained both the Matter and Form, were admitted without repeating their Baptiſm, though there were no real, but only feigned and nominal Prieſts among among them, to adminiſter it. Which is a farther Demonſtration, that the Novatians were not the only Hereticks that wanted a true Epiſcopal Ordination; nor the only Perſons whoſe Baptiſm was admitted, though adminiſtred by Men who had no real Title to the Authority and Rights of the Chriſtian Prieſthood.

BUT our Author ſays frequently, That if the Novatians were not truly ordained Biſhops and Prieſts, then the Council of Nice admitted them to be Prieſts, who had no more than a Lay-Ordination. To which I muſt reply, as I did before, That they had now the Church's Authoritative Commiſſion, which they wanted before; and that, upon our Author's own Principles, is ſufficient to diſtinguiſh a Prieſt from a Layman. For, he ſays, If a Layman have the Biſhop's Commiſſion to baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity, he is ſo far made a Prieſt by his Commiſſion. Since therefore the Council of Nice gave the Novatians at leaſt a new Commiſſion and Authority, which they had not before, ſhe cannot be ſaid to admit them to be Prieſts, who had only a Lay-Ordination. For the Commiſſion which ſhe gave them was a true Epiſcopal Commiſſion, which our Author owns to be the ſubſtantial Part of an Ordination, and which Biſhops ſometimes give without the external Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands, as in the Caſe of Commiſſioning Laymen to baptize in one particular Caſe, which, according to our Author, ſo far makes them Prieſts, without the Solemnity of laying Hands upon them. And I believe there want not Inſtances of Mens being appointed to Preach publickly in the Church (which I think is one Part of the Sacred Function, which private Men without Authority may not take to themſelves) without any other Deſignation than the Biſhop's Commiſſion by Patent, or Word of Mouth, both in the ancient Church, and the Church of England. Since therefore the Novatians had an Authentick Commiſſion from the Council, they cannot be ſaid to be made Prieſts merely by a Lay-Ordination, though it were demonſtrated that the Impoſition of Hands, commanded by the Canon, does not relate to a new Ordination. And yet I know not who can demonſtrate that it was not a new Ordination. For ſome ancient Verſions of the Canon call it ſo. In the Tomes of the Councils there are Two ancient Verſions, one of which calls it ſimply Impoſition of Hands; but the other expreſsly ſtyles it Ordination, ſaying, If any are minded to come over from the Novatians to the Catholick Church, it pleaſes the holy Synod, that they ſhall be ordained [r], and ſo remain among the Clergy. And Gratian cites a like Verſion in his Decree [s], from whence he concludes, That the Council appointed the Novatians to be ordained upon their Return to the Church. And this, he ſays, was only by way of Diſpenſation. For by the ancient and general Rule of the Church, no Hereticks were to be promoted to any Clerical Order whatſoever, but were to remain in the Quality of Private Men or Laymen in the Church all their Days. But the Council diſpenſed with this general Rule, and made a particular Exception to it in Favour of the Novatians, to encourage their more ſpeedy and general return to the Catholick Church, that they ſhould have the Privilege of being ordained, and ſo of remaining among the Catholick Clergy, which by the Strictneſs of former Diſcipline was denied to all Hereticks, except any after the ſame manner could plead the Church's Favour and Diſpenſation. Ruffin likewiſe in his ancient Tranſlation of this Canon, interprets their [t] remaining among the Clergy after Impoſition of Hands, ſo as to mean, their being received in their Order only by a new Ordination. Where we may obſerve alſo, That according to Ruffin, a Man may be called a Clerk, though he has no juſt Title, but only a Pretence to real Orders; and with good Senſe be ſaid, from that Pretence, to be received in his Order, or remain in his Order (which in Ruffin's Opinion is the ſame Thing) even when he wants a new Ordination to make him a real and true Authorized Clerk. Though our Author, becauſe I ſay this, is pleaſed to ſend me to the School-Boys for Correction, who himſelf, if he had conſulted Eccleſiaſtical Writings, more than the Dictionaries and School-Boys he refers me to, had better underſtood the Language of the Church. Or, if he had but conſulted Morinus [u], he would have directed him to Theophilus, Biſhop of Alexandria, and the Sixth Council of Carthage, and ſome other ancient Writers, who underſtood the Nicene-Canon as appointing the Novatian Clergy to be received by a new Ordination. And Morinus himſelf is clearly of this Opinion. And I ſhall freely own, That though I once thought otherwiſe, yet now from the Force of ſo many ancient Teſtimonies concurring in this Senſe, I think it more probable, that it means a new a new Ordination. I am not ſo ſtiff to any Opinion advanced in my Origines, but that I can eaſily depart from it upon better Conviction. Though if our Author could demonſtrate certainly, that it does not mean a new Ordination, that would not juſtify the Ordination of Novatian condemned ſo many Years before by the whole Catholick Church, whoſe Sentence was never reverſed by any competent Authority in his Favour. The Church might admit the Novatians in after-Ages by a new Commiſſion, which is the eſſential Part of an Ordination, though ſhe did not repeat the external Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands, as what had been Formally given them before, but without competent Authority to inveſt them with a Spiritual and Divine Commiſſion, which was not ordinarily to be had but from the allowed Governors of the Church.

So that upon the whole Matter, there is nothing appears to juſtify the Ordination of Novatian, or to prove him to be a real Biſhop. The Church Univerſal in his own Time agreed in declaring his Ordination Void: This was done as well by that Part of the Church, which received the Baptiſms adminiſtred by his Emiſſaries, as that Part which utterly rejected them: The Council of Nice did nothing to reverſe this Sentence pronounced againſt him, but only diſpenſed with the Rigour of an ancient Eccleſiaſtical Law in Favour of his Succeſſors; that whereas the Law forbad any Hereticks to be admitted to Clerical Promotion in the Church, the Severity of this Sentence ſhould not affect ſuch of the Novatian Clergy as would return to the Church: They ſhould now have the Church's real Commiſſion, who had only a pretended Commiſſion before. Or, if we ſuppoſe, with ſo many of the Ancients as have interpreted this Canon, that the Impoſition of Hands with which they were to be received, was ſuch an Impoſition of Hands as was given in Ordination, then the Matter is ſtill more clear, that the Council of Nice was no Favourer of the pretended Ordination of Novatian, and yet admitted the Baptiſms given by his Succeſſors, who could lay no Claim to any juſt Authority or Commiſſion from the Church. The Reader may add to this thoſe Forty Hereſies which were before Novatian, none of which had any real Epiſcopal Ordination, but only in Name and Pretence, among them: And yet all Churches, except thoſe of the Cyprianick Way, received their Baptiſms, if given in due Form, without Rebaptization. Let our Author, who with ſuch an Air of Vanity and Self-conceit, deſpiſes all his Adverſaries, and pretends ſo magiſterially to correct all their Errors in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, try how many real Biſhops he can find among thoſe Forty Hereſies (for Nominal Ones there were enough) to give Authoritative Baptiſm to their Proſelytes; and then perhaps we may admire his Skill in Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, when he has done a Work that none could do before him; and he may be allowed with a better Grace to ſay, The Church never received the Baptiſms of any but ſuch as were true Biſhops, or thoſe Commiſſioned by them. Till he has done this, and better aſſerted the Cauſe of Novatian, it will ſtill ſtand good againſt him, That the Church received the Baptiſms of many who never had any real Epiſcopal Ordination, which is the Thing I undertook to ſhew againſt him.

As to my own Conceſſions formerly made in Favour of the Epiſcopacy of the Novatians, or the Meletians or Arians after their Formal Depoſition by the Church, I readily conſent to The Correction of them in my Origines, upon better Conſideration and Enquiry into the exact Diſcipline of the ancient Church. I never thought my Origines without Miſtakes, and hope to find Time, when I have finiſhed them, carefully to review them; and then I ſhall not be aſhamed with St. Auſtin, to write my Retractations, or with Bellarmin, my Recognitions, though the Faults our Author finds in them, are not the Things that need Correction.

I HAVE only Two Things more to note, of leſſer Moment in this Diſpute; One with relation to my Honoured Patron and Dioceſan, the Lord Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the other in relation to the Reverend and Learned Dr. Hickes. Our Author, Pag. 6. of his Preface, charges me for aſſerting without Proof; nay, contrary to Experience, that all the Biſhops of both Provinces were unanimouſly of this Opinion, That there were other Ways of ſupplying a faulty Baptiſm, than by Rebaptization, if given in due Form by a Layman. He ſays, I tell my Lord of Wincheſter this, without Proof, and contrary to Experience: Whereas, in truth, it was my Lord of Wincheſter that told me this, and I am only repeating his Words, and telling the World what he was pleaſed to communicate to me by Letter, and order me to publiſh; which is my Proof for what I ſo delivered. Our Author did not think it decent to tell my Lord of Wincheſter, he ſaid a falſe Thing, and therefore he perſuades his Reader to believe, it was a groundleſs Story of my inventing. But he ſays, it is contrary to Experience, witneſs the Caſe of Exeter. What the Caſe of Exeter is, I have no certain Knowledge: But if he means, That my Lord of Exeter is of a contrary Judgment to the reſt of the Biſhops of England; when he is pleaſed to declare himſelf ſo, I, for my Part, ſhall have nothing to ſay againſt it. In the mean mean Time, our Author muſt excuſe me for ſaying what I had juſt Authority to ſay in reference to what I aſſerted.

THE other Thing he charges me with, p. 4. is Indecency and Uncharitableneſs to the Learned Dr. Hickes, for ſaying, I could not but wonder ſo learned and acute a Man ſhould carefully read over his Papers, and never obſerve ſuch an Heap of Blunders. For this, he thinks, I am obliged to ask the Doctor's Pardon openly for the Affront, becauſe the Doctor never read over the Papers in Manuſcript, where theſe Blunders were committed. The Doctor himſelf had ſignified the ſame Thing to me privately by Letter, and left it to me to give him what Satisfaction I thought proper. And I immediately gave him the Satisfaction to acquaint him, I neither ſaid, nor meant, that he had read the Papers in Manuſcript, but I did reaſonably ſuppoſe he had read them after they were printed, which he did not deny, and that was a Year before I made any Remarks upon them, which I thought was Time enough for our Author, if he had been informed, to have rectified them. In anſwer to which I was told, That the Doctor had only read them Curſorily, as Learned Men are uſed to do Books upon Subjects they are well acquainted with. So that the Sum of my Crime, which our Author aggravates as ſuch a great Indecency and Uncharitableneſs, is, That I ſaid, the Doctor had read them Carefully; when it appears to have been a little otherwiſe: Which our Author, who underſtands the Art of ſwelling a Mole-hill into a Mountain, is pleaſed to call a great Tranſgreſſion. And having ſaid this, I now very Friendly take my Leave of our Author and this Subject, declaring once more, as I have frequently done before, That in all that I have ſaid upon this Matter, I intend not to juſtify the Uſurpations of any Men whatſoever, who aſſume to themſelves the Power of Baptizing without a lawful Commiſſion and Authority; but only to aſſert what I take to have been the Diſcipline and Practice of the Catholick Church, and the Church of England, who have Power to determine in their own Diſcipline, upon what Terms, and after what Manner, they will receive Hereticks and Schiſmaticks (baptized in due Form) into their Communion.

The Objections of Diſſenters againſt the Articles, Homilies, Liturgy, and Canons of the Engliſh Church, Conſidered, and Anſwered upon the Principles of the Reformed Church of France.

LORD ARCHBISHOP of Canterbury,

PRIMATE of all England, and METROPOLITAN,

One of Her MAJESTY's Most Honourable PRIVY COUNCIL, &c.

May it pleaſe Your GRACE,

IN regard to the Eminency of Your Office and Station in the CHURCH, which entitles You more than ordinarily to be a Defender of the Preſent CONSTITUTION, and a Patronizer of all Honeſt Endeavours that are uſed to ſupport it; I do with great Submiſſion preſent to Your GRACE this following Diſcourſe; which contains a Modeſt Vindication of the Doctrine, Worſhip, Government and Diſcipline of our CHURCH, from the Chief Objections of Diſſenters, and returns Anſwer to them upon the Principles of the Reformed Church of France. The Argument, I confeſs, is ſomething Singular: There being being few that have trod in the ſame Path before, and none that I know of, who have ſet themſelves purpoſely to examine the French Synods, with any Deſign to juſtify the Church of England thereby. But I hope the Rareneſs of the Argument will be ſo far from being a Prejudice againſt it, that it will excite the Curioſity of thoſe for whoſe Benefit it is intended, to make a new Search into theſe Matters: And when they find ſo exact an Harmony and Agreement betwixt the French and Engliſh Church upon the chief Points controverted, That may perhaps induce them to lay aſide their Prejudices and Miſtakes, and return to their Ancient Communion again, from which (if the French Church may be allowed to be Judge) they have unreaſonably departed. The Buſineſs of Lay-Communion I have not very much inſiſted on, becauſe that Diſpute ſeems to be almoſt at an end: It being confeſſed by Diſſenters themſelves, as well in their Writings as Practice upon ſome Occaſions, that Lay-Communion with the Church of England is not Unlawful. But that which is now chiefly pretended to keep up the preſent Unhappy Separation, is the Difficulty of Clerical Communion; that is, the hard Terms and Conditions which are required of thoſe that are to enter into the MINISTRY: I have therefore more induſtriouſly all along in this Diſcourſe ſet myſelf to examine theſe; and by ſtating Things exactly made it appear, That the Terms of Clerical Communion are not more Difficult in the Engliſh Church than they are in the Reformed Church of France: And that if Diſſenters will allow themſelves to be Determined or Concluded either by the Opinion and Judgment, or the Synodical Rules and Diſcipline of the French Church, they ought to ſubmit to the ſettled Rules and Orders of the Engliſh Church, and put an end to the preſent Separation. The Miſchiefs of Diviſion are ſo apparently Great and Dangerous at this Juncture, that they will authorize any Man to offer an Argument in a Rational and Peaceable Way, that may tend to put a Stop to them. I have done what I could towards this in the preſent Diſcourſe: And therefore as I cannot doubt of Your GRACE's Favourable Acceptance and Approbation of it, ſo I will preſume to hope it may do ſome Service to the CHURCH and Diſſenters together, in Promoting the great Ends of Unity and Peace, which is the only Thing aimed at therein by him, who is

With all due Obſervance,

PREFACE.

THAT which first put me upon Compiling this Work, and furnished me with the principal Part of the Materials for it, was the Perusal of a Book entitled, Synodicon in Gallia Reformata, or, The Acts, Decrees, and Canons of the National Councils of the Reformed Churches in France; published in Two Volumes in Folio, Lond. 1692. by one Mr. John Quick, who stiles himself a Minister of the Gospel; that is, as he elsewhere owns himself to be, a Dissenting Minister among the Presbyterians. I was the more inclined to make a Curious Search into these Synods, because the Title-Page tells us, the whole was collected out of the Original Manuscript Acts of those Synods; being a Work never before extant in any Language; and that therein were contained many excellent Expedients for preventing and healing of Schisms in the Churches, and for re-uniting the dismembered Body of divided Protestants. I considered that there never was greater Occasion for such Expedients, than at this present Juncture, and that if these Synods afforded any such Expedients, they were likely to weigh as much with Dissenters, especially those of the Presbyterian Party, as any other Arguments: Considering, 1st. That they themselves have commonly made their Appeals to the Foreign Churches against the Church of England; blaming her Establishment, and Methods, and Measures of Reformation; and requiring her to be reformed in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, according to the Example of the best Reformed Churches; which are the very Words of the Solemn League and Covenant. 2. That in all Probability they will freely own the French Church to be one of the beſt Reformed Churches, and let her Authority be of ſome Conſideration with them. 3. That the Tranſlator and Publiſher of theſe Synods, being (one of themſelves) a profeſſed Diſſenting Miniſter, cannot by them be ſuſpected to have tranſlated any thing partially in favour of the Church of England. If therefore it could be made appear to them out of theſe very Synods, which are the moſt publick and authentick Rule of the French Church, That the Methods and Meaſures of Reformation in the Church of England, are the ſame that the French Church did take, or would have taken if ſhe could: That our Expedients for preventing and healing Schiſms in the Church, are no other than what are laid down and preſcribed in theſe Synods: That our Articles and Homilies contain no other Doctrine, but what is publickly taught in the Articles and Homilies of the French Church: That the Objections againſt our Liturgy and Rubricks, will hold as well againſt the Liturgy and Publick Offices that are uſed among them: And finally, That our Canons require but the ſame Things, or Things equivalent to what the Canons of theſe Synods enjoin: I ſay, if all this, or but the greateſt Part of it, could be made appear; I was willing to perſuade myſelf, That the Sober and Peaceable Nonconformiſts might be brought to entertain a better Notion of the Engliſh Church, for the Sake of its Agreement with the Reformed Church of France.

Now theſe Synods give us the greateſt Light in this Matter, of any Thing that was ever yet publiſhed; and evidently prove, That the Difference betwixt the French and Engliſh Church, whether in Principles or Practice, is not ſo great as ſome have ſtudiouſly endeavoured to repreſent it. In moſt Things they are agreed: And in ſuch Things wherein the French Church differs from ours, ſhe owns there is no Neceſſity our Church ſhould be tied to follow her Example. For in ſome Things, ſhe freely owns our Church to be more Happy and Perfect than herſelf: And in other Points, wherein they have different Uſages, That our Church's Practice is no more to be condemned than her own; Becauſe every Church has Power in ſuch Things to preſcribe for herſelf, and is not bound to take her Model from the Example of any other. Upon which Ground, the French Church reſolves it to be unlawful to make a Separation from the Church of England, notwithſtanding ſome different Cuſtoms here, which are not to be found in the French Churches; or ſome Cuſtoms among them, which are not uſed among us: For theſe Things are not of that Moment, as to authorize any Man to make a Separation.

If theſe Things were duly and impartially conſidered, upon the Principles of the French Church, they would go a great Way towards Healing our preſent Diviſions, and would ſettle a more laſting Peace among us, than is to be expected from any other Methods; whilſt

Men

Men retain ſuch Notions of Things and wrong Principles, as are deſtructive of Unity and Peace in all Communions. The following Collections will ſhew, That the ſame Perſons who are Nonconformiſts and Diſſenters in England, muſt have been Nonconformiſts in the Church of France, had they lived there, and acted upon the ſame Reaſons and Principles that they do againſt the Church of England. Therefore it muſt be worth their while to conſider what is here ſaid, leſt they act upon ſuch Principles as would oblige them, if directly followed, to ſeparate from all the Churches of the Reformation. The Church of France is by their own Confeſſion one of the beſt Reform'd Churches: And theſe National Synods are the beſt Authority of the Church of France: So that if theſe Synods juſtify the Proceedings of the Church of England, and vindicate her Conſtitution, it muſt be owned by Diſſenters themſelves, that She has one of the beſt Human Authorities on her Side, that any Church can boaſt of: And how far that Conſideration ought to weigh with them, I muſt leave to their own Conſciences to determine.

For my own part, I can ſafely ſay, I have had no other Ends to ſerve in this Diſcourſe, but the Ends of Truth and Peace: I am one of thoſe that are Peaceable and Faithful in Iſrael: I could eaſily be content to ſacrifice any Intereſt of my own, to reunite Diſſenters into One Communion; but I cannot ſacrifice Truth to any Intereſt or Deſign though never ſo Peaceable, without forfeiting the other Part of the Character, of being Faithful alſo. It is required in Stewards, that they be found faithful; and I hope I have anſwered this Character, both in the General Deſign of theſe Collections, and the Particular Uſe and Application of them. I am not ſenſible that I have quoted any one Paſſage wrong, or miſapplied it to a wrong Uſe. In citing the Synods I keep as near as may be to Mr. Quick's Tranſlation; and for the other French Authors I uſe, I quote their Words from the Authors themſelves, and in their Senſe, to the beſt of my Underſtanding. I have alſo purpoſely avoided all Perſonal Reflections in ſpeaking of Adverſaries; and never purſued their Character, but only their Arguments and their Cauſe. The Principal Perſon whom I take Objections from, and anſwer them, upon the Principles and Grounds of the French Church, is Mr. Baxter, in one of his laſt Books, Entituled, Engliſh Nonconformity, as under King Charles II. and King James II. Stated and Argued, 4to. Lond. 1689. where he has ſummed up their Principal Reaſons of their Nonconformity. To theſe I return Anſwers, either from the French Synods, or their moſt Approved Writers, as the Subject requires; and having competently ſatisfied them, if there be any other Objections not here anſwered in this Book, it may be preſumed from the Specimen I have given, that they are capable of Good Anſwers upon the ſame Grounds, and may be the Subject of farther Enquiry, according as Men are diſpoſed to ſeek for Satisfaction.

Mean

MEAN while I heartily pray to GOD to give all Men ſober Thoughts, and ſeaſonable Conſideration, to perceive in Time whither our Diviſions tend; leſt, as King James once told the French Church, the Sparks of Diſſenſion inflame us into ſuch a Schiſm, as will conſume us all. For there is an Enemy that makes his Advantage of theſe our Diviſions, and perhaps ſecretly inſtigates and encourages them, who hates the very Name and Profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion in General.

IF it be ſaid, That it concerns the Church of England to prevent this Danger, as much as the Diſſenters; I freely own it, and ſay, he is no True Churchman, nor True Proteſtant, that will not contribute his Utmoſt Endeavour toward it: But then I cannot think the True Method of preventing our Dangers, is to make ſuch Conceſſions to Diſſenters, as will ſhake and deſtroy the preſent Conſtitution; but to reaſon them into Union upon ſuch Principles as are common to all the Churches of the Reformation: For ſuch Principles are doubtleſs both the moſt proper, and moſt Secure Method of uniting and preſerving us againſt the common Enemy, and conſequently not only the moſt reaſonable, but the moſt ſeaſonable Method alſo: And thoſe are the only Principles I have inſiſted on in this Diſcourſe.

NOW if an Union could once happily be effected upon this Foot, or there were but a fair Proſpect and Tendency towards it, then perhaps it might become the Wiſdom of our Eccleſiaſtical Synods to conſider (when they could do it freely, and without any Danger to the Conſtitution) whether there be any Obſolete Forms, or Expreſſions, or Rubricks, Rules and Canons, which might be more adapted to the preſent State and Circumſtances of the Church. But as this is none of my Concern, ſo I intermeddle not in it, but leave it to the Wiſdom and Diſcretion of our Superiors legally aſſembled, and ſufficiently authorized to proceed upon ſo Important an Affair.

THE CONTENTS.

BOOK I.

Of the General Rules and Expedients for preſerving the Unity and Peace of the Church: Shewing, That the ſame Methods are uſed in the French Church, in order to this end, that are uſed in the Church of England.

CHAP. I.

OF the Uſe and Expediency of Eccleſiaſtical Synods, to preſerve the Unity and Peace of the Church; and of the contrary Principles of Latitudinarians and Independents, condemned by the French Church.

CHAP. II.

Of the Expediency of Uniformity, to preſerve Unity and Peace in the Church; and that it is no leſs required by the Church of France than the Church of England.

CHAP. III.

That Subſcription and Oaths, the Third Expedient for Unity, are rather more required in the French Church, than in the Church of England.

CHAP. IV.

That Subſcription in ſome Points is rather more difficult in the Church of France than in the Church of England.

CHAP. V.

That the French Diſcipline allows not of Nonconforming Miniſters, or Separate Meetings.

CHAP. VI.

That the French Church condemns and cenſures Occaſional Communion as much as the Church of England does; and in one Thing exceeds her, in admitting none to Civil Offices, but ſuch as have Teſtimonials from the Church.

BOOK II.

The Objections againſt the Articles and Homilies of the Church of England, conſidered and anſwered, from the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

That the approved Writers of the French Church allow the Articles of the Church of England as lawful to be ſubſcribed.

CHAP. II.

That the Doctrine of the 3. 4. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19 Articles, is agreeable to the Doctrine of the French Church.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

That the Church's Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, according to the 20th Article, is acknowledged by the French Church.

CHAP. IV.

That to decree Rites and Ceremonies, is no uſurping Dominion over Mens Conſciences, or infringing their Chriſtian Liberty.

CHAP. V.

That to decree Rites and Ceremonies, is not to add to the Word of GOD.

CHAP. VI.

That the French Church does not reject Ceremonies becauſe they are ſignificant, but likes them the better upon that account.

CHAP. VII.

That the French Church makes her Ceremonies as neceſſary as the Church of England does.

CHAP. VIII.

That the French Church does not think the Impoſition of an Uniform Obſervance of the ſame Rites and Ceremonies, to be the Cauſe of Schiſm; nor does ſhe abrogate or diſpence with her Laws, becauſe ſome are offended at them.

CHAP. IX.

That the Doctrine of the 21. 23. and 25 Articles, is agreeable to the Doctrine of the French Church.

CHAP. X.

That the 6th Article, which treats of the Canonical Scripture, is no ways defective.

CHAP. XI.

Exceptions againſt the 35th Article, and Book of Homilies, anſwered.

CHAP. XII.

Objections againſt the Declaration of King Charles I. which commands all Men to take the Articles in the Literal and Grammatical Senſe, anſwered; and the 16. 20. 34 and 37 Articles vindicated from Exceptions made againſt them upon account of the King's Declaration.

CHAP. XIII.

That the 39 Articles are not defective, but as compleat a Confeſſion of Faith as the French Confeſſion.

BOOK III.

The Objections againſt the Liturgy of the Church of England, conſidered and anſwered upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

That the French Church hath a Publick Liturgy, or Form of Prayer, or Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, &c. which all Miniſters are obliged to uſe in their daily Service.

CHAP. II.

That the French Church allows of Communion with the Church of England in her Liturgy, and condemns thoſe that ſeparate from her upon the Account of it.

CHAP. III.

That the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to her Liturgy, &c. as ſtrictly as the Church of England.

CHAP. IV.

That the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to a Tranſlation of the Bible, which ſhe owns has ſome Failures in it.

CHAP. V.

That the French Church does not condemn the Uſe of Apocryphal Books in ſuch Churches where they are publickly read, though ſhe forbids them to be read in her own Church-Aſſemblies.

CHAP. VI.

Of Aſſenting to read Common-Prayer daily, either privately or openly.

CHAP. VII.

Of making the Surplice and other Ornaments neceſſary to Miniſtration: And of Mr. Baxter's great Miſtake about the Ornaments appointed to be uſed in the ſecond Year of the Reign of King Edward VI.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Rules for finding out Eaſter: That ſuppoſing them to contradict one another, yet a Man may honeſtly give his Aſſent and Conſent to uſe the Common-Prayer Book: In like manner, as both the French and Engliſh Churches, and even Diſſenters themſelves, aſſent to uſe Tranſlations of the Bible, which might be more exactly made according to the Original.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Confeſſion and Abſolution in the Liturgy of the Church of England. That Calvin commends both publick and private Abſolution, as uſed in our Church. That he would have brought Publick Abſolution into Uſe in the Church of Geneva, but could not. That both Kneeling and Standing in Divine-Service, are Poſtures in Uſe in the French Church.

CHAP. X.

That the French Church eſteems the Lord's-Prayer a Form of Prayer, and as ſuch frequently uſes it in Divine-Service.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Uſe of the Apoſtolical Creed in the French Church: That it is uſed both in their Ordinary Prayers, and Forms of Baptiſm.

CHAP. XII.

That the French Church approves of the Athanaſian Creed, and requires Aſſent and Conſent unto it, notwithſtanding the pretended Damnatory Clauſes in it.

CHAP. XIII.

That the French Church does not condemn Kneeling at the Reception of the Euchariſt, nor adminiſter it to Perſons Sitting, but requires all Communicants to receive it in a decent Poſture, viz. Standing ſingly before the Communion-Table. That ſhe denies Sitting to be the Poſture in which CHRIST celebrated the Firſt Supper; and thinks every Church is at Liberty to uſe what Poſture ſhe thinks moſt convenient.

CHAP. XIV.

That the French Church thinks it lawful to oblige all Members of the Church to frequent Communion, under Pain of Excommunication.

CHAP. XV.

That the French Church uſes a Form of Words at the Delivery of the Sacrament, and obliges every Communicant ordinarily to receive it only from the Hands of the Miniſter.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Doxology in the Communion-Office, which ſpeaks of Archangels in Heaven; and the Vanity of thoſe who except againſt it.

CHAP. XVII.

That the French Church does not condemn the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm; and that ſhe enjoins ſeveral Things of the like Nature.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the ſaving Regeneration of Infants, that it is a Doctrine of the French Church, as much as the Church of England.

CHAP. XIX.

That the Church of England admits of none to be baptized, but ſuch as are allowed Baptiſm alſo in the French Church.

CHAP. XX.

That the French Church allows and recommends the Uſe of Sponſors or Sureties in Baptiſm: That their Practice is the ſame with that of the Church of England in all Caſes; and in ſome Caſes Sponſors are made neceſſary to the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm alſo.

CHAP. XXI.

That the French Church approves of the Engliſh Way of Confirmation, and exacts ſomething equivalent to it, before ſhe admits any Perſon to the Communion.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the Form of Marriage, Viſitation of the Sick, Communion of the Sick, Burial of the Dead, Thankſgiving after Childbirth, the Office of Comminination, and the Church's Wiſh for the Reſtoration of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

BOOK IV.

The Objections againſt the Canons of the Church of England, conſidered and anſwered by the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

That as ſtrict an Oath of Canonical Obedience is required in the French Church, as in the Church of England. Alſo of Chancellors, &c.

CHAP. II.

Of the Fourth Canon of our Church: That the French Church allows no one to call in Queſtion the Lawfulneſs of any Part of her Liturgy, or

Book of Common-Prayer, and Administration of Sacraments, under Pain of Excommunication.

CHAP. III.

That the French Church censures Impugners of her Articles, and Discipline, and Rites, and Ceremonies, according to the 5th and 6th Canons of the Church of England.

CHAP. IV.

Of the 7th Canon of the Church of England: That the French Church allows of the English Diocesan Episcopacy, and upon some Occasions has expressed a Readiness to embrace the same if she might have it: That she not only thinks it lawful to submit to the Authority and Jurisdiction of Bishops, where they are regularly settled, but condemns those who oppose them, or separate from them, or call them Antichristian.

CHAP. V.

Of the 8th Canon: That the French Church does not impugn our Form of Ordaining Bishops, Priests and Deacons; or say, that they who are consecrated by that Form, are not lawfully made, nor ought to be accounted truly Bishops, Priests, or Deacons; until they have some other Calling: That they allow not the People in France to chuse their own Pastors, nor all Ministers to preach without a Licence, &c.

CHAP. VI.

Of the 9th, 10th, and 11th Canons: That the French Church reckons Schismaticks and their Abettors to be out of the Visible Catholick Church, and denies her Communion to them, till they return and make Satisfaction.

CHAP. VII.

That the French Church observes some Festivals; and allows, even upon Popish Holidays, the same Services to be performed, that are required upon our Festivals by the 13th Canon of our Church: That Festivals were many Years observed at Geneva, and that Calvin had no hand in the Abrogation of them: That Churches at Geneva are still called by the Names of St. Peter and St. Gervaise, &c.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the 18. 21. 24. 25. 26*th Canons: Particularly of Bowing at the Name of* JESUS, required in the 18*th Canon: That it is not condemned by the* French Church: And of the Reason for Bowing at the Name of JESUS, rather than any other.

CHAP. IX.

Of the 27. 28. 29. 30. 36. 38*th Canons: More particularly of the* 38*th Canon, which censures those that revolt after Subscription.*

CHAP. X.

Of the 49*th Canon, which forbids Ministers who are not Licensed Preachers, to expound the Scripture.*

CHAP. XI.

Of the 55*th Canon, which speaks of Prayer before Sermon; and the* 57*th which forbids Persons to go for Baptism and Communion from their own Parish Churches, because their own Minister is not a Preacher.*

CHAP. XII.

Of the 58*th Canon, which treats of the Surplice and Hood. And the* 65*th, which require Ministers to denounce Recusants and other Excommunicate Persons solemnly in the Church every Six Months. Also of the* 68*th Canon about Baptizing and Burying.*

CHAP. XIII.

Of the 72*d Canon, which forbids Ministers to appoint Publick or Private Fasts, or to exorcise Demoniacks, unless they have special Licence from the Bishop: That the same Rule is observed in effect in the* French Church.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Respect paid to National Synods in the French Church, and that it is greater than is required by the 139*th Canon of the Church of* England. Also of the Two last Canons, and Mr. Baxter's Reproach of the Church for the Number of her Canons, because they are 141.

CHAP. XV.

That the French Church allows of Communion with the Lutheran Churches (which are more liable to Exception than the Church of England) upon this Principle, That all Defects and Inconveniences which are not our Sins, are to be born with, rather than we should make a Schism in the Church.

The Conclusion.

Containing a Serious Address to Dissenters, and the Refugees of the French Church, to join in Constant and Full Communion with the Church of England.

That the Reader may more eaſily have Recourſe to the Paſſages alledged in this Work, I will here ſet down a Catalogue of the French National Synods, and ſuch other Authors as I have made uſe of in compiling the following Collections.

BOOK I.

Of the General Rules and Expedients for preſerving the Unity and Peace of the CHURCH; ſhewing, That the ſame Methods are uſed in the French Church, in order to this End, that are uſed in the Church of England.

CHAP. I.

Of the Uſe and Expediency of Eccleſiaſtical Synods, to preſerve the Unity and Peace of the Church, and of the contrary Principles of Latitudinarians and Independents, condemned by the French Church.

WHEN we diſcourſe of the Unity and Peace of the Church in general, there are none, who call themſelves Chriſtians, of any Denomination whatſoever, but will readily acknowledge both themſelves and others to be under an Obligation to preſerve the Unity of the SPIRIT in the Bond of Peace: But when we deſcend to particular Enquiries, about the proper Methods and Expedients to preſerve this Unity; here it is, that Difference ariſes, and Men are unaccountably divided in their Sentiments from one another.

THE

THE Church of England, as appears both from her Conſtitution and Practice, has generally thought the free Uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Synods one good Expedient for preſerving Unity: Another has been the Obligation ariſing either from Royal Injunctions, or Canons, or Acts of Uniformity: A Third, the Obligation of Subſcriptions, and Oaths in ſome certain Caſes: A Fourth, the Cenſuring and Silencing Nonconformiſts, and prohibiting ſeparate Aſſemblies: A Fifth, the Denying Separatiſts, the Privilege of Occaſional Communion: With ſome others of the like Nature.

Now theſe are commonly cried out againſt, as Arbitrary and Tyrannical Proceedings in the Church, by thoſe who are of different Sentiments, or different Intereſts from her; as if theſe Methods were but ſo many Encroachments upon the Rights and Privileges of Engliſhmen, and the ſingular unparalleled Impoſitions of the Church of England. But if we can ſhew, that theſe Methods are not ſo peculiar to the Church of England, but that the very ſame Methods have ever been moſt ſtrictly obſerved and practiced in the Reformed Church of France; then at leaſt the Charge of Singularity will vaniſh, and either the Engliſh Church be juſtified, or the French Church involved in the ſame Accuſations. I will therefore compare the Practice of the two Churches upon theſe Heads in this Book, beginning with the free Uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Synods, which is the firſt Expedient for preſerving Unity.

SOME there are who reſolve all Church-Power into Congregational Aſſemblies, and deny not only the Authority of Synods in determining Controverſies of Faith, but even their Power to decree any thing that concerns external Order and Diſcipline. This I take to be the avowed Doctrine of the Independents. Others ſay, they do not think all Synods ſimply unlawful; but yet it is plain by their ſly Inſinuations, and ſcandalous Reflections on the Practice of the whole Catholick Church, that they intend to ſignify ſo much: For they ſay, "It may reaſonably be doubted, whether ever the Church had ſuch happy Times, as that all the Conditions requiſite in a true Chriſtian Synod, were ever obſerved in any one Synod, except that of the Apoſtles; and conſequently whether Synods have not done more Harm than Good to the Church; as the Hiſtory of all Synods does manifeſtly declare: And that it had been better for the Church if there never had been any Synod called to decide any Controverſies of Faith." So Limborch, [a] and others who follow his Latitudinarian Principles, with no other Deſign but to eſtabliſh their own Errors by enervating and diſgracing that Authority, which of all others was moſt likely to give a Check to them.

MY Buſineſs at preſent is not with this, or any others Foreign Divine; though I could not but take notice of this Paſſage in tranſitu; and perhaps it may provoke ſome abler Hand to examine his Chapter de Synodis, and lay open his fallacious Reaſonings in it. The only Perſons I am concerned with here, are thoſe among our ſelves, who challenge the Church of England of Uſurpation, for uſing her Synodical Power as an Expedient to preſerve her own Peace. Now if this be any Crime, it is much more imputable to the Church of France, who reckon their Synods the main Preſervatives of Union and Concord againſt Hereſies and Schiſms; and expreſly condemn the Principles of Independency, which tend to undermine the Authority of them. Their Book of Diſcipline (which I ſhall ſhew, all Miniſters by their Subſcription and Oath are obliged to obſerve) has this Canon: Cap. 6. Art. 5. "Miniſters ſhall inform their Churches, that our Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies of Colloquies and Synods, whether Provincial or National, are the Bands and Buttreſſes of their Concord and Union againſt Schiſms, Hereſies, and all other Inconveniences; that ſo they may diſcharge their Duty in the Uſe of Means for the continuance and upholding of thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies.

THEIR very Practice proves the Senſe they had of the Uſefulneſs of them. For they had no leſs then Twenty-nine National Synods in leſs than the Space of an Hundred Years; beſides Provincial Synods Yearly in every Province, where Appeals were made, all Cauſes heard, Controverſies decided, Hereſies and Schiſms nipped in the Bud, and neceſſary Rules and Canons made for the Well-being and Government of the Church.

As to the contrary Principles of the Independents, none can expreſs themſelves more zealouſly againſt them, than both their Private Writers and Publick Synods do. Monſieur Daille in his Anſwer to Adam and Cottiby, having Occaſion to ſpeak of them by Name, ſays, "They were a Novel Sect, never heard of before by our Forefathers or us, whoſe Pernicious Maxims ſeveral of our Writers have publickly refuted; being ſuch as would utterly ſubvert the whole Order of our Churches as well as the Kingdoms and Eſtates of the World." Replique à Meſſieurs Adam & Cottiby. Par. 2. c. 21. p. 127.

HE ſays alſo in the Title of the Chapter, "We are reproached for Dethroning Kings, and putting them to Death by Form of Juſtice

[a] Limborch Theol. Chriſt. Lib. 7. cap. 19. n. 4.

" Juſtice: But our Anſwer is, That this is " a mere Calumny of Mr. Cottiby's, who falſly " imputes to us the Action of ſome Factious Perſons in England, wherein we had " no Concern; and who are of a Religion " alſo, which we do not in any wiſe acknowledge.

BY this it is evident, they not only diſavowed thoſe State Principles of the Independents, which led them to put the King to Death by Form of Juſtice, but alſo their Anti-Synodical Principles, which tend to bring Diſorder and Confuſion into the Church.

AND that it was ſo appears yet more evidently from an expreſs Canon of the whole French Church, made againſt the Independents by Name, in the Third Synod of Charenton, 1644, as ſoon as ever the Name began to be known among them. " Upon Report made " by certain Deputies of the Maritime Provinces, that there do arrive unto them from " other Countries, certain Perſons going by " the Name of Independents, and ſo called " for that they teach that every Particular " Church ſhould of Right be governed by " its own Laws, without any Dependency " or Subordination unto any Perſon whatſoever in Eccleſiaſtical Matters; and without being obliged to own or acknowledge " the Authority of Claſſes or Synods in Matters of Diſcipline and Order; and that " they ſettle their Dwellings in this Kingdom: A Thing of great and dangerous " Conſequence, if not in Time carefully prevented. This Aſſembly fearing, leaſt the " Contagion of this Poyſon ſhould diffuſe " itſelf inſenſibly, and bring in with it a " World of Diſorders and Confuſions upon " us; and judging the ſaid Sect of Independentiſm not only prejudicial to the Church " of GOD (becauſe as much as in it lieth, " it doth uſher in Confuſion, and opens a " Door to all kind of Singularities, Irregularities, and Extravagancies; and barreth " the uſe of thoſe Means which would moſt " effectually prevent them) but alſo is moſt " dangerous to the Civil State; For in caſe " it ſhould prevail and gain Ground among " us, it would form as many Religions as " there be Pariſhes and diſtinct particular " Aſſemblies among us: All the Provinces " therefore are enjoined, but more eſpecially thoſe which border upon the Sea, to " be exceeding careful, that this Evil do not " get footing in this Kingdom; that ſo Peace " and Uniformity in Religion and Diſcipline " may be preſerved inviolably, and nothing " may be innovated or changed among us, " which may in any wiſe derogate from that " Duty and Service which we owe to GOD " and the King." Synod of Charenton, 1644. Cap. 12. Art. 9.

CHAP. II.

Uniformity required by the Church of France as well as the Church of England.

IT appears from the foregoing Canon, that among other Reaſons which the Synod aſſigns againſt Independency, this was none of the leaſt conſiderable in their Opinion, That it was likely to divide the Church into ſeveral Sects, and deſtroy that Peace and Uniformity in Religion and Diſcipline, which they think ought to be preſerved in every National Church. And this one Thing were enough to give us their Judgment on this Point, Whether the Governors of a Church may not lawfully exact Uniformity in Divine Worſhip, from all thoſe who are profeſſed Members of it? But beſides this, which is only ſpoken by the by in this Canon againſt Independents, the Synods are very frequent and expreſs in requiring and enjoyning Uniformity both in Miniſter and People in all their Churches.

To this purpoſe we find a Canon in the Synod of Orleance, 1562. cap. 9. Art. 4. " Where" as our Brother, the Miniſter of Varennes, " doth uſually Adminiſter the LORD's Supper " every Month, the Council doth adviſe our " Brother of Mont-mejor, to admoniſh him, " in the Council's Name, to follow the general Practice of our Churches; that ſo there " may be no Diverſity among us, and our " Uniformity may be preſerved." It ſeems they had ſo great a regard for Uniformity, that they thought a ſingular Practice even in a good Thing, viz. Holding Monthly Communions, ought to give way to it: Which is ſomething more than ever the Church of England uſed her Authority to require.

THE Synod of Gap, 1603. Cap. 3. Art. 2. " commands all the Churches to obſerve one " and the ſame Form in Ordination of Paſtors; by which the Perſon to be ordained, " ſhall, during that Action, be humbly on his " Knees, &c."

AND in the Fourth and Fifth Articles of the ſame Chapter, Suſpenſion is threatned to all Preachers, who refuſe to conform themſelves ſelves to the Eſtabliſhed Order about Preaching and Catechiſing.

THE Synod of St. Maixant, 1609, made ſeveral Decrees of the ſame Import. As that Cap. 3. Art. 1. "It being repreſented, That "the different Courſes taken in divers Provinces, about the Choice, Examination, "and Ordination of Miniſters, brought with "it a world of Inconveniencies: This Synod judgeth it exceedingly needful, to eſtabliſh an expreſs Canon, to be obſerved "Exactly, Univerſally, and Uniformly, by "all the Provinces." Accordingly, they made a Canon; which is there recited, and inſerted into the Body of their Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, Cap. 1. Art. 4, and 5. which they are all Sworn to obſerve.

THE ſame Synod appointed a Form of Prayer, to be uſed at Ordination; and adds in the Concluſion of all; "This Canon and "Form ſhall be unanimouſly obſerved by "all the Provinces." Ibid. Cap. 3. Art. 4.

SO again, Cap. 3. Art. 8. Giving Orders about ſeveral other Matters, the Cloſe is, "If any Province act otherwiſe, they are "enjoyned for the future to conform to this "Order."

PARTICULARLY, about the Sacrament of the LORD's-Supper, cap. 6. Art. 14. "That hereafter there may be a General Uniformity in "the Churches of this Kingdom, in the Adminiſtration of the LORD's-Supper; and all "Scruples (by Reaſon of Difference and "Singularity) ariſing in weak, but honeſt "Hearts, uncapable of diſtinguiſhing between "the Subſtance and Circumſtance of the "Sacred Action, may be prevented; all Paſtors are enjoyned to abſtain from any "New or Private Methods of their own; "as of Reading the Words of Inſtitution "between the ordinary long Prayer, and "that appointed particularly for this Sacrament, which ought indeed to be read after: Nor ſhall they uncover the Bread "and Wine, whilſt they Read the Words "of Inſtitution: Nor ſhall they bring the "People up in Ranks unto the Table, there "to ſit or ſtand; but make them come up "one by one unto it: Nor ſhall the Cup "be given by the Faithful one to another; "it being contrary to the expreſs Letter of "a Canon of our Diſcipline, which order-"eth Paſtors to deliver it, &c."

THESE are ſome few of thoſe Canons, which expreſly require Uniformity in the French Churches: But I muſt tranſcribe their whole Doctrine, Diſcipline, Liturgy, and Canons of no leſs then Twenty-nine National Synods, ſhould I produce all that might be alledged under this Head out of them: For every Canon and Conſtitution among them, runs in a Stile of Authority, and requires Submiſſion and Obedience, both in Miniſters and People, to whatever is preſcribed by them; as any one that peruſes them, will eaſily perceive.

CHAP. III.

Subſcription and Oaths required in the French Church, more than in the Church of England.

AS to what concerns the Miniſtry in particular, I have this Thing farther to obſerve, That they are obliged to Conformity and Uniformity, not only by the bare Authority of their Synods and Canons, but alſo by many Perſonal Obligations of Subſcriptions and Oaths, which all Perſons make at their Entrance on the Miniſtry, and frequently repeat in their Synodical Meetings, and on many other Occaſions.

ONE of the Canons of their Book of Diſcipline is this: "Our Confeſſion of Faith "and Church-Diſcipline, ſhall be ſubſcribed "by ſuch as are choſen into the Miniſtry, "both in the Churches in which they are "ordained, and in thoſe unto which they "are ſent." Book of Diſcipline. Cap. 1. Art. 9. & 21.

THE ſame is required by the Canons of their National Synods of Orleance, 1562. Cap. 2. Art. 2. Rochel, 1571. Cap. 3. Art. 5. Privas, 1612. Cap. 4. Art. 2.

IT is exacted alſo of all Regents and Maſters of Schools, by their Book of Diſcipline, Cap. 2. Art. 2. and by the Synod of Alez, 1620, Cap. 5. Art. 11.

As alſo of all Doctors and Profeſſors of Divinity in their Univerſities. See the Diſcipline, Cap. 2. Art. 3. Synod of Niſmes, 1572. Cap. 3. Art. 15. Synod of Gap, 1603. Cap. 3. Art. 7.

ALL Elders and Deacons are obliged to make the ſame Subſcription at their Ordination. Synod of Vertuel, 1567. Cap. 3. Art. 17. Book of Diſcipl. Cap. 3. Art. 1.

AND in ſome Caſes it was required of private Perſons; as appears from a Canon of the Synod of Alez, 1620. Cap. 5. Art. 12. Where the Queſtion being moved, "Whether a Perſon that was never called to the "Office

" Office of an Elder, might warrantably read " the Word of GOD and the Common- " Prayers unto the Church, in the Miniſters " Abſence; eſpecially in leſſer Churches which " have no Conſiſtories, nor any Perſons fit " to read? It was anſwered by the Synod, " That the Conſiſtory had full Liberty to " chuſe any Perſon, whom it conceived meet " to read the Scriptures and Prayers, al- " though he be not in the Elderſhip; pro- " vided he be of ſufficient Years and un- " blameable Life, and that he have ſubſcrib- " ed the Confeſſion of Faith and Church- " Diſcipline.

BUT in their National Synods, the Cuſtom was for the Deputies of the Provinces, not only to ſubſcribe the Confeſſion of Faith and Church-Diſcipline, but alſo to Swear to them. Thus in the Synod of Saumur, 1596. cap. 2. Art. 1. " The Confeſſion of Faith was read, " Approved and Sworn to by all the De- " puties of this preſent Synod. And the " Diſcipline of our Church being read, all " the Deputies approved it, and ſware to " ſee it carefully obſerved, Ibid. Cap. 3.

SO again in the Synod of Gergeau, 1601. Cap. 2. Art. 2. " The Confeſſion of Faith be- " ing read, the Paſtors and Elders did all " unanimouſly proteſt to Live and Die in " the ſaid Confeſſion. And Cap. 3. Art. 50. " the Paſtors and Elders deputed from the " Provinces unto this Aſſembly, have ſworn " and proteſted in the Name of their Pro- " vinces, to cauſe the Diſcipline ordained by " this Synod to be uſed and obſerved to the " utmoſt of their Power."

IN the Second Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 3. " The Confeſſion of Faith of theſe Reform- " ed Churches, in the Kingdom of France, " was read Word by Word from the begin- " ning to the end, and approved in all its " Articles by all the Deputies, as well for " themſelves as for their Provinces that ſent " them; and all of them ſware for themſelves " and Provinces, that they would teach and " preach it; becauſe they believed that it " did perfectly agree with the Word of GOD; " and they would uſe their beſt Endeavour, " that as it had been hitherto, ſo it ſhould " be evermore received and taught in their " Churches and Provinces."

THE like Form of Subſcription and Oath occurs in moſt of the other National Synods. As that of Rochel, 1571. Gap, 1603. St. Maixant, 1609. Tonneins, 1614. Alez, 1620. Charenton, 1623. Caſtres, 1626. Alanſon, 1637. and Loudun, 1659.

I OBSERVE farther, That they not only ſubſcribe the Book of Articles and Diſcipline, but alſo promiſe to approve and ſubmit to the Decrees and Reſolutions of their National Synods, even before they are made. For their Letters of Deputation, which the Provinces give to their Reſpective Deputies, when they ſend them in their Name to repreſent them in a National Synod, do always regularly contain a Clauſe promiſing Approbation and Submiſſion to the Decrees of the Synod. Therefore in the Second Synod of Rochel, 1607. Cap. 1. it being obſerved in reading the Letters of Deputation, that thoſe of certain Provinces wanted that Clauſe, which promiſed Approbation and Submiſſion to the Decrees and Reſolutions of the Synod; they were thereupon admoniſhed in no wiſe for the future to omit it. The like Admonition was given in the Synod of Tonneins, 1614. Cap. 2. And, to cut off all Diſputes that might ariſe about the different Wording this Form of Submiſſion, the Second Synod of Vitre, 1617. Cap. 2. Art. 1. agreed upon a preciſe Form of Words; which they ordered to be inſerted into the Letters of Commiſſion, given to the Deputies of each Province: " We promiſe before GOD to ſubmit ourſelves " to all that ſhall be concluded and deter- " mined in your holy Aſſembly, to obey " and execute it to the utmoſt of our Pow- " er; being perſuaded that GOD will pre- " ſide among you, and lead you by his HO- " LY SPIRIT into all Truth and Equity by " the Rule of his Word, for the Good and " Edification of his Church, &c." And this Form was required and inſiſted on by the next National Synod of Alez, 1620. cap. 1 Art. 16. and never cancelled or revoked by any of the following Synods. Now I believe it can hardly be ſhewed, that ever any ſuch Form of Subſcription, or Oath, was required by the Church of England.

YET theſe were not all the Subſcriptions and Oaths required in the French Church. For, beſides their ſubſcribing their own Liturgy, Confeſſion of Faith, Canons, and Diſcipline; they were alſo obliged to ſubſcribe and Swear to the Decrees of the Synod of Dort, by their Two great National Councils of Alez and Charenton. The Form of the Oath, as it is appointed to be taken by the Synod of Alez, 1620. cap. 12. is in theſe Words. " I, N. N. do Swear and Proteſt, before GOD " and this Holy Aſſembly, that I do receive, " approve, and embrace all the Doctrines " taught and decided by the Synod of Dort, " as perfectly agreeing with the Word of " GOD, and the Confeſſion of our Church- " es. I Swear and Promiſe to perſevere in " the Profeſſion of this Doctrine during my " whole Life, and to defend it to the utmoſt " of my Power; and that I will never, nei- " ther by Preaching, nor Teaching, nor Writ- " ing, depart from it. I declare alſo, that " I condemn the Doctrine of the Arminians, " becauſe it makes GOD's Decrees of Elec- " tion to depend upon the mutable Will of " Man, &c. It reduceth into the Church of " GOD old ejected Pelagianiſm, and is a " Mask and Vizard for Popery to creep in " among us under that Diſguiſe, and ſub- " verteth all Aſſurance of Everlaſting Life.

" And ſo may God help me, and be propiti" ous unto me, as I Swear all this without " any Ambiguity, Equivocation, or Mental
" Reſervation."

The next Synod of Charenton, 1623. cap. 14. Art. 2. enjoined the ſame Oath, only with this Difference; That whereas they were informed by the King's Commiſſioner, that it was a Thing diſpleaſing to him to oblige any of his Subjects to Swear to any Decrees made in the City of Dort, which was a Dependent and Member of a foreign Common-wealth; they ſo ordered the Matter, that the Oath ſhould be turned into a new Form, and taken without any Mention or Reference had to the City or Synod of Dort. Hereupon they drew up a Body of Canons and Decrees in Ninety-three Articles, explaining and confirming the Decrees of Dort; yet not as the Decrees of Dort, but as the Doctrine of the French Church, eſtabliſhed in this preſent Synod, and inviolably to be obſerved by all the Churches and Univerſities of the Kingdom. At the Cloſe of which there is this Form of Subſcription and Oath, taken by all the Deputies then preſent in the Synod. " We Paſtors and Elders, whoſe Names
" are here under-written, Deputies for the " Reformed Churches of France, unto the Na" tional Synod of Charenton, do declare with
" all poſſible Sincerity, the Articles and Ca" nons above-mentioned, to be grounded on
" the Word of God, and agreeable to the " Confeſſion of Faith owned and received " in the Reformed Churches of this King" dom; from which, in the Preſence of God
" we do proteſt, that through his Grace we " will never depart."

In ſucceeding Times, the Buſineſs of Subſcription and Oaths ſtill grew and multiplied. For by an Act of the Third Synod of Charenton, 1645. cap. 10. Art. 8. All Perſons to be ordained, were obliged to ſubſcribe the Confeſſion of Faith, the Liturgy of the Church, and the Canons of Alez, Charenton, and Alenſon, and the Act of that preſent Synod.

If now we enquire, Why all this Caution and Strictneſs was uſed by the French Churches? They themſelves tell us, it was to keep Unity and Peace among them. " That a
" ſtrict Conformity may be upheld among " us, ſays their laſt Synod of Loudun, 1659.
" cap. 10. Art. 25. all Claſſes and Provincial " Synods, when they receive Propoſants in" to the Miniſtry, ſhall not uſe, with reſpect
" to theſe Points, any Particular Forms;
" but oblige them only to Sign and Swear
" to our Confeſſion of Faith and Church-
" Diſcipline, and proteſt with Hands lifted
" up unto Heaven, calling God to witneſs
" upon their Souls, That they do reject all " Errors rejected by the Decrees of thoſe
" National Synods of Alenſon and Charenton,
" about the Doctrine of Predeſtination, and
" Grace, &c."

The Synod of Privas aſſigns the ſame Reaſon for drawing up that ſolemn Oath, which they call the Oath of Union, to be taken by all the Deputies in the National Synod; the Tenour of which is as follows. " We
" whoſe Names are here Subſcribed——know" ing by Experience that nothing is more
" neceſſary to preſerve the Peace and Welfare " of the Church, than an Holy Union and " Conjunction one with another;— We have " in the Name of all our Churches, ſworn,
" and proteſted to remain inſeparably united
" in that Confeſſion of Faith of the Refor" med Churches of this Kingdom, read in " this Synod; Swearing not only in our own
" Name, but alſo in the Reſpective Names
" of all the Churches of our Provinces, that " deputed us unto this Synod, that we will " live and dye in it. As alſo we proteſt in " our own and their Names, to keep invio-
" lably that Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, eſta" bliſhed in the Reformed Churches of this
" Kingdom." Synod of Privas, 1612. cap. 3. Art. 1. See alſo the ſame Oath repeated in the Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 15. Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 2. Art. 6. Synod of Alez 1620. cap. 3.

CHAP. IV.

Subſcription more difficult in the Church of France, than in the Church of England.

If it be ſaid, notwithſtanding all this, that Subſcription in the French Church is not ſo heavy a Burden as it is in the Church of England: The Tryal of this will depend upon the Examination and Compariſon of Particulars, which I have collected and conſidered in the following Books. At preſent I obſerve one Thing, which in a great Meaſure takes off at once the main Force of this Objection, and very much commends the Moderation of the Church of England, That her firſt Reformers and Compilers of her Articles ſeem induſtriouſly to have avoided the Determination of ſome Points, and nicer Explication of others, on purpoſe to make Subſcription eaſy (in Things that do not ſo nearly touch upon the Foundation) to Men of of different Apprehenſions. If we compare the Doctrines of the French and Engliſh Church upon this Head, we ſhall find the Advantage lies on the Side of the Engliſh in this Reſpect, That the French Church in her Articles and Canons requires Subſcription to ſeveral Things which are not required to be Subſcribed in the Church of England.

I WILL inſtance in Two or Three Points, inſtead of many. Firſt, The Doctrine of Juſtification is explained with much greater Nicety in the French Confeſſion, than it is in ours; and with ſuch a Nicety as has occaſioned ſome Diſpute among Learned Men. For whereas the Eleventh Article of our Church ſays of Juſtification, "That we are "accounted Righteous before GOD, only for "the Merit of our Lord and Saviour JESUS "CHRIST, by Faith, and not for our own "Works or Deſervings:" Which contains the Subſtance of the whole Doctrine of Juſtification, and which any Orthodox Chriſtian without any Scruple may ſubſcribe: The Eighteenth of the French Confeſſion goes much farther, and requires Men to believe, That the Obedience of JESUS CHRIST is imputed to them; which Doctrine would not go down with Piſcator and ſome other German Divines, who aſſerted, That Man's Juſtification was only wrought out by CHRIST's Death and Paſſion, and not by his Life and Active Obedience. This occaſioned a long Diſpute betwixt them. The Synod of Gap, 1603. cap. 2. Art. 2. expreſſed "its Deteſtation of their "Errors in particular, who denied the Im"putation of CHRIST's Active and Paſſive "Obedience unto us for Righteouſneſs; and "ordered all Provincial Synods, Claſſes and "Conſiſtories, to have a careful Eye on thoſe "Perſons who were tainted with that Er"ror, whether they were Miniſters or Pri"vate Chriſtians; and by the Authority of "the preſent Synod to ſilence them; and in "Caſe any Miniſters perſiſted ſtubbornly "in their Error, to depoſe them from their "Miniſterial Function." Letters alſo were ſent to Piſcator from the Synod, to deal with him to retract his Opinion: But inſtead of that, he ſent his Anſwer Four Years after to the next Synod of Rochel, wherein he gave them his Arguments and Reaſons for his Doctrine. Hereupon they reinforced the Decree of the Synod of Gap, "ordering all Pa"ſtors in their reſpective Churches wholly "to conform themſelves in their Teaching "to the Doctrine which had been hitherto "taught among them; to wit, That the "whole Obedience of CHRIST both in his "Life and Death, is imputed to us for the "full Remiſſion of Sins, &c." Synod of Rochel, 1607. cap. 2. Art. 4.

AND that no Doctrine contrary to this might be Preached in their Churches, the Synod of Privas, 1612. cap. 4. Art. 2. ordered all Paſtors in actual Service, and all Propoſans who were to be received into the Miniſtry, to ſign this following Article. "I, "whoſe Name is here underwritten, do re"ceive and approve the Contents of the "Confeſſion of Faith of the Reformed "Churches of this Kingdom; and do promiſe "to perſevere in it untill Death. And where"as ſome Perſons contend about the Senſe "of the Eighteenth Article, which treats of "Juſtification; I do declare, and proteſt be"fore GOD, that I underſtand it in the ſame "Senſe in which it is received in our Church"es, approved by our National Synods; "which is, That our Lord JESUS CHRIST "was obedient to the Moral and Ceremo"nial Law, not only for our Good, but al"ſo in our Stead; and that his whole Obe"dience, yielded by him thereunto, is im"puted to us; and that our Juſtification "conſiſts not only in the Forgiveneſs of Sins, "but alſo in the Imputation of his Active "Righteouſneſs. —— I do alſo promiſe, "that I will never depart from the Doc"trine received in our Churches; and "that I will yield all Obedience to the "Canons of our National Synods in this "Matter.

BY this time the Rumor of this Controverſy was ſpread abroad in all Proteſtant Countries, and the Fame of it here in England coming to the Ears of King James, he took upon him to be Mediator betwixt the French and German Churches; ſending his Letters by Mr. Hume to the next National Synod of France, held at Tonneins, 1614, the Tenour of which was thus: "Sirs, Having received Intelligence that your "Aſſembly would be held in Gaſcony the 1ſt "of May, in which ſome Perſons may be en"gaged to revive that Controverſy about "Juſtification; and to urge the Conſciences "of others to aſſent againſt their own Judg"ment, unto Matters not ſufficiently under"ſtood by them: We thought good to ſend "unto you Monſieur Hume, one of our Sub"jects, and of your Paſtors, with this Our "Letter; to exhort you in Our Name, not "to ſuffer the Spirits of your Paſtors and Pro"feſſors to be embittered one againſt another, "about Diſtinctions more ſubtile than profi"table, more curious than needful; —— "leſt the Sparkles of Diſſenſion inflame you "into ſuch a Schiſm, as will conſume you "all, &c." See the King's Letter in the Synod of Tonneins, 1614. Cap. 19.

TOGETHER with this Letter, he gave Mr. Hume in charge by Word of Mouth, to adviſe the Aſſembly as from him, "to procure "a firm Union in Points of Doctrine, among "the Paſtors, Profeſſors, and other Mem"bers of their own Church; without Quar"relling with the Divines of Germany, or any "Perſons Teaching otherwiſe; who handled "the Point of Juſtification in a different man"ner from them." Which Meſſage, together with the King's Letter, Mr. Hume delivered accordingly; as is related in the Acts of the Synod, cap. 3. Art. 5.

And thus far the King's Mediation seems to have had its Effect, That we find no farther Disputes betwixt them and the German Divines: But as to the Members of their own Church, they took the same Measures they had done before; "Enjoyning all Persons chosen into "the Ministry, to promise before God, not "to Teach the Doctrine of Justification any "otherwise than they there explained it; and "charging all Consistories, Classes, and Pro-"vincial Synods, to exert their whole Autho-"rity to see this Canon punctually observed; "inspecting their Ministers, and all other "Persons, that none act contrary hereunto; "and to prosecute such as do, with all the "Censures of the Church." Synod of Tonneins, cap. 6. Art. 19.

The Question now, upon the full Relation of this Controversy, that I would ask any Man, (without entring into the Merits of the Cause betwixt Piscator and the French, is only this; Whether the Article of the Church of England about Justification be not less liable to Exception, than that of the French Confession? And may not more easily and generally be subscribed by all Protestants, since it contains Nothing but what they are all agreed in? He must be very Partial to a Cause, that will have the Confidence to deny this.

Another Instance, in which it will evidently appear, that Subscription in the French Church was for some time at least more difficult than in the Church of England; is the Doctrine of Original Sin; which has been variously explained in the French Church. At first, indeed, it was exactly the same with the Ninth Article of the Church of England; which says, "That Original Sin is the Fault and Cor-"ruption of the Nature of every Man, that "naturally is engendred of the Off-spring of "Adam; whereby Man is very far gone "from Original Righteousness, and is inclin-"ed to Evil; so that the Flesh lusteth against "the Spirit." And the Tenth and Eleventh Articles of the French Confession, say no more than this: For no notice is taken of the Imputation of Adam's Sin at all. But afterwards the French Church brought this also into the Notion of Original Sin: For when Mr. De la Place had published a Discourse of Original Sin, wherein he asserted, "That the Nature of it "consisted only in that Corruption which is "Hereditary to all Adam's Posterity, and In-"herent originally in all Men; and not in the "Imputation of his first Sin; the Third Synod "of Charenton, 1644, condemned his Doctrine "for Restraining the Nature of Original Sin, "to the Sole Hereditary Corruption of Adam's "Posterity, to the excluding of the Imputa-"tion of that first Sin by which he fell; and "interdicted upon Pain of Church-Censures, "all Pastors, Professors, and others who "should Treat of this Question, to depart "from the common received Opinion of the "Protestant Churches. Also all Synods and "Classes, who should hereafter proceed to "the Reception of Scholars into the Ministry, "were obliged to see them Sign and Subscribe "that present Act of the Synod of Charenton." Synod of Charen. cap. 14. Art. 10.

Now that this Determination was thought a little too severe, we need no other Proof than the subsequent Decree that was made in the Synod of Loudun Fifteen Years after. For there it is said, "That at the Request of di-"vers Provinces, demanding with great Im-"portunity that the Canon of Charenton might "be moderated; it was Decreed, That for "the future all Pastors and Proposans, who "should offer themselves to the Ministry, "should only be obliged to Subscribe the "Tenth and Eleventh Articles of the Confes-"sion of Faith. Yet still all Persons should "be forbidden to Preach or Print any thing, "against the Imputation mentioned in the "Canon of Charenton." Synod of Loudun, 1659. cap. 8. Art. 11.

A Third Instance to this Purpose, is their Doctrine concerning the Call of their first Reformers, which every one is to believe not to have been any Ordinary Call from Man or the Church, but an Extraordinary Commission by an inward Powerful Impulse from God. For so the Synod of Gap, 1603. cap. 2. Art. 4. expresly words it. "This Synod doth judge, "that according to the Thirty-first Article "of our Confession we ought to ascribe their "Authority for Preaching and Reforming, "Simply to their Extraordinary Vocation "(whereby they were by an inward power-"ful Impulse from God, raised up and com-"manded to Exercise their Ministry) and "not to the Relicks of their Corrupted Call "and Ordination in the Romish Church."

The following Synod of Rochel, 1607. made some Corrections upon this, cap. 4. Art. 3. "In that Article of the Synod of Gap, say "they, which speaks of the Call of the first "Pastors in our Reformed Churches, these "Words, [b] And to teach, which are found in "some certain Copies, shall be Razed; and "instead of Simply, shall be inserted Principally; "and that last Clause, Not unto the small Re-"mainders of their Corrupted Call, shall be read "thus, Rather than unto the small Remainders of "their Ordinary Call." Yet these Corrections do not so clear all Doubts, but that many Men would find themselves under great Difficulties to Subscribe their Doctrine in this Particular also.

To

[b] These Words, And to teach, are in Sense the same with Preaching in the Synod of Gap.

To theſe Inſtances in Points of Belief, I will ſubjoyn a few more which relate to Practice, and which make Subſcription in the French Church rather more difficult than the former. 'Tis one Article of their Book of Diſcipline, Cap. 14. Art. 27. "That all Dancing "ſhall be ſuppreſs'd; and ſuch as make a "Trade of Dancing, or uſe to be preſent at "Dances, having been ſundry times Admo-"niſhed, in Caſe they prove Contumacious "or Rebellious, they ſhall be Excommuni-"cated; and all Conſiſtories are charged to "ſee that this Canon be moſt heedfully kept "and obſerved." 'Tis here to be noted, That all Miniſters are ſworn to the Execution of this Diſcipline; and conſequently under an Oath to Excommunicate all Perſons who uſe to frequent Dances without Reforming. What particular Reaſons they might have in France for this Severity, I know not, but certainly it would be eſteemed a very rigorous Canon among us; firſt to prohibit all Dancing as a Thing unlawful, and then oblige Miniſters by an Oath to Excommunicate all that uſed and practiſed it.

THEY have other Canons no leſs ſevere with reſpect to Habits; and Miniſters are equally bound upon Oath to put them in Execution. The Synod of Rochel, 1581. Cap. 4. Art. 21. declares, "That ſuch Habits are not "to be allowed in common Wearing, as car-"ry with them evident Marks of Laſciviouſ-"neſs, Diſſolution, and exceſſive new-fangled "Faſhions, ſuch as Painting, Slaſhing, Cut-"ting in Pieces, Trimming with Locks and "Taſſels, or any other that may diſcover "Nakedneſs or naked Breaſts; or Fardin-"gals, or the like ſort of Garments, with "which Men and Women do wickedly Cloath "and Adorn themſelves. And Conſiſtories "ſhall do their utmoſt to ſuppreſs ſuch Diſ-"ſolutions by their Cenſures; and in Caſe "the Delinquents are Contumacious and Re-"bellious, they ſhall proceed againſt them "even to Excommunication." See alſo the Book of Diſcipline, cap. 14. Art. 26. Synod of St. Foy, 1578. cap. 4. Art. 21. Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 45. Synod of Gergeau, 1601. Cap. 3. Art. 45. all to the ſame Purpoſe; ſave only that in the Synod of Gergeau, Poincons and Fardingals are excepted out of the Number of Habits, for the Uſe of which, Perſons were to be puniſhed with Excommunication.

BY another of their Canons in the Book of Diſcipline, Cap. 14. Art. 28. "No Mum-"mings nor Jugglings are to be ſuffered, nor "Waſſail-Days, nor keeping of Shrovetide, nor "Players at Heypaſs, nor Tumblers, nor "Tricks of Goblets, nor Puppet-plays.—— "Moreover it ſhall not be lawful for the "Faithful to go to Comedies, Tragedies, In-"terludes, Farces, or other Stage-plays acted "in publick or private." Some Editions of the Diſcipline alſo forbad the ſetting up of May-poles. But this was ordered to be razed out of the Canon, by the Synod of Gergeau, 1601. cap. 3. Art. 46.

CARDS alſo and Dice, and other Games of Hazard, and Lotteries, are prohibited under Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. Book of Diſcipline, cap. 14. Art. 29. Synod of Gergeau, cap. 3. Art. 47.

ALL Miniſters are prohibited the Study of Chymiſtry, by a Canon of the Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 3. Art. 6. "Claſſes "and Synods ſhall have a watchful Eye "over thoſe Miniſters who Study Chymiſtry, "and grievouſly Reprove and Cenſure "them."

AND they are under Oath not to Practiſe Phyſick, except out of Charity to the Neighbourhood, which if they tranſgreſs, they are liable alſo to Suſpenſion. Book of Diſcipl cap. 1. Art. 19. Synod of St. Foy, 1578. cap. 4. Art. 22. Synod of Loudun, 1659. cap. 9. Art. 9.

NOW I cannot but think that ſome of theſe Things at leaſt are as hard to be Subſcribed and Sworn to, as any of the Canons of the Church of England; for we have no ſuch Canons as oblige us to Excommunicate every Perſon that frequents Dancing, or wears a Fardingal, &c.

CHAP. V.

The French Diſcipline allows not of Nonconforming Miniſters or Separate Meetings.

IF we enquire in the next Place, What Regard the French Church had to ſuch Miniſters who had any Scruples upon them as to Swearing and Subſcribing, and ſuch as could not Conform; though it was the peculiar Happineſs of that Church, to have as few Inſtances of that Kind as ever any Church had; yet when there were any, they were either debarred from entring into the Miniſtry at firſt, or elſe ſilenced and depoſed if they were in actual Service: For their National Synods never ſuffered their Authority to be contemned. 'Tis a Canon of their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 5. Art. 32. "That if a Paſtor or Elder

"break

" break the Church's Union, or ſtir up Con" tention about any Point of Doctrine or " Diſcipline which he had ſubſcribed, or about
" the Form of Catechiſing, or Adminiſtra-
" tion of Sacraments, and Celebration of " Marriage, and conform not to the Deter" mination of the Claſſes, he ſhall then be
" ſuſpended from his Office, and be far" ther proſecuted by the Provincial, or Na" tional Synod."

THE Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 19. " allows not Miniſters to make any " Alteration in the Forms of Publick Prayers " and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, the " whole having been prudently and piouſly " Ordained, and for the moſt Part in plain and " expreſs Terms of Holy Scripture."

THE ſame Synod has a ſevere Canon againſt all Miniſters that officiate in Interdicted Churches, cap. 3. Art. 10. " If any Churches re-
" fuſe Payment of their Contributions, to" wards the defraying thoſe Expences which " are unavoidably contracted by Journeys and " Attendance in Synodical and other Eccle-" ſiaſtical Aſſemblies, kept and held for the " Common Good of all Churches, they ſhall
" be deprived of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel,
" and be reputed Deſerters of that Holy Uni" on which ought to be preſerved among us.
" And, N. B. all Miniſters in ſuch Churches " are interdicted the Exerciſe of their Mini-
" ſtry upon Pain of being denounced Schiſ-
" maticks." And this they order to be enter'd among the Canons of their Diſcipline, which all Miniſters are Sworn to obſerve.

HERE we ſee what Authority they claim to themſelves; Firſt in laying Contributions upon the Churches upon neceſſary Occaſions. Secondly, in Interdicting the Churches which refuſe Payment. Thirdly, In depriving the Miniſters, and treating them as Schiſmaticks, if they pretend to officiate in any of thoſe Interdicted Churches. And yet this was but a Pecuniary Matter at moſt, which affords Ground for ſo much Cenſure.

THEIR Book of Diſcipline, cap. 6. Art. 4. lays down ſeveral Rules for Managing Diſputes with the Papiſts about Religion; and particularly this, which it backs with a moſt ſevere Sanction: " Miniſters ſhall not adventure " upon any General Conference, without the " Advice of all the Churches Aſſembled in " a National Synod; upon Pain of being de" clared Apoſtates and Deſerters of the " Church's Union." See alſo the Synod of Gergeau, 1601, cap. 3. Art. 23.

THE Synod of Gap proceeds in like manner, with Perſons tainted with the prevailing Errors (as it calls them) about Juſtification. " Be they Miniſters or private Chriſtians, by
" the Authority of this preſent Synod they
" ſhall be ſilenced; and in Caſe of a ſtubborn
" Preſiſtency, if Miniſters, be depoſed." Synod of Gap, 1603. cap. 2. Art. 2. See alſo cap. 3. Art. 4, & 5.

'TIS a known Inſtance which Dr. Durel has heretofore given of this Church's Power, in the Caſe of Mr. Welſh a Scotchman, and Miniſter in the Province of Xaintonge; who being commanded by the Synod of St. Maixant, to conform himſelf, both in his Preaching and the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, to the Order and Manner uſed in the Church of France; upon his Refuſal was obliged to leave his Miniſtry, and quit the Kingdom. See the Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 3. Art. 35. and Durel's Vindiciæ, cap. 22. p. 243.

TO this let me add that famous Decree of the Synod of Alez, 1620. cap. 10. Art. 22. where, upon Advice craved by ſome of the Deputies, What Courſe ſhould be taken with thoſe who took out Prohibitions from the Courts of Parliament, againſt the Orders and Cenſures of the Church: " The Aſſembly en-
" joyned all Synods, Claſſes, and Conſiſtories,
" to proceed againſt ſuch Perſons, as Re" bels againſt the Diſcipline of the Church;
" and inflict upon them the heavieſt Cenſure
" of Excommunication."

WE find at the End of almoſt every National Synod, a Roll of depoſed Miniſters and Deſerters; and yet we never hear of any of theſe Setting up to Preach in ſeparate Proteſtant Meetings. It was againſt their Rules there to preach, when ſilenced by the Authority of a National Synod, where lay the laſt Appeal: And therefore, in all their Synods, we ſcarce meet with Three Inſtances to the contrary. The Synod of St. Maixant made a Peremptory Canon, cap. 6. Art. 17. " If any depoſed Mi-
" niſter ſhall preſume to celebrate any pub-
" lick Ordinances, he ſhall be pronounced
" excommunicate immediately." They would not allow ſuch an one the loweſt Privilege of a private Chriſtian, ſo much as to eſteem him a Member of the Church.

THEY enacted other proper Laws for the People; That they ſhould not hear, or follow, or encourage any ſuch, under Pain of Cenſure alſo. " For as much, (ſays the Book of Diſcipline,
" cap. 14. Art. 12.) as that it is neither law" ful nor expedient to hear the popiſh Preach" ers, nor any others who have intruded
" themſelves without a lawful Call; the Flocks
" ſhall be hindred by the Paſtors from going " to them; and ſuch as ſhall go, ſhall be " called into the Conſiſtory, and Cenſured
" according to the Nature of their Of" fence."

NOW Two Things are to be obſerved in this Canon; 1. That it is no more lawful to go to hear Preachers who intrude themſelves without a lawful Call, than it is to go and hear popiſh Preachers. 2. That all Perſons are Intruders, and have no lawful Call, who take upon themſelves the Office of Preaching, contrary to the known Rules and Orders of the Eſtabliſhed Church; or elſe preach after they have been ſilenced, ſuſpended, or depoſed by lawful Authority. So that if our Controverſies verſies in England were to be determined by this Canon of the French Church, Separation would quickly be at an End; if Men would but be once perſuaded to believe it was unlawful to Preach, or hear others Preach, without a lawful Call, and contrary to the Rules and Orders of the Eſtabliſhed Church.

THAT this was the conſtant Senſe of the French Church, appears from another Canon made in the Synod of Gergeau, 1601. cap. 4. Art. 22. in reference to the People of Montauban; where it is decreed, "That becauſe they "ſuffered and encouraged one Girard, a Mi- "niſter that had been ſuſpended by the Sy- "nod of Languedoc, to Preach among them af- "ter his Suſpenſion, they ſhould thereby in- "cur Cenſures themſelves."

THE Synod of Alez alſo made a very good Canon to prevent Diſorders of this Nature. "That whereas it might happen, through "the Corruption of the Age, that a Miniſter "depoſed in one Claſſis or Province, may in- "trude himſelf into another, and take upon "him to preach the Word, before the Meet- "ing of the National Synod, by which all the "Churches of this Kingdom may be adviſed "of the ſaid depoſed Perſon; This Aſſembly "doth exhort all Paſtors and Conſiſtories, not "eaſily to admit any Stranger from another "Province into the Pulpits; unleſs they be "very well acquainted with him. And as "for Apoſtates, the Paſtors of the adjoyning "Churches in which the Revolted live, ſhall "give ſpeedy and publick Notice of thoſe "Apoſtates; that ſo none of our Churches "or Miniſters may be ſurprized by them."

WE ſee all poſſible Care was taken to prevent the Preaching, and Hearing of ſilenced and depoſed Miniſters both in ſeparate Meetings, and their own Churches. And this good Piece of Diſcipline was always obſerved in the French Churches, being inſtilled into them by Beza, and their firſt Reformers. For the Judgment of Beza againſt Preaching, when ſilenced by Authority, was peremptory, and famous not only in the Church of France, but England alſo. For, being conſulted upon this very Point by ſome Diſſenting Brethren in England, about the Year 1568, when Subſcription was preſſed by the Queen's Authority, he gave them this Anſwer: "As to the "ſilenced Miniſters, ſays he, if the preſſing "of Subſcription continues, my Advice is, "rather to live privately, than yield to it. "For either they muſt act againſt their Con- "ſciences, or elſe quit their Employments. "For as for the Third Thing which might be "ſuppoſed in this Caſe, that is, the Exer- "ciſing their Functions againſt the Will of "the Queen and the Biſhops; we tremble "at the Thoughts of it, for ſuch Reaſons "as may eaſily be imagined, though I ſay ne- "ver a Word about them." Beza, Ep. 12. ad Fratres Angl. p. 105.

THIS Anſwer and Reſolution of Beza, to give it its juſt Praiſe, ſeems to have done good Service in England, in ſtopping the intended Separation at that Time; and probably might leave thoſe uſeful Impreſſions upon the Minds of our Old Nonconformiſts, which we find the Sober Part of them were poſſeſſed with; That if they were ſilenced for not Subſcribing, they ought to ſubmit and live as private Chriſtians in the Communion of the Church; and not ſet up ſeparate Meetings, and Preach againſt the Will of their Superiors. Which was the known Judgment of Mr. Fox, Dr. Humphreys, Perkins, Gifford, Rathband, Ball, Bradſhaw, Hilderſham and Dod; whoſe Authorities have often been produced by others, and it is beſide my preſent Purpoſe here to repeat; who am only concerned to ſhew what was the Judgment and Practice of the French Church.

I WILL end this Chapter with the Twenty-ſixth Article of the French Confeſſion of Faith. "We believe that it is not lawful for "any Man to withdraw himſelf from the "Congregation of GOD's Saints, and con- "tent himſelf with private Devotion; but all "are joyntly bound to keep and maintain the "Unity of the Church, &c. And whoever "ſeparate themſelves from the Eſtabliſhed Or- "der, do reſiſt the Ordinance of GOD. [c] "And in caſe they draw others aſide with "them, they do act very perverſely, and are "to be accounted as Mortal Plagues."

Mr. Quick himſelf obſerves, [d] That Diſcipline was always ſtrictly exerciſed upon Delinquent Miniſters in the worſt of Times: They were depoſed and ejected, if they deſerv'd it: But yet he cannot ſay, any of theſe ſet up ſeparate Proteſtant Meetings; but they generally turned Papiſts, and took up for good and all in the Romiſh Synagogue. So effectual was their Diſcipline in Silencing Delinquent Miniſters, and yet happy in keeping all that called themſelves Proteſtants, to One Church and One Communion.

[c] Note, That this laſt Clauſe is in Mr. Quick's Tranſlation, though it be not in ſome other Editions.

CHAP. VI.

That the French Church condemns Occasional Conformity, as much as the Church of England.

THE last Expedient of the Church of England to preserve Unity, was the Censuring of Separatists, and Denying them the Privilege of Occasional Communion. I speak not now of the late Bills about Occasional Conformity, which have been the Subject of a warm Debate among those who are professed Members of the Church: For these not being yet enacted into Laws, and being rather Civil than Ecclesiastical Acts, come not within the Compass of this Discourse: But I speak of such Laws as are actually in Being, which all the Members of the Church must acknowledge to be Laws; I mean the Canons which are in Force, and may legally and with good Authority be put in Execution. The Twenty-seventh of these Canons speaks to this Effect: "No Minister when "he celebrateth the Communion, shall wit-"tingly administer the same —— to any that "refuse to be present at the publick Pray-"ers, according to the Orders of the Church "of England; nor to any that are common "and notorious Depravers of the Book of "Common-Prayer, and Administration of the "Sacraments, and of the Orders, Rites, and "Ceremonies therein prescribed, or of any "thing that is contained in any of the Ar-"ticles agreed upon in the Convocation, "1562, or of any thing contained in the "Book of Ordering Priests and Bishops; or "to any that have spoken against and de-"praved His Majesty's Sovereign Authority "in Causes Ecclesiastical; except every such "Person shall first acknowledge to the Mi-"nister before the Church-Wardens, his Re-"pentance for the same, and promise by "Word, if he cannot write, that he will do "so no more; and except, if he can write, "he shall first do the same under his Hand "writing, &c."

THE Title of the Canon is, That Schismaticks are not to be admitted to the Communion: And it is agreed on all hands, both by Churchmen and Dissenters, That the Design of the Canon was to deny Separatists the Privilege of Occasional Communion. For every Minister so far as he is obliged by this Canon, is under an Obligation not to admit them to Communion, but upon the Conditions specified in the Canon.

NOW the Question is concerning the Legality and Justice of this Canon: Dissenters say, It is simply and universally unlawful, and give it as one Reason among others for their Nonconformity. See Mr. Baxter's Engl. Nonconform. cap. 29.

TO which I say, That the same Reason will hold for Nonconformity in the Church of France: For their Rules require Ministers to use the very same Discipline. Beza in his Epistle to the French Church in London, passing his Judgment upon certain Articles drawn up by them, approves this among the rest; "They that are either lawfully Excommuni-"cate, or do unlawfully and with Scandal "withdraw themselves from any Church —— "ought not to be allowed the use of the Sa-"craments, till they have made legal Satis-"faction to the Church." Beza, Ep. 24. Art. 21.

THE Thirteenth Article in the same Epistle says farther, "That whoever is lawfully "Excommunicate in any particular Church, "or unlawfully cuts himself off from it, does "thereby exclude himself from all the Privi-"leges of the Catholick Church, and is not "to be received into any other particular "Church, without making Satisfaction, &c."

NOW I presume a legal Satisfaction will at least imply an Acknowledgment of the Fault, and a Promise of Amendment for the future. And if so; if the same Conditions be required of Separatists in the French Church, before they are to be admitted to the Communion, Wherein does their Discipline differ from that of the Church of England?

CALVIN says in general, "Of all such "as fall off from the Church, either through "Rigor of Discipline, or Scandal of the Cross, "if they make an open Separation from the "Church, they are by no means to be ad-"mitted to the Holy Supper. Sin palam Dis-"cessionem ab Ecclesia faciunt, ac eos Evangelii "pudet vel tædet, nullo modo admittendi sunt ad "sacram Cœnam." Ep. to Menso Poppius. p. 205.

IF it be said, These are only private Authorities; I answer, They are such as are agreeable to the Canons in the Book of Discipline; one of which says, "Such as care not "to come to our publick Christian Congre-"gations, but only upon those Days when "the Sacrament of the LORD's Supper is cele-"brated, shall be censured, and admonished of "their Duty; and to this Purpose they shall "joyn themselves to one certain particular "Church." Discipl. cap. 12. Art. 12.

AND the next Canon says, "They who "make a Trade of Hearing the Word of GOD "in one Church, and Receiving the Sacra-"ments

"ments in another, ſhall be cenſured, and "by the Advice of the Claſſis or Provincial "Synod, they ſhall be appointed to joyn "themſelves to that Church which is near-"eſt and moſt convenient for them." Ibid. Art. 13.

THESE Canons not only prohibit Occaſional Communion to ſuch as abſent themſelves from the Service of the Church, but alſo to ſuch as frequent not their own Parochial Churches. Which juſtifies another Canon of our Church, which Mr. B. alſo excepts againſt; that is, the Twenty-eighth Canon, which ſays, "Miniſters ſhall not ad-"mit Strangers to the LORD's Table among "others, but forbid them, and remit ſuch "home to their own Pariſh-Churches and Mi-"niſters, there to receive the Communion "with the reſt of their Neighbours." I can ſee no Difference between this Canon, and that laſt mentioned of the French Diſcipline: and yet Mr. B. makes this Point alſo a ſufficient Reaſon for Miniſters Nonconformity. Engl. Noncon. cap. 30.

HE ſays, "Pariſh-Bounds are but an Hu-"man Order for Conveniency." As if Pariſh-Bounds in France, were not the ſame Thing that they are in England! "But the Be-"nefit of an able faithful Miniſter, and the "Choice and Uſe of ſuch, where they may "be had, is of Divine Appointment." Then at leaſt the French Church ſins as much as the Church of England, in Remanding every one back to his own Pariſh, againſt a Divine Appointment. "But ſome Pariſhes have Mini-"ſters, that cannot, or may not, be ſuf-"fered to Preach." And I ſhall ſhew in due time that this was the Caſe of the Church of France too; which Defect they ſupplied, by ordering Calvin's Homilies [e] to be read: And yet they did not think this a ſufficient Reaſon to allow Men to go for Communion from their own Pariſh-Churches. But he ſays, "Every Chriſtian is related to all "the Catholick Church, and as he hath "Need, hath Right to the Communion of "Saints out of his Pariſh." There is no queſtion but that both the French and Engliſh Church knew this as well as Mr. B. But what is this to thoſe that have no Need to go out of their Pariſh for Communion? Is there no Difference between ordinary and extraordinary Caſes? Then all ordinary Rules may be broken, becauſe they do not bind in extraordinary Caſes. If Men have Occaſion to travel to other Pariſhes or Countries, it is fitting they ſhould be allowed to Communicate in thoſe Places, whither Neceſſity calls them: But it does not hence follow, that it is unlawful to bind Men by a Canon to Communicate in their own Pariſh-Churches, who have no Neceſſity to do otherwiſe: And yet thus Mr. B. argues, both againſt the French and Engliſh Churches; though he deſigned it only againſt the Church of England.

I OBSERVE two Things farther in the Practice and Diſcipline of the French Church, relating to this Matter; 1. That no Stranger can be admitted to Communion in any Church without Teſtimonials from his own Church; which was an Old Rule of the Primitive Church, revived by the Second Synod of Paris, 1565. c. 11. Art. 26. which ſays, "Miniſters are "adviſed not to receive the Members of any "other Churches to the LORD's-Supper, with-"out a ſufficient Atteſtation produced by "them, under the Hands of their Paſtors or "Elders, if it may be had." And Beza ſays, they obſerve a like Rule at Geneva, unleſs either the Perſons be otherwiſe ſufficiently known, or will ſubmit to a private Examination. Beza, Ep. 20. p. 140.

THE other Thing I obſerve in their Conſtitution, is ſomething more remarkable, being an Inſtance of Power that the Church of England could never yet lay claim to; which was, That no Proteſtant could enjoy any ſuch Civil Offices among them, as were particularly ſpecified by the Edict of Nants, unleſs he was recommended by the Publick Teſtimonials of the Church. For ſo the Synod of Tonneins decreed, with a Menace of Excommunication to them that ſhould do otherwiſe: This Aſſembly Ordained, "That ſuch "Perſons who get themſelves preferred to "the Government of our Cautionary Towns, "or unto the Office of Counſellors in the "Mixt Courts, or ſhall obtain any other "Place granted to Gentlemen profeſſing our "Religion; without taking the neceſſary Te-"ſtimonials, according to the Letter and "Import of the King's Writ for Governors, "and the particular Articles for Counſellors "in Sovereign Courts; they ſhall be declar-"ed Deſerters of the Union of our Church-"es, and proſecuted with all Church-Cen-"ſures." Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 8. Art. 11.

THE Ground of this Canon, was the Forty-ninth Article of thoſe which are called the Secret Articles of the Edict of Nants; which ſays, "The Vacant Offices, of which "thoſe of the ſaid Religion ſhall be pro-"vided in the Chambers of the Edict, ſhall "be ſupplied with Perſons capable; who ſhall "bring a Certificate from the Synod or Claſ-"ſis unto which they do belong, that they are "of the ſaid Religion, and Honeſt Men." See this Article in Vol. I. of the Synodicon, p. 93.

THIS is a plain Evidence, that to qualify Men for thoſe Civil Offices, the Teſtimonials of the Church were required; and it is not to be ſuppoſed that they would give their their Teſtimonials to any that were not of their Church, or made a Separation from it. Whence it appears, that they not only prohibited Occaſional Communion, but had Power to deny thoſe that were not of their Communion, the Privilege of Civil Offices; which none could regularly obtain without Teſtimonials from the Church: Which is ſomething more than is now exacted in the Church of England.

IF it be ſaid notwithſtanding all this, That Men had not the ſame Reaſons for Scrupling Conformity in the French Church, or Separating from it, that they have in the Church of England: Though I have already taken off the main Force of this Plea in the Fourth Chapter of this Book; by ſhewing, that Subſcription is rather more difficult in many Caſes in the French Church, than it is in the Church of England; yet, to anſwer it more fully, I will proceed to examine the ſeveral particular Objections that are made againſt our Church, relating either, 1. To her Articles and Homilies. Or, 2. To her Liturgy. Or, 3. To her Ordinations, Government, and Canons; and ſhew, That all ſuch Objections may be anſwered, and the Things excepted againſt be fairly juſtified, upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France. I will begin with the Objections made againſt the Articles and Homilies; which ſhall be the Subject of the next Book.

The End of the Firſt BOOK.

BOOK II.

The Objections againſt the Articles and Homilies of the CHURCH of England, conſidered, and anſwered upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

That approved Writers of the French Church, allow the Articles of the Church of England, as Lawful to be Subſcribed.

WHAT is meant by Subſcription to the Articles of our Church, is not exactly agreed by thoſe that ſubſcribe them. Some take them only for Articles of Peace; and they by Subſcription mean no more than this; That they will ſo far own and ſubmit to them, as not Publickly to Diſſent from them, or Teach any Doctrine that is contrary to any Thing contained in them. This ſeems to have been the Judgment of Archbiſhop Bramhall, Biſhop Fowler, and others. But generally, Subſcription is conſidered in a ſtricter Senſe; as implying a Declaration of our own Opinion, and not as a bare Obligation to Silence only: And this ſeems rather to have been the Intent and Meaning of the Church. But now in this ſtricter Senſe, Beza profeſſes in his Letters to Biſhop Grindal, That he knows no Orthodox Frenchman, but who could as heartily ſubſcribe the Engliſh Confeſſion, as their own. "For, "ſays he in one Place, we believe your "Churches do in all Points of Doctrine agree "with ours." And in another; "As to what "concerns your Faith or Doctrine, receiv-"ed by Publick Conſent, and confirmed by "Royal Authority; I ſuppoſe there is no "Man that thinks rightly of theſe Matters, "but will embrace it as true and certain." Beza, Ep. 8. & 69.

PETER du Moulin ſpeaks much to the ſame Purpoſe, in his Defence of the French Confeſſion, againſt Arnoux the Jeſuit. "Our "Adverſaries, ſays he, under Pretence that "the Church of England hath another Form "of Diſcipline than ours is, charge us that "our Religion is diverſe: But Experience "confuteth this Accuſation; For we Aſſemble "with the Engliſh in their Churches; we par-"ticipate together in the Holy Supper of the "LORD; the Doctrine of their Confeſſion is "wholly agreeable unto ours." Buckler of Faith, p. 345.

MR. le Moyne ſays, "The Engliſh Confeſ-"ſion has been highly approved by all the "Proteſtant World; and that it really de-"ſerves the Praiſes of all good Chriſtians. "For there cannot be any Thing made more "Wiſe than that Confeſſion, and the Arti-"cles of Faith were never collected with a "more juſt and reaſonable Diſcretion." Letter to the Biſhop of London, at the end of Dr. Stillingfleet's Unreaſonabl. of Separation.

CHAP. II.

Of Particular Exceptions againſt the Thirty-nine Articles, and Conſent of the French Church in the Controverted Articles, Three, Four, Eight, &c. to the Twentieth.

MR. B. in his Engl. Nonconform. cap. 24. profeſſes he can ſubſcribe all the Doctrinal Articles as true; but he ſays, "The "Words of them in the obvious Senſe, are "many times liable to Exception; and there "are many Things in the Articles that good "Men may Scruple." His firſt Inſtance is the Third Article. He ſays, "Learned Men "doubt of CHRIST's going down into Hell." Then ſure they muſt doubt of the Apoſtles Creed too: For it is an Article of that, as well as of the Engliſh Confeſſion. But I ſuppoſe he would have ſaid, That ſome doubt of the Expoſition of that Doctrine of CHRIST's Deſcent into Hell. Yet this will not mend the Matter: For the Church gives no Expoſition of it in that Article; but only ſays, It is to be believed that he went down into Hell. Now who thoſe good Men are that doubt of this, and allow at the ſame time of the Apoſtles Creed, one would be glad to know, for their rare Faculty of Diſtinguiſhing without a Difference: Or if they doubt of the Apoſtles Creed, as well as the Article of the Church of England, the Queſtion will then be, Whether they are good Men. The French Church ſays nothing in particular of this Article in her Confeſſion; but yet ſhe allows the Article, becauſe ſhe owns every Article of the Apoſtles Creed; whereof this is one. So that here is no Difference between the Two Churches upon this Point: They both own the Article in Terms; and our Church gives no Expoſition of it, but leaves Men to a reaſonable Latitude with Sobriety to put their own Senſe and Meaning on it. So much was Mr. B. miſtaken, when he ſaid, That Learned and Good Men doubt of CHRIST's going down into Hell! This is ominous to make ſuch a Blunder in his firſt Exception; let us ſee whether he was more lucky in his Second.

2. He ſays next, that the Doctrine of the Fourth Article, "That CHRIST's Body in "Heaven hath Fleſh and Bones, is contrary "to Two General Councils; the Second of "Nice, and that of Conſtantinople before it." What follows hence? That Good Men may ſcruple this Article? Then by the ſame Reaſon they may ſcruple the Twenty-eighth Article, which denies Tranſubſtantiation; for the contrary Doctrine was eſtabliſhed at leaſt in Two ſuch General Councils, Lateran and Trent. We ſee any Argument will ſerve againſt the Church's Articles, though it open a Door for Popery, under Pretence of eaſing Scrupulous Men. But it is well the French Confeſſion may be ſcrupled by his Good Men upon the ſame Ground. For the Fifteenth Article of their Confeſſion, [a] "proves the Truth and Pro-"priety of our SAVIOUR's Human Nature, "after his Aſſumption into Heaven; from "that Text of St. Luke xxiv. 39. A Spirit hath "not Fleſh and Bones, as ye ſee me have." It is the ſame Thing with them, not to have Fleſh and Bones, as not to have a true Human Nature. So that if we deny, that CHRIST hath Fleſh and Bones in Heaven, we might as well deny the Truth of his Humanity alſo. But the French Church never thought fit to condeſcend ſo far to theſe Scrupulous Men, as in Compliment to them to drop the Article, which aſſerts the Truth of our SAVIOUR's Human Nature.

3. HE ſays the Eighth Article is ſcrupled by many Conformiſts, becauſe it requires the Damnatory Clauſes of the Athanaſian Creed to be wholly received and believed. What Kind of Conformiſts theſe are, I know not; but I have ſhewed elſewhere, that their Scruples would have been no leſs, about theſe Damnatory Clauſes, in the Church of France.

4. HE ſays, Biſhop Taylor was againſt the Ninth Article about Original Sin. Then, I ſay, he was againſt the Tenth and Eleventh Article of the French Confeſſion. A private Man's Opinion is no Reaſon for the Church to throw away her Doctrine: But if he does Biſhop Taylor Wrong, he muſt anſwer for it.

5. MANY, called Arminians, are againſt the Tenth Article, which ſays, We have no Power to do good Works without the Grace of GOD preventing us. It was kindly done of Mr. B. to put the Arminians among thoſe Good Men, whoſe Scruples ought to be conſidered: But neither the Aſſembly of Divines, who drew up the Confeſſion of Faith to be preſented to the Parliament in 1646, nor the French Church, ever had any Regard to ſuch Scruples. For the former decreed, "That Man by his Fall "into a State of Sin, hath wholly loſt all "Ability of Will to any Spiritual Good ac-"companying Salvation: So as a Natural "Man being altogether averſe from that "Good, and dead in Sin, is not able by his "own

" own Strength, to convert himſelf, or to " prepare himſelf thereto." See the Advice of the Aſſembly of Div. to the Parl. cap. 9. Art. 3. And for the other, I have proved before in the Chapter about Subſcription, That the French Church obliged all her Miniſters not only to ſubſcribe, but ſwear to the Decrees of the Synod of Dort againſt the Arminians; and made almoſt an Hundred Canons of her own in one Synod to ſecure the ſame Points againſt them. How comes this then to be a Charge alſo againſt the Church of England for want of Moderation?

6. BUT many Conformiſts are againſt thoſe Words of the Eleventh Article, We are accounted Righteous before GOD only for the Merit of CHRIST. I doubt Mr. B. was miſtaken in his Men, and does them manifeſt Wrong; for I never yet heard of any ſuch Conformiſts. But if any ſuch there be, they muſt be as much againſt the Proteſtant Doctrine of Juſtification in all other Churches; and particularly the Eighteenth Article of the French Confeſſion, which ſays, " We believe that our " whole Righteouſneſs is founded in the Re- " miſſion of our Sins, which as David ſaith, is " our only Happineſs. Wherefore we do utter- " ly reject all other Means, by which Men " think they may be juſtified before GOD; and " caſting away all Opinion of our Virtues " and Merits, we do altogether reſt upon the " ſole Obedience of JESUS CHRIST, &c."

AS for Mr. B's Reaſon, which he brings to prove, That the Conformiſts contradict this Article; becauſe they ſay, There is a ſubordinate Righteouſneſs ſpoken of in Scripture; Calvin has long ago proved that to be a Miſtake, or rather a Sophiſm in Argumentation. For Things that are ſubordinate do not contradict one another; as he argues well againſt the Council of Trent. " We freely confeſs, " that the Good Works of the Faithful are " ſometimes honoured with the Title of Righ- " teouſneſs. But for as much as all the whole " Worth of ſuch Works flows from no other " Fountain but that of Free-Grace, it would " be abſurd to ſay they take off any from " that. Why do they not remember, what " they learned when they were Boys at School, " That what is ſubordinate to another Thing, " does not contradict it." Antidot. Concil. Trid. Seſſ. 6. Tom. 8. p. 245.

IF Calvin had had to do with Mr. B. he would have ſent him to School again with the Fathers of Trent, to have learned, That a Subordinate Righteouſneſs does not contradict our being accounted Righteous only for the Merits of CHRIST.

7. HE ſays, Many think that Good Works ſpring not neceſſarily from Faith, as the Twelfth Article ſpeaks, but freely. But if any think ſo, they are ignorant Objectors, and contend about Words to no Purpoſe. For Neceſſarily and Freely do not always contradict one another: However the Twenty-ſecond Article of the French has the very ſame Word.

8. MANY think that Merit of Congruity may be held, againſt the Thirteenth Article, " And that Men by Natural or Antecedent " Works may be made meet to receive Grace; " which Dr. Hammond in his Annotations ſeem- " eth much to inſiſt upon, under the Name " of Probity." But does the Doctor ever ſay, that Men by mere Natural Works, done without all Grace, may deſerve Grace? Does he own this Merit of Congruity? Does he not always aſcribe all Goodneſs to the Grace of GOD? even the Probity he ſpeaks of, was an Effect of Grace, in ſuch Jewiſh Proſelytes as Cornelius, and ſuch other Devout Men, who feared GOD, and wrought Righteouſneſs, and were accepted of him, Acts x. 35. But the Doctor's Authority, right or wrong, muſt be made uſe of to juſtify Pelagians, and ſuch Good Men, who have Scruples upon them about the Grace of GOD, and Man's Natural Ability to do Good.

9. HIS next Concern is for Dr. Hammond again, and his Followers, who ſubſcribe the Fourteenth Article, and yet " write for Good " Works over and above GOD's Command- " ments, as only Counſelled by GOD, and " Voluntarily done; which this Article calls " Arrogancy and Impiety." That which the Article condemns, is the popiſh Doctrine of Works of Supererogation; that is, " Such " Voluntary Works, whereby Men declare, " That they do not only render unto GOD " as much as they are bound to do; but " that they do more for his Sake than of " bounden Duty is required; whereas CHRIST " ſaith plainly, When ye have done all that is " commanded you, ſay, We are unprofitable Ser- " vants." If Dr. Hammond, or any of his Followers, writ for Works of Supererogation againſt this Article, the Church had no Reaſon to conſider their Scruples: For this is the Doctrine of all Proteſtant Churches. But if Mr. B. again charges them falſely, he alone muſt anſwer for it.

10. HE ſays next, The Fifteenth Article is denied by them that think Infants ſinleſs when baptized. What then muſt theſe Good Mens Scruples alſo be conſidered, and the Church caſhier this Article, which only aſſerts CHRIST's Prerogative againſt the Papiſts, of being the only Perſon in our Nature that ever was without Sin? This were to own not only the Virgin Mary, but all other Infants, to be born without Original Sin, and to give a Superſedeas to the Ninth Article and this together, contrary to the Doctrine of all other Proteſtant Churches.

11. MANY deny Falling from Grace given, againſt the Sixteenth Article. But did ever any Good Chriſtian deny Falling from Grace in the Senſe of the Article; that is, Falling into deadly Sin after Baptiſm? Let us hear the Words of the Article itſelf: " Not every dead- " ly Sin, willingly committed after Baptiſm, " is the Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST, " and unpardonable. Wherefore the Grant

" of Repentance is not to be denied to ſuch " as fall into Sin after Baptiſm. After we have " received the HOLY GHOST, we may depart " from Grace given, and fall into Sin, and by " the Grace of GOD we may riſe again, and " amend our Lives; and therefore they are " to be condemned, who ſay, They can no " more ſin, as long as they live here; or deny " place of Forgiveneſs to ſuch as truly repent." Here Falling from Grace given, is explained by Falling into deadly Sin after Baptiſm, which none ever denied, except Catharists or Libertines, who call their fouleſt Vices no Sins after Regeneration; if Learned Men give us a true Account of their Doctrine [b]. And would the Church do well to favour theſe Mens Scruples alſo?

12. HE ſays, Dr. Hammond and his Followers, ſeem to deny the abſolute Election deſcribed in the Seventeenth Article. This is but faintly ſpoken, he durſt not charge them home here. They only ſeem to deny it: Then perhaps Mr. B. miſunderſtood them, and they did not deny it. But if they did, the Church is not obliged to alter her Doctrine in Compliment to them, no more than the Dutch or French Churches did, out of reſpect to Arminius, in the Synods of Dort and Charenton.

13. BUT many good Men think ſome are ſaved that live up to the Light of Nature; " And yet the Eighteenth Article curſeth them " that ſay ſo." Mr. B. does not deal fairly with this Article; for he leaves out the principal Thing upon which the Curſe is laid; which is, That Salvation may be had other Ways than by the Name of CHRIST. The Words of the Article are theſe: " They are " to be had accurſed, that preſume to ſay, " That every Man ſhall be ſaved by the Law, " or Sect, which he profeſſeth; ſo that he be " diligent to frame his Life according to " that Law and Light of Nature. For Holy " Scripture doth ſet out unto us only the " Name of JESUS CHRIST, whereby Men " muſt be ſaved."

NOW there is a great Difference between ſaying, Every Man ſhall be ſaved by the Law or Sect which he profeſſeth, without any Regard to the Name or Merit of CHRIST; and ſaying, ſome are ſaved that live up to the Light of Nature; when thoſe who ſay it, affirm at the ſame Time, that they are not Saved by Virtue of the Law of Nature, (though that be the only Law they have to walk by) but by the Name and Merit of CHRIST, without which no one can be ſaved. The one is expreſly condemned and accurſed in the Article; but ſome think the other is not ſo, becauſe it derogates nothing from the Death and Satisfaction of CHRIST, who may be a Saviour by GOD's infinite Mercy to ſome, who never had any more than a Virtual and Implicit Knowledge of him. The one is a Doctrine of the Alchoran, invented on purpoſe to promote the Policy of the Turkiſh Empire; the other a Doctrine embraced by Chriſtians of Note in all Ages, from Juſtin Martyr to Zuinglius, and the Reformation; and, by thoſe that embrace it, is not thought contrary to the preſent Article; though Mr. B. makes them flatly contradict one another.

BUT however that Matter be, it is certain the Church of England advances no other Doctrine, than is delivered in ſeveral Articles of the French Confeſſion, more eſpecially the Thirteenth and Seventeenth, which ſay, " That the Sacrifice of CHRIST is the only " Thing that reconciles us unto GOD; and " that there is no other Means or Remedy, " whereby to obtain Remiſſion of Sins," but only his Death for our Sakes. If ſo, Salvation cannot be attained by the Law of Nature, excluding the Name of CHRIST.

14. HIS next Exception is in favour of the Churchmen, who " Like not the Deſcrip- " tion given of the Viſible Church in the " Nineteenth Article, and think that the Church " of Rome never erred in Matters of Faith; " contrary to what is there aſſerted." But what is that Deſcription of the Viſible Church, which they diſlike? Why, " That it is a Con- " gregation of Faithful Men, in which the " pure Word of GOD is Preached, and the " Sacraments are duly Adminiſtred, accord- " ing to CHRIST's Ordinance, in all thoſe " Things that of Neceſſity are requiſite to " the ſame." And are there any Churchmen that diſlike this? Yes, becauſe there is no mention of Biſhops or their Government in it. And would Mr. B. have liked it ever the better, if there had? No; but he is concerned for the Churchmen, who cannot ſubſcribe this Article, but contrary to their Judgment. But theſe Epiſcopal Churchmen have often told him and others, That it is not contrary to their Judgment to ſubſcribe this Article: For in all their Diſputes with the Papiſts, they never require more than theſe two Notes of the Church. They ſay, with Biſhop Andrews, " That though Epiſcopal " Government be of Divine Inſtitution, yet " it is not ſo abſolutely neceſſary, as that " there can be no Church, nor Sacraments, " nor Salvation without it. He is blind that " ſees not many Churches flouriſhing with- " out it; and he muſt have an Heart as hard " as Iron, that will deny them Salvation. " Something may be wanting, that is of Di- " vine Right, in the exterior Regimen of the " Church; and yet Salvation be obtained there- " in." Reſponſ. ad 2. Epiſt. Molinæi, inter Opuſc. p. 176.

NOW this is the Caſe of the French Church, which Biſhop Andrews and his Followers allow to have all the Neceſſary and Eſſential tial Notes of a true Church, though Epiſcopal Government was never ſettled among them.

ON the other hand, the French Churches furniſh the Epiſcopal Divines with Arguments againſt Mr. B. and their other Adverſaries. For they ſay, That where Epiſcopal Government and Superiority is regularly ſettled in any Church, there it is ſo far neceſſary to ſubmit to it, as that they who do otherwiſe are guilty of raiſing a Schiſm in the Church. So that though Epiſcopal Government be not an Eſſential Note of the Church, where it cannot be had; yet it is ſo far neceſſary to the Well-being of a Church, where it is Legally eſtabliſhed, and may be had, that it is Schiſmatical to attempt any Innovations, or raiſe Stirs and Diviſions about it. And if thus much be granted to theſe Epiſcopal Divines, they will have no need to have Epiſcopal Government put into the Article, as a Third Note of the Church; though the Good Men the Browniſts were once for having Diſcipline made a Third Note; and ſo aggrieved for the want of it, that they unchurched the Church of England. And forſook her Communion upon it; And I wonder Mr. B. ſhould forget to mention their Scruples alſo here, as fit to be conſidered.

BUT Mr. B's Eye was only upon the Churchmen, who he would fain charge with Oppoſition to this Article: Therefore he ſays farther, ſome of them deny that the Church of Rome hath erred de Fide. I have heard of ſome Churchmen, who would charitably think, that the Fundamentals of Chriſtianity have been all along preſerved among the Corruptions of the Romiſh Church; but I never heard of any that undertook her Vindication ſo far, as to ſay, ſhe was never Guilty of any Errors in Matters of Faith: And if Mr. B. knew any ſuch, he would have done well to have named them. But admit there were any, their Diſſent is no Argument to the Church to alter her Doctrine, which is the ſame that is maintained in all the Reformed Churches. I will here recite the Twenty-eighth Article of the French Confeſſion; and let the Reader judge, Whether it does not rather bear harder upon the Romiſh Church for her Errors, than our Article does. "We proteſt that "where the Word of GOD is not received, "nor any Profeſſion of Obedience made to "it, and where there is no Uſe of the Sa"craments, that there, properly ſpeaking, we "cannot judge there is any Church. There"fore we condemn the Popiſh Aſſemblies, be"cauſe the Pure Word of GOD is baniſhed "out of them; and alſo the Sacraments of "Faith corrupted, adulterated, falſified, or "even aboliſhed; and for that all kinds of Su"perſtitions and Idolatries reign in them. "Therefore we hold, that all thoſe who joyn "in ſuch Actions, and communicate with them, "do ſeparate themſelves from the Body of "CHRIST. Yet becauſe there are ſome ſmall "Footſteps of a Church in the Papacy, and "the Subſtance of Baptiſm remains among "them, the Efficacy of which depends not "upon him that Adminiſters it; we confeſs "that they that are baptized there, do not "need a ſecond Baptiſm.

CALVIN ſpeaks much after the ſame manner in his Letter to Zozinus, p. 51. "Sic Pa"piſtis detrahimus Eccleſiæ nomen, ut tamen illic "quaſdam manere reliquias Eccleſiæ non negemus. "We ſo deny the Name of a Church to "Papiſts, as only to ſay, There remain ſome "Relicks of a Church among them." Upon which account he thinks Baptiſm adminiſtred by them to be Valid, though it be adminiſtred by Idolaters, and corrupted by their Superſtitions. See alſo his Second Epiſtle to Zozinus, p. 57. And his Epiſtle to Farel, p. 258.

CHAP. III.

That the Church's Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, according to the Twentieth Article, is acknowledged by the French Church.

MANY and Various are the Objections againſt this Part of the Twentieth Article. That the Church hath Power to decree Rites or Ceremonies. 1. Some ſay, All Ceremonies are to be left to Chriſtian Liberty, and therefore the Church has no Power to enjoyn any. So the Scotch Miniſter told King James, "That he would hold Conformity "with his Majeſty's Ordinances for Matters "of Doctrine; but for Matters of Ceremony, "they were to be left in Chriſtian Liberty "unto every Man. See Rogers's Expoſ. of the Articles, p. 104.

2. Others go farther, and aſſert upon a worſe Principle, that the Church has no Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, becauſe nothing is to be done in the Worſhip of GOD, for which we have not an expreſs Divine Command in particular to determine us. Both which are ſuch abſurd Paradoxes, that Mr. B. himſelf could never digeſt them; and it muſt be owned he has writ as ſeverely as any Man againſt them. But yet he cannot let this Article paſs wholly without a Stricture. For he ſays, "The Church's Power "to decree Ceremonies, being unlimited in

" this Article, is doubted of by good Chri" ſtians." But thoſe good Chriſtians ſure were none of Calvin's Diſciples, nor governed by the Diſcipline of the French Church, which aſſerts the ſame Power to herſelf and all other Churches, without any other Limitations than thoſe expreſſed in our Article; that is, That ſuch Ceremonies be not contrary to GOD's Word, nor enforced upon Men as Things abſolutely neceſſary in order to Salvation. In the Thirty-ſecond Article of their Confeſſion, they thus expreſs themſelves: " We believe it to " be expedient, that they who are choſen Go" vernors of any Church, ſhould conſult among
" themſelves, by what Means the whole Bo" dy may conveniently be governed; yet ſo,
" as that they do not ſwerve from what " CHRIST hath appointed. And this does " not hinder, but that ſome Churches may " have peculiar Conſtitutions, as they ſhall
" think moſt convenient for themſelves." Then certainly, every Church is Judge for herſelf, both of what is expedient, and what is agreeable to the Appointment of Chriſt.

THE next Article ſays, " We exclude all
" ſuch Human Devices and Laws, as are in" troduced under Pretence of Divine Wor-
" ſhip, to bind the Conſcience; but we admit
" ſuch as ſerve to maintain Concord, and " keep every Man in due Obedience." That is, ſuch Laws as are only made for Order and Uniformity, they willingly allow of. Which they expreſs more clearly in another Confeſſion extant among Calvin's Works: " We " acknowledge, ſay they, that all Churches
" have Power to make Laws and Ordinan" ces for Eſtabliſhing a Common Polity among
" themſelves; becauſe all Things in the Houſe
" of GOD ought to be done Regularly and " in Order. And therefore all ſuch Conſti-" tutions are to be obeyed, provided they be " not Superſtitious, nor enſnare the Conſci-
" ence with an Opinion of Neceſſity. And " ſuch as refuſe Obedience in this Caſe, we
" eſteem Self-conceited and Stubborn. Cere-
" broſi & Pervicaces apud nos habentur." See this Confeſſion among Calvin's Opuſcula, p. 254.

CALVIN has a very excellent and long Diſcourſe upon this Matter, in his Inſtitutions, Lib. 4. c. 10. n. 27, &c. too long to be here inſerted: I will ſelect only a few remarkable Paſſages out of it. Firſt, he ſays, " If we " would conſult the Welfare of the Church,
" we muſt have an eſpecial Regard to that
" Rule of the Apoſtle, Let all Things be done
" decently, and according to Order. But now, be-
" cauſe there is ſuch Diverſity in the Diſpo-
" ſitions of Men, ſuch Variety in their Minds,
" and Difference in their Judgments and Tem-
" pers; no Polity can be upheld, but by cer" tain Laws, nor any Rites be obſerved, with" out a ſtated Form. Therefore we are ſo far " from Condemning the Laws which conduce
" to this End, that we ſay, To take them
" away, is to cut the Sinews of the Church,
" and render it both Weak and Deformed.
" For there can be no Order and Decency
" obſerved, as the Apoſtle requires, unleſs
" Laws be added, as certain Ties, to bind
" Men up to the Obſervance of them. Only " in ſuch Laws, Two Things muſt always be " excepted. 1. That they be not believed
" neceſſary to Salvation, and impoſed upon
" the Conſcience as ſuch. 2. That they be " not taken for Parts of GOD's Worſhip, and
" Religion be placed in them."

THEN he tells us what he means by Decency and Order. " The End of Decency is,
" partly that by appointing ſuch Rites as will " create a Reverence for Holy Things, we " may by ſuch Helps be excited to Devo" tion: Partly that our Modeſty and Gravity,
" which is commendable in all our Actions,
" may there more eſpecially appear. And
" for Order, he places it in the Governor's " Making, and the Peoples Obeying, ſuch Con-
" ſtitutions as are proper to take away all
" Confuſion, Barbarity, Contumacy, Tumults
" and Diſſenſions out of the Church; and
" preſerve its Peace and Tranquillity invio-
" lable." He gives ſeveral Inſtances in each Kind, and then concludes with theſe remarkable Words; " Ita omnes Eccleſiaſticas Conſtitu-
" tiones, quas pro ſanctis & ſalutaribus recipimus,
" in duo Capita referre licet: Alteræ enim ad Ritus
" & Ceremonias, Alteræ ad Diſciplinam & Pacem re-
" ſpiciunt. All Eccleſiaſtical Laws, which we " eſteem Holy and Uſeful, may be referred " to theſe Two Heads; ſuch as relate to Rites
" and Ceremonies, and ſuch as relate to Diſ-
" cipline and Peace." Ibid. Numb. 28, & 29.

CAN any one ſpeak plainer to the Senſe of the Article than this? If Eccleſiaſtical Laws made about Rites and Ceremonies, may be Holy and Uſeful, then doubtleſs the Church has Power to decree them.

IN the next Paragraph he anſwers the Scruples of thoſe whom he terms Over-timorous Men, Nimis Meticuloſos, who with the Flaccians in Germany, and our Browniſts in England, rejected all Church Laws about Rites and Ceremonies, as mere Human Inventions, becauſe they were not particularly preſcribed in the Word of GOD. To theſe he anſwers, " That
" ſuch Laws are founded on the Authority
" of Scripture, and ſo are both Human and Divine." Which he illuſtrates by the Inſtance of Kneeling at publick Prayer, which is the Law of France and Geneva. " If it be asked,
" ſays he, Whether this be an Human Tra" dition, which any Man may refuſe or neg" lect at Pleaſure: I anſwer, It is ſo Human,
" as alſo to be Divine. It is of GOD, as it is " Part of that Decency commended to us
" by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiv. 40. But it is of " Men, as it particularly points out and ſpe" cifies what the Scripture only declared in " general. By this one Example we may " make an Eſtimate of all Things of this " Kind. For as much as CHRIST hath not " only fully compriſed, but alſo clearly ex" pounded to us in his Holy Oracles, the " whole

" whole Sum of true Righteouſneſs, and all " the Parts of Divine Worſhip, and whatever " is neceſſary to Salvation; in theſe Things " we are only to hear our Maſter. But in " outward Diſcipline and Ceremonies, he " would not particularly preſcribe what we " ſhould do (becauſe he foreſaw that would " depend upon the different Condition of " Times, and he did not judge one Form " agreeable to all Ages:) therefore in this " Caſe we muſt have recourſe to thoſe Gene- " ral Rules he has left us, and thereby ſquare " thoſe Laws that are proper to be made for " the Preſervation of Order and Decency in " the Church."

THIS is a full Anſwer upon true Principles, to thoſe who condemn all Ceremonies as Human Inventions in the Worſhip of GOD, that are not particularly commanded in Scripture. It were eaſy to add many other Teſtimonies out of Calvin's Epiſtles, and Beza, Spanheim, Chamier, Amyrault, Rivet, Turretin, &c. but as ſome of theſe have been produced by others, ſo I need not heap up Authorities in ſo plain a Matter. I only add the Advice which Calvin gave to Farrel, and wiſh all who are concerned would follow it. " Uſe your Endeavour, " that the Brethren may not pertinaciouſly " contend about Ceremonies: We are free " from all Men, yet let us be the Servants of " Peace and Concord. Nos ab omnibus Liberi, " ſervi ſimus Pacis & Concordiæ." They are Words to be written in Letters of Gold, and would all Men but follow the Direction which is given, we ſhould have no Diſputes about Ceremonies in the Church. Vide Calvin. Ep. 5. ad Farrel. p. 5.

BUT alas, Men have been ſo terrified with frightful Arguments againſt Eccleſiaſtical Laws about Rites and Ceremonies, that they are ſcarce themſelves when they think of them. They have been made believe that it is uſurping Dominion over their Conſciences, a Depriving them of their Chriſtian Liberty, adding to the Word of GOD, inventing new Sacraments, and impoſing other neceſſary Terms of Salvation upon them, more than what CHRIST appointed. Now though it might be ſufficient to anſwer all this in general, by ſaying, That whatever Force there is in any of theſe Objections, it holds as well againſt the French Church as ours, whoſe Doctrine I have ſhewn to be the ſame: Yet becauſe theſe Arguments are Popular, and gain by Noiſe and Terror, what they could not do by Strength, I will conſider them diſtinctly, and ſhew what Anſwers are given to each of them in particular, by the beſt Writers of the French Church.

CHAP. IV.

That to decree Rites and Ceremonies, is no Uſurping Dominion over Mens Conſciences, or infringing their Chriſtian Liberty.

THE Ground of this Objection is only the falſe Notion Men have entertained of the Freedom of Conſcience and Chriſtian Liberty; which conſiſts not in being ſet free from Obedience to Human Laws and Decrees, whether of Church or State (for we are obliged to obey for Conſcience Sake) but it is an internal Liberty of the Mind, which cannot be bound to take any Doctrine or Law to be of abſolute Neceſſity to Salvation, but only ſuch as are impoſed upon it expreſsly by GOD alone. For no King nor Church can make new Articles of Faith for us to believe, nor impoſe their Laws with an Opinion of Abſolute and Immutable Neceſſity, as if the Things commanded were not indifferent in their own Nature, but ſimply and univerſally Neceſſary, ſo as no Human Power could alter them upon any Occaſion whatſoever: For ſo to tye up the Conſcience belongs only to GOD. But if our Judgment be left free as to the Nature of Indifferent Things, then it is no uſurping Dominion over our Conſciences, or infringing our Chriſtian Liberty, though we be reſtrained in the outward Act, upon juſt Reaſons, by the Laws of Church or State. For Charity reſtrains our Chriſtian Liberty in ſome Caſes without infringing it, and ſo may the Laws of juſt Authority in others.

THIS is the Reſolution of [b] Calvin, Rivet and Spanheim, whoſe Authorities are produced at large by Dr. Durel. I add that of Beza, in his Epiſtle to the French Church in London; where he has theſe Words of the ſame Import. " For as much as the SPIRIT of GOD " commands us to ſubmit to every Ordinance of " Man, as well the Magiſtrate, who is the " Guardian of Political Order, as alſo thoſe " who Preſide and Watch over our Souls: " —— It follows, that he abuſes his Chri- " ſtian Liberty, who obeys not willingly ei- " ther the Magiſtrate, or thoſe who are " ſet over him in the LORD." Beza, Ep. 24. p. 151.

[b] Calvin. Inſt. Lib. 4. c. 10. n. 31. Rivet. Synop. Pur. Theol. Diſp. 35. n. 39. Spanheim, Theſ. de Libert. Chriſt.

AGAIN, Pag. 155. "The Uſe of Indifferent Things may be reſtrained, either by "a Civil or Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. For "though GOD only can properly bind the "Conſcience, yet ſo far as either the Magiſtrate, who is the Miniſter of GOD, judges "it convenient for the Common-wealth, "that ſomething in its own Nature lawful, "ſhould not be done; or the Church having "reſpect to Order, Decency and Edification, "makes Laws about Indifferent Things; ſuch "Laws are carefully to be obſerved by the "Faithful; who are bound in Conſcience, not "knowingly and wittingly with a Rebellious "Mind, either to do what is prohibited, or "omit what is commanded."

BEZA did not think Church Laws about Rites and Ceremonies were againſt Mens Conſciences, when he requires Submiſſion to them for Conſcience Sake. So does alſo their late Eminent Profeſſor at Geneva, Mr. Turretin, and his Contracter Riiſſenius; ſaying, "That "Obedience is due to Human Laws, whether "Political, or Eccleſiaſtical, and that for Conſcience Sake.— Paſtors have Power to make "Canons and Conſtitutions about Indifferent "Things, which concern not Faith and "Worſhip, but Decency and Order; ſuch as "Time and Place, and the Forms and Rules "of Prayer, and Sermons, and Adminiſtrati-"on of Sacraments, and Faſtings, &c." Riiſſen. Compend. Turretin. p. 228.

THEY all ſay, indeed, That ſuch Canons do not directly and immediately oblige the Conſcience, as GOD's Laws do, by Virtue of any Intrinſick Power of their own; but their Obligatory Power is from the Command of GOD, who bids us obey them for Conſcience Sake. But this Diſtinction, as explained by them againſt the Papiſts, though miſtaken by ſome, does very much confirm what I have been aſſerting, That it is not againſt Conſcience and Chriſtian Liberty to obey the Decrees of the Church, provided they be not thruſt upon us as the unalterable Commands of GOD, or preſcribe in Matters of Faith and Subſtantials of GOD's Worſhip, which they have no Power to meddle with, but only Indifferent Things, and Circumſtantials of Religion.

CHAP. V.

That to decree Rites and Ceremonies, is not to add to the Word of GOD.

THIS Objection proceeds upon the ſame miſtaken Principle with the former; to wit, That the Scripture has preſcribed not only the Subſtantials, but alſo the Circumſtantials of Religious Worſhip, and that it is unlawful to uſe any Rite or Ceremony not expreſsly enjoined in Scripture. The Abſurdity of which Principle is ſufficiently expoſed by Learned Men, [c] who ſhew, that it is impoſſible to have any Religious Worſhip at all, if this Principle ſhould throughly prevail. All I am here to prove is, That it is no Doctrine of the French Church to aſſert, That the Decreeing Rites and Ceremonies is adding to the Word of GOD. They have often Occaſion to ſpeak of this in their Diſputes with the Papiſts, whom they urge with this Argument againſt Unwritten Traditions; ſo that we cannot be at a Loſs to know their Senſe about it. Chamier has two or three whole Chapters againſt Bellarmin and others upon this very Point, That it is unlawful to add to the Word of GOD: But then he explains his Meaning to be only in Matters of Faith and Manners neceſſary to Salvation. "If "nothing be to be added to the Scripture, "nor taken from it, then the Scripture "perfectly contains all Things neceſſary to "Salvation." Tom. 1. de Canone, Lib. 8. c. 6. n. 1.

HE does not ſay the Scripture contains all Rites and Ceremonies that are lawful to be uſed, and that to uſe any other, is to add to the Word of GOD: No, he expreſsly denies that to be any Part of the Controverſy. Therefore when Hoſius urged, That the Reformed Churches were as much guilty of adding to the Word of GOD as the Papiſts, becauſe they had ſeveral new Rites and Cuſtoms not to be found in Scripture; "He charges him with "Ignorance of the Thing in Diſpute, for "turning the Controverſy from Doctrines of "Faith, to Points of Diſcipline and Ceremony, which Chriſtians have always "thought to be Matters of free Obſervation." Ibid. Lib. 9. c. 11. n. 3.

HE inſtances in the Cuſtom of Singing the Pſalms promiſcuouſly, Men and Women together, and Singing them in French Rhymes. "They ſay, ſays he, this is not to be found "in Scripture. But what they infer from "thence, That we add to the Word of GOD "as much as they, is weak and fooliſh. As "if this were to be reckoned among Articles of Faith, which ought to be always "the ſame; and not among Matters of De-"cency

" cency and Order, which may be changed " according as the Difference of Place, " Times and Perſons requires. In all ſuch " Matters as Rites and Ceremonies, St. Au- " ſtin's Counſel is beſt to be followed, which " he gives in his 119th Epiſtle, Una in his ſa- " luberrima regula tenenda eſt, &c. There is one " ſafe Rule to be obſerved in theſe; That " whatever Things we ſee or know to be or- " dained in any Church, which are not con- " trary to Faith nor Good Manners, and " have any thing in them to excite us to " Good Life, we ſhould not only not con- " demn them, but commend and imitate " them, if the Weakneſs of ſome do not ſo " far hinder, that it would be more Harm " than Good to do it." Thus far Chamier in the ſame Place, n. 5.

FROM whence it is plain, that the Crime of adding to the Word of GOD, is not committed by appointing New Rites and Ceremonies not commanded in Scripture; but in propounding New Doctrines of Faith and Manners, which GOD has not commanded as Things neceſſary to Salvation. And the Reaſon which Chamier gives for this Difference is very ſound and rational: Becauſe the one are preciſely determined by GOD; the other not ſo, but left to the Liberty and Diſcretion of every Church, to determine as ſhe ſees Occaſion, by that General Rule of the Apoſtle; Let all Things be done decently and in Order.

DR. Rivet ſtates the Queſtion about adding unwritten Traditions to the Word of GOD, after the very ſame manner. " The Queſtion, " ſays he, is not about Things pertaining " to Decency and Order in Eccleſiaſtical " Aſſemblies, the Circumſtances of which, " we confeſs, are not found particularized " in Scripture; but only General Rules, out " of which Church Governours, whoſe Duty " it is to keep Order in the Church, may " with Prayer to GOD, and Conſideration " of Circumſtances, appoint What, and how " far any Thing is to be obſerved in the " Church." Therefore he charges the Papiſts with changing the State of the Controverſy, from Matters of Faith, to the Matters of Ceremony, when they object to Proteſtants, That they add to the Word of GOD by their unwritten Ceremonies, as much as Papiſts do by their unwritten Traditions in Matters of Faith. This he juſtly terms Falſe Argumentation. Rivet, Exercit. 13. in Gen. ii. p. 71.

TO the ſame Purpoſe Peter du Moulin in his Anſwer to Perron, of the Novelty of Popery, Lib. I. c. 51. p. 151. ſpeaking of the pretended Power and Authority of the Church to add unto Scripture, ſays, " Notwithſtanding, " there be many Things that concern Eccle- " ſiaſtical Polity, and outward Order, which " we do not reject, although they be not in " Scripture; provided there be nothing in " them againſt Good-Manners, and that they " exceed not in Number, and that they be " not given as neceſſary to Salvation, and " equalled to the Doctrine of Faith contain- " ed in Scripture."

SO again in his Buckler of Faith, or Defence of the French Confeſſion, againſt the Exceptions of Arnoux the Jeſuit. Arnoux having ſaid, that the Fifth Article of the Confeſſion rejected all Obſervations and Cuſtoms of the Church, under the Notion of Additions to the Word of GOD; he replies, That this was a Miſrepreſentation of their Belief: " It is " falſe, that we reject all Traditions; for " beſides that the Scripture itſelf is a Tradi- " tion, there are many Things which concern " Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and Exterior Order, " which are not ſpecified in the Scripture. " We only reject thoſe Traditions, which, if " they were received, the Conſequence would " be, That the Scripture contained not all " Doctrines neceſſary to Salvation." Buckler of Faith, p. 42.

THESE Allegations do ſufficiently ſhew us the Senſe of the French Church, That by Additions to the Word of GOD, they do not mean as our Diſſenters do, Eccleſiaſtical Laws or Traditions about Indifferent Rites and Ceremonies; but ſuch Traditions that obtrude upon Men other Doctrines of Faith, and Rules of Life, as neceſſarily required by GOD in order to Salvation.

I SHALL only add to theſe the Teſtimony of le Blanc, a Man famous for his Candor and Skill, in exact ſtating of the Controverſies betwixt Proteſtants and Papiſts. Now he tells us, " It is the Senſe of all their " Divines, that a Diſtinction is to be made " betwixt thoſe Things, wherein the Subſtance " and Body of Chriſtian Religion conſiſts, and " which are neceſſary by Divine Inſtitution, " not only to form our Faith, but our Man- " ners, and the Polity of the Church; and " thoſe other Things, which are but as it " were the Appendices to the Subſtance and " Ornaments of the Body; and which nei- " ther in their own Nature, nor by Divine " Inſtitution, are neceſſary, but indifferent, " and only received into Uſe for the Sake of " Order and Decency: Such as many Parts " of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline appointed by Ca- " non, and various Rites and Ceremonies, " both Univerſal and Particular, which are " Matters of free Obſervation; ſave only, " that no one by his own Private Authori- " ty, may, or ought to Contemn or Reject " them. All Things of the former Kind, we " aſſert to be contained in Scripture; but " not theſe latter, which are only Acciden- " tal to the Faith, and Manners, and Diſci- " pline of the Church: For there are many " Things appertaining to the Circumſtances " of Divine Worſhip and Eccleſiaſtical Poli- " ty, which we confeſs are not delivered par- " ticularly in Scripture, but left to the Pru- " dence of Church-Governors, under this Ge- " neral Precept, That all Things be done " Decently, and in Order, in the Church of " GOD.

" GOD. And therefore, he says, the Doctors " of the Romish Church labour in vain, to " prove the Reformed Churches as much guil- " ty of adding to the Word of GOD as them- " selves; because they observe some Rites and " Ceremonies in Divine Worship and Eccle- " siastical Polity, which are not particularly " enjoined in Scripture; for the Controversy " is not about these." Le Blanc Thes. de Scripturæ Plenitud. Part. 1. n. 6, & 7. p. 56.

CHAP. VI.

That the French Church does not reject Ceremonies, because they are significant, but likes them the better upon that Account.

SOME there are, who allow the Church Power to Decree Rites and Ceremonies, but except against the undue Use and Exercise of this Power; by which they tell us, she presumes to go beyond her Commission. 1. In Appointing Significant or Symbolical Ceremonies. 2. In making the Observance of them necessary to Communion and Salvation. 3. In imposing them with Scandal and Offence to such as cannot comply with them, and thereby causing Schism and Division in the Church. Now, though these Objections concern not the Twentieth Article, which only challenges a Legal Power to the Church, to decree Rites and Ceremonies; yet because they are some of the most Popular Objections against Ceremonies, now that we are upon this Subject, I will here examine them, by the Rules and Principles commonly received in the French Church; and shew that the Church of England is neither so Singular, nor so Assuming, as some falsely represent her.

FIRST, Some accuse her for appointing Significant Ceremonies; which yet is really a Commendation: And it would be a more real Objection, if they were otherwise. For to what purpose should any Church appoint useless Ceremonies, that signify nothing? But where is the Harm, so long as they signify nothing but what is good and useful, and decent and becoming the Worship of GOD? Calvin would have liked them the better for this; for it is one of the Conditions which he requires in Lawful Ceremonies, " That " they be Significant and Expressive of our " Modesty and Gravity in Religious Actions, " and that they be such Rites as will conciliate " a Reverence for Holy Things, and be pro- " per Helps to excite us to Piety." Which sure they cannot do, without signifying something

HE says farther, " That the Decency of a " Ceremony consists in an Aptitude to cre- " ate Veneration for Sacred Mysteries; so as " it may prove, Idoneum ad Pietatem Exercitium, " an Exercise conducing to Devotion; or at " least, may be such a Congruous Ornament " to the Sacred Action, as may have its use " in admonishing the Faithful with what Mo- " desty, Religion, and Reverence they ought " to handle Sacred Things." Calvin, Inst. Lib. 4. c. 10. n. 28, 29.

Now can all this be done by Ceremonies that signify nothing? But he says farther, " Ut Pietatis Exercitia sint Ceremoniæ, ad Christum " rectà nos deducant necesse est; That Ceremo- " nies may be Exercises or Instruments of " Piety, they should be such as will lead us " in the right Way to CHRIST." But Insignificant Ceremonies can never do this: They must be Significant, if they be Instructive; and they must put Men in mind of something that is Good, if they be Instruments of Piety, and helps to Devotion: For Devotion is an Internal Act of the Mind, and cannot be raised by Outward Ceremonies, any otherwise, than as they signify something that may move and affect up by its Signification.

IN another Place he expressly approves such Ceremonies as are Symbolical. " Lest any " one, says he, should accuse me falsely, I " would have all Pious Readers here bear me " witness, That I do not contend about Ce- " remonies, which serve only for Decency and " Order; nor yet against such as are either " Symbols of, or Incitements to that Reve- " rence which we owe to GOD." De Reform. Eccles. c. 16. p. 278. Vel etiam Symbola sunt & Incitamenta ejus, quam Deo deferimus, Reverentiæ.

CALVIN then did not think it was to appoint New Sacraments, if the Church used any Symbolical Rites, which by their Significancy might put Men in mind of some Spiritual Duty, and be outward Signs to prompt Men to inward Devotion. If all such Ceremonies were New Sacraments, the French Church, which followed Calvin's Rules in this Matter, would have been as guilty of making New Sacraments, as any other: For there are abundance of Significant Ceremonies in her Liturgy, and Forms of Divine Service. I will Instance in some few.

THEIR Book of Discipline, cap. 10. Art. 1. requires " all Persons to uncover their Heads, " and bow their Knees, both at publick and " private Prayers, in the Church, and in the " Family, for this Reason; to wit, That they " may evidence by those External Signs the " inward Humility of their Hearts, and that " Homage which they pay to GOD." Are not these then Significant Rites, if they be External External Signs to evidence and signify Mens Humility and Devotion? They say, "The "contrary Customs argue great Irreverence, "and give Suspicion of Pride, and Scanda- "lize those that fear GOD, and therefore "they reject them." Significancy, we see, is their Reason still: For, as they appointed the one, because they signified Reverence and Humility; so they forbid the other, because they signified Irreverence and Pride, and were an Hindrance to other Mens Devotion.

IN the Form of Ordination described in the same Book, cap. 1. Art. 8. there are Four significant Ceremonies appointed. "1. The Mi- "nister that ordains, must pray standing up- "right below the Pulpit. 2. He must lay his "Hands upon the Head of the Person to be "ordained. 3. He that is to be ordained "must kneel humbly on his Knees. 4. When "he is ordained, the Ministers must give him "the Right Hand of Fellowship before the "People. And this Form is unanimously to "be observed in all the Churches of the King- "dom."

THEY do not here tell us, as before, what those Ceremonies signify; but the Signification of each is so very natural and obvious, that there needs no Comment to explain them. The Minister who ordains, prays standing, to signify that he acts in the Name of GOD, and by his Authority. He lays his Hands upon the Head of the Person to be ordained, to signify the conveyance of Spiritual Blessing to him. The Person to be ordained, kneels upon his Knees, to signify his Humility. And when he is ordained, the Ministers gives him the Right Hand of Fellowship, to signify that they now acknowledge him for a Fellow-labourer and Partner in the Work of the LORD. These are as significant Ceremonies as any used in the Church of England; even as Kneeling at the Communion, or Bowing at the Name of JESUS, or Signing with the Sign of the Cross in Baptism; and whatever may be objected against the one for their Significancy, may be as well objected against the other. Yea, Sitting itself is a Significant Ceremony; and some Men, when they please, can make use of its Significancy as an Argument to prove it to be the most convenient Gesture at the Communion; because it signifies our Rest in CHRIST. So Didoclavius of old in his Altare Damascenum, Sitting is commended per significationem Mysterii, for its signifying a Mystery; to wit our Rest in CHRIST. And the Authors of the Admonition to the Parliament, say, It betokens Rest and full Accomplishment of Legal Ceremonies in CHRIST. See these Authors in Hamon l'Estrange Allyance c. 1. p. 29.

ONE would hardly have guessed at this Signification, had not those Ritualists expounded it to us: However, we are glad to find it has no worse a Signification in England; for in some Countries it has a Signification which is intolerable. The Arians in Poland use it to signify their Familiarity with CHRIST as their Fellow-Creature. For which Reason it is forbidden by Four General Synods of Lithuania and Poland; to wit, the Synods of Sendomeir, Cracow, Peterkow, and Ulodislow, which may be seen in the Consensus Polonus, and Harmony of Confessions. I have often thought, if there was no other Reason why Sitting should not be used, this one Thing were enough to give any Man a Dislike to it, That it is no where used as a necessary Posture, save only by these Arians, who first pleaded the Example of our SAVIOUR. For though it be used in the Dutch Church, (which, as Dr. Forbes has proved, [d] is the only Protestant Church that uses Sitting,) yet it is not used by them as any necessary Posture, but as an indifferent Rite and Circumstance of the Sacrament, which may be used or not used, as the Church thinks fit: For they condemn none that practise otherwise. And for the French Church, they are so far from thinking Sitting necessary, that they absolutely forbid it, and enjoyn a contrary Posture; as I shall prove when I come to speak particularly to that Point. At present I only observe, That the Significancy of Ceremonies is no just Exception against them, unless they signify something that is Evil; in which Case they ought to be rejected; as the Polish Churches reject Sitting at the Communion-Table for the Reason I have mentioned: But if they signify nothing but what is Good, and are useful Helps to stir up our Minds to Piety and Devotion, then their Significancy is their Commendation; and he that quarrels with them upon that account, must declare himself an Adversary to Calvin and all the French Church. As Mr. B. in Effect does, when he sets himself formally to prove in a whole Chapter (cap. 12. of Engl. Nonconf.) that the Cross in Baptism is made an Human Sacrament; 1. Because it is made an Outward Visible Sign of Grace. 2. Because it is an Instituted Means of Conveying Grace. 3. Because it is a Covenanting Sign. 4. And a Symbol or Badge of the Order professed. The Main of this is a false Charge; but so much of it as is true, will equally hold against Calvin and all the French Church. 1. It is false that it is made any Visible Sign of Grace. 2. It is as false that it is made a Covenanting Dedicating Sign to GOD, for it is only a Declarative Sign to Man, or a Token that the Person baptized is received into the Church, and is obliged by Virtue of his Baptism, to live as a Member of CHRIST. This being no more than what is common in all Societies, to take in Members by some solemn Rite of Admission, in Token that they own themselves Members of the Society, as Dr. Stillingfleet well explains it. Unreas. of Separ. p. 350.

[d] Forbes Irenic. Lib. 2. c. 16.

p. 350. 3dly, It is falſe that it is made an Inſtrument or Means of Conveying Grace to Men, unleſs he could prove that the Church pretends to apply the Merits of CHRIST by it, as ſhe does by the other Sacraments. But as to its being a Profeſſing Sign, or Badge or Symbol of our Profeſſion, ſignifying our Admiſſion into the Church of a Crucified LORD, and our Reſolution to continue ſtedfaſt in it; there is no more Harm in that than any other Ceremony which ſignifies our preſent State, and Wills, and Intentions to abide in it. Standing up at the Creed muſt be a New Sacrament, as well as the Sign of the Croſs, if this were a true Rule of Judging what were Sacraments.

BUT Mr. B. will have it, that the Croſs is a Sacrament, becauſe the Preface in the Common-Prayer-Book about Ceremonies ſays, "The Church only retains ſuch Ceremonies "as ſerve to a Decent Order and Godly Diſ-"cipline, and ſuch as be apt to ſtir up the "dull Mind of Man to the Remembrance of "his Duty to GOD, by ſome notable and "Spiritual Signification (ſo he reads it in-"ſtead of Special Signification) whereby he "may be edified." Hence he infers, "That "the Croſs is a Sacrament, becauſe it ſigni-"fies CHRIST crucified, with the Benefits "of his Croſs; and the Grace of Edification, "by ſtirring up our dull Minds by the Mo-"ral Cauſality of the Cauſe, and binding us to "Conſtancy to CHRIST.

BUT then all Significant and Edifying Ceremonies muſt be New Sacraments, as well as the Croſs, eſpecially if they be apt to ſtir up our dull Minds to the Remembrance of our Duty to GOD, by any notable and ſpecial Signification. And putting off the Hat, and Kneeling at Prayers, which are Ceremonies of the French Church, will be Sacraments as well as any other. For I hope no one will deny but that they are ſpecial Significations of our inward Reverence and Humility, and are apt to ſtir up our dull Minds to the Remembrance of thoſe Duties alſo. Then Calvin's Rules will turn all Ceremonies into Sacraments, becauſe he requires Ceremonies to be Incitements to that Reverence which we owe to GOD, and to be Exerciſes or Inſtruments of Piety, and lead us in the Way to CHRIST; ſuch as will create a Reverence in our Minds for Holy Things, and be proper Helps to excite us to Devotion, and admoniſh us with what Modeſty, Religion and Obſervance we ought to handle Sacred Actions. This, in the Church's Language, is to ſtir up our dull Minds by Significant Ceremonies; but, in Mr. B's Style, it is to make New Sacraments.

AS if nothing could put us in mind of our Duty, but preſently it muſt commence a Sacrament; whereas there is ſcarce any thing in the World but may ſuggeſt to us ſome good Thought in an ordinary Way, and work upon us as external Objects do; or ſeaſonable Words and good Admonitions; which yet it would be new Divinity to term Sacraments, though perhaps ſome of them might bid fairer for the Name than the Sign of the Croſs, or any other ſignificant Ceremonies of the Church, upon which Mr. B. faſtens the Imputation. Nothing can be a Sacrament, but what is inſtituted to convey ſupernatural Grace in a ſupernatural Way. Now let any Man prove that the Church appoints any Ceremonies for this Purpoſe, and I will own ſhe deſerves the Charge of uſurping GOD's Authority: But if it cannot be ſhewed that ſhe appoints them to ſignifie, or by their Significancy to work any other than common and ordinary Effects upon our Minds, in an ordinary and natural Way; ſuch as external Objects, and decent Circumſtances of Action (which may be Helps to Devotion) commonly do work; then Men do ill to wound and terrifie the Conſciences of the Simple, by making them believe ſo falſe a Charge againſt the Church; which tends not only to the Prejudice of Truth and Peace here, but to the Scandal of all the Churches of the Reformation, and more particularly the Church of France, whoſe Principles and Practice I have ſhewed to be the ſame with thoſe of the Church of England, and conſequently as liable to the ſame Accuſation.

I HAVE inſiſted a little the longer upon clearing and vindicating this Point, becauſe the Charge that is brought againſt the Church is ſo very heavy, and urged with ſo much Confidence by thoſe that form it.

CHAP. VII.

That the French Church makes her Rites and Ceremonies as neceſſary as the Church of England does.

THE next Charge againſt our Church is, That ſhe uſes an exorbitant Power in making indifferent Rites and Ceremonies become neceſſary; which is to alter their Nature, and make New Terms of Communion and Everlaſting Salvation. To which I anſwer, That the Charge is falſe in every Part of it. The Church neither alters the Nature of Indifferent Things, nor makes them properly New Terms of Communion, or Terms of Salvation. Firſt, She makes no Alteration in the Nature of Indifferent Things, but only reſtrains their their Uſe in the Outward Act, without laying any Doctrinal Neceſſity upon them, which is the only Thing that can alter their Nature. She does not ſay, they are abſolutely neceſſary and immutable in their own Nature, nor impoſe them as neceſſary for all Times and Places, nor oblige any other Church beſides her own Members to take them for Particular Commands of GOD which no Man can alter; but all ſhe requires is, Conformity in the Outward Act, for the Sake of Peace and Union, and Decency and Order. This Declaration is made by the Church herſelf in the Preface of the Common-Prayer Book, about Ceremonies. "Thoſe Ceremonies which "remain, were retained for a Diſcipline and "Order, which upon juſt Reaſons may be "altered and changed, and therefore are not "to be eſteemed equal with GOD's Law. —— "And in theſe our Doings, we condemn no "other Nations, nor preſcribe any Thing but "to our own People only. For we think it "convenient, that every Country ſhould uſe "Ceremonies, as they ſhall think beſt to the "ſetting forth of GOD's Honour and Glo-"ry." This certainly is the true Liberty of all Chriſtian Churches, to appoint what indifferent Ceremonies they think fit for their own Members: But it is no Part of Chriſtian Liberty, for the particular Members of any Church, to contemn and ſlight the Laws of their Community, when made by the forſaid Rules, about Indifferent Things. For the Things are ſtill indifferent in their own Nature. And yet they are bound to obſerve them. Nor is there any Abſurdity at all in this, to ſay, That Things are ſtill indifferent and free in their own Nature, though a Neceſſity of outward Obedience be laid upon us, unleſs the Wiſdom of all Churches be deceived. Le Blanc ſpeaks in the Name of all the French Church, when he ſays, "That "Rites and Ceremonies appointed by the "Church, are Obſervationes Liberæ, Matters of "Free Obſervation; yet ſo, as that no one "by his Private Authority, may, or ought "to contemn, or reject them." They may be commanded then, and yet remain Indifferent and Free, according to the true Notion of Indifferency, which he there gives; which is, "That all Things are Indifferent "and Free, which are not neceſſary either "in their own Nature, or by Divine Inſti-"tution." Le Blanc Theſ. de Script. Plenit. Par. 1. n. 6. p. 56.

NOW the Ceremonies of our Church are thus Indifferent and Free, even after they are appointed: For they are neither ſaid to be Neceſſary in their own Nature, nor by Divine Inſtitution: but only neceſſary to be obſerved for Order's Sake. And when Men have diſputed never ſo long, this is the Caſe of the French and all the other Churches, that act and ſpeak judiciouſly about Indifferent Things.

BUT the Church of England makes Rites and Ceremonies neceſſary Terms of Church-Communion, and conſequently neceſſary Terms of everlaſting Salvation. Here I ask again, Does the Church make any of her particular Rites ſo neceſſary to be obſerved by any Doctrinal Neceſſity, as to ſay, Except ye uſe theſe particular Rites ye cannot be ſaved? Does ſhe ſay, that if Men be not ſigned with the Croſs in Baptiſm, their Baptiſm is not Valid to make them Members of CHRIST, and Heirs of Salvation? If they do not receive the Euchariſt Kneeling, they cannot otherwiſe be Partakers of CHRIST's Body and Blood? No: But ſhe enjoins theſe Ceremonies, and no one can ordinarily have the Sacraments without them: And does that make them new Terms of Communion and Salvation? If ſo, then the French Church, and all Churches in the World, yea Diſſenters themſelves, are guilty of making new Terms of Communion. I will put a plain Caſe, in which I think all Churches are concerned. Suppoſe any Man deſires to be admitted to Baptiſm, or the Communion, in any Church; is it not neceſſary for him to comply with the particular Orders of that Church, as to the Time when, and the Place where, thoſe Sacraments are to be adminiſtred? He muſt go to a Church, and not to a River or a Pond, to be baptized; and he muſt meet the Aſſembly in a Church, and not in an Upper-Room; in the Morning preciſely at a ſtated Hour, if he will hold Communion with them. Now, ſuppoſe any Man ſhould be ſo weak, or ſo perverſe, as to refuſe Communicating with the Church, becauſe ſhe has appointed this particular Time and Place for Adminiſtring the Sacraments, (which are confeſſed to be indifferent Circumſtances in themſelves) and ſay, CHRIST appointed no ſuch Terms of Communion, but left all Times and Places indifferent; and therefore he could not communicate with them, unleſs they left him at Liberty to do it where and when he pleaſed. Would this be a juſt Charge againſt the Church, and prove her guilty of adding other neceſſary Terms of Communion, becauſe ſhe determines theſe particular Circumſtances of Time and Place, which are indifferent in their own Nature? I ſuppoſe, none but a Delirous, or a Phanatical Man will think ſo. And yet this is the Charge brought againſt the Church of England, for determining ſome indifferent Circumſtances relating to the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments: A Charge that recoils upon the Head of thoſe that make it, and wounds all Proteſtant Churches, and more particularly the French; as I ſhall have Occaſion more particularly to ſhew, when I come to treat of Baptiſm, and the Communion of the LORD's-Supper; where I ſhall make it appear, that they require ſeveral indifferent Circumſtances, Rites, and Ceremonies remonies to be obſerved, and yet do not think themſelves guilty of making new Terms of Communion. All I ſhall ſay farther here, only to note in general the true Notion of making new Terms of Communion; the Want of attending to which, ſeems to be the only Ground of this Objection. Now a Church is guilty of making new Terms of Communion, when ſhe requires any Thing as a neceſſary Condition, which CHRIST has given her no Authority to require. And this may be done. 1. By requiring the Belief of ſome New Article of Faith. Or, 2. Some ſinful Practice, as Conditions of Communion. Or, 3. By preſcribing any Rite as ſimply neceſſary in its own Nature, which is indifferent; and condemning all others as ſinful. For this indeed were to correct CHRIST's Laws, and to alter the Nature of indifferent Things; which no Church has Power to do. Nor, 4. may ſhe impoſe her own Ceremonies upon other Churches, and refuſe to communicate with thoſe that will not receive them. For all Churches are at Liberty to preſcribe Rites for themſelves; and if any Church undertakes to preſcribe to others, ſhe goes beyond her Commiſſion, and makes new Terms of Communion. But the Caſe is different, when a Church only preſcribes Rites and Ceremonies for the Members of her own Communion; for then ſhe does nothing but what CHRIST has given her Authority to do; and therefore to determine of particular Circumſtances of Time, Place, Habit, Geſture, Methods, Forms, &c. for the Sake of Order and Decency, and Peace and Union, cannot be making new Terms of Communion, becauſe ſhe has a general Commiſſion from CHRIST, to take Care that all Things be done decently and orderly, to the Benefit and Edification of the Church. Indeed, to ſpeak properly, ſuch Determinations are ſo far from being New Terms of Communion, that, in Strictneſs, they are no Terms of Communion at all; unleſs any one will call all Orders and Rules of Church-Government and Diſcipline, Terms of Communion; the Conſequence of which will be, that all Churches in the World, even the Objectors themſelves, are guilty of making new Terms of Communion; becauſe they determine many particular Circumſtances, ſuch as Time, Place, Geſture, &c. in Adminiſtring the Sacraments, which CHRIST has left undetermined. And is the Church of England only guilty, when all other Churches do the ſame?

IF it be ſaid, That the Church of England refuſes to admit any to her Communion, who will not comply with her Orders: I anſwer, 1. That in all Caſes this is not true; for ſhe admits many to her Communion, which do not in all Things comply with her Orders. 2. In many Caſes, it is not the Church that refuſes Men her Communion, but they that refuſe themſelves. For if Men will not meet the Church at the Time and Place appointed for Divine Service, they can have no Communion with her; but that is not the Church's Fault, but their own, who refuſe to comply with her Neceſſary Orders; which ſhe makes not Terms of Communion, but only Rules of Diſcipline, to preſerve Unity and avoid Confuſion in her Religious Aſſemblies. 3. In ſuch Caſes, where the Church thinks it expedient to deny her Communion to thoſe who refuſe to obey her Rules, as to thoſe who refuſe to be Signed with the Croſs in Baptiſm, or receive the Communion Kneeling, or from a Miniſter who wears a Surplice, or reads Common-Prayer, and the like; either it muſt be ſaid, That the Church has no Power to make ſuch Rules; or if ſhe has Power to make them, ſhe has Power to ſee them kept and obſerved, by inflicting proper Cenſures upon thoſe that contemn them. And yet theſe Rules are not, properly ſpeaking, Terms of Communion. For as a Judicious [e] Writer well obſerves, "There are Two diſtinct Reaſons why a "Church may deny her Communion to any "Perſon; either becauſe they refuſe the "Terms of her Communion, or becauſe they "refuſe to ſubmit to her Laws and Rules of "Worſhip: And therefore it is a ridiculous "thing to ſay, That a Church makes every "thing a Term of her Communion, for the "Refuſal of which ſhe denies her Communion to her own Members. We may call "theſe, if we pleaſe, the Terms of her particular Communion; but this is no greater "Fault for any Church to make ſuch Terms "of Communion, than to make Laws for Government and Diſcipline; for ſuch Terms "are nothing elſe." They are but the ſame Terms which are required in the French Church, by many Canons of her Book of Diſcipline and Synods; of which more hereafter in their proper Place.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

That the French Church does not think the Impoſition of an Uniform Obſervance of the ſame Rites and Ceremonies, to be the Cauſe of Schiſm; nor does ſhe abrogate or diſpenſe with her Laws, becauſe ſome are offended at them.

THE laſt Objection againſt the Church's Privilege to appoint Rites and Ceremonies, is made by thoſe who are always haranguing about the Miſchiefs of Impoſitions, which they ſay are the Cauſes of Schiſm and Diviſions in the Church; which might be cured, if either the preſent Laws about Ceremonies were abrogated, or but ſo far diſpenſed with, as to leave all Ceremonies indifferent in their Uſe to all ſuch as have any Scruples againſt them. What Truth there is in this Argument, as it relates to the Caſe of the Church of England, has been examined by others [f]; who have ſhewed, 1. That ſome Circumſtances indifferent in themſelves, are neceſſary to be determined for the Preſervation of Order in Religious Aſſemblies, ſuch as Time, Place, &c. for there can be nothing but Confuſion without them. 2. Others are neceſſary to be determined upon the account of Decency in GOD's Worſhip; that no publick Scorn be put upon GOD, under Pretence of publick Worſhip. 3. That to leave all the Externals of Religion at liberty, is ſo far from being the Cure of Diviſions, that it would be a greater Cauſe of them. 4. That the Opinion of Diſſenters, that Indifferent Things are unlawful in the Worſhip of GOD, is no juſt and neceſſary Reaſon for parting with them; becauſe Religion can never be ſtripped ſo naked, but there will remain ſome Indifferent Rites and Uſages, which ſome Men or other will condemn or ſcruple, as the Quakers do Praying with their Hats off, and Appropriating Churches to Divine-Service, &c. 5. That it is of much greater Conſequence to common Chriſtianity, to deliver Men from ſuch ſuperſtitious Conceits, (as the imagining Indifferent Things to be ſinful) and to maintain true Goſpel-Liberty and Freedom, than to receive ſuch Men into the Church, by indulging their Superſtition. 6. That though parting with two or three Indifferent Ceremonies, would be of no great Conſequence, in order to cure a Schiſm; yet to part with the Doctrine of the Lawfulneſs of Indifferent Things, and throw away all Ceremonies upon that Principle, would be to corrupt the Goſpel, and to enſlave the Conſciences of Chriſtians. For which Reaſons the Church is not obliged, nor cannot conſent, to part with all Indifferent Things that any Men think fit to ſcruple; though ſhe has Power to alter Rites and Ceremonies, as Prudence, Charity, and Expediency ſhall direct her. Now all that I ſhall add to theſe Conſiderations, is to ſhew that they go upon the very Principles and Practice of the French Church.

FOR firſt, She thinks it neceſſary to determine many Indifferent Circumſtances and Ceremonies in GOD's Worſhip, partly for Order's Sake, to avoid Confuſion, and partly to preſerve the Decency and Dignity of GOD's External Worſhip, that Men may not Affront him, under Pretence of Honouring him. Upon this Account, ſhe gives many Rules about Praying, and Preaching, and Adminiſtring the Sacraments, &c. That all Men ſhall pray Kneeling, and with their Hats off: That Baptiſm ſhall not be adminiſtred but in Church-Aſſemblies: That the Communion ſhall be received Standing, and that the Miniſter ſhall deliver it ſingly into every Man's Hand, and uſe a certain Form of Words at the Diſtribution of it to every Individual; with many the like Preſcriptions in her Liturgy and Canons; but eſpecially her Book of Diſcipline, which contains above Two hundred Canons, whereof no inconſiderable Number are to regulate Matters in Church-Aſſemblies, and the publick Exerciſe of Divine Service.

2. SHE is ſo far from thinking that ſuch Impoſitions are the Cauſes of Schiſm and Diſſenſion, that ſhe declares Uniformity, and Injunctions to bind Men to it, to be the beſt Preſervers of Union, and the ſureſt Way to avoid Scandals and Offences. As on the contrary, to leave the Externals of Religion to every Man's Liberty, is the Way to create Factions and Diviſions, Tumults and Diſorders, and to bring innumerable Scandals and Inconveniences into the Church. Upon this Account, as I have proved before, in the Chapter about Uniformity and Subſcription, ſhe requires all her Miniſters to ſubſcribe, and in ſome Caſes ſwear to obſerve all the Rules preſcribed in her Canons, Book of Diſcipline, and Liturgy; which ſure is not to leave every Man at Liberty to practice as he pleaſes. I ſhall repeat none of theſe Canons here, ſave only two or three, which more expreſsly deliver her Judgment and Opinion about the Uſefulneſs of Uniformity, and Expediency of Injunctions in order to preſerve Union.

The Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 3. Art. 1. has this Canon. "It being repreſented, that the different Courſes taken in divers Provinces, about the Choice, Examination, and Ordination of Miniſters, brought with it a world of Inconveniences, This Synod judged it exceeding needful to eſtabliſh an expreſs Canon, to be obſerved Exactly, Univerſally, and Uniformly, by all the Provinces.

So again, cap. 6. Art. 14. "That hereafter there may be a General Uniformity in the Churches of this Kingdom, in the Adminiſtration of the Lord's Supper, and all Scruples by reaſon of Difference and Singularity ariſing in weak but honeſt Hearts, uncapable of diſtinguiſhing between the Subſtance and Circumſtance of the Sacred Action, may be prevented; all Paſtors are enjoined to abſtain from any New or Private Methods of their own." And that we may not think theſe Private Methods, which they condemn, were any other than ſuch as only concerned the Outward Circumſtances and Rites of Adminiſtration, the Canon goes on to tell us what they were; viz. ſuch as theſe, "The Reading the Words of Inſtitution between the ordinary long Prayer, and that appointed particularly for this Sacrament, which ought to be read after: The Uncovering the Bread and Wine, whilſt they read the Words of Inſtitution: The Bringing the People up in Companies unto the Table, there to ſit or ſtand; whereas they ſhould make them come up one by one unto it: The Suffering the People to give the Cup one to another, it being contrary to the expreſs Letter of a Canon of our Diſcipline, which ordereth Paſtors to deliver it."

These are plain Evidences, that the French did not think it moſt adviſable, to leave all Men to their own private Methods in Celebrating Divine Service, and Adminiſtring the Sacraments: They knew that if Men were left to do as they would, they would have very different and ſingular Ways; and that would raiſe Scruples in the Minds of weak People, and tempt them to think either that it was not the ſame Action, or that one Way was much better than another; the Conſequences of which muſt be Doubtings and Jealouſies, if not Sidings and Factions, and following one Teacher above another, with many ſuch Scandals and Inconveniencies that might attend it. To remedy all which, the Church knew no better Method, than to oblige all her Miniſters and People to a ſtrict Uniformity, that there might be no Occaſions of Strife among them.

This was the Ground of that famous Oath, called the Oath of Union, which was drawn up in the Synod of Privas, 1612. and confirmed in the following Synods of Tonneins, Vitre, and Alez, and runs in this Form. "We knowing by Experience, that nothing is more neceſſary to preſerve the Peace and Welfare of the Church, than an Holy Union and Concord, both in Doctrine and Diſcipline, and their Dependencies, and that the Church cannot long ſubſiſt without it, —— have, in the Name of all our Churches, Sworn and Proteſted to remain inſeparably united in that Confeſſion of Faith, and keep inviolably that Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, which is Eſtabliſhed in the Reformed Churches of this Kingdom.

That which I chiefly remark in this Oath, is the Reaſon given for Impoſing it; to wit, The Preſervation of Union and Concord in the Church; to maintain which, they did not think it ſufficient that they were all agreed in the ſame Confeſſion of Faith, unleſs they kept inviolably to the Obſervation of the ſame Diſcipline alſo; and therefore they entered upon a moſt ſtrict Oath to keep it Uniformly, and ſee that all their Churches walked by the ſame Rule in the Publick Exerciſe of Divine Service. I hope no one will ſay, this was to leave all Indifferent Circumſtances, Rites and Ceremonies, to every Man's Liberty, to uſe or not uſe at his Pleaſure.

3. If any particular Church or Perſons were aggrieved with theſe Impoſitions, and deſired to be freed from them, either by altering the Laws that enjoined them, or relaxing their Force, and leaving them to their Liberty, their Petitions were ſeldom granted; unleſs in ſome very weighty Caſe, that obliged them to change a Law, or grant a general Diſpenſation. It was a Rule made in the Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 8. Art. 8. "That even National Synods ſhould not innovate any Thing in the Confeſſion of Faith, Catechiſm, Liturgy, and Diſcipline of the Church, unleſs the Matter had been firſt propoſed by one or more Provinces, and unleſs alſo it were a Thing of very great Importance." I ſhall have Occaſion hereafter to ſhew upon many particular Heads, how often they refuſed to make Alterations, or ſo much as tolerate Practices contrary to their Rules of Diſcipline, though often importunately ſollicited to do it; not only by ſingle Perſons, but ſometimes whole Churches. Mr. Diodati deſired to have a New Tranſlation of the Bible brought into the Church, but his Petition was rejected in the Synod of Alanſon. The Church of Montauban deſired leave to continue an old Cuſtom that had been among them; which was for Elders to deliver the Cup to the People in the Sacrament, but they could not be heard in the Synod of Alez, becauſe it was contrary to a Rule of their Diſcipline, and therefore their Paſtors were peremptorily commanded to conform to the eſtabliſhed Order. The Churches of Niſmes and Montpellier made freſh Inſtances for the ſame Privilege in the Synods of Alanſon and Charenton, but they had no Anſwer, ſave this, That they ſhould conform themſelves to the Canon of their Diſcipline, on Pain of being proſecuted with all Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And ſo in many the like Caſes.

4. IF it be ſaid, This Rigor was not uſed toward Men that ſcrupled or doubted of the Lawfulneſs of any Part of their Diſcipline, but only when they deſired Alterations or Diſpenſations upon ſome other Reaſons; I anſwer, That is not true; for their Book of Diſcipline ſuppoſes and provides againſt many ſuch Caſes, and gives Directions what is to be done with Men that Diſſent, and ſtir up Contention, and break the Church's Union about any Point of Doctrine, or of Diſcipline, or about the Form of Catechiſing, or Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, or of Publick Prayers, or the Celebration of Marriage. And the Rules they give for ſatisfying Diſſenters in theſe Caſes, are firſt; "That the Conſiſtory "of the Place ſhall endeavour to remove their "Scruples with all Meekneſs, from the Word of "GOD: But in Caſe they do not reſt ſatisfied with that, then their Arguments are "to be heard before a Claſſis, after that before "a Provincial Synod, and laſt of all before "a National Synod; unto which if they refuſe to yield full Obedience, and in expreſs "Terms diſclaim their Errors; they are to "be cut off by Excommunication from the "Body of the Church." Book of Diſcipl. c. 5. Art. 31.

IT cannot be denied, but that this Canon ſpeaks of Diſſenters, that have real Scruples upon them, touching Diſcipline and Ceremonies: Yet the Method which the French Church orders to be taken with them, is not to accuſe herſelf of unjuſt Impoſitions, and comply with their Errors by a needleſs Alteration of her own Laws, or ſuch Indulgences as would breed greater Diſturbances and Confuſion; but to admoniſh and inſtruct them ſoberly out of the Word of GOD, Time after Time, till they utterly refuſed to hear her Voice: In which Caſe ſhe would have them no longer treated as Sons, but caſt out of her Communion, as incorrigible Offenders againſt the Diſcipline of the Church.

THEY now who condemn the Church of England, for not complying with Diſſenters ſo far as to leave all Things at Liberty that any Men ſcruple and think unlawful, and would have her Reform by the Example of the beſt Reformed Churches, would do well to conſider, whether the Example they propound for her Imitation, does not rather exceed her in Rigor and Stiffneſs, (as they call it) and teach her a more ſevere Diſcipline inſtead of Condeſcenſion. It appears from what I have Diſcourſed, that there is no other Power challenged or exerciſed by the Church of England, in this whole Matter relating to Rites and Ceremonies, but what is as fully exerciſed in the French Church; which is abundantly ſufficient to juſtifie (ſo far as I have undertaken to do) the Twentieth Article of our Church, from the Exceptions of Mr. B. and all others, who have raiſed cauſeleſs Clamours againſt it. I will now proceed to conſider what is ſaid againſt the remaining Articles.

CHAP. IX.

An Anſwer to ſome Reflections made on the Twenty-firſt, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fifth Articles, by Mr. Baxter.

THE Twenty-firſt Article of our Church is ſo entirely levelled againſt the Popiſh Doctrines, relating to the Calling and Infallibility of General Councils, that one would wonder what any Proteſtant Writer could find to except againſt it. The Words of the Article are, "General Councils may "not be gathered together without the Commandment and Will of Princes. And when "they be gathered together (for as much as "they be an Aſſembly of Men, whereof all "be not governed by the Spirit and Word of "GOD) they may err, and ſometimes have "erred even in Things pertaining unto GOD."

NOW Mr. B. ſays, "Too many deny "what is here ſaid againſt gathering General Councils without the Will of Princes; "and that Councils may err in Things pertaining to GOD." But who are theſe Good Men that have ſuch Scruples upon them? Mr. B. names none, but leaves his Reader to gueſs, who will eaſily imagine that he can mean no other but Papiſts, ſince none but Papiſts deny either Part of this Article. I ſhould abuſe my Reader's Patience, ſhould I go about to prove, that the French Writers are none of thoſe who deny it: I ſhall only obſerve one Thing; That by the ſame Reaſon Mr. B. mentions this Article as excepted againſt by too many, he might have ſaid the ſame of the next that follows, however he came to miſs it. For the ſame Perſons that deny the Twenty-firſt Article, deny alſo the Twenty-ſecond, which ſays, "The "Romiſh Doctrine concerning Purgatory, Par-"dons, Worſhipping and Adoration, as well "of Images as Reliques; and alſo Invoca-"tion of Saints, is a fond Thing, vainly in-"vented, and grounded upon no Warranty "of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the "Word of GOD." It muſt be owned, there are too many who deny this Article; But what then? Muſt the Church wave this Article too, in Compliance with the Scruples of thoſe who deny it? No, Mr. B. himſelf does not think fit to ſay ſo. Then I think he ought not to have mentioned the Twenty-firſt Article upon that Account; ſince the very ſame Perſons who defend the Infallibility of General Councils, defend the Doctrines of Purgatory, Pardons, Image-Worſhip, &c.

He ſays next, The Twenty-third Article ſeems defective about Calling Miniſters, to them that are for uninterrupted Canonical Succeſſion. He names none, but if he meant any true Miniſters of the Church of England, I dare ſay he was miſtaken. For they who ſpeak the moſt for uninterrupted Succeſſion, never ſaid the Article was defective. For they ſay, Uninterrupted Succeſſion is implied in the Article itſelf, which ſpeaks of Ordinary Vocation in theſe Terms: "Thoſe we ought "to judge lawfully called and ſent, which "be choſen and called to this Work by Men "who have Publick Authority given unto "them in the Congregation, to call and ſend "Miniſters into the Lord's Vineyard." Now Perſons who have Publick Authority to call others, are ſuch as have received that Authority from others before, who had Power to give it; and they again received that Power from others ſo qualified before them; and ſo on, till the Succeſſion may be traced up even to the Apoſtles. And this is true in all ordinary and common Vocation of Miniſters, which the Article ſpeaks of. As for extraordinary Caſes, and Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity, I know no one that inſiſts upon Uninterrupted Succeſſion in them; for ſuch Caſes come not within the Compaſs of ordinary Rules, which are only made for common and ordinary Caſes. The French Confeſſion in the Thirty-firſt Article, which ſpeaks of the Vocation of Miniſters, expreſsly puts in this Caution: "We believe that it is not law-"ful for any Man of his own Authority "to take upon himſelf the Government of "the Church, but that every one ought to "be admitted thereunto by a lawful Election, "if it may poſſibly be done, and that the "Lord do ſo permit it. Which Exception "we have expreſsly added, becauſe that ſome-"times (as it hath fallen out in our Days) "the State of the Church being interrupted, "God has raiſed up ſome Perſons in an ex-"traordinary manner, for to repair the Ruins "of the decayed Church." I diſpute not now whether this be true of Calvin and their firſt Reformers, that they had ſuch an extraordinary Vocation from God: That perhaps would admit of ſome Debate: But the Thing I hence obſerve, admits of none, viz. That they were wholly for Uninterrupted Succeſſion, except in extraordinary Caſes [f]. And that is ſufficient to juſtify both the Senſe I have given the Article of our Church (which I ſay implies an Uninterrupted Succeſſion) and alſo thoſe whom Mr. B. wrongfully charges with believing the Article to be defective.

The Twenty-fourth Article Mr. B. paſſes over, though I do not ſee why he might not as well have taken it in his Way, and cenſured it among the reſt; at leaſt, with as good Reaſon as he does the Twenty-firſt. For though it be very true, "That it is a Thing "plainly repugnant to the Word of God, "and the Cuſtom of the primitive Church, "to have publick Prayer in the Church, or "to miniſter the Sacraments, in a Tongue "not underſtood of the People:" Yet there are too many who deny this; and that was Mr. B.'s good Reaſon againſt the Twenty-firſt Article, which will hold every jot as well againſt this.

However the Twenty fifth Article could not eſcape him. He ſays, "Some great Church-"men think contrary to it, that Confirma-"tion is a Goſpel-Sacrament." He was too wiſe to name Names, leſt perhaps the Perſons might have juſtified themſelves, and proved him a Miſrepreſenter of their Doctrine. But admit the Charge were true, what is it to the Church, or her Articles? "Why then, he "ſays, it is evident that many Subſcribers "are great Nonconformiſts, and if they ſpeak "their Mind, are excommunicated ipſo facto." The Inference from all which, if there be any Senſe or Reaſon in what he ſaid at firſt, muſt be, That they who thus ſpeak or write againſt the Articles, may be Good Men for all that, and it is very rigorous in the Church to excommunicate them for it. The pretended Rigor of this Excommunication will be conſidered in another Place, when I come to ſpeak of the Canons of the Church: Here I only obſerve what a Character Mr. B. gives many of theſe his Good Men, who have Scruples againſt the Articles, when he ſtyles them Subſcribing Nonconformiſts: The Engliſh of which is, Either that they ſubſcribe againſt their Conſcience, or at leaſt make no Conſcience to write againſt their Subſcription: Neither of which are very Commendable Qualities in any Men, and leaſt of all in Men of Repute and Character for their Goodneſs. But be their Goodneſs what it will in other Reſpects, the Church has no Reaſon to alter her her Doctrine for their Scruples, any more than is done in the Church of France, whose Doctrine I have proved to be the same with our Articles in every Point that any of these Good Men scruple. And so I have done with Mr. B's Exceptions, which he professes to be made not in his own Behalf, but in Behalf of others.

CHAP. X.

Of some other Objections against the Articles, made by other Dissenters.

IN the Year 1660, there was a Book written by divers Ministers of several Counties in England, Intituled, Reasons shewing the Necessity of Reformation of the Publick Doctrine, Worship, Rites and Ceremonies, Church-Government and Discipline: In which several other Objections are advanced against the Articles, under the first Head of Reforming the Publick Doctrine.

THEY object against the Sixth Article, "That it is defective, because it enumerates "not all the Books of the New Testament,, "but only says, All the Books of the New "Testament, as they are commonly received, we "do receive and account Canonical. And "because in the same Article it is said, By "Canonical Books we understand such, of "whose Authority there was never any "Doubt in the Church. Now, say they, it "is well known, that there have been Doubts "in the Church, about the Epistle of St. "James, the Second of Peter, and several other "Books and Passages in the New Testament. "Therefore the Article is defective in not "enumerating all the Books of the New Te- "stament."

NOW the Question is, Whether the Article do not as plainly signify what Books of the New Testament are to be received as Canonical, as if it had particularly enumerated them: Since it says, All the Books of the New Testament, as they are commonly received, we do receive and account Canonical. Who is there so ignorant, as not to know what Books of the New Testament are now commonly received in all the Churches of Europe, Popish as well as Protestant? Therefore there was no Occasion to enumerate them, because there was no Doubt made about them. "Yes, they say, there have been "Doubts in the Church about the Epistle of "St. James, the Second of Peter, and several "other Books and Passages in the New Testa- "ment." But this is either a great Mistake, or a great Fallacy: For if they mean the Catholick Church, or the Major Part of it, it is a great Mistake to say there ever were any such Doubts in the Church: But if they mean particular Mens Opinions, then it is a Fallacy put upon the Reader, to call such Doubts in the Church; for the Article denies not that some of these Books were doubted of by particular Persons, but the Meaning is, that they were never generally doubted of in the Catholick Church. And therefore it was sufficient to say, We receive them as they are commonly received, and ever have been received, without any Doubt in the Catholick Church.

IF this were any real Defect in the Article, or Objection against it, the Argument would be much stronger against the Confessions of most of the Reformed Churches, which neither enumerate the Books of the Old Testament, nor the New, but only say, They receive the Canonical Scripture, or the Writings of the Prophets and Apostles, as it is in the Saxon Confession, Art. 1. The Helvetick, Art. 1. Scotish, Art. 18. Bohemick, Art. 1. and that of Wittenberg, Art. 29. which uses the very Expression of our Article, to declare what Books of the Old Testament, as well as the New, are to be taken for Canonical Scripture, without enumerating either the one or the other. "By the Holy Scripture we un- "derstand those Canonical Books of the Old "and New Testament, of whose Authority "there never was any Doubt in the "Church."

YEA, the French and Belgick Confessions, which are the only Confessions that particularly enumerate all the Books both of the Old and New Testament, do not enumerate the several Passages of the Old and New Testament, of which some have doubted: Such as the last Chapter of St. Mark, the Beginning of the Eighth Chapter of St. John, and that Part of the Twenty-second Chapter of St. Luke, which relates the History of our SAVIOUR's Bloody Sweat. For though some particular Persons doubted of these Passages, yet the Church never did; and they are now commonly received for Canonical and Authentick. Upon which Account, the French Church had no need to specify these particular Places, but only to say they received the Gospels of Mark, Luke, and John, as they ever were, and now are commonly received. And what justifies the Church of France, justifies also the Church of England from this Trifling Objection.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Thirty-fifth Article, and the Homilies.

ANOTHER of their Attacks is upon the Thirty-fifth Article, which ſays "the "Book of Homilies contains a Godly and "Wholſome Doctrine neceſſary for theſe "Times, and are therefore to be Read in "Churches by the Miniſters diligently." Now by this Means, they ſay, Men muſt ſubſcribe falſe Doctrines or Aſſertions, becauſe there are ſome Things falſe in the Homilies; and they inſtance in Two Particulars. [g] 1. In the Homily of the Time and Place of Prayer, Part 2. p. 147. it is ſaid, "That Plurality of Wives "was by ſpecial Prerogative ſuffered to the "Fathers of the Old Teſtament, not for ſatiſ-"fying their carnal and fleſhly Luſts, but to "have many Children, becauſe every one of "them hoped, and begged oft-times of GOD "in their Prayers, that that Bleſſed Seed "which GOD promiſed ſhould come into the "World to break the Serpent's Head, might "come and be born of his Stock and Kin-"dred." Now this, they ſay, is falſe, becauſe every one knew out of what Tribe CHRIST was to iſſue.

TO which I anſwer: 1. That ſuppoſing this were a Miſtake in the Homily (as it is not, but only a Miſtake in the Objectors) yet it is not of that Conſequence, as to hinder the Book of Homilies from being a Book that contains a Godly and Wholſome Doctrine, fit be read in Churches: Which is all that Men ſubſcribe; and not as the Objectors ſay, That we ſubſcribe to Falſe Doctrines, and Falſe Aſſertions: Which is a Falſe Aſſertion in them. It is well known, that Clemens's Epiſtle, which has the Story of the Phœnix in it, was anciently read in many Churches. So was alſo Hermes Paſtor, and the Homilies of Ephraim Cyrus, and ſeveral other Fathers, which perhaps had as great Miſtakes in them. And what comes nearer to my Purpoſe, Beza tells us, That Calvin's Homilies upon Job were read both publickly and privately with great Benefit, in many Parts of the French Church, where they ſupplied the Place of Paſtors, when Paſtors were wanting. Beza Pref. Homil. Calvin in Job.

AND Hottinger ſays the ſame of Bullinger's Decads of Sermons, That in Holland and the reſt of the Belgick Churches, they were ordered by Publick Authority, from the Beginning of the Reformation, to be read in ſuch Places as wanted Miniſters to preach to them. Hotting. Hiſt. Eccl. Sect. 16. Part 4. p. 960.

NOW it is great odds, but that in two ſuch large Volumes as Bullinger's Decads, and Calvin's Homilies upon Job, ſome nice Criticks, if they would ſet about it, might find as great Faults as our Objectors ſuppoſe this to be which they mention. But what then, muſt the Churches of France and Belgium be ſaid to ſubſcribe to the Truth of every Title contained in thoſe two Books, Miſtakes and all, becauſe they think them to contain a Godly and Wholſome Doctrine, fit to be authorized publickly to be read in their Congregations? No certainly: Beza himſelf was not ſo great an Admirer of Calvin, as to think that all his Sermons and Comments were without their Failings. He expreſsly owns the contrary in one of his Epiſtles, where yet he defends his Catechiſm as free from Faults, againſt the Exceptions of one Adrian, a Dutchman. Beza, Ep. 4. p. 41.

AND this were a ſufficient Anſwer to our Objectors, ſuppoſing the Paſſage in the Homily they quote to be a real Miſtake.

2. BUT after all, the Miſtake is only in themſelves, and not in the Homily. For the Homily does not ſpeak of ſuch Fathers, as might know that the Promiſed Seed was to iſſue out of the Tribe of Judah; but of Abraham and Jacob, who lived long before Judah was born, or the Promiſe confined to that Tribe; which was not till Jacob's Death at leaſt, who then firſt made mention of the Shiloh's Coming out of the Tribe of Judah. And this our Objectors could not be ignorant of; but if they had dealt fairly with the Homily and their Readers, they had ſpoiled their own Objection. For though the Fathers of other Tribes could not pray that the Promiſed Seed might come of their Stock and Kindred, after the Promiſe was clearly underſtood to be confined to the Tribe of Judah; yet Abraham and Jacob might pray for this, as doubtleſs they did; and that is all the Homily aſſerts, as any one will be ſatisfied that conſults it.

THEIR other Objection is againſt a Paſſage in the Second Part of the Homily of Alms, p. 160. where are theſe Words. "The "ſame Leſſon doth the HOLY GHOST alſo "teach, in ſundry Places of the Scripture; "ſaying, Mercifulneſs and Almſgiving purgeth from "all Sins, and delivereth from Death, and ſuffer-"eth not the Soul to come into Darkneſs. A great "Confidence may they have before the high GOD, "that [g] Note, That the Words which the Objectors alledge, are not in the Homily, of the Time and Place of Prayer, but in the Firſt Part of the Homily, Entituled, An Information for them which take Offence at certain Places of the Holy Scripture.

" that ſhew Mercy and Compaſſion to them that are " Afflicted." Now over-againſt theſe Words in the Margin is cited Tobit 4. Whence our Objectors conclude that the Homily ſtands chargeable with theſe two groſs Errors. 1. That the Book of Tobit is to be taken for Holy Scripture. 2. That it was indited by the HOLY GHOST.

TO which I anſwer, Firſt, That there is no Neceſſity of either of theſe Charges. For though Tobit be cited in the Margin, yet the firſt Text alledged is not to be found in Tobit, but in the Canonical Book of Proverbs, xvi. 6. By Mercy and Truth Iniquity is purged. And the next Expreſſion, Mercifulneſs delivereth from Death, may as well be aſcribed to Solomon alſo, Prov. x. 2. and xi. 4. where he ſays, Righteouſneſs delivereth from Death, that is Merciſulneſs, as the Original ſignifies, and as it is ſometimes tranſlated.

SINCE therefore the principal Part of theſe Texts are to be found in the Canonical Scripture, it is reaſonable to believe the Homily refers to them in that Expreſſion, " The " ſame Leſſon doth the HOLY GHOST alſo " teach in ſundry Places of the Scripture:" And though Tobit and Eccleſiaſticus be cited in the Margin at the ſame time, that does not prove them to be Canonical Scripture indited by the HOLY GHOST.

BUT, Secondly, Suppoſe the Homily had ſaid this in expreſs Terms; yet the ſame Candor and favourable Conſtruction, which is commonly allowed by all Proteſtant Writers to the Primitive Fathers, will take off the ſeeming Harſhneſs and Soleciſm of this Expreſſion. For though the Fathers had generally the ſame Opinion of the Canonical and Apocryphal Books that we have, yet many of them in their free and popular Diſcourſes cite the Apocryphal Books under the Title of Holy Scripture, and Canonical Writings, inſpired by the HOLY GHOST. And yet we do not think fit to condemn them, or yield up their Teſtimonies to the Papiſts, but expound them to an allowable Senſe by a ſoft and favourable Interpretation. Thus Chamier obſerves, that Athanaſius in his Book de Virginitate cites Eccleſiaſticus under the Title of Θεία Γραφή, Divine Scripture; and Hilary on the 135 Pſalm calls the Author of the Book of Wiſdom by the Name of Prophet, Id docet Propheta. Yet he will not allow that theſe Fathers believed theſe Books to be ſtrictly Canonical and Inſpired Writings, becauſe the ſame Fathers elſewhere call them Apocryphal. Therefore, he ſays, " Though they cited them ſometimes cum Præ- " fatione honoris, with ſuch honourable Titles, " yet it does not follow that thoſe Books are " Canonical, though the Fathers alledge them " under the Name of Holy Scripture and the " HOLY GHOST, becauſe they did not then " ſtand to examine their Authority to the " quick." Chamier. Tom. 1. de Canon. Lib. 4. c. 4. n. 5.

AND ſo Rivet in like manner apologizes for them againſt Baily the Jeſuit: " We do " not deny, ſays he, That many of the An- " cients before St. Jerom's Time, or there- " abouts, did ſometimes cite the Controvert- " ed Books as Sacred and Divine Scriptures, " and commended them as Prophetical Wri- " tings. Thus St. Ambroſe calls the Book of " Tobit, Scriptura Prophetica, Prophetical Scrip- " ture. Lib. de Tobia, c. 1. Clemens Alexandri- " nus calls Baruch Divine Scripture. Pædagog. " lib. 2. c. 3. And Theodoret in his Expoſition " of Baruch does the ſame. Cyprian terms the " Hiſtory of Suſannah Divine. Lib. de Lapſis. " And St. Ambroſe does the like, de Spiritu " Sancto, c. 7. Cyprian cites the Book of Wiſdom " by the Title of Divine Scripture, de Habitu " Virg. and Cyril of Alexandria follows him " therein, Lib. 2. cont. Julian. Yet it does not " hence follow that they believed theſe " Books to be ſtrictly Canonical Scripture. — " We anſwer as Bellarmine does about the Ca- " nons of the Councils and Popes, when he " ſays, Though they be diſtinguiſhed from, " and poſtponed to the Divine Scripture, yet " they are and may be called, ſuo modo, in " their Way, Sacred and Canonical Writing, " as the Seventh General Council calls the " Decrees of Councils, Divinely Inſpired " Conſtitutions. And Pope Innocent III. cites " a Saying of St. Auſtin's out of his Seventeenth " Homily de Verbis Apoſtoli, under the Title of " Holy Scripture. So we ſay of theſe Apo- " cryphal Books, that ſome of the Fathers " call them at large, and after ſome ſort Sa- " cred and Divine; when they ſpeak not " accurately, but popularly, and to ſuch with " whom they had no Controverſy about them. " As we ourſelves ſometimes cite them, to il- " luſtrate Things contained in the Canonical " Scripture. Nor do we deny, but that " though theſe Books cannot be eſteemed " truly Canonical, yet they are of greater " Authority than any other Uncanonical Wri- " tings; to diſtinguiſh them from which, " they are comparatively by ſome in a leſs " accurate Signification termed Sacred and Di- " vine." Thus far Rivet in his Anſwer to the Jeſuit's Objection. Cathol. Orthod. Tract. 1. Q. 13. n. 7.

NOW uſe but the ſame Candor and Diſtinction for this Expreſſion in the Homilies, as theſe Learned French Men do for the Primitive Fathers, and our Objectors Argument will vaniſh into nothing. For at worſt it is but an unaccurate Expreſſion in a popular Diſcourſe, and may be allowed as well as thoſe Sayings of the Primitive Fathers; whom we do not preſently Damn as Heterodox and Abſurd, but allow them the Juſtice of a fair and reaſonable Interpretation.

CHAMIER makes the ſame Apology for thoſe Fathers, who ſay the Tranſlation of the Septuagint was made by the Inſpiration of the HOLY GHOST. Tom. 1. Lib. 13. c. 4, n. 4. " I anſwer, ſays he, That all the Faithful are " inſpired

" inſpired by the HOLY GHOST, whenever " they do any good Thing. Whence they " are ſaid to be taught of GOD, and to have " the Spirit of GOD dwelling in them. But " there are different Degrees of this Inſpira- " tion, the higheſt of which is, when Men " are ſo moved, as to be immediately and " extraordinarily illuminated, as the Prophets " and Apoſtles were. After whom there is " great diverſity of Spiritual Gifts; ſome re- " ceive more, ſome leſs of that infinite Abun- " dance, but none come up to thoſe of the " firſt Rank, though all may be ſaid to be " moved by the HOLY GHOST. As Gauden- " tius ſaid of St. Ambroſe, He will ſpeak by " the HOLY GHOST, with which he is filled, " and out of his Belly will flow Rivers of " living Water." In this lower Senſe he al- lows the Author of the Septuagint to be inſpired, but then he ſays it does not follow that their Tranſlation was properly Divine and Authen- tick. And thoſe Fathers which ſaid it was done by the Inſpiration of the HOLY GHOST, muſt be underſtood of this inferior and ordi- nary Sort of Inſpiration.

THE ſame we ſay of the Authors of the Homilies, that ſuppoſing they had quoted Tobit and Eccleſiaſticus as inſpired Writings, they muſt of Neceſſity be underſtood of this lower and ordinary kind of Inſpiration. In the ſame Senſe as Calvin ſays of himſelf, that he doubt- ed not but that he had the Aſſiſtance of GOD in Writing his Catechiſm. " In quo ſcribendo " Dominum mihi adfuiſſe confido." Ep. ad N. p. 263. And as the Synod of Tonneins told King James in their Letter to him, " That " they received with all Reverence and Sub- " miſſion his good and wholeſome Counſels, " as flowing from the Holy Spirit of GOD." Synod of Tonneins, 1614. c. 19. p. 438.

I SUPPOSE no one will think that either Calvin took himſelf to be inſpired, or that the Frenchmen at Tonneins had ſuch a Veneration for King James, as to take his Counſels for Divine Oracles. Yet they might ſay truly that his Counſels flowed from the Holy Spi- rit of GOD, in the common and ordinary way of Divine Aſſiſtance; reſerving it ſtill as the peculiar Privilege of Prophets and Apoſtles, to be extraordinarily and infallibly guided by the HOLY GHOST.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Objections made againſt the Sixteenth, Twentieth, Thirty-fourth, and Thirty-ſeventh Articles, by the foreſaid Authors.

THE ſame Authors expreſs themſelves much aggrieved at a Declaration put forth by King Charles the Firſt, and prefix- ed to the Book of Articles; wherein among other Things it is ordered, " That no Man " ſhall either Print or Preach, to draw any " Article aſide any way, nor put his own Senſe " or Comment upon it, but ſhall take it in " the Literal and Grammatical Senſe of it. Now " by this Means, they ſay, all Miniſters are " deprived of the Liberty of Interpreting any " one of the Articles, ſo that whereas it is " ſaid in the Sixteenth Article, Not every " deadly Sin willingly committed after Bap- " tiſm, is the Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST; " no Miniſter may dare to open the Nature " of deadly Sin, nor ſay that all Sins are dead- " ly, contrary to the Popiſh Diſtinction of " Sins into Mortal and Venial; nor explain " what is meant by falling from Grace. So " again, whereas it is ſaid in the Twenti- " eth Article, the Church hath Power to de- " cree Rites and Ceremonies, and Authority " in Controverſies of Faith; Miniſters may " not enquire what is meant by the Church " of England; nor what the Church of Eng- " land is; what Rites or Ceremonies ſhe may " ordain; or how far her Authority extends " in Controverſies of Faith. And if ſhe hap- " pen to ordain ought contrary to GOD's " Word, or expound one Place of Scripture " repugnant to another, or enforce any Thing " to be believed for Neceſſity of Salvation, " that is beſide the Word, no Man may que- " ſtion it: But we muſt aſſent and ſubſcribe " to it in the Literal and Grammatical Senſe " of it, or be deprived of all Eccleſiaſtical " Promotions."

AND whereas the Thirty-fourth Article treats " of the Traditions and Ceremonies of the " Church, ordained by common Authority, " &c. we muſt not curiouſly enquire what " is meant by Traditions; whether the Tra- " ditions of the Church of Rome, or any " other Church; whether Traditions be di- " ſtinct from Ceremonies, or the ſame with " them; how a Tradition may be ſaid to be " ordained; or what is meant by Common " Authority." Thus far the Objectors in their Plea for Reformation of Doctrine, p. 3.

TO which I anſwer, 1. That the Literal and Grammatical Senſe, is the Senſe in which all Churches commonly deſire their Articles to be underſtood; and to underſtand them in any other Senſe, is either to force unna- tural Interpretations upon plain Words, or make Nonſenſe of them. It is a known Con- troverſy betwixt Proteſtants and Papiſts, con- cerning the Literal and Myſtical Senſe of Scripture; where the Queſtion is not, Whether the the Scripture be ordinarily to be taken in a Literal Senſe, and ſometimes in a Myſtical: For in this both Sides are agreed; as any one that pleaſes may ſatisfy himſelf, by conſulting any of the following Authors. Chamier, Tom. 1. de ſenſu Scripturæ, Lib. 15. c. 1. ſays, "Senſum Literalem & Myſticum agnoſcimus, "We acknowledge both a Myſtical and Lite- "ral ſenſe in Scripture." So Whitaker de Script. Interpr. Q. 5. c. 2. "We affirm there is "one true, proper, genuine Senſe of Scrip- "ture, ariſing from the Words rightly un- "derſtood, which we call Literal, &c." Rivet ſpeaks often to the ſame purpoſe in his Controverſial Writings. Rivet Iſagog. in Scriptur. c. 14. It. Cathol. Orth. Tr. 1. Q. 7. n. 2.

THEREFORE the Objectors were very weak to quarrel with the King's Declaration, for ordering Men to take the Articles in their Literal and Grammatical Senſe, which is the only Senſe in which they can be Rationally underſtood, by the unanimous Judgment of all Proteſtant Writers.

2. THEIR ſeveral Inferences from thence, are altogether as abſurd, That therefore Miniſters may not explain thoſe Paſſages in the ſeveral Articles they mention, becauſe they muſt only take them in their Literal and Grammatical Senſe. They might as well have ſaid, with the very ſame Truth and Modeſty, that Proteſtant Churches forbid their Miniſters to explain any Paſſage of Scripture, or write any Comments upon it, becauſe they ſay the Scripture is to be underſtood in its Literal and Grammatical Senſe; when yet that means no more than this, That Words are to be taken in their true, proper, genuine Senſe, as they may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be taken by the Author that makes uſe of them; which is ſo far from hindring any Man from explaining them, that it is the moſt certain Rule and Guide to direct us how to explain them right, according to the true Senſe and Meaning of the Author. So much were our Objectors miſtaken, both in their Premiſes and their Concluſion.

THEIR Objection againſt the Thirty-ſeventh Article, is a very Trifle. They cannot conſent to Read it as it is now Printed, and to be taken in the Literal Senſe, becauſe it ſays, The Queen's Majeſty hath the chief Power in this Realm of England, &c. For now they think it ſhould be the King's Majeſty, ſince Queen Elizabeth is dead.

BUT why did not ſuch Mens Scruples lead them as well to complain of Subſcribing the BIBLE, and to require ſome Alterations to be made in it? For there are many ſuch Expreſſions as this in the Scripture itſelf. Thus Gen. XXXV. 20. That is the Pillar of Rachel's Grave unto this Day, muſt not be taken in the Literal Senſe; becauſe, though it was in being when Moſes wrote, yet now it is no where to be found. Gen. xlvii. 26. Joſeph made it a Law over the Land of Egypt unto this Day, that Pharaoh ſhould have the fifth Part of the Land, &c. But if we take the Words in the Rigor our Objectors do, neither Pharaoh nor the Law are at this Day in being: But they were when Moſes wrote it. And ſo was Queen Elizabeth, when the Article was made; and that is enough to juſtify the Expreſſion, as appears from thoſe Inſtances I have given out of Scripture, and a thouſand others that might be produced of the like Nature.

AND yet if this had been an inſuperable Scruple with the Objectors, to hinder them from Reading the Articles, or Subſcribing them, they might have found ſome Copies for the Eaſe of their Conſciences, where this Alteration is made. For the Editions of Mr. Rogers's Expoſition read it, The King's Majeſty hath the chief Power, &c. Though by what Authority he made that Alteration, I know not, nor ſhall I here ſtand to enquire.

CHAP. XIII.

That the Thirty-nine Articles are as compleat as the French Confeſſion.

THERE is one Objection more made by the ſame Authors, which concerns the Articles in general; that is, "That they are "defective, becauſe there are ſundry Points "of Popery condemned in them; and becauſe "they contain nothing of the Creation, of "Providence, of the Fall of Man, of Sin, of "the Puniſhment of Sin, of GOD's Covenants, "of Effectual Calling, Adoption, Sanctifica- "tion, Faith, Repentance, Perſeverance, the "Law of GOD, Chriſtian Liberty, and Li- "berty of Conſcience, Religious Worſhip, "the Sabbath or Lord's-Day, Marriage and "Divorce, the Communion of Saints, Church- "Government and Diſcipline, Reſurrection "and the laſt Judgment. All which the Scri- "pture teacheth as neceſſary, as appears by "the comprizing moſt of them in the Apo- "ſtles Creed, &c."

BUT 1. Is it not a Wonder to hear Men contradict themſelves ſo groſsly in the very ſame Paragraph? They own moſt of theſe Points are comprized in the Apoſtles Creed, and at the ſame time ſay, our Articles contain nothing of them; when yet the Articles expreſsly declare, That the Apoſtles Creed is throughly to be received and believed.

2. THEY are no more defective than the Articles of the French Confeſſion are, which exceed them but one in Number, and ſay as little upon many of thoſe Points, as our Articles do: And yet no French Proteſtant ever accuſed them for being defective.

3. THE French Writers own our Articles to be a compleat Profeſſion of the Pure and Sincere Doctrine of the Goſpel. That is the very Character which Beza gives them in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to Queen Elizabeth, before his New Teſtament.

MR. Le Moyn was ſo far from thinking them defective, that he ſays, No Confeſſion can be contrived more wiſely than the Engliſh is, and that the Articles of Faith were never Collected with a more juſt and reaſonable Diſcretion. See his Letter cited before in the Beginning of this Book. Chap. 1.

IF this be true, Diſſenters have no Reaſon to quarrel with our Articles, upon one account or other. Mr. Baxter may complain, that they are Redundant, and theſe Gentlemen, that they are Defective. But Wiſe Men will conclude, that they are both in the Wrong, and that the Church has obſerved a decent Moderation. A Learned Perſon [b] has long ago proved, againſt theſe later Objectors, That there is no Neceſſity of Reforming the Doctrine of our Church, in a Diſcourſe Intituled, No Neceſſity of Reforming, &c. whither I refer the Reader, who values Learning and Antiquity, for fuller Satisfaction. I content myſelf with having ſhewed what I here propoſed, That the Doctrine of our Church, in all the controverted Articles, is exactly agreeable to the Doctrine of the French Church; and that they who object againſt, or ſeparate from the one, upon the account of her Doctrine, muſt by the ſame Reaſon be obliged to withdraw their Communion from the other alſo.

BOOK III.

The Objections againſt the Liturgy of the Church of England conſidered, and anſwered upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

That the French Church hath a Publick Liturgy or Form of Prayers and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, which all Miniſters are obliged to uſe in their daily Service.

THE French Liturgy is ſo often mentioned in many Parts of their Book of Diſcipline and Canons, already cited in this Diſcourſe, that I think it needleſs to offer any farther Proofs, that they have an Eſtabliſhed Liturgy among them. But there is one thing which it will not be amiſs to evidence and confirm a little farther, which is, That they require all Miniſters to uſe it conſtantly, and in no wiſe to vary or deviate from it. Calvin gave this Advice to the Heads of the Engliſh Reformation in King Edward's Days; and we need not doubt but he took care to put it in Practice in his own Country. "As to what concerns a Form of Prayer and Eccleſiaſtical Rites, ſays he, I highly approve of it, that there be a certain Form, from which the Miniſters be not allowed to vary: That Firſt, Some Proviſion may be made to help the Simplicity and Unskilfulneſs of ſome. Secondly, That the Conſent and Harmony of the Churches one with another may appear. And Laſtly, That the Capricious Giddineſs and Levity of ſuch as affect Innovations, may be prevented. To which End I have ſhewed that a Catechiſm will be very uſeful. Therefore there ought to be a ſtated Catechiſm, a ſtated Form of Prayer and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments." Calvin. Ep. ad Protector. Angl. p. 41.

IF we had no clearer Light or Evidence concerning the Practice of the French Church in this Matter, this were a ſtrong Preſumption what it muſt be, conſidering how great an hand Calvin had in its Reformation. But we have moſt certain and undeniable Evidences in the Caſe. Their Book of Diſcipline in one Canon determines the Controverſy beyond all Diſpute, cap. 5. Art. 32. where it ſays, "If any Paſtor break the Church's Union, or ſtir up Contention about any Point of Doctrine, or Diſcipline, or about the Form of Catechiſing, or Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, or of our Common-Prayers and Celebration of Marriage, and conform not to the Determination of the Claſſis, he ſhall then be ſuſpended from his Office, and be farther proſecuted by the Provincial or National Synod." Here we ſee Conformity to the Liturgy and all its Parts, as well as to the Confeſſion of Faith and Diſcipline, is made neceſſary to the Church's Union. And this is demonſtrable of every particular Office contained in it.

FIRST, for their ordinary publick Prayers, they covenant as much as we do to uſe their preſcribed Form and no other. Nor do they ever pretend to deviate from this Rule in their ordinary Service, but only allow of extraordinary Prayers in ſome Caſes, and upon ſome particular Occaſions, ſuch as the Miniſter's Prayer before Sermon, and Prayers compoſed for ſolemn Faſts and Thankſgivings. He that pleaſes, may ſee this fully proved by that Learned Frenchman, Ludovicus Capellus, in a long Diſcourſe about Set Forms of Prayer, where he ſhews that their Liturgy is not a meer Directory, but a preciſe Form, to be uſed in all the Offices it appoints, by all the Miniſters of the Kingdom; and he anſwers all Objections brought againſt it. Theſ. Salmur. Par. 3. Diſp. 37.

So that Mr. B's Three Arguments againſt the Subſcription required of Miniſters in the Thirty-ſixth Canon, which is, That they will uſe in Publick Prayer the Forms preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer, and no other, are altogether as ſtrong againſt the French Church. Firſt he ſays, "The Biſhops themſelves by the King's Order, do "upon ſpecial Occaſions of Faſts and Thankſgivings, preſcribe, impoſe and uſe other "Forms: And we muſt not covenant to "diſobey them. 2. The Publick Miniſters "have and do in the Pulpits before Sermons "uſe other Forms: And ſo break this Co"venant themſelves. 3. It belongs to the Of"fice of a Paſtor to Word his own Prayers, "as well as his own Sermons: And it is ſin"ful to renounce ſo much of the Work of "the Office, which we are vowed and or"dained to." Engl. Nonconf. cap. 8. p. 43.

THEN Firſt, I ſay, the French Church is guilty of Perjury, and Breach of Vow alſo: For they uſe particular Forms preſcribed upon ſpecial Occaſions of Faſts and Thankſgivings, beſides their ordinary Form of Prayer. Calvin here will be our Witneſs, who tells us in one of his Epiſtles, "That in the Year "1541. when Germany was infeſted both with "War and Peſtilence, he prevailed with the "Magiſtrates of Geneva to appoint a ſolemn "Day of extraordinary Supplications for them, "and that he himſelf compoſed the Prayers "that were to be uſed on that Occaſion." Precationes, quibus in iis uterentur, conſcripſi. Calvin Ep. p. 263. And there is ſuch a Form now annexed to his Liturgy. Tom. 8. p. 31.

THE French Canons often mention ſuch ſolemn Days of Faſting and extraordinary Supplications, in which they uſed ſome new Prayers beſides their ordinary Service. And yet they never thought themſelves guilty of Perjury or Breach of Covenant, becauſe theſe were Caſes which in the Covenant itſelf were preſumed to be excepted.

2. THEY uſe other Forms of Prayer in the Pulpit before their Sermons, as the Miniſters in England do. Dr. Bernard, who put forth the Book, called, Biſhop Uſher's Judgment, &c. p. 315. ſays, Both the Dutch and French Churches are ſo ſtrict in this Matter, as to keep always to the ſame Form. The Geneva Liturgy allows every Miniſter to chuſe what Form he thinks moſt convenient for his purpoſe, Precationis Formulam ad id aptam Miniſter ſibi pro arbitrio deliget. Calvin Formul. Prec. Eccl. T. 8. p. 29.

THUS the Synod of St. Maixant allows the Miniſter that ordains another, to uſe a Prayer of his own compoſing, till he comes to the Prayer of Conſecration, and then he muſt uſe the Form which they preſcribe, and no other. See this cited a little after in this ſame Chapter.

ANY one that will turn over any Volume of Calvin's Sermons, will find at the End of every Homily a ſhort Prayer of his own, about the length of one of our Collects, ſuited to the Matter or Subject of his Diſcourſe, which he conſtantly uſed beſides the long Prayer preſcribed in the Liturgy to be uſed after Sermon.

3. THE French Church did not think it belonged ſo abſolutely to the Office of a Paſtor, to word his own Prayers; no, nor yet his own Sermons, as Mr. B. ſays it does; who therein condemns himſelf, that in 1661. preſented a new Liturgy to the Biſhops, which words the Paſtors Prayers for them, as much as the old Liturgy does. And I cannot think whom Mr. B. intended to ſerve by making this Objection, unleſs thoſe who reject the Uſe of all Set Forms in general, as ſimply unlawful. For if it belong to the Office of a Miniſter to word his own Prayers, then he ſins in uſing a Set Form: And if ſo, all Proteſtant Miniſters are to blame, both in the French, and all other Proteſtant Churches; for they do not always word their own Prayers, but uſe the Forms preſcribed for them. But then they do not contradict and condemn themſelves, and ſay with Mr. B. that it belongs to the Office of a Paſtor to word his own Prayers; but think that in moſt Caſes, it is better the Church by common conſent ſhould word them for him; and in ſome Caſes, it is more adviſable to word Mens Sermons for them too, where Paſtors are weak and ignorant, as many were in England, France, Holland, &c. in the beginning of the Reformation; for the Aſſiſtance of whom, Calvin's Sermons, and Bullinger's Decads, and our Book of Homilies, were allowed to be read in Churches. But of this I have ſpoken before. I now proceed with the Buſineſs of Set Forms in other Offices.

CONFORMITY to the Rubrick and Canons, which appoint the Form of Adminiſtring the Holy Communion, is ſtrictly required by the Synod of St. Maixant, under Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure; cap. 6. Art. 14. "That here"after there may be a general Uniformity "in the Churches of this Kingdom, in the "Adminiſtration of the LORD's-Supper, —— "all Paſtors are enjoined to abſtain from "any new or private Methods of their own; "as of reading the Words of Inſtitution be"tween the ordinary long Prayer, and that "appointed particularly for this Sacrament, "&c." Then, after ſeveral other Rites mentioned and enjoined, they conclude with this Sanction: "Claſſes and Synods ſhall have their "Eyes over thoſe who act contrary to this "Order, and reduce them to their Duty by "all befitting Cenſures.

HERE we have expreſs mention, not only of a Form of Prayer to be uſed, but in what Order, and with what Rites and Ceremonies the the whole Administration is to be performed; of which I shall speak more fully, when I come to consider the particular Objections that are made against our Office for Celebrating the Holy Communion. At present it is sufficient to have observed, how this Synod enjoins the use of a Set Form in Administring the Communion, as strictly as any Rule, Canon, or Rubrick in the Church of England.

I OBSERVE the same Exactness required in keeping close to the Rule and Form appointed for the Administration of the other Sacrament of Baptism, of which I will only give this one Instance out of a Canon of the Synod of Vitre, 1583. cap. 2. Art. 8. The Question being proposed, "Whether the "usual Form of Prayer should be recited at "the Baptism of Infants born out of Ma-"trimony, or in Adultery, or Incest, be-"cause there are in it those Words, Begotten "of Father and Mother whom thou hast called into "thy Church? The Synod judged, that there should be no Dispute made about it, for Reasons which they there assign. Whence I infer, that if they would not suffer any Variation to be made in the usual Form of Baptism, in so extraordinary and singular a Case, much less would they allow it to any upon common and ordinary Occasions.

AND as they strictly keep to their Form in the Baptism of Infants, so do they likewise in the Baptism of Adult Persons. The Third Synod of Charenton, 1645. composed a particular Form for the Baptism of Persons, converted from Paganism, Judaism, Mahometanism, and Anabaptism, which is inserted into the Acts of that Synod, cap. 9. where there is a long Prayer, and particular Interrogatories and Answers for each Person, containing a Renunciation of his former Errors, &c. "Which Form by Order of that Synod "is enjoyned to be used particularly on those "Occasions, whenever GOD shall be pleased "to make any Additions to his Church, of "such Converts." Synodic. T. 2. p. 447.

NEXT for the Form and Manner of Catechising, they enjoin the Use of Calvin's Catechism, and allow not the least Variation from it. Some Motions were made once and again in the Synods of Montauban and Saumur, Whether Calvin's Catechism should not be changed. But it was decreed, "That it should "be retained, without the least Alteration "made therein, nor should Ministers be suf-"fered to expound any other." Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 4. Saumur, 1596. cap. 4. Art. 2.

THE Synod of Gap, 1603. renewed the same Injunction, and added this farther Canon about the Manner of Expounding it. "That whereas some chose a particular Text, "and accommodated it to that particular "Section of the Catechism they would treat "of, they were required not to alter the "Established Order, but to conform as o-"thers did unto it." Cap. 3. Art. 5.

AND in the Synod of Loudun, 1659. cap. 8. Art. 2. it was ordered, "That in those "Churches which have two Sermons on the "Lord's-Day, the second Sermon should be "turned into an Exposition of the Catechism, "by way of Common-Place." So nice were they in prescribing not only the Form and Words of a Catechism, but the very Manner also in which it should be expounded.

THEY are as strict in observing a precise Rule and Form in Ordination of Ministers. The Synod of St. Maixant leaves the Pastors at Liberty to conceive a Prayer of their own before the Consecration, but when they come to that, they must insert these or the like Words, "We beseech thee, O GOD, to en-"rich and furnish this thy Servant, duely "chosen according to the Order Established "in this thy Church, with the Gifts and "Graces of thy HOLY SPIRIT, &c. whom "we do now dedicate and consecrate by this "our Prayer unto the Office of a Gospel-"Minister. And at these Words the Pastor "praying shall stand up, and lay his Hand "on the Head of the ordained Minister, "who shall kneel before him at the Foot of "the Pulpit. And Prayer being ended, and "the new Pastor risen up, the Ministers shall "give him the Right-Hand of Fellowship in "the Presence of all the People. And this Ca-"non and Form shall be unanimously obser-"ved in all the Provinces of the Kingdom." Synod of St. Maixant, cap. 3. Art. 4.

HERE we have not only a Form of Words, but the very Ceremonies enjoyned, to be used both at and after Consecration. And that none might vary from them, it is ordered that this Canon should be inserted into the Book of Discipline, where now it stands (cap. 1. Art. 8.) and all Swear to observe it.

NEXT for their Office of Matrimony, they are very precise in prescribing Rules about it, some of which I will here transcribe out of their Book of Discipline, which has a whole Chapter consisting of Thirty-two Canons, relating to it.

"THE Twenty-third Canon requires all "Marriages to be publickly Solemnized in the "Religious Assemblies of the Faithful, accord-"ing to the Word of GOD, and by the Mini-"stry of the Pastors, and not of any others." "Which is also a Canon of the Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 3. Art. 19.

"THE Twenty-fourth Canon says, No Mar-"riage shall be Solemnized on those Days, in "which the Sacrament of the LORD's-Supper "is Administred. And this Canon shall not "be broken but upon very great Considera-"tions, to be allowed by the Consistory. Nor "shall any Marriage be Celebrated on Days "of Publick Prayer and Fasting."

THE Synod of Loudun, 1659, cap. 10. Art. 5. prescribes Canonical Hours also. "No Mi-"nisters

" niſters ſhall Marry any Perſons in their " Churches, excepting at the Hours accuſtom- " ed for ſuch Solemnities." And there every Provincial Synod is impowered to make Canons about the Times and Places of Celebrating Marriages.

THE Synod of Vertuele, 1567. cap 10. Art. 6. Orders, " That no Marriage ſhall be Cele- " brated on any Week-Day, except there be a " Sermon, nor upon the LORD's-Day, except " at Nine a Clock in the Morning; when the " Parties are to come before Sermon, or elſe " to be turned away unmarried."

THE Fifteenth Canon of the Book of Diſcipline " Requires all Marriages to be pro- " pounded firſt to the Conſiſtory, with a ſuffi- " cient Certificate of the Promiſes."

THE Nineteenth Canon ſays, " The Chur- " ches ſhall not ſuffer any Perſons to be mar- " ried, without an ample Knowledge and Ap- " probation of them."

THE Twenty-firſt, " If one of the Parties, " who would marry, be excommunicated, the " Marriage ſhall not be permitted in any of " our Churches, unleſs the Party have done " Penance for his Offences."

THE Sixteenth " Requires the Banns of Marriage to be publiſhed in thoſe Places where " the Parties dwell: And if they have a Mind " to Celebrate their Marriage elſewhere, they " ſhall carry with them a ſufficient Certifi- " cate, that the Banns have been thrice pub- " liſhed."

THE Seventeenth Canon ſays, " The Banns " ſhall be publiſhed on three Sabbath-Days " following, in thoſe Places where the Word " of GOD is Preached, and in other Places " whenas Common-Prayers are Read."

NOW theſe Rules are in a great Meaſure the ſame that are preſcribed in our Church, or at leaſt juſtify our Canons and Rubricks, in reſtraining Marriage to certain Times and Places, and Canonical Hours, and the Benediction of a Lawful Miniſter, and the Uſe of Banns, Certificates, &c.

AND the very Office of Marriage is preſcribed in their Liturgy, to be with certain Prayers and Benedictions, and Gift of Body alſo; which is the ſame with that Expreſſion in our Office, which ſome have ſo much ſcrupled, With my Body I thee Worſhip. The Ring indeed is not uſed, as it is with us and ſome other Proteſtant Churches: But now Mr. B. ſays, that good old Objection is laid aſide; for the Commiſſioners at Sion-College in 1661, had nothing to ſay againſt it, Engl. Nonconf. cap. 2. So that I need not look farther how to juſtify it from the Rules or Practice of the French Church.

THERE is one Form more preſcribed in the French Church, which is not in ours, but left to the Diſcretion of the Biſhop, which is the Form of Excommunication, decreed by the Synod of Alez, 1620, and by the following Synod of Charenton, incorporated with the Canons of Church-Diſcipline, cap. 5. Art. 17. whereby it was made a common Form, which the Miniſters were obliged upon Oath to uſe in all the Churches of the Kingdom.

AS to a Funeral Office, it is true they have none preſcribed: But then I obſerve they are not at Liberty to uſe what they pleaſe, but under an expreſs Prohibition and Injunction to uſe none at all: For their Canons expreſsly forbid it. " At Funerals there ſhall be neither " Prayers, nor Sermons, nor any Dole of " publick Alms; that ſo all Superſtitions, and " other Inconveniencies may be avoided," ſays their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 10. Art. 5. And the ſame Decree occurs in the Synods of Orleans, 1562, Figeac, 1579. Montauban, 1594, and Saumur, 1596. In the laſt of which a Motion was made, by the Deputy of Normandy, to alter this, and permit Exhortations to be made at the Interring of the Dead. But the Synod decreed, " That there ſhould be nothing " Innovated in that Article." Synod of Saumur, 1596. cap. 3.

So that here they were as much obliged to Negative Conformity in this Point, as they were to Poſitive Conformity in the reſt. They might neither pray with, nor without a Form, at a Funeral, nor ſo much as make a Funeral Sermon to the People.

UPON the whole it appears, That every Thing among them was to be done by Rule and Order: Where they had Forms preſcribed, they were obliged to obſerve them; where any thing was to be done, and no Form preſcribed, there they were at Liberty, as we are, to make a Form for themſelves; but where any thing was forbidden, as Prayers and Sermons at Funerals, there they preſumed not to ſpeak a Word in Publick, with or without a Form; being upon Oath to follow their Rules of Diſcipline throughout the Kingdom. And I can ſee no Difference betwixt the French Church and ours in this whole Matter, ſave only that they were commonly more ſtrict in exacting Conformity to their Orders and Preſcriptions.

I HAVE hitherto conſidered the general Agreement of the Two Churches on this Point, in that both of them have an Eſtabliſhed Liturgy, to which all Miniſters in their Practice are obliged to Conform: But that is not ſufficient to Vindicate the Engliſh Liturgy, unleſs we take off the particular Exceptions that are made againſt it. Therefore I ſhall in the next Place examine what Opinion the French Church has always had of our Liturgy and Communion in particular, and ſhew that the chief Objections made againſt it by Diſſenters, may be anſwered upon the Principles and Practice of the French Church.

CHAP. II.

That the French Church allows of Communion with the Church of England, and condemns those that separate from it upon the Account of her Liturgy or Publick Service.

IF we examine the Sentiments of the French Church from the Beginning of the Reformation to this Time, we shall always find that they allowed it lawful to communicate with the Church of England in her Liturgy, and condemned Separation from it as Criminal Schism. When the discontented Exiles at Frankford, Knox, Whittingham, &c. wrote to Calvin, giving him an Account of the English Liturgy, he sent them this pacifying Answer; "That in the Liturgy, as they described it "to him, he found some Tolerabiles Ineptias, "Things not so fitly ordained as were to "be wished, yet such as might be born with "for a Season, for as much as no manifest "Impiety was contained in them. And there- "fore he advised them not to be over-rigid "in their Disputes about them." Calv. Ep. 200. ad Anglos Frankford. p. 98.

NOW as Mr. Sprint in his Cassander Anglicus long ago observed, this Answer was made to that Description which Knox and Whittingham gave him of the English Liturgy, which probably was none of the fairest Representations: Yet he so far justified it, as to say there was nothing impious and intolerable in it, that might justify a Separation. He is so free indeed as to say, there were some Remains of Popish Dregs in it; yet he would not have them divide Communion upon it, but wait for a farther Reformation.

BEZA was of the same Mind, when he wrote to the Discontented Brethren in England, conjuring them by all that is Good and Sacred, not to forsake the Communion of the Church for such Indifferent Rites and Ceremonies as were then imposed upon them. I have produced the Passage at large before, out of his Twelfth Epistle, and therefore need not here repeat it. See Book I. Chap. v.

BUT I will add what he wrote to Bishop Grindal, upon Occasion of the first Separation that was begun in England by those that disliked the Liturgy: "Non sine acerbissimo dolore "intelleximus, usque eo vexari Ecclesias, ut non- "nulli jam seorsim suos cœtus habeant. It is not "without most bitter Sorrow of Heart, that "I understand your Churches are so far di- "sturbed, as that some begin to hold separate "Meetings among you, &c." Ep. 23. ad Grindal.

NO one doubtless would have used such passionate Expressions against separate Meetings to an English Bishop, who thought Communion with the Church in her Liturgy unlawful, and that it was necessary to make a Separation from her.

BUT we have a greater Testimony from the Mouth of Beza. It was in the Year 1564. some Years after the Reformation was compleated by Queen Elizabeth, that Beza Dedicated his New Testament to her; where, in the Epistle Dedicatory he tells her, "That "England owed to her, Verum Dei Cultum, nunc "tandem a sordidissimis illis Antichristianismi sordi- "bus repurgatum, the true Worship of GOD "now at length purged from the sordid Dregs "of Antichristianism. Which Thing did de- "servedly set her above all Kings in the "World: For some Kings could not Reform "as they would; others were utter Enemies "to all Reformation; and those few that did "reform, did it in such a manner, as to leave "Religion still deformed with many Failings, "especially in Point of Ecclesiastical Disci- "pline. Some condemned Idolatry, but did "not cast out the Idols; others cast out the "Popish Mass, only to introduce another of "their own. All unanimously agreed in re- "jecting Transubstantiation, but yet many "endeavoured to establish as fond Doctrines "in its room. But you, O Queen, says he, "and Your People by Your means, enjoy "what perhaps no other Kingdom does, "The Compleat Profession of the Pure and "Sincere Doctrine of the Gospel. To which "if You add (what all good Men hope for, "and the most Faithful Bishops of Your King- "doms have long ago desired) the full Re- "storation of Ecclesiastical Discipline also; "in truth I do not see what England can "desire more of You, or Your Majesty can "confer more upon it."

HERE are none of those Home-bred Charges of Superstition, Idolatry, Antichristianism, Popery, brought against the Liturgy: But it is owned to be the Pure Worship of GOD, purged from the Filth and Dregs of Antichristianism. Our Doctrine also, contained in the Articles, is commended as a Compleat System of the Pure and Sincere Doctrine of the Gospel, free from those Errors and Defects, which may be found in some other Churches. And for Discipline, it is not so Defective as to make the Church Deformed, as he says some others are for want of it; only he wishes it were more compleatly and fully restored, which is the Church's own Wish in the Office of Commination. Now either Beza strained a Point to compliment the Queen, Queen, or elſe he highly juſtifies the Church of England: For I cannot ſee what any of her own Sons, that had ſtudied for it, could have ſaid more in her Commendation.

If from theſe we deſcend to Authors of later Days, who had better Opportunities to acquaint themſelves with the Knowledge of the Engliſh Liturgy than the former, we ſhall find as ample Teſtimonies given of it, as the Engliſh Church.

Isaac Caſaubon, a Man inferior to none in Learning and Knowledge of Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, gives this Character of the Church of England, as it ſtood Reformed by Queen Elizabeth and King James, "That no Church "in the World came nearer to the Form "of the moſt flouriſhing Primitive Church; "having obſerved a middle Way betwixt the "two Extreams of ſuch others, as failed ei- "ther by Exceſs or Defect; by which Mo- "deration ſhe obtained this Privilege, that "even thoſe who envied her Happineſs, "were conſtrained to extol her in Compari- "ſon of other Churches." Præf. Exercit. in Baron. See alſo his Anſwer to Card. Perron, cited by Biſhop Morton of Epiſcopacy, p. 4.

About the ſame Time Dr. Rivet, being then Scribe of the National Synod of Tonneins, wrote in the Name of the whole Synod, a Letter full of high Reſpect to King James, in which they not only give him in particular the Title of "the Bright-ſhining Star "in the Heaven of God's Church," with ſome other Elogiums of the like Nature; but alſo tell him, "It was their moſt earneſt de- "ſire to maintain a good Correſpondence "with the Churches of his Kingdoms." Which had been altogether falſe and ridiculous, had they believed the Liturgy or the Communion of the Engliſh Church unlawful. See this Letter in the Acts of the Synod, cap. 19. p. 438.

Ludovicus le Blanc, a Man of accurate Judgment, and one who had viewed the Engliſh Liturgy, having Occaſion to cite it, though but upon a particular Account, yet gives it ſuch a Character, as ſhews he had a general Liking of it, and did not think any Part of it ſuperſtitious or unlawful. Otherwiſe he would ſcarce have alledged it with ſo honourable a Title, as Celebris illa Liturgia Anglicana, The famed Engliſh Liturgy; and much leſs have uſed its Authority to pay ſome Reſpect to the Apocryphal Books, (as I ſhall ſhew hereafter that he does) had he believed it ſo mean or imperfect a Work, as ſome would make it. Vid. le Blanc. Theſ. de Script. Canon. & Apocr. p. 175.

I do not here add the Teſtimonies of thoſe Three late Eminent Divines, Mr. de l' Angle, Mr. le Moyne, and Mr. le Claude, becauſe their whole Letters on this Subject may be ſeen at the End of Biſhop Stillingfleet's Unreaſonableneſs of Separation. And many others I omit, which have been already produced by Dr. Durel; only I will crave leave to repeat one Teſtimony out of Ludovicus Capellus, Divinity Profeſſor at Saumur; who, in his Diſcourſe about Liturgies, among the Theſes Salmurienſes, gives this Teſtimony to the Liturgy of the Church of England, among the reſt that were compiled by the firſt Reformers in every Nation. "At the Reformation, ſays he, the "Liturgy, or Service of the Church, was "purged from all popiſh Superſtition and "Idolatry, and all ſuch Ceremonies as were "either too burthenſome, or of no Uſe to- "wards Edification. And then ſet Forms of "Liturgy were compoſed and preſcribed, by "the ſeveral Authors of the Reformation, in "the Countries where they lived; as in Ger- "many, France, England, Scotland, Belgium, &c. "varying as little as might be from the an- "cient Forms of the Primitive Church. And "theſe ſet Forms have hitherto been happily "uſed with Profit and Advantage, by the "Reformed Churches in every Nation; till "at laſt, of very late, there aroſe in England "a Sort of moroſe and froward, nice and "ſcrupulous, not to ſay ſuperſtitious Men, "who upon very ſlight and ſlender Reaſons "have thought fit not only to diſparage, but "abrogate the Liturgy hitherto uſed in the "Church, (together with the whole Hierar- "chy of Biſhops) and inſtead of the Liturgy, "have ſubſtituted the Directory (as they call "it) in its Room; which contains no certain "Form in expreſs Words, but only the Heads "of ſuch Things as either in Prayers, or Ad- "miniſtration of the Sacraments, or the Uſe "of other Rites and Ceremonies, are to be "ſaid, done, asked of God, or propounded "to the People; mean while leaving it to the "Liberty of every Paſtor to expreſs himſelf "in what Words he pleaſes. To which ſome "other furious and mad Men have added, "That it is unlawful to uſe any preſcribed "Form of Prayers, either in Publick or in "Private, and that a Godly Man cannot "with a ſafe Conſcience be preſent at "them." Theſ. Salmur. Part 3. Diſp. 47. de Liturgia, p. 658.

This he calls Matter of Fact; after which he proceeds to diſpute de Jure, concerning the Lawfulneſs and Neceſſity of Set Forms in all the Parts of Divine Service, and anſwers all the Common Pleas that are made againſt ſuch Impoſitions and Injunctions; which I leave the Reader to conſult at his Leiſure, and go on to conſider the Exceptions that are made againſt our Liturgy in particular, beginning with the Buſineſs of Aſſent and Conſent, which ſome make the Ground of all their Scruples.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

That the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to her Liturgy, &c. as ſtrictly as the Church of England.

TO make this appear, it will be neceſſary to ſhew firſt what the Church of England means by Aſſent and Conſent: For the ſtraining of this too high, and putting too rigid a Senſe upon it, ſeems to miniſter the chief Occaſion of Objections againſt it. Now it is to be obſerved, that Aſſent and Conſent are Words of the very ſame Importance, as Dr. Falkner proves from many Inſtances in our Statute-Law, and mean no more (when applied to Things to be practiſed, ordered, or uſed) ſave only an Allowance that they may lawfully be uſed or practiſed. Thus we give our unfeigned Aſſent and Conſent, to all and every Thing contained and preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer, &c. that is, that we allow it to be a Book that has nothing contrary to GOD's Holy Ordinances in it; but is ſuch as may lawfully and piouſly be uſed in all the Offices preſcribed therein, and that as ſuch we ourſelves will uſe it to the Edification of His Church. In the ſame Manner we give our Aſſent and Conſent to the Book of Homilies, "That (as the Thirty-fifth Canon expreſſes "it) they contain a Godly and Wholſome "Doctrine, neceſſary for theſe Times, and "fit to be read in Churches by the Mini-"ſters, that the People may underſtand them." Now ſuppoſing there ſhould be in any of theſe ſome leſſer Miſtakes or Errors of ſmall Moment; ſuch as a wrong Quotation of an Author, a weak Conſequence in Argumentation, a Miſapplication of a Text of Scripture, or a doubtful Interpretation of any, or a Parachroniſm in Point of Hiſtory, or the like: Theſe are Errors indeed, which in Strictneſs no Man can aſſent to as Truths (if that were the preciſe Meaning of Aſſenting:) But he may give his unfeigned Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of thoſe Books, notwithſtanding any ſuch Errors contained in them. For they are not of that Moment, as to make the Books unlawful or unfit to be uſed, as containing any falſe Doctrine, deſtructive of Faith or Manners, or any Ways tending to corrupt Mens Minds, or hinder their Edification. If they be found in all ſubſtantial Points, and every Way fitted to inſtruct and edify Men in the Truth of Chriſtian Faith and Piety, they have all that is requiſite in Strictneſs for a Man to Aſſent and Conſent to the Publick Uſe of them. Thus Dr. Falkner ſays well; "That even ſuch Perſons who conceive ſome "Things or Expreſſions preſcribed, either in "the Phraſes of Common-Prayer, or in the "Pointing of the Pſalms, or in the Tranſla-"tion of the Pſalms, or other Scriptures, not "to be ſuitable to their own Deſires or Ap-"prehenſions, (yet to be free from Sin, and "of ſuch a Nature, as that the Whole re-"maineth uſeful to guide the Exerciſes of "Piety) thoſe Perſons may ſafely, and with "a good Conſcience make this Declaration of "Aſſent, with Reſpect to other weighty Con-"ſiderations of Submiſſion to Authority, Pro-"moting Peace, Order, Unity, and the Edi-"fication of the Church in the united Exer-"ciſe of a right Religious Worſhip. Even "as ſuch Learned Men, who may judge even "our laſt Tranſlation of the Bible, not to "have fitly expreſſed the Senſe of ſome diffi-"cult Places, may yet both unfeignedly Aſ-"ſent, and earneſtly perſuade to the dili-"gent Uſe thereof, as knowing it to be of "excellent Advantage to Pious and Humble "Readers, for their profitable Learning the "Goſpel Doctrine, and the Will of GOD." Libert. Eccleſ. p. 94.

I SAY the ſame of the Homilies. A Man may ſafely, and with a good Conſcience, give Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of them, though there be ſome ſmall Errors or Miſtakes in them: I will inſtance in one: In the Second Part of the Homily againſt the Peril of Idolatry, p. 35. it is ſaid, That the Council of Eliberis, and the Council of Franckfort were held about the ſame time, and that Felix the Author of the Felician Hereſy was Preſident in the Council of Eliberis. Now all that are acquainted with Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, know this to be a Miſtake, and a Parachroniſm of near Five hundred Years. What then? May not a Man with a good Conſcience give his Aſſent and Conſent to the Homilies for all this? If Aſſent and Conſent indeed ſignified, That we believed the Homilies to be free from all manner of Miſtakes, I do not ſee how any Man could fairly Aſſent to them: For this is a Miſtake too palpable to be denied, and no Man can honeſtly depoſe that an Error is Truth, of what Kind ſoever it be. But if Aſſent and Conſent be taken as it ought to be, only for a Declaration that we believe the Book of Homilies to be a Book that contains wholeſome and ſound Doctrine, fit and lawful to be Read in Churches for the Edification of the People; then Aſſent and Conſent may be given to the Uſe of it, notwithſtanding this or any other Errors of the like Nature. For this is not to affirm that thoſe Errors are Truths (as ſome ſtrain the Word Aſſent, and ſay we mean what we do not mean) but only that it is a profitable Book, that may be piouſly uſed and read with all its Failings.

Admit now there were ſome as palpable Miſtakes as this I have mentioned, in the Liturgy itſelf; (though I confeſs, after all the Objections that have been made againſt it, I know of no ſuch) yet why might not a Man for all that, give his Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of it? Since the Intent of that Declaration is only to ſay, He believes the Book and every Office in it, to be ſuch as may be lawfully uſed without Sin, and that as ſuch he will conform to it, and uſe it. Which might be done, though it could be proved there were ſome little Miſtakes in it, ſuch as ſome pretend to ſay there is in the Rules for finding out Eaſter, and the Tranſlation of the Pſalms. For notwithſtanding this, a Man might conſent to read the Pſalms, and to keep an Eaſter with the Church by one Rule or other, which is all that is required of him. But of theſe more hereafter.

I am now to ſhew, that the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to her Liturgy and Form of Adminiſtration of Sacraments, &c. as ſtrictly as the Church of England: And I need not ſtand long upon the Proof of this Point, having in effect done it more than once already, in diſcourſing about their Liturgy and Book of Diſcipline, which I ſhewed they not only ſubſcribed, but ſware to uſe and obſerve; which is the moſt ſolemn Way of Aſſenting and Conſenting. I will here only remind the Reader of Two Things. 1. That they do not take their Liturgy for a mere Directory, preſcribing the Subſtance of Things only, and leaving particular Forms to every Man's Pleaſure; but they aſſent to it as a preciſe Rule, to be obſerved and followed without Variation in all its Injunctions. For Ludovicus Capellus makes this Difference betwixt a Liturgy and Directory; That a Liturgy preſcribes a certain Form in expreſs Words to be uſed in Prayers and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies; whereas a Directory contains only the Heads of ſuch Things as are to be ſaid or done, but leaves it to the Liberty of every Paſtor to expreſs himſelf in what Words he pleaſes. And he ſays their Form of Prayer is a Liturgy in this proper Senſe, as contradiſtinct from a Directory, which he ſets himſelf to diſpute againſt and impugn. Vid. Theſ. Salmur. Par. 3. Diſp. 47. de Liturg. p. 658. cited in the laſt Chapter.

2. They allow no Nonconformiſts to continue in the Miniſtry without Cenſure, much leſs ſuch as raiſe Contention about any Point of Doctrine or Diſcipline, or about the Form of Catechiſing, or Adminiſtration of Sacraments, &c. But if they break the Church's Union, they are to be ſuſpended by a Claſſis, and proſecuted farther by a Provincial or National Synod. Theſe are undeniable Proofs that they require Aſſent and Conſent to their Liturgy, as much as is required in the Church of England.

Therefore waving all farther Proof of this, I will now proceed to conſider the Particular Exceptions that are made againſt it.

CHAP. IV.

That the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of a Tranſlation of the Bible, which ſhe owns has ſome Failures in it.

One Reaſon why ſome Perſons have refuſed Subſcription to the Liturgy, is becauſe it requires Aſſent and Conſent to be given to an old Tranſlation of the Pſalms, which has ſeveral Errors in it. I ſhall not now ſtand to examine, whether thoſe Errors be real, or only pretended, which has been done by other Hands already; by Dr. Falkner in particular, in that Excellent Book of his, call'd Libertas Eccleſiaſtica: But, I ſay, ſuppoſing them to be real Miſtakes in the Tranſlation, yet the Liturgy may be ſubſcribed, and Aſſent and Conſent given to that Tranſlation, notwithſtanding thoſe Miſtakes. For when we give Aſſent and Conſent to this Tranſlation, we do not thereby declare it either to be the beſt Tranſlation, or abſolutely without Faults, but only ſuch an one as we can piouſly uſe and read publickly in the Church. And unleſs this be the meaning of Aſſent and Conſent, I know no Tranſlation of the Bible that could be aſſented to, till we could have a Tranſlation made by the ſame Spirit that firſt dictated the Original; which I know no Church that ever pretended to, unleſs perhaps the Roman-Catholick.

As to what concerns the Tranſlation uſed in the Reformed Church of France, it is owned on all Hands, that it is far from being accurate and perfect: Yet Miniſters are bound both by Canon and Oath to uſe no other in their Churches. Monſieur le Cene, a late Author, in his Book, Entituled, Project d' Une Nouvelle Verſion Francoiſe de la Bible, Roterd. 1696. has collected Miſtaken Paſſages enough to fill a Volume. Nor do the French Synods deny the Poſſibility of a more Exact Tranſlation; yet they would never hearken to any Propoſals made to bring in any other into common uſe in their Churches. The Synod of Montauban, 1594. c. 4. Art. 3. has an Expreſs Canon to this purpoſe. "Reſerving Liberty "to the Church for a more Exact Tranſla- "tion, our Churches imitating the Primi- "tive Church, are exhorted to receive and "uſe

" uſe in their Publick Aſſemblies the laſt " Tranſlation reviſed by the Paſtors and Pro- " feſſors of the Church of Geneva."

THIS was the Tranſlation of 1588. which the Famous Mr. Diodati many Years after reviſed and corrected, and wrote a long Letter to the Synod of Alanſon, to perſuade them to authorize his New Tranſlation; but notwithſtanding all his Arguments, among which he urges the Acknowledgment of the foreſaid Synod of Montauban, and the concurring Judgment of many other Perſons of Note and Quality; yet the Synod would not hearken to him, but ordered the Old Verſion to be continued in Uſe in all their Churches. See Diodati's Letter at the end of the Synod of Alanſon, 1637. p. 413.

AGAIN, after this, when Complaint was made in their laſt Synod of Loudun, 1659. " That ſome Paſtors read the Texts of their " Sermons in other Tranſlations differing from " that which was commonly uſed in their " Churches: That Synod decreed, That no " Perſon ſhould dare to uſe any other Ver- " ſion than that which was ordinarily uſed, " neither in Reading the Scripture, nor in " taking their Texts out of it." Synod of Loudun, cap. 10. Art. 1.

Now let any one ſay whether this be not as much requiring Aſſent and Conſent to an Old Tranſlation, as is required in the Church of England.

CHAP. V.

That the French Church does not condemn the Uſe of the Apocrypha, though ſhe forbids it to be read in her Church-Aſſemblies.

AS to the next Point, which ſome have urged as a Reaſon againſt Subſcription, That our Church requires the Apocrypha to be read on ſome certain Days; it ſhall be readily owned, that the French Church has no ſuch Injunction, but the contrary: For the Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 2. orders the Churches to ſee that their Readers and Deacons do not read publickly the Apocrypha, but the Canonical Books of Holy Scripture. But then they do not prohibit this as a thing abſolutely unlawful, nor condemn thoſe Churches which enjoin the Reading of it, but only uſe their own Liberty in preſcribing what they think fit in their own Church; being ready to give under their Hands at the ſame Time, that they believe it lawful to be read in thoſe Churches which appoint it: Nay, if occaſion be, they will take their Oath upon it. To prove which, I need only obſerve, that they have always expreſſed themſelves willing to ſubſcribe the Belgick Confeſſion, and they actually did ſubſcribe it in the Synod of Vitre, 1583. cap. 2. art. 2. Now it is one Article of the Belgick Confeſſion, [a] " That " the Apocryphal Books may be read in " Churches, and Inſtructions be drawn from " them ſo far as they are conſonant to the " Canonical Books, but no further: Which " is exactly the Doctrine of the Church of " England." So that by the ſame Reaſon that the French Church ſubſcribes the Belgick Confeſſion, ſhe would, no doubt, ſubſcribe and aſſent to the Preſcription of the Church of England in this Point as well as any other.

SOME of her beſt Writers ſpeak honourably of the Engliſh Liturgy, for this very Reaſon for which others condemn it. Among theſe we may reckon the Teſtimony of the Famous Ludovicus le Blanc; who in his Theological Diſputation, de Libris Canonicis & Apocryphis, p. 175. has theſe Words: " As the ancient Chriſtian " Church, though ſhe did not equal theſe " Books to thoſe that are Divine, yet had " them in great Honour and Eſteem, and " judged them worthy to be read not only " privately, but publickly, as exceeding uſeful " for Edification in Manners: So we alſo at " this Day do not deny them an honourable " Place in the Church of GOD, but allow them " a Privilege above the common Rank of other " Eccleſiaſtical Writings. A Proof of which " is, that we uſe to bind them up in the ſame " Volume with the Sacred Canonical Books, " and often think fit to alledge them in our " Sermons. Moreover in Great Britain the Cu- " ſtom is to read Leſſons out of theſe Books, " in their publick and ordinary Worſhip; as " appears from that Celebrated Engliſh Liturgy, " which is in Uſe in that Kingdom." This is not ſpoken like one that could not ſubſcribe the Engliſh Liturgy, becauſe it appointed the Reading of the Apocryphal Books.

CHAMIER does not ſo expreſsly mention the Church of England, but he virtually commends her Practice in commending the Practice of the primitive Church, which was the ſame. For Ruffin ſays, The Fathers of the Church ſometimes diſtinguiſhed all Books into three Sorts, Canonical, Eccleſiaſtical, and Apocryphal, which they allowed to be read in in Churches, but not to be of Authority to confirm Ariticles of Faith: The third Sort which they called Apocryphal, were not thoſe which we now call ſo, but other hurtful Books, which they would not allow to be read in Churches. Now ſays Chamier, ſpeaking of this Account which Ruffin gives, "This Diſtinc-"tion is doubtleſs very uſeful, and pleaſes me "very well. Diſtinctio utilis eſt ſine dubio, mihi-"que valde placet." Chamier, Tom. 1. Lib. 4. c. 1. n. 10.

AND yet ſome Judicious Perſons are of Opinion, That the Apocryphal Books are not ſo ſtrictly enjoined, but that Miniſters are authorized and allowed to change the Leſſons taken out of them for others of the New Teſtament more edifying. For the Admonition to Miniſters before the Second Book of Homilies ſays, "That whereas it "may chance that ſome one or other Chap-"ter of the Old Teſtament may fall in Order "to be read upon the Sundays or Holy Days, "which were better to be changed with "ſome other of the New Teſtament of more "Edification, it ſhall be well done of Mini-"ſters to ſpend their Time to conſider of "ſuch Chapters before-hand, whereby their "Prudence and Diligence in their Office may "appear, and the People may have Cauſe to "glorify GOD for them, &c."

HAMON L'Eſtrange thinks this adminiſters probable Occaſion of Conjecture, that our Church hereby intended an Allowance of declining Apocryphal Leſſons on Holy-Days, that the Hiſtory of the Saints might be compleated by ſome expreſs Chapters of the New Teſtament; for as much as both the Canonical and Apocryphal Books go under the Complex Notion of the Old Teſtament. Allyance of Divine Offices, c. 1. p. 25.

AND Mr. Baxter himſelf was not ignorant of this Admonition in the Homilies: For in his Reformation of the Liturgy in 1661. p. 35. he refers to it, deſiring this Alteration to be made in the Calendar, and inſerted as a Rubrick into the New Common-Prayer-Book; "That after the Pſalms for the Day, the "Miniſter ſhall read a Chapter of the Old "Teſtament, ſuch as he finds moſt ſeaſona-"ble; or with the Liberty expreſſed in the "Admonition before the Second Book of Ho-"milies." So that when he had a Mind to come a little near the Church, he could find a Liberty granted to change any Leſſon of the Old Teſtament for a more edifying one in the New: But when he ſet himſelf to diſpute againſt the Church, then we have not a Word of this Liberty, but a terrible Argument formed againſt the Rubrick, for appointing ſome uſeful Leſſons of the Apocrypha to be read, though ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed from Canonical Scripture. For the Sixth Article does put a manifeſt Difference between them; and any Miniſter who finds his People ſo ignorant as not to know what the Apocrypha means, may inform them by reading the Article to them: Though Mr. B. was ſo confident as to ſay ſome Readers of Common-Prayer are forbidden by the Canon to expound even that one Word to them. Engl. Nonconfor. cap. 17.

CHAP. VI.

Of Aſſenting to read Common-Prayer daily, either privately or openly.

IN the Preface to the Common-Prayer-Book, concerning the Service of the Church, there is a Rubrick which "Orders "all Prieſts and Deacons to ſay daily the "Morning and Evening-Prayer, either pri-"vately or openly, not being let by Sickneſs, "or ſome other urgent Cauſe."

MR. B. ſays, "When the Book was firſt "made, to help the Ignorant Vulgar out of "Popery, every Day to uſe the Common-"Prayer was a very good Help to them. "But the Caſe is much altered, and People "now have more ſuitable Helps, and Mini-"ſters have ſo much other Work to do in "their Studies, and with their Neighbours, "and ſome Prayers to uſe more ſuitable to "their Families and Cloſets, that it muſt "needs be a ſinful Impediment againſt other "Duties to ſay Common-Prayer twice a Day." Engl. Nonconform. cap. 41.

ANY one may perceive whither this Diſcourſe tends, viz. to diſcourage the daily Uſe of Publick Common-Prayer in the Church, which it was doubtleſs the Deſign, and a very laudable Deſign, in our Firſt Reformers to eſtabliſh, as far as poſſible, throughout the Nation. This appears from the Rubrick which immediately follows that which Mr. B. excepts againſt; where it is ordered, "That "the Curate that miniſtreth in every Pa-"riſh-Church or Chappel, being at home, "and not being otherwiſe reaſonably hinder-"ed, ſhall ſay the ſame in the Pariſh-Church "or Chappel, where he miniſtreth, &c that "the People may come to hear GOD's Word, "and to pray with him."

NOW he that quarrels with this, muſt think it improper that Men ſhould meet every Day to worſhip GOD in publick. For otherwiſe, why ſhould it be a ſinful Impediment ment of other Duties, to ſay Common-Prayer daily? If it be ſaid, There ought to be no publick Prayers without a Sermon, and no Man is qualified to preach every Day in the Year: I anſwer, 1. That in effect Common-Prayer is never read without a Sermon: For the Leſſons out of GOD's Word are a very inſtructive one, if duly attended to. But, 2. If by a Sermon be meant a Set Diſcourſe of the Miniſter's own compoſing, of ſuch a Length, and in a certain Form, &c. then it is falſe, and a raſh Accuſation of GOD's Church, to ſay there ought to be no publick Prayers without a Sermon. For all Churches allow it, and moſt encourage and recommend it. The French Church in particular has ſeveral Canons, which ſuppoſe and authorize this Practice. When the Synod of Caſtres ſays, "Baptiſm may be admi- "niſtred on any Day when Common-Prayer "is ſaid without Sermon:" Does not that ſuppoſe an Allowance of Common-Prayer to be uſed without a Sermon? See the Synod of Caſtres, 1626. cap. 25. Art. 15.

THE Second Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 9. art. 3. "Leaves it to the Prudence of Con- "ſiſtories to congregate the People on all "Popiſh Holy-days, either to hear the Word "Preached; or to join in Common Publick "Prayers, as they ſhall find to be moſt Ex- "pedient." Does not this authorize Reading of Common-Prayer without a Sermon, when it leaves it to the Diſcretion of Conſiſtories to appoint it if they thought convenient?

3. THE Caſes of Reading Common-Prayer, and Preaching a Sermon of the Miniſters own Compoſing every Day, are very different from one another. For the one cannot be done without a great expence of Time before-hand, to prepare the Compoſition; whereas the other is a Form compoſed to the Miniſters hand, and needs no other Time to be ſpent upon it, but what is neceſſary for the Act of Celebration. And yet ſome Perſons have that Quickneſs and Ability, as to Preach as well as Pray publickly every Day in the Week. So Calvin was uſed to do, as Beza tells us in his Life, (p. 74.) and yet this did not hinder his other Buſineſs. Yet ſuch Examples are not proper to be made a Rule; becauſe all Men cannot Preach every Day in the Week, (no, not though Calvin's Method were brought again into uſe, which was but to expound for about a Quarter of an Hour ſame Portiou of Scripture) for though many Men have the ſame Ability, yet all have not; whereas no Man wants Ability to read Common-Prayer Daily, if he can have a Congregation to join with him. If not, the Church would have him ſupply that Defect, by uſing it Morning and Evening in his own Family, unleſs hindred by Sickneſs or ſome other urgent Cauſe. Beyond this the Injunction cannot be ſuppoſed to extend: Becauſe it being Common-Prayer, and ſeveral Parts of it at leaſt, as the Abſolution, &c. ſuppoſing a Congregation, it cannot be thought a Rule for Cloſet Devotion. Nor is the Injunction ſo ſtrict to uſe it daily either in the Church or Family, but that an urgent Cauſe may diſpenſe with the Omiſſion of it. And what are urgent Cauſes, every Man muſt judge for himſelf, conſidering his own Circumſtances, with Chriſtian Prudence and Diſcretion. The Preſent Rubrick only mentions Sickneſs, but in former Rubricks it was worded thus, "except they be let by Preaching, Studying "Divinity, or by ſome other urgent Cauſe." See Hamon l' Eſtrange Allyan. of Div. Offic. c. 1. p. 10. and the Editions of the Common-Prayer before 1661.

CHAP. VII.

Of making the Surplice and other Habits neceſſary to Miniſtration.

IN the Rubrick before the Order for Morning Prayer, it is appointed, "That ſuch "Ornaments of the Church, and of the Mi- "niſters thereof, at all Times of their Mi- "niſtration, ſhall be retained and be in Uſe, "as were in this Church of England by the "Authority of Parliament, in the Second "Year of the Reign of King Edward the "Sixth.

AGAINST this Mr. B. has Three Exceptions. "1. We know not, ſays he, what was "then in Uſe, and therefore cannot Conſent "to we know not what. 2. We are told "that the Albe and many other Ornaments "were then in uſe, which are ſince put down, "and we may not conſent to reſtore them, "without more Reaſon than we hear. And "the Canon enumerating the Ornaments "now, we ſuppoſe the Addition of all thoſe "will contradict it. 3. We meet with few "Conformiſts that know what was then in "Uſe; and we ſee that all thoſe that Sub- "ſcribe and Conſent to this, yet uſe them "not, &c."

THERE is but one true Word in all this, which is, That Mr. B. was really ignorant (as he confeſſes he was) of what he both might and ought to have known, before he had formed his Objections againſt the Rubrick. To ſhew that his Objections are founded upon mere Ignorance and Miſtake, and to inform all thoſe who labour under the ſame Prejudice, dice, I will here ſet down the Old Rubrick, as it was in the Second Year of King Edward, and alſo the Words of the Fifty-eighth Canon, which Mr. B. refers to, and let any Ingenuous Reader try whether he can find any Contradiction between them.

The Words of the Old Rubrick are theſe: "In the Saying or Singing of Mattens and "Even-Song, Baptizing and Burying, the Mi-"niſter in Pariſh-Churches and Chappels "ſhall uſe a Surplice, and in all Cathedral-"Churches and Colleges, the Archdeacons, "Deans, Provoſts, Maſters, Prebendaries "and Fellows, being Graduates, may uſe in "the Choir beſide their Surplices ſuch Hoods "as pertain to their ſeveral Degrees, which "they have taken in any Univerſity within "this Realm. But in all other Places every "Miniſter ſhall be at Liberty to uſe any Sur-"plice or not. It is alſo ſeemly that Gra-"duates when they do Preach, ſhould uſe "ſuch Hoods as pertain to their ſeveral De-"grees."

This is all that concerns private Miniſters in that Rubrick. The reſt that follows belongs to Biſhops only, which ſays, "They "ſhall have upon them in Time of their Mi-"niſtration, beſide their Rochet, a Surplice "or Alb, and a Cope or Veſtment, and alſo "their Paſtoral Staff in their Hand, or elſe born "or holden by their Chaplain."

Now this was it that led Mr. B. into his Miſtake. He had heard ſomething of Albes and other Ornaments in Uſe in King Edward's Time, but he unluckily puts the Biſhop's Robes upon every private Miniſter; whereas no other Ornaments belonged to them but only the Hood and Surplice, the one enjoyned, the other allowed or recommended.

Next let us hear the Fifty-eighth Canon. "Every Miniſter ſaying the publick Prayers, "or miniſtring the Sacraments, or other "Rites of the Church, ſhall wear a decent "and comely Surplice.—— And ſuch Mini-"ſters as are Graduates, ſhall wear upon their "Surplices at ſuch Times, ſuch Hoods as by "the Orders of the Univerſities are agreea-"ble to their Degrees."

Where now is the Contradiction between this Canon and the Rubricks? They all ſpeak of Surplices and Hoods, but of no other Ornaments belonging to private Miniſters. And Mr. B. might have known this, had he either conſulted the Old Rubrick, or Hamon l' Eſtrange, who compares the New and Old together: But his Buſineſs was not ſo much to enquire into the Meaning of Rubricks, as to find out ſome Exceptions againſt them.

Having thus ſettled the Controverſy about what Ornaments are to be uſed, the next Queſtion is, Whether it be lawful to uſe them in Divine Service? And here Diſſenters are divided. Some ſay they are abſolutely Unlawful, Superſtitious, Popiſh, Antichriſtian, &c. Others are aſhamed of this, and ſay they are not againſt the Uſe of them, but only againſt the Impoſition of them, and Ejecting Men from the Miniſtry who dare not uſe them. So Mr. B. Chap. 3, and 33. of his Engliſh Nonconformity.

Let us now compare the Writers of the French Church, with both theſe Sorts of Objectors. And firſt I obſerve of Calvin, That he was not againſt the Uſe of a Scholaſtick Habit, nor yet againſt enjoyning it: For he himſelf wore a Gown or long Robe, as was the Cuſtom of Miniſters at Geneva; for which he never met but with one Rebuff in all his Life, and that was from a ſilly Woman, who declaimed againſt Long Garments, "as Marks "of Falſe Prophets, and Indecent Clothing, "which the Clergy uſed to the great Scan-"dal of the Church." She pretended to prove this from the Goſpel, ſaying, "Is it "not written, They ſhall come to you in "Long Garments?" When Calvin ſhewed her "that this was a Falſification of the Go-"ſpel, and that there was no ſuch Expreſ-"ſion to be found, unleſs it was in the "Goſpel of the Manichees: She called him "and his Brethren all Tyrants, becauſe they "would not ſuffer her to talk at this ex-"travagant Rate what ſhe would againſt "them: And ſo the Diſpute ended. For, "ſays Calvin, theſe Wounds I leave untouch-"ed, as ſeeming to me incurable, till it ſhall "pleaſe God to put his healing Hand to "them." Calvin, Ep. to Farel. p. 38.

Persons who have ſo little Senſe, as to think the wearing of a Gown for Diſtinction or Decency's Sake, is againſt the Rules of the Goſpel, are not fit to be argued with in Calvin's Opinion, but to be pitied and prayed for, and if they continue obſtinate, to be left to God's Mercy in his due Time to convince them.

But what if Men will forſake our Communion becauſe we wear a Gown or Surplice; or where theſe Things are enjoined, will utterly refuſe to ſubmit to the Uſe of them? As to the Gown, Calvin had occaſion to reſolve this Queſtion, upon a particular Caſe that happened at Geneva, during his own Regency there in the Univerſity; of which he gives this Account in another Epiſtle to Farel, p. 259. "You know, ſays he, by the Laws "of our City, all Students are to lay aſide "their Swords, and appear only in their Scho-"laſtick Habit, when they come to the Ho-"ly Communion. But ſome fooliſh French-"men, who ſtudy here, are ſo addicted to their "own Humour, that they will rather re-"nounce their Profeſſion of Studying, than "ſubmit to theſe Laws. Now becauſe this "appears to be manifeſt Contumacy, I re-"ſolved not to endure it: For I had rather "they would all be gone, than ſtay here to "the Prejudice and Loſs of our Diſcipline." This, I think, is inſiſting upon the Uſe of an Habit, as much as ever is done in the Church of England. It matters not whether it be Gown or Surplice, or any other Habit; for the the Reaſon will hold for one Habit as well as another, ſo long as the Law appoints it.

CALVIN did not think the Surplice, or Biſhop's Albe unlawful: For writing to Bullinger about the Behaviour of Biſhop Hooper, he ſays, "As I commend his Conſtancy in "refuſing Unction, ſo I could wiſh he would "not contend ſo much de Pileo & Veſte Linea, "about the Cap and Surplice, though in my "Judgment I had not approved of them: And "this Advice I gave him myſelf not long ago." Ep. p. 60.

BEZA was of the ſame Mind, when he wrote to the Diſcontented Brethren in England, who complained to him about the Impoſition of the Surplice, and ſome other ſuch Indifferent Things. "Theſe Ceremonies, ſays "he, are not of that Kind of Things that are "impious in themſelves; and therefore they "are not of ſo great Moment, as that either "the Paſtors ſhould forſake their Miniſtry, "rather than wear thoſe Garments; or that "the People ſhould rather forſake their Spi-"ritual Guides, than hear them in ſuch a "Veſture."

PETER Martyr gave this Advice to a Friend in England, who ſcrupled the Surplice; "For "my own Part, I could wiſh that all Things "might be done with the greateſt Simplicity: "Yet I conſider, that if an Union in Points "of Doctrine could be obtained between our "Churches and thoſe of Saxony, we ſhould ne-"ver make any Separation upon the Account "of ſuch Veſtments in Divine Service." Ep. 41. ad Amic. p. 1127.

IN another Epiſtle to Biſhop Hooper, he more largely defends the Lawfulneſs of them, and anſwers all the Biſhop's Arguments, whereby he endeavoured to prove the Uſe of them impious and unlawful. "Your Reaſons, ſays "he, do not perſuade me to determine the "Uſe of ſuch Habits to be pernicious, or in its "own Nature contrary to the Word of GOD, "but I believe it to be altogether an Indiffe-"rent Thing.—— Though I be not, in my "own Opinion, for retaining this Diſtinction "of Habits, yet I can by no means call it "impious; I dare not condemn thoſe whom I "ſee obſerve it. If I had been ſo perſuaded, "I would never have communicated here with "the Church of England, in which this Di-"ſtinction is ſtill obſerved. For though I do "not altogether like it, yet I am ſure many "ſuch Indifferent Things, tho' troubleſome "and burthenſome, are to be born with; for "whilſt we contend more bitterly than is meet "about them, we hinder the Progreſs of the "Goſpel, and by our vehement Contention, "teach thoſe Things to be impious, which are "in their own Nature indifferent.—— By this "Means we ſhall ſo alienate Mens Minds "from us, that they will not hearken to ſo-"lid Doctrine, or give any heed to our moſt "neceſſary Diſcourſes.—— Beſides, if we go to "diſſuade Men from theſe Indifferent Things, "as pernicious and impious, we muſt condemn "very many Evangelical Churches, and bit-"terly tax all the ancient Churches, which are "ſo worthily celebrated by us. I know, in-"deed, the Authority of no Church, Ancient "or Modern, ought ſo far to weigh with us, "as to make us ſuppreſs the Truth of GOD's "Word; but what I contend for is, that for "Indifferent Things we ſhould neither con-"demn any Church, nor ſpeak irreverently "of it."

AFTER this he goes on to anſwer the Biſhop's Arguments; where he ſhews, 1. That all Imitation of the Jewiſh Rites is not unlawful. 2. That this Diſtinction of Habits is not the Invention of Popery or Antichriſt, becauſe it was uſed in the primitive Church long before Popery was known in the World. Which he proves from many Paſſages of Euſebius, Cyprian, Tertullian, Chryſoſtom, and ſome known Uſages of the Church. 3. That all Human Inventions in the Circumſtances of GOD's Worſhip, are not unlawful. Otherwiſe it would be unlawful to Communicate before Dinner. 4. "That the wearing of "a Surplice may have a good and uſeful "Signification, and that agreeable to the "Scripture. For the Miniſters of the Church "are called Angels and Meſſengers of GOD. "Now the Angels almoſt always made their "Appearance in White Garments: How then "ſhall we deprive the Church of this Liberty, "that ſhe may not ſignify ſomething by her "Rites and Actions, provided they be not "made Parts of GOD's Worſhip, and be mo-"deſt and few, ſo as not to burthen Chri-"ſtian People with Ceremonies, and be uſed "to promote, or not impede ſome better "Things? If you ſay, Men ſhould make them-"ſelves Angels, and not ſignify it by outward "Signs: I anſwer, The ſame Thing might "have been replied to St. Paul, when he or-"dered among the Corinthians, That Women "ſhould be covered, and Men uncovered: Becauſe "he only urges the Reaſon of outward Sig-"nification. One might have replied, That a "Man may demonſtrate himſelf to be the "Head of the Woman, and the Woman to be "ſubject to her own Husband, better by their "Lives and Actions, than any outward Signs. "But the Apoſtle knew it to be uſeful, not "only that we ſhould live well, but alſo that "we ſhould uſe both Words and Signs to put "us in mind of our Duty. 5. He adds in the "laſt Place, Neque ilico Tyrannidem induci arbitror, "ſi quid in Eccleſia indifferens ſuſcipiatur agendum, "& a multis conſtanter ſervetur. I do not think it "Tyranny in any Church, that agrees to ob-"ſerve an Indifferent Thing, and generally "practiſes according to ſuch an Order: For "it is now become a Rule to Adminiſter the "Euchariſt only in the Morning, and we re-"fuſe to Celebrate it in our Aſſemblies after "Dinner. But will any Man call this Tyranni-"cal, which all Men freely conſent to obſerve? Pet. Mart. Ep. 4. ad Hooper, p. 1086, &c.

THIS

This Diſcourſe of Peter Martyr, not only juſtifies the Uſe of the Surplice, but alſo frees the Impoſition of it from that Charge of Tyranny which Mr. B. and others now ſo confidently bring againſt it: And it is the more conſiderable, becauſe it comes from one who in his own Judgment was for laying it aſide, but had ſo much of the Chriſtian Temper and Diſcretion, that he reſolved to make no Contention about it. God give all Men the ſame Temper, and we ſhall hear no more Diſputes about a Surplice!

Peter Du Moulin was ſo far from ſcrupling any Habits, that he was uſed to ſay, with relation to thoſe that ſcrupled them here, "That "if the Queen Regent of France would but "give him leave to Preach before her, he would "do it though it were in a Fryar's Coat;" as his Son, who writes his Life, ſays he had it from his own Mouth. Life of du Moulin, before his Novelty of Popery, p. 18. And I believe there are few Frenchmen, but who would be glad to enjoy the Liberty of Preaching, and Freedom of their Religion in their Native Country, upon much harder Conditions than being obliged to wear a Surplice.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Rules for finding out Eaſter: That ſuppoſing them to contradict one another, yet a Man may honeſtly give his Aſſent and Conſent to uſe the Common-Prayer-Book.

There is no one Thing which Mr. Baxter oftner repeats in all his Books, than this Objection about the Church's Rule for finding out Eaſter-Day. "He ſays the Ca-"lendar gives a true Rule to find it; but "then there is another Rule added to find "it always, which is frequently falſe, as eve-"ry Almanack will tell us: That is, that it "is always the firſt Sunday after the Firſt "Full-Moon, which happens next after the "One and Twentieth Day of March." Engl. Nonconf. cap. 15.

I will not now ſtand to examine, whether the Rule he excepts againſt as falſe, be liable to that Charge. It is agreed on all Hands by thoſe that underſtand Calculations and Aſtronomy, that it is generally true, and it is not every Almanack that will ſhew its Falſhood. But admit it were always wrong; what is that to our giving Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of the Liturgy? I have ſhewed before, that Aſſent and Conſent does not mean that every Tittle and Saying in any Book is infallibly true, but that it contains no ſuch Errors repugnant to God's Word, as render it unfit to be uſed in Divine Service; which is the Senſe of the Engliſh Writers [b] upon this Subject. Now ſuppoſing this Rule to be falſe; why may we not conſent to uſe the Liturgy for all that? Eſpecially conſidering that this pretended Diſcovery of its Falſeneſs is but lately made, and we are neither obliged ſo ſay it is a true Rule, nor any ways confined to uſe it: Becauſe we have another Rule, which is confeſſedly true, and fully anſwers the Church's Deſign, which is to keep one Eaſter in a Year, and no more; though Mr. B. ſays, we are obliged to keep Two. If ſuch Failings as theſe would hinder Aſſent and Conſent, it would be hard to find any Human Writing, which a Man could honeſtly aſſent to. The French Church has not our Rules for finding out Eaſter, but follows the New Stile of Pope Gregory, and keeps it Eleven Days before us; yea, ſometimes at a Month or Five Weeks diſtance, if my Author [c] do not deceive me. Now many Excellent Chronologers, ſuch as Scaliger, Calviſius, Mæſtlinus and Origanus, have undertaken to prove, That the New Calendar has many Errors and Miſtakes in it, and in Time will prove as falſe a Rule for finding out Eaſter, as that Rule of ours, which was the Rule of the Council of Nice. But may not the French Church aſſent to uſe this Calendar, and keep their Eaſter by it, notwithſtanding ſuch Miſtakes? What end ſhould we have of Hereſies and Schiſms, if ſuch Things as theſe ſhould raiſe Scruples in Mens Minds, and hinder their Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of a Pious Book fitted for Divine Service. I have already proved, that the French Church requires Aſſent and Conſent to the Uſe of a Tranſlation of the Bible, which ſhe owns has ſome Failures in it. Though every Tittle be not accurately and exactly Tranſlated according to the Original, (and conſequently not to be aſſented to in that Senſe, as if it were an Exact Tranſlation, when they own it to be otherwiſe) yet every Miniſter is obliged to give his Aſſent and Conſent to it as a Tranſlation that is lawful, and not repugnant to the

[b] See before, the Chapter about Aſſent and Conſent; and Cf. Sherlock's Defence of Dr. Stillingfleet, p. 105.

the Word of GOD to uſe it; and he muſt uſe that, and no other in his Miniſtration. Now why may we not as innocently aſſent to uſe a Liturgy, which has a miſtaken Rule for finding out Eaſter, as the French Church does to uſe a Tranſlation of the Bible, which ſhe owns has ſome Things in it not exactly according to the Original? If it be aſſenting to a ſmall Lye, as Mr. B. modeſtly terms it, in the Engliſh Miniſters, I cannot ſee how the French will eſcape the ſame Imputacion. I will not recriminate, nor give him the Lye, but only take leave to ſay, That he, and all others who thus charge the Church of England, are under a Miſtake about Aſſent and Conſent, and underſtand not truly her Conſtitution. Nor indeed can they account for their own Practice in aſſenting to read the Bible, upon their Principles and Hypotheſis: For the very beſt Tranſlation which they conſent to uſe as well as we, is thought by many Criticks of the beſt Rank, to have ſome miſtaken Paſſages (more material than the Rule about finding out Eaſter) which need a more exact Tranſlation. I will only inſtance in one, which was the Diſcovery of the late Eminent Dr. Pocock, a Perſon whoſe Modeſty no leſs than his Learning, ſo conſpicuous in all his Writings, rendred him famous over all the World. The Place I mean, is Mic. 5. 2. where the preſent Tranſlation reads it; Thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the Thouſands of Judah; whereas that Learned Perſon proves it ought to be Tranſlated quite otherwiſe, Thou Bethlehem Ephratah art very Great among the Thouſands of Judah. For, as he obſerves, the Original Word, Tſair, or Segor, ſignifies both little and great: And as in ſome Places, where the Senſe requires it, it ought to be Tranſlated, Little; ſo here in this place it ought to be Tranſlated, Great. For ſo St. Matthew quotes it, thou Bethlehem art not the leaſt, that is, art very great, among the Princes of Judah, &c. Mat. ii. 6. Which ſhews that the Word Tſair in Micah, was underſtood by the Evangeliſt to ſignify Great, and therefore ought now to be ſo Tranſlated; as Learned Men now, ſince this Diſcovery has been made, do generally agree. See Dr. Pocock, Not. Miſcel. in Port. Moſ. cap. 2. p. 17. and his Comment. on Mic. v. 2. As alſo Dr. Hammond's Annot. on Mat. ii. 6. Hottinger Smegma Oriental. And Friſchmuth Diſſert. de Mich. & Mat. cited by Mr. le Cene Projet d' une Nouvelle Verſion. p 166.

Now if the Diſſenters Rule be true, That no one can without a ſmall Lye, give Aſſent and Conſent to any Book which contains any the leaſt Miſtake in it; how ſhall thoſe who are convinced by Dr. Pocock's Reaſons, that the forementioned Paſſage is wrong tranſlated, give their Aſſent and Conſent to the preſent Tranſlation? Or muſt neither the Church nor Diſſenters uſe the Bible in their Aſſemblies, till they can have a Tranſlation free from all manner of Miſtakes? And where ſhall we have ſuch an Infallible Tranſlation? Will Diſſenters of any Denomination undertake to make it? Or will they excuſe every Miniſter from Reading the Bible in the Church, till they have done it? If there be ſome little Miſtakes in the preſent Tranſlation, why do they not object againſt it as well as the Liturgy, and ſet immediately about a new one; and leave it to Mens Cenſures when they have done, and to every Man's Liberty that can find any Faults in it, to aſſent or not aſſent, uſe or not uſe it at his Pleaſure? There is no one but is ſenſible how dangerous and abſurd the Conſequences of ſuch a Liberty as this would be: And yet the Reaſon is as ſtrong againſt the preſent Tranſlation of the Bible, as againſt the Liturgy, for having a ſuppoſed Miſtake in one of its Rules for finding out Eaſter. If nothing elſe can convince Men, yet I hope this may; that it is dangerous to ſtrain Aſſent and Conſent too high, leſt at laſt they come to this paſs, that they cannot Aſſent to the Bible itſelf, as ordered to be read in the Church, in any Human Tranſlation.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Confeſſion and Abſolution, as uſed in the Church of England; and of Kneeling and Standing in Divine Service.

COME we now to the ſeveral Parts of the Liturgy; where the firſt Thing is the general Confeſſion to be ſaid of the whole Congregation, after the Miniſter, all Kneeling. There are ſome who except againſt the ſhortneſs of this Confeſſion; which, if it be any Fault, is equally chargeable on the Confeſſion in Calvin's Liturgy, uſed by all the French Church, which for the Sake of thoſe who never heard it, I think it not improper here to tranſcribe out of Calvin's Works. "O Lord God, Eternal and Almighty Fa- "ther, we acknowledge and confeſs before "thy Sacred Majeſty, that we are miſerable "Sinners, conceived and born in Sin and "Iniquity; prone to Evil, and indiſpoſed to "every good Work; and that being vicious, "we make no end of tranſgreſſing thy ho- "ly Commandments. Hereby we call De- "ſtruction upon ourſelves from thy juſt Judg" ment. But yet, O Lord, we are heartily " ſorry for having offended Thee, and we " condemn ourſelves and Sins by true Repen- " tance, deſiring thy Grace may relieve our " Miſery. Therefore, O God, Merciful Fa- " ther, vouchſafe us thy Mercy, in the Name " of thy Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Blot " out our Sins, and purge away all our Filth, " and daily increaſe in us the Gifts of thy " Holy Spirit: That we acknowledging our " Iniquity from the Bottom of our Hearts, " may more and more diſpleaſe ourſelves, and " be excited to true Repentance; which morti- " fying us and all our Sins, may produce in " us the Fruits of Righteouſneſs and Inno- " cence, acceptable unto Thee: Through the " ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord." Calvin. Formul. Prec. Tom. 8. p. 29.

IT is true, the whole Congregation is not obliged to ſay this Confeſſion after the Miniſter, as we do, but only to go along with him in their Minds: But the Difference in this Circumſtance is ſo very inconſiderable, that they muſt have a very great Inclination to diſpute, that can raiſe any Controverſy about it.

As to the Poſture of Kneeling, that is preciſely enjoyned in the French Church to all People without reſpect of Quality or Perſons. " That " great Irreverence, ſays their Book of Diſ- " cipline, cap. 10. art. 1. which is found in " divers Perſons, who at publick and Private " Prayers do neither uncover their Heads, " nor bow their Knees, ſhall be reformed, " which is a matter repugnant unto Piety, " and giveth ſuſpicion of Pride, and ſcanda- " lizes them that fear GOD. Wherefore all " Paſtors ſhall be adviſed, as alſo Elders and " Heads of Families, carefully to overſee, that " in Time of Prayer, all Perſons without " Exception or Acceptation, do evidence by " thoſe exterior Signs, the inward Humility " of their Hearts and Homage which they " yield to GOD; unleſs any one be hindred " from ſo doing by Sickneſs or otherwiſe."

Now compare this with our Rubrick and Eighteenth Canon, which ſays, " No Man " ſhall cover his Head in the Church or Chap- " pel in the Time of Divine Service, except " he have ſome Infirmity. And all manner " of Perſons then preſent, ſhall reverently " kneel upon their Knees, when the Gene- " ral Confeſſion, Litany, and other Prayers " are read." If any one cenſures our Church for theſe Rules of Decency, he may ſee himſelf more ſeverely condemned by the Diſcipline of the French Church.

NEXT for the Abſolution, I own Calvin's Liturgy has no ſuch Form in it: But he himſelf ſays it was an Omiſſion in him at firſt, and a Defect in his Liturgy; which he afterwards would have rectified and amended, but could not. He makes this ingenuous Confeſſion in one of his Epiſtles: " There is " none of us, ſays he, but muſt acknowledge " it to be very uſeful, that after the Gene- " ral Confeſſion ſome remarkable Promiſe of " Scripture ſhould follow, whereby Sinners " might be raiſed to the Hopes of Pardon " and Reconciliation. And I would have " introduced this Cuſtom from the Beginning, " but ſome fearing that the Novelty of it " would give Offence, I was over-eaſy in " yielding to them; ſo the Thing was omit- " ted. And now it would not be ſeaſonable " to make any Change; becauſe the greateſt " Part of our People begin to riſe up be- " fore we come to the End of the Confeſ- " ſion. Therefore he adviſes thoſe he writes " to, whilſt they had it in their Power, to " accuſtom their People to an Abſolution, as " well as a Confeſſion: Quo magis optamus, dum " vobis integrum eſt, populum veſtrum ad utrum- " que aſſuefieri." Epiſt. de quibuſd. Eccleſ. Ritib. p. 206.

NAY, I muſt do that Juſtice to Calvin here, by the way, to ſay, that he was no Enemy to private Abſolution neither, as uſed in the Church of England. For in one of his Anſwers to Weſtphalus, he thus expreſſes his Mind about it: " I have no Intent to deny the " Uſefulneſs of Private Abſolution; but as I " commend it in ſeveral Places of my Wri- " tings, provided the Uſe be left to Mens " Liberty, and free from Superſtition; ſo to " bind Mens Conſciences by a Law to it, " is neither lawful nor expedient." Defenſ. 2. ad Weſtphal. Tom. 8. p. 678.

HERE we have Calvin's Judgment, fully and entirely, for the Uſefulneſs both of Publick and Private Abſolution. He owns it to be a Defect in his Liturgy, that it wants a Publick Abſolution. But the French Church took care to ſupply this Defect in ſome meaſure; and as far as they could, without hazarding the Peace of their Congregations. For the Second Synod of Paris, 1565. cap. 9. art. 17. made this Canon: " That ſuch Churches as were " accuſtomed upon Sacrament-Days, or other " Sabbaths, after the Confeſſion of Sins, to " pronounce a General Abſolution, may if " they pleaſe, continue in it: But where this " Cuſtom is not introduced, the Synod ad- " viſeth the Churches not to admit it, becauſe " of the dangerous Conſequences which may " enſue.

THEY approve the Thing, and encourage it where it was in Uſe already, but thought it dangerous to offer at any Alteration where it was not; for fear the Novelty might give Offence, or occaſion ſome Diſturbance. Whence it appears, that it was not Choiſe, but Neceſſity, that made both Calvin and the French Church omit the inſerting a Publick Abſolution into their Liturgy: They did not diſlike the Thing, but had no favourable Opportunity, as the Church of England had, to introduce it.

As for the Cuſtom of the Miniſters ſtanding up at the Abſolution, and ſome other Prayers, as the Rubrick appoints; I obſerve the ſame Practice to be enjoyned in ſome Caſes in the French Church. For in the Form of Ordination appointed by the Synod of St. Maixant, it is expreſsly ordered, That the Miniſter who Ordains, ſhall riſe up when he comes to the Conſecration-Prayer, and repeat that Standing. And probably thoſe Churches which uſe the Abſolution, do it in the ſame Poſture, as alſo the Creed, &c. but I can ſay nothing poſitively of theſe, for I find no expreſs Canon or Rubrick about what Poſture they are to be ſaid in.

in

CHAP. X.

That the French Church eſteems the Lord's-Prayer a Form of Prayer, and as ſuch frequently uſes it in Divine Service.

TWO Things are commonly ſaid againſt the Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer in our Church. 1. That we uſe it as a Form. 2. That we repeat it too often in Divine Service. To the firſt Objection Chamier anſwers copiouſly; That our SAVIOUR gave it to his Diſciples as a Form; that they uſed it as a Form in their Daily Prayers, as did alſo the whole Primitive Church; which he proves from the Teſtimonies of Tertullian, Cyprian, and Auſtin. And hence he takes Occaſion to prove againſt his popiſh Adverſary Gerhard, That the Virgin Mary was not free from Sin, becauſe ſhe uſed the Lord's-Prayer with the Apoſtles. "It is reaſonable to "believe, ſays he, that the Holy Virgin prayed "to GOD in the moſt exquiſite manner: But "there is no better manner of Praying to "GOD, than that which CHRIST delivered. "As Cyprian ſays, What Prayer can be more "Spiritual than that which was given us by "CHRIST, who alſo gives us the HOLY "SPIRIT? What can be more True Prayer "before GOD, than that which was uttered "from the Mouth of his SON, who is Truth "itſelf? Secondly, It is plain from St. Luke, that "Mary prayed with the reſt of the Diſci"ples, Acts i. 14. Theſe all continued with one Ac"cord in Prayer and Supplication, with the Women, "and Mary the Mother of JESUS. Now, ſays "he, Si orabant unà, ergo communis erat omnibus "Formula; if they prayed together, they had all "one common Form. Thirdly, St. Auſtin ſays, "That it is neceſſary not only for the Faith"ful in general, but for every one in parti"cular, to uſe the Prayer which our LORD "gave to his Diſciples." Theſe are Chamier's Arguments, to prove that the Virgin Mary, as well as all other Perſons, were obliged to uſe the Lord's-Prayer. Tom. 3. de Pec. Orig. Lib. 5. cap. 12. n. 10.

AGAINST this his popiſh Adverſary urged, 1. That it could not be proved out of Scripture, or any ancient Writer, that ever the Virgin Mary uſed the Lord's-Prayer. 2. The Lord's-Prayer was made for the Sake of the Rude and Ignorant, that knew not how to pray: But the Virgin Mary was taught of GOD from her Infancy to pray, and had Forms of Prayer of her own. To which he anſwers, "1. That it was falſe, that it could not be "proved out of Scripture that the Virgin Mary "did uſe the Lord's-Prayer: For ſhe prayed "with the Diſciples, and the Diſciples prayed, "ſaying, Our Father; therefore ſhe alſo prayed, "ſaying, Our Father. To the Second he an"ſwers, That the Lord's-Prayer was made for "the Simple and Ignorant indeed, but in the "ſame manner as David ſays the whole Word "of GOD was written, to give Light and Un"derſtanding to the Simple, Pſal. xix. that is, ſo "to inſtruct the Simple, as that it ſhould be "not only Uſeful, but Neceſſary, to the great"eſt Proficients alſo." Chamier, Ibid. n. 12, 13.

So far was this Learned Frenchman from having that contemptible Notion of the Lord's-Prayer as a Form, which ſome have, that with St. Auſtin and the reſt of the primitive Church, he thought it neceſſary to be uſed as a Form, both in Church-Aſſemblies, and by every private Chriſtian.

RIVET was of the ſame Mind: For among other Arguments to prove the Lawfulneſs and Expediency of Set Forms, he urges this; that CHRIST taught his own Diſciples a Form of Prayer. "It is made a Queſtion by ſome, "Whether Set Forms of Prayer be lawful to be "uſed in Publick or in Private? But we hold, "that Set Forms, if they be pronounced with "due Attention of Mind, are not only Law"ful, but very Profitable alſo; becauſe every "Chriſtian is not able to conceive new Pray"ers with ſuch Decency as is fitting, and the "Attention of the Hearers in great Aſſem"blies, is not a little helped by accuſtomed "Forms. Upon which Account GOD him"ſelf preſcribed a Form of Benediction, to be "uſed by the Prieſts of the Old Teſtament, "Numb. vi. 24. And CHRIST upon the "Croſs uſed a Form of Deprecation, which "David his Type had uſed before him, Matth. "xxvii. 46. The Diſciples alſo, Luke xi. 2. "deſired him to teach them to pray, as John "taught his Diſciples: To whom CHRIST "gave this Anſwer; When ye pray, ſay, Our Fa"ther which art in Heaven, &c. From the Cir"cumſtances of which Words it is evident, "That this Prayer of CHRIST is not only "a Rule of Praying aright, but alſo a Form of "Prayer to be ordinarily uſed; as, without " all Controverſy, the whole primitive Church " ever eſteemed it to be." Synopſ. Pur. Theolog. Diſp. 36. n. 33. where we have the Judgment of the Dutch and French Divines together.

WHAT they obſerve of the Primitive Church is ſo very true, that I dare undertake to prove, That for Fifteen hundred Years together, none ever diſliked the Uſe of the Lord's Prayer, but only the Pelagians; and they did not wholly reject the Uſe of it neither, nor diſlike it becauſe it was a Form, but for another Reaſon; becauſe it contradicted one of their principal Tenets, which was, That ſome Men were ſo perfect in this World, that they needed not to pray to GOD for the Forgiveneſs of their own Sins, but only for the Sins of others. In regard to which Tenet, they could have wiſhed that the Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer had been wholly laid aſide; but becauſe it was ſo generally uſed by the whole Catholick Church, they deſpaired of gaining that Point; and therefore continued to uſe it, contenting themſelves with that perverſe Gloſs put upon the fifth Petition; That they prayed not for Forgiveneſs of their own Sins, but for others; as appears from the Council of Milevis, Cap. 7. and the African Code, Can. 116, and 117. where their Errors are Condemned.

I HOPE none now diſlike the Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer upon the ſame Principle: But however, to reject it upon any Principle, is a great Fault; and ſuch an one as is condemned by the whole Catholick Church, and in particular, by the Reformed Church of France.

BUT it is ſaid, Our Church enjoyns the Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer too often, and that is the Thing that offends ſo many. To which I anſwer, 1. That admit it were not ſo commodious as they could wiſh, yet all Inconveniencies do not make a Liturgy unlawful, or juſtify Separation from it, as I ſhall fully prove, upon the Principles of the French Church. 2. Our Church ſeldom enjoyns the Uſe of it above once or twice in any particular Office; and ſo much is commonly done in the French Church: Their ordinary Prayer both before and after Sermon, as well Morning as Evening, concludes with it. So does alſo their Prayer at Infant-Baptiſm; as alſo the Prayer at Baptiſm of Adult Perſons, appointed by the laſt Synod of Charenton, where they ſay it is CHRIST's own Appointment, who hath commanded us to call upon GOD, ſaying, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c. cap. 9. p. 452.

So that ſuppoſing different Offices to be uſed, it muſt of Neceſſity follow, that the Lord's-Prayer will be often repeated. Beſides which, Dr. Durel has obſerved, That the Miniſters commonly ſay it Three times over, whilſt they continue in the Pulpit, both in the French and Dutch Churches. " Conform. of Reform. Churches. p. 37.

IN Calvin's Liturgy uſed at Geneva, it occurs almoſt in every Office: As 1. in the Miniſter's own Prayer before Sermon, he might uſe it if he pleaſed.

2. IN the long Prayer preſcribed to be uſed after Sermon, there is a Kind of Paraphraſe made of it to conclude with. " [d] 3. In " the Form of Extraordinary Supplications " for Faſt-Days it is inſerted Verbatim, into " the Middle of the Prayer after Sermon. 4. It is uſed alſo to conclude the Prayer of Conſecration at Infant-Baptiſm. Formul. Prec. Eccleſ. Tom. 8.

SO that the Difference betwixt the French and Engliſh Church in this Matter is ſo ſmall, that whoever objects againſt the one, will find himſelf obliged to condemn the other alſo. And when that is done, it will never juſtify the Practice of thoſe who deny the Lord's-Prayer to be a Form, and wholly reject the Uſe of it. Mr. Capel reckons thoſe no better than Madmen, whoſe Zeal againſt Set Forms tranſports them to ſuch an Exceſs: " Quis illorum Furorem ferat, ac non potius execretur, &c. Who " can have Patience to bear, and not rather " abhor their Madneſs, who boaſt that they " have never, or not for many Years repeated the Lord's-Prayer, and give GOD Thanks " upon that account? Do they think CHRIST " taught his Diſciples that Prayer, that they " ſhould never uſe it, nor offer it to GOD? " Or do they think the Apoſtles never uſed it, " but only as a Rule and Example to compoſe " their own Prayers by? How then come all " Eccleſiaſtical Writers and Doctors of the " Primitive Church to tell us, that the Apoſtles conſecrated the Euchariſt only with this " Prayer, and that the whole Primitive " Church followed their Example? And how " is it that in all Proteſtant Churches, when we " cannot particularly enumerate all our Wants " in our own Prayers, we think it neceſſary " to conclude them with that Prayer, which " comprehends in ſhort whatever Things are " omitted in our own? Upon which Account " we commonly uſher it in with this Form of " Words; Theſe Things, O Lord, and whatever " elſe thou knoweſt to be neceſſary for us, we ask " of Thee, in the Name of Chriſt, in that Form of " Prayer which he himſelf hath taught us, Our " Father, &c." Ludov. Capel. Diſp. 37. de Liturg. n. 13. inter Theſ. Salmur. Par. 3.

THIS both vindicates the neceſſary Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer, and the frequent Uſe of it; that is, as often as we make any Petitions of our own, or if we divide our Service into different Parts, we may uſe the Lord's-Prayer in each Part; and that is agreeable to the Cuſtom of the French Church, and perhaps all other Proteſtant Churches alſo.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Use of the Apostolical Creed in the French Church.

CONCERNING this Creed I observe Four Things in the Practice of the French Church. 1. That they give it the Name of the Apostles Creed, as we do in our Liturgy: Their Confession stiles it, Symbolum Apostolicum, The Apostolical Creed, Art. 5. As also their Liturgy and Catechism, where-ever they speak of it. 2. They agree with our Church, as to what concerns the Reason of this Name. "It is commonly called the Apo-"stles Creed, says their Catechism, because it "has ever been received among the Faithful "from the Foundation of the Church; and "because it was either taken from the Mouths "of the Apostles, or collected faithfully out "of their Writings." Calvin. Catech. Tom. 8. p. 12.

So that the Design either of the English or French Church, in giving it the Name of the Apostles Creed, was not to tye Men up in the strictest Sense, to believe it to be of the Apostles immediate Composing; but to take it for an Orthodox and Primitive Summary of Faith, either delivered by the Apostles themselves, or collected out of their Writings by their immediate Successors. A Liberty is granted to either of these Opinions, because neither of them derogates from the Faith itself.

3. I observe that the French Church uses it in the same Holy Offices as the Church of England does; as in her Form of Infant-Baptism composed by Calvin; in her Form of Baptism of Adult Persons composed by the Synod of Charenton, and in her usual Form of publick Prayers on the Lord's-Day. The Words of their Liturgy after Morning Prayer, are, Post hæc recitatur Apostolorum Symbolum: Then shall be rehearsed the Apostles Creed.

AND yet here we may note, that both the French and English Church in this last Point differ from the Practice of the Primitive Church: For the Primitive Church for near Six hundred Years made no other publick Use of the Creed in Divine Service, but only in Catechising, and as a Form of Professing their Faith at Baptism; as Hamon L'Estrange, and Vossius, and others have made it appear. Whence it follows, that primitive Practice was no Rule in Indifferent Matters, either to the French or English Church, but they made use of their own Power and Liberty in appointing such Things as they thought most expedient and meet for Edification: And therefore this Custom of Repeating the Creed as a Part of the publick Liturgy, though New in Comparison, being found to be a most useful and edifying Practice, was thought fit to be retained in the Liturgies of all Protestant Churches. And Mr. Baxter himself is so far from objecting against the Use of it, that in his Reformation of the English Liturgy, he orders all the Three Creeds to be read: "Next let "one of the Creeds be read by the Minister, "saying, In the Profession of this Holy Christian "Faith we are here Assembled. I believe in "God the Father, &c. I believe in One God, "&c. And sometimes Athanasius's Creed." Petition for Peace and Reformation of the Liturgy, p. 26.

4. BUT to return to the French Church; I observe in the last Place, that though they do not enjoin the People to stand up and bear their Part in the Repetition of the Creed, yet they have no Objection against this. For in many Cases they allow of the Standing Posture in Time of Divine Worship. As in their Form of Ordination, I have shewn already, that the Minister who ordains, is obliged to pray standing at the Foot of the Pulpit: And I shall shew hereafter, that all the People are obliged to come up and receive the Communion, standing before the Communion-Table. And I have been informed, from those who are sufficiently acquainted with their Practice, that they stand up whilst they sing the last Verse of the 118th Psalm, and the Prayer at the End of the Ten Commandments: And as to standing up at the Creed, it is what many of the People do, and all of them may do if they please, tho' some chuse to continue kneeling. For the Minister, who in his Prayer closes his Hands together, as a Posture proper for that Office; when he comes to recite the Creed, unfolds them, and by such Change of Posture, intimates them to be at Liberty to stand up if they please.

CHAP. XII.

That the French Church approves of the Athanasian Creed, and requires Assent and Consent unto it.

ONE Reason why some cannot subscribe the Articles and the Liturgy, is, because they command the Belief and Use of the Athanasian Creed. The Eighth Article says, "It ought to be throughly received and believed, because it may be proved by most certain Warrants of Holy Scripture." And the Rubrick in the Liturgy, upon certain Days, enjoins the Reading of it. Now, they say, they cannot subscribe entirely to the Belief or Use of it, because of the Damnatory Clauses that are contained therein. Baxter Nonconform. cap. 40.

BUT this Objection will hold as well against Subscribing the French Confession. For the Fifth Article is in these Words: "We therefore approve of those Three Creeds, the Apostolical, the Nicene, and the Athanasian; because they are agreeable to the written Word of GOD." Does the Article of the Church of England say any more than this? And may we not read in the Church what is agreeable to the Word of GOD, if our Rubrick enjoins it?

I must here note again, what I have proved at large before, That no Minister could be ordained in France, till he had first subscribed this Confession of Faith, whereof that Article about the Athanasian Creed is one: So that they who scruple Conformity upon this Account here, must have been Nonconformists in the Church of France also.

IF any are offended farther with our Articles or Liturgy, because they call this Creed Athanasius's Creed; they are to consider, that the Church designed not to determine any Thing thereby, to oblige Men to take it for a Creed of Athanasius's Composing, but only to give it a Name by which it might be distinguished from the other Creeds; as is done in all other Confessions: For the French calls it, Symbolum Athanasianum, Art. 5. The Helvetick, Symbolum Athanasii, Art. 11. As also the Belgick, Art. 9. Symbolum Athanasii. And the Saxon, Symbolum Athanasianum, Art. 1. Yet all that is designed by any of these Confessions, is only that Men should take this for an Orthodox Creed, without tying them up to believe Athanasius to be the Author of it: Which being a Matter purely historical, is left to the Discussion of Learned Men to determine for or against it, as they see Reasons to convince them. And therefore, though Bishop Andrews and Rivet say they believe it to be Athanasius's own Composure, yet it is no Crime in Bishop Usher or Bishop Pearson, Hamon L'Estrange, or Dr. Cave, to dissent from them, and ascribe it to a much later and a Latin Author. The Church is not concerned in this Dispute, so long as the Creed itself is allowed to be Orthodox: And in that they are all agreed.

NAY, I must add, That Mr. B. himself was once agreed with the Church about the Use of this Creed, however in his last Books his Spirit came to be embittered against it. For in his Petition for Peace and Reformation of the Liturgy, p. 26. he orders the Athanasian Creed to be read sometimes instead of the other: Surely then at that Time, when he drew up the Form of a New Liturgy to be presented to the Bishops in 1661, he had none of these Objections against the Damnatory Clauses in it. And if he had considered that just Apology, which Dr. Falkner and some others have made for it, he would never have shewn himself so weak, as to have gratified the Socinians with unreasonable Scruples against it. See Dr. Falkner Libert. Eccles. p. 145. &c.

CHAP. XIII.

That the French Church does not receive the Communion Sitting, but requires all Communicants to receive it in another Posture.

THERE are Two sorts of Persons who dispute with the Church of England about Kneeling at the Communion. Some absolutely and universally condemn the Posture, as sinful and unlawful; because it is a Deviation from the Practice and Example of CHRIST, who administred the Communion to his Disciples Sitting; which therefore they say, is the only Lawful Posture. Others are not altogether so rigid as this, but say, they believe it to be lawful to receive the Eucharist Kneeling, and, upon occasion, themselves do so receive it; but their Quarrel at the Liturgy and Canon is for rejecting those from Communion, nion, who dare not kneel in the Act of Receiving: Of this latter ſort of Objectors, Mr. Baxter is the Principal. Caſe of Engliſh Nonconform. c. 14. "I myſelf, ſays he, am for the "Lawfulneſs of Organs, Rails, and coming "up to them; and for the Lawfulneſs of "Kneeling, when we ſing Pſalms, or read the "Scripture, or hear the Preacher: But I am "not for the Lawfulneſs of Hanging or "Damning Men, that herein are not of my "Mind; nor for turning unneceſſary Things, "becauſe they are lawful, into Conditions of "Church-Communion, and making Kneeling neceſſary to Salvation."

Now, whatever there is in either of theſe Charges, they affect the French Church as much as they do the Church of England. For though the French Church does not receive the Communion Kneeling, yet neither, Firſt, Does ſhe condemn Kneeling as unlawful; nor Secondly, Does ſhe uſe Sitting, but a contrary Poſture; that is, Standing; which is as much a Deviation from the Example of CHRIST, as Kneeling is. Nor, Thirdly, Does ſhe admit any to Communion, but ſuch as receive in that Poſture and Manner as her Rubricks and Canons appoint. So that if there be any Force in the Arguments urged againſt the Church of England, they equally hold againſt the Church of France; or if the one may be juſtified, ſo may the other. Let us therefore examine theſe Particulars.

THAT Firſt, the French Church condemns not Kneeling as unlawful, appears from this; That ſhe allows it lawful to Communicate with the Engliſh, Lutheran, and Polonian Churches; all which receive the Communion Kneeling, and in no other Poſture. Beſides, Beza ſays, "That Kneeling at the Communion "hath a Shew of Godly and Chriſtian Reverence, and therefore might be uſed with "Benefit heretofore. Only he thinks, that "ſince Bread-Worſhip came in at this Door, "thoſe Churches did well who received another Geſture. However, he condemns none "that ſtill retain it: For, he ſays, it is not "Idolatrous in itſelf; and therefore he determines of it, as of many other Ceremonies, that it is not of that Moment, as that "Miniſters ſhould leave their Office, or the "People forſake the Communion, becauſe of "it." Beza Ep. 12. p. 107, & 109.

PETER Martyr, who was ſometime a Miniſter of the French Church, goes a little farther, and ſays, "It is not material whether we "receive the LORD's Supper Standing, Sitting, "or Kneeling, ſo long as the Inſtitution of "CHRIST be obſerved, and all occaſion of "Superſtition be cut off." Loc. Com. Claſſ. 2. cap. 4. n. 39.

AND in his Defence of the Euchariſt againſt Gardiner, he ſays, "Adoration may be uſed "in Time of Receiving, provided our Minds "be applied, not to the Elements, but to "the Thing ſignified. For then, if we adore "the LORD by Kneeling, we do not there-"by teſtify any Real or Corporal Preſence of "CHRIST in the Sacrament." De Euchar. Part 1. Fol. 5.

HE tells us in another Place, "That many "Men piouſly bow the Knee and worſhip, "when they hear thoſe Words of the Goſpel, The Word was made Fleſh: And yet we "may not ſay, they worſhip the Words, but "the Thing ſignified. So, ſays he, what hinders but that we may do the ſame, when "we Receive the Euchariſt; provided we worſhip not the external Signs, but the Thing "ſignified by them." Loc. Com. Claſſ. 4. c. 10. n. 50.

THIS Learned Man did not think Kneeling ſo ſuperſtitious, as ſome would make it; nor Sitting ſo neceſſary by any Command or Example of CHRIST, but that any other decent Poſture would as well comport with the End of the Inſtitution.

AND indeed this was always the Judgment of all knowing Men in the French Church, That the Poſture of Receiving was none of thoſe Things which are of the Subſtance of the Sacrament, or which we are preciſely bound to follow the Example of CHRIST in; but an Accidental Circumſtance, left to the Liberty of the Church (as many other Things are) to determine, as ſhe ſees moſt uſeful and expedient. Take the Teſtimony of one, which may ſtand for the Judgment of the whole Church, becauſe his Works were approved by two or three National Synods; that is, the Learned Chamier, who in his Book de Euchariſtia, thus anſwers the Popiſh Argument for mixing Water with Wine, taken from the Example of CHRIST: "It follows "not, ſays he, that becauſe CHRIST did it, "therefore we are bound to do the ſame; "for he waſhed his Diſciples Feet at Supper, "but no Man thinks we are bound to do ſo "under Pain of Mortal Sin. He Conſecrated at Even and after Supper; which now "the Church of Rome forbids. Again, He "Conſecrated Lying at Table; which Cuſtom is long ago laid aſide, and obſerved "by none. This gives us to underſtand, that "every Thing is not neceſſary to be done "that CHRIST did only accidentally or "occaſionally, in Celebrating the Euchariſt; "but only ſuch Things as he did, propter ipſius Sacramenti Plenitudinem, to make it a compleat and perfect Sacrament; to which neither Waſhing the Feet, nor Celebrating at "Even, nor Lying at Table, nor Mixing "Water with the Wine do appertain." Chamier de Euchariſt. Tom. 4. Lib. 6. c. 3. n. 11.

So again, Lib. 7. cap. 15. n. 13. "All Things "are not neceſſary to be imitated that CHRIST "did, when they are only Circumſtances of "his Actions. For inſtance, He Celebrated "the Euchariſt at Even, after Supper, Lying "at Table, at the Time of the Paſſover. "In ſuch Things every Church is at Liberty "to act as ſhe pleaſes."

WHO ſees not by all this, that in the Judgment of the French Church, Sitting at Table in the Reception of the Euchariſt, is none of thoſe Things which we are neceſſarily obliged to by the Example of CHRIST, but only an Accidental Circumſtance, which may be altered at the Diſcretion of the Church? Accordingly the French Church uſed her Liberty at the Reformation, and took Standing, at the Euchariſt as her Ordinary Receiving-Poſture: And what is more, not only uſed Standing, but enjoined it preciſely, and forbad any to receive it Sitting at the Table, for the ſame Reaſon that the Church of England forbids it, viz. That there might be a General Uniformity in the Church. The Words of the Synod of St. Maixant are expreſsly theſe: "That hereafter there may be "a General Uniformity in the Churches of "this Kingdom, in the Adminiſtration of "the LORD's-Supper, and all Scruples by rea"ſon of Difference and Singularity, ariſing "in weak, but honeſt Hearts, uncapable of "diſtinguiſhing between the Subſtance and "Circumſtance of the Sacred Action, may be "prevented; all Paſtors are enjoined to ab"ſtain from any new and private Methods "of their own. Among which, they forbid "that of bringing the People up in Ranks "unto the Table, there to ſit or ſtand; "whereas they ought to make them come "ſingly, one after another up unto it." Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 6. art. 14.

HERE I obſerve, they not only forbid Men to receive the Euchariſt Sitting in Companies at the Table as at a Feaſt, (which is the Thing that is ſo much pleaded for among us) but they will not allow them to receive it in Companies Standing about the Table neither; for they muſt come up ſingly one after another.

Now ſuppoſing any one ſhould make a Scruple at this, and object againſt Receiving Standing ſingly, as varying from the Example of CHRIST at the Inſtitution of the firſt Supper: If there be any Strength in the Objection, does it not hold as well againſt the French Church, as the Church of England? For Standing is as different from Sitting, as Kneeling is; and Standing ſingly, is ſomething more. What then! muſt the Miniſters give the Communion to Perſons Sitting in Companies at the Table, who dare not receive it otherwiſe? This the Canon forbids, and they are upon their Oath to obſerve the Canon, and liable to Suſpenſion if they do otherwiſe. Where then is the Difference betwixt their Caſe, and the Miniſters of the Church of England? The Engliſh Rubrick, and the Twenty-ſeventh Canon (which interprets the Rubrick) ſays, "That no Miniſter, when he Celebrateth the "Communion, ſhall wittingly adminiſter the "ſame to any but ſuch as kneel, under Pain "of Suſpenſion." And the French Canon ſays, "No Miniſter ſhall give the Commu"nion to Perſons Sitting in Ranks at the Ta"ble, but make them come up and receive "Standing ſingly one after another." And the Miniſters are upon Oath to obſerve this Canon, and liable to Cenſure if they tranſgreſs it. Where then, I ſay, is the Difference? If Kneeling be a Deviation from the Inſtitution and Example of CHRIST, Standing is ſo too. If to enjoin Kneeling be to add a new Term of Communion, to enjoin Standing muſt be an Impoſition of the ſame Nature: And Mr. Baxter's Six Arguments will hold as well againſt the French, as the Engliſh Poſture. For he may ſay with equal Truth, That their Impoſition of Standing is a Sin: "1. Becauſe it maketh new Terms of Church"Communion. 2. It contradicts CHRIST's "appointed Terms, which require all Chri"ſtians to receive each other in Love and "Concord. 3. They muſt anſwer for depri"ving CHRIST's Members of their Right, as "truly as if they oppreſſed Widows and Or"phans. 4. They muſt anſwer for Schiſma"tical Tearing of the Church by their En"gines. 5. And for uſurping a needleſs and "hurtful Dominion over Mens Faith and "Conſciences by their Church-Legiſlation. "6. And for uſing that Office, which is "made for the Comfort and Edifying of the "Faithful, to drive Conſcience and Obedience "to GOD out of the World, by making "doubtful enſnaring Impoſitions, &c." Engl. Nonconf. cap. 4.

HOW would a French Miniſter anſwer theſe Arguments? Why plainly by ſaying they were Slanders, not Arguments. For the requiring Men to uſe the Standing Poſture, was not to make any new Term of Communion. Otherwiſe it would be a new Term of Communion to require Men to receive in a Church, or in Leavened Bread, or in a Morning, or on any other Day beſides the Paſſover, or in Wine not mixed with Water: For all theſe Circumſtances differ from our SAVIOUR's Practice at the firſt Inſtitution; yet they are enjoined by the French and all other Proteſtant Churches; and no one can communicate with them that will not comply with theſe Injunctions. But will any one ſay, all theſe are new Terms of Communion, or that they contradict CHRIST's appointed Terms, or deprive CHRIST's Members of their Right, or Schiſmatically tear the Church, or that they are an Uſurpation upon Mens Faith, or drive Conſcience and Obedience out of the World; when they are only the Determination of Indifferent Circumſtances, which are left to the Liberty of every Church?

IF this be a good Anſwer and Apology for the French Church, which enjoins Standing, it will hold as well for the Church of England, which enjoins Kneeling; ſince their Caſe is the ſame, and they muſt both ſtand or fall together.

BUT what if after all, our SAVIOUR celebrated the Euchariſt neither Sitting, nor Kneeling, nor Standing, but in a different Poſture from from all these; to wit, Lying along at Table? What then becomes of the Argument from CHRIST's Example? Does it not affect the Dissenters, as much as the Church of England? And are not they concerned to answer their own Argument as well as we? For if this be true, that CHRIST celebrated Lying along, then Sitting is as much a Deviation from that Posture, as Standing or Kneeling is. If they ask, How it appears that CHRIST celebrated Lying along, rather than Sitting? I refer them to those French Authors who undertake to prove it against Cardinal Perron, and such other Popish Writers, that say our SAVIOUR celebrated Sitting, and that Sitting is a Posture of Adoration.

MONSIEUR Daille says, "It is a Thing confessed among Learned Men, and evidently proved by the Gospels, that the Apostles, at the Time when they received the Eucharist with our SAVIOUR, did not sit, but lie along upon Beds, as the Custom then was." Apostolos, quo tempore Eucharistiam sumpserunt, non sedisse, sed in lectis de sæculi illius more, semisupinos recubuisse, & Evangelia apertissime docent, & omnes eruditi confitentur. Dall. de Cultu Relig. Lib. 2. c. 2. p. 227.

THE same is asserted by Chamier, [e] Rivet, and other Writers of the French Church; who upon their Principles, consonant to those of the Church of England, do rationally account for their Church's Practice in using a different Posture: Because they say well, That the Posture of Receiving is to be reckoned among the indifferent Circumstances of the Action, and not among those Things which are of necessary Prescription or Observation; and therefore every Church has Power to appoint what Posture she thinks fit in her own Discretion. But Dissenters cannot thus account for their Practice upon their Principles: For if it be a necessary Rule, as they say it is, to receive in the same Posture which our SAVIOUR used; and that be true which the French Writers maintain, That he used not Sitting, but Lying along; then their Practice contradicts their own Rule, and they condemn themselves in going contrary to the Example of CHRIST, whilst they think themselves obliged to follow it. And this is a farther Proof, that in this whole Matter they differ as much both in Principles and Practice from the French Church, as they do from the Church of England.

CHAP. XIV.

That the French Church thinks it Lawful to oblige all Members of the Church to frequent Communion under Pain of Excommunication.

THE Rubrick at the End of the Communion-Office requires every Parishioner to communicate at least Three Times in the Year, of which Easter shall be one. "And the 112th Canon enjoins the Minister, "Church-Wardens, Quest-Men and Assistants "of every Parish-Church and Chappel, yearly within Forty Days after Easter, to exhibit to the Bishop or his Chancellor, the "Names and Sirnames of all the Parishioners, "as well Men as Women, which being of "the Age of Sixteen Years, received not the "Communion at Easter before."

MR. Baxter has Ten Reasons against this, which I shall not here repeat, but only observe by the Bye, with the Learned Dr. Falkner, how Nonconformity hath run its Changes at such a Variance, as if both the Extreams were to be preferred to the Middle Way. Mr. Baxter thinks the Church has done too much in directing Men to communicate, and ordering the Minister to Present those that neglect it. But both Mr. Cartwright, the chief Opposer of the Liturgy in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and Didoclavius the Author of the Altare Damascenum, who was the most violent Censurer thereof in King James's Time, thought that too little was done herein: For both of them would have all who are in the Church's Communion forced to receive the LORD's-Supper at stated Times. Mr. Cartwright was for inflicting Civil Punishments on Refusers; and both of them condemn those who abstain from the LORD's Table out of Fear, as guilty of Superstition, and say they ought not to be born with. See T. C's Reply, p. 117. & Altar. Damasc. c. 10. Cited by Dr. Falkner Lib. Eccles. p. 209.

ONE might possibly give many other such Instances out of the Writings of our old Nonconformists: But my Business is to shew the Sense of the French Church in this Matter. And here I observe first of all, That the Judgment of Beza was entirely conformable to the Rule of the Church of England: For in his Seventy-third Epistle, p. 330. he gives this Advice to a certain Magistrate, "That he "should enjoyn all Men professing the same "Religion with himself, to frequent the "LORD's-Supper, and they that should ne" glect it, ſhould be called before the Con-

" ſiſtory, to anſwer for their Contempt." Their Book of Diſcipline has a Canon to the ſame Purpoſe, Cap. 12. Art. 11. where it is ordered, " That if any out of Contempt " refuſe for a long Time to communicate, " they ſhall be cut off from the Body of the " Church." And what they mean by Contempt, we may learn from other Canons, which ſpeak of ſtated Communions among them Four Times a Year. Thus the Fourteenth Canon of the ſame Chapter: " Al" though it hath not been the Cuſtom to ad-
" miniſter the Lord's-Supper in the greateſt " Part of our Churches more than Four " Times a Year, yet it were to be deſired " that it might be oftner: Becauſe it is very " profitable, &c. and the Example of the Pri" mitive Church doth invite us to it. There" fore our National Synods ſhall take that " Care and Order in this Matter, which " is requiſite to the Welfare of our Church" es."

The Synod of Paris, 1565. Can. 29. ſpeaks to the ſame Purpoſe. " Although in our " Churches the Lord's-Supper for the moſt " part is adminiſtred only Four Times a Year, " yet the more frequent Celebration of it is " very deſirable, due Reverence in approach" ing it being always obſerved, &c."

Here we ſee, Four Times a Year are inſiſted on as the received Cuſtom of all the Churches, and more frequent Celebration is commended, yet not preciſely enjoined: But Four Times a Year it was expected every Member ſhould communicate, elſe he was deemed guilty of a Contempt of their Diſcipline, and accordingly cenſured by the Conſiſtory of the Church, which had Power to proceed even to Excommunication. This is ſomething more than our Church requires, both as to Times and Puniſhment; for ſhe only requires Three Times a Year, and ſays nothing of Excommunication, but leaves the Cenſure and Manner of Puniſhment to the Biſhop's Diſcretion. However, Mr. Baxter thinks fit to ſay, " That they are then to " be excommunicated if they refuſe, and to " lie in Gaol till they die, when taken by " the Writ de Excommunicato capiendo." Tho' there is not a Word of this, either in the Rubrick or Canon. And yet if it had been ſo, it is no more than is commonly done by the Magiſtrates of Geneva, who impriſon or baniſh, as they think fit, all incorrigible Contemners of the Orders of the Church.

I will end this Chapter with two Citations out of Calvin. In one of his Epiſtles, he tells us, He laboured hard in the Beginning of the Reformation, to have Communions brought to once a Month. " I ſhould be moſt pleaſed, " ſays he, to have a Monthly Communion, " rather than have the People invited only " Four Times a Year, as now the Cuſtom is " among us. When I firſt came hither, it " was adminiſtred only Three Times a Year: " I was for a Communion once a Month; " but when I could not prevail, I thought " it better to indulge a little the Peoples In" firmity, than to contend over-much about " it. Nevertheleſs, I took care to have it en" tered upon Record, That this was an Evil " Cuſtom, to the end that Poſterity might " with more Eaſe and Liberty correct it." Reſp. de quibuſd. Eccleſ. Ritib. p. 206.

In another Place he pleads for a Weekly Communion; and ſays, " It was not inſtitu-
" ted to be received only once a Year, as " then the Popiſh Cuſtom was; but to be re" ceived frequently in Memory of our Sa-
" viour's Paſſion, and for many other good " Ends, which he there recounts. This was " the Practice of the Apoſtolical Church: " They Communicated once a Week, (Act. " ii. 42. 1 Cor. xi. 20.) and it continued ſo " for ſome Ages after, which he proves from " many ancient Canons; as thoſe called the " Apoſtolical Canons, the Councils of Antioch and " Toledo, and the Writings of St. Auſtin and " Chryſoſtom: And concludes, " That the Cu-
" ſtom of Communicating only once a Year " was moſt certainly an Invention of the " Devil's. Sane hæc Conſuetudo, quæ ſemel quo-
" tannis communicare jubet, certiſſimum eſt Diaboli " Inventum." Calvin. Inſtit. Lib. 4. cap. 17. n. 44, 46.

Can we think now Calvin would have complained of the Engliſh Rubrick, for enjoining Men Three Times a Year to communicate, who ſays, The enjoining them but once only was the Devil's Invention! This was his Quarrel with the Church of Rome for enjoining it no oftner than ſhe did: Sure then he would not blame the Church of England for preſcribing it more frequently. He himſelf preſcribed it Four Times a Year, and would have enjoined a Monthly Communion, but was over-born in it: He commends the ancient Practice of Communicatiug Weekly, and the ancient Diſcipline which Excommunicated all that refuſed it. He would have the ancient Practice reſtored again, though not by the ancient Diſcipline; for though it was proper for thoſe Times, yet he thinks it too ſevere for the preſent, and therefore would have Men invited only, not compelled, to Weekly Communions. All which is exactly agreeable to the Senſe and Practice of the Church of England, which encourages Monthly and Weekly Communions, but compels none to them: She only requires Mens Attendance Three Times a Year, upon Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

CHAP. XV.

That the French Church uſes a Form of Words at the Delivery of the Sacrament, and obliges every Communicant to receive it only from the Hands of the Miniſter.

BY the Rubrick of the Church of England, all Miniſters are enjoined to deliver the Elements into every Communicant's Hand, and to uſe a certain Form of Words, The Body of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, &c. particularly to every one at the Diſtribution. Now this is alſo cenſured by ſome as a Thing contrary to the Practice of CHRIST: Nay, they ſay, it is a ſtudying to be wiſer than our Maſter, and not to be obedient to him. An heavy Charge indeed, if it were really true!

BUT here again Calvin and Beza expreſs their Diſſent. Calvin ſays, "Men ought not to "contend about ſuch Matters as theſe; Whe-"ther they ſhall take the Elements into their "own Hands, or not; Whether they ſhall "divide them among themſelves, or every "one take the Part which is given to him; "Whether they ſhall return the Cup into "the Deacon's Hands, or give it to their "next Neighbour; Whether the Bread ſhall "be Leavened or Unleavened; The Wine "Red or White: For theſe are Indifferent "Things. and left to the Liberty of the "Church." Calvin. Inſtit. Lib. 4. c. 17. n. 43.

BEZA ſpeaks much to the ſame purpoſe in his Second Epiſtle to du Tillet. "It is pro-"bable, ſays he, that at the firſt Supper the "Apoſtles received the Cup from one ano-"ther, and all Drank of the ſame Cup. But "what then? ſhall we therefore ſay all Church-"es Sin, where the Cuſtom is not to take "the Elements from one another, but eve-"ry one ſingly from the Hands of the Mi-"niſter or Deacon? By no means: Becauſe, "though we are commanded to receive, yet "the manner of the Reception is not pre-"ciſely enjoined."

THEY who ſpeak thus, could not think, as our Objectors do, that the Practice of our Church was ſo contrary to the Rule of CHRIST, as to be an Act of Diſobedience, and a ſtudying to be wiſer than him.

BUT the Enjoining it perhaps is the Thing they moſt ſcruple at, as contrary to the Example of CHRIST, becauſe it makes a new Term of Communion. If ſo, the Church of France is bound to anſwer it, for making ſo many Canons, enjoining all Communicants to receive only from the Hands of the Miniſter, (except in Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity) with a certain Form of Words alſo to be uſed at the Diſtribution to every one. Their Book of Diſcipline has Two Canons to this purpoſe, cap. 12. Art. 8, and 9. The Churches ſhall be informed, "That it belongeth only "unto Miniſters to give the Cup. And this "they may do with the accuſtomed Form of "Words, &c."

THIS is repeated in the Synod of Montauban, cap. 4. Art. 33. Synod of Lyons, 1563. cap. 10. Synod of Vertueil, 1567. cap. 8. Art. 9. and with greater ſtrictneſs in the Synod of Gergeau, 1601. cap. 5. Art. 7. where it is decreed, "That the "Bread and Cup in the Holy Euchariſt ſhall "be diſtributed by none but the Miniſters "and Elders, who ſhall with their own Hands "put them into the Hands of every Indivi-"dual Communicant."

THE Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 6. Art. 14. ſpeaks in as peremptory Terms as may be, "That the Cup ſhall not be given "by the Faithful one to another, it being "contrary to an expreſs Canon of our "Diſcipline; which ordereth Paſtors, if poſ-"ſible, to deliver it; or where they cannot, "the Elders to aſſiſt the Paſtors in populous "Churches."

WHERE it is to be noted, that Elders are to have no hand in it but only in Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity; which is ſo far inſiſted on, that in another Canon they condemned one Royer, who wrote a Book to prove it lawful for Elders ordinarily to give the Cup in the Sacrament, and recite the Words of Inſtitution at the Delivery of it. The Cenſure is in theſe Words: "This Synod having already deter-"mined what ſhould be done herein, by an "expreſs Canon inſerted into our Diſcipline; "in which nothing ſhall be changed for what-"ever Difficulties may ariſe about the Deli-"very of the Cup; it cannot by any means "approve of the Actings of the ſaid Royer, &c. "But our Advice is, That for as much as "Paſtors in populous Churches cannot with-"out exceſſive Toil deliver the Cup to every "individual Communicant, they may uſe the "Help of Elders, but yet enjoyn them Silence, "and the Paſtors only ſhall ſpeak when the Sa-"cred Elements are diſtributed, that ſo it "may be generally and manifeſtly known, "that the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments "is wholly appropriated to the Paſtoral "Office." Synod of St. Maixant, Cap. 8. Art. 35.

THE Nonconformity of ſome Paſtors and Churches gave them ſtill freſh Occaſion to repeat this Injunction. Therefore in the Synod of Alez, 1620, they reinforced their Diſcipline with this Canon: "In all Provinces Paſtors "ſhall

" ſhall be obliged to Adminiſter the Cup, as " well as the Bread, unto every individual " Communicant, without Diſtinction of Per- " ſons. And alſo they ſhall uſe meet Words " in the Adminiſtration of both the Elements, " to quicken the Hearts and Spirits of the " Communicants at the LORD's Table. And " expreſs Order is given to all Provincial Sy- " nods, to take ſpecial Care that Paſtors do " not in the leaſt tranſgreſs this Canon." Cap. 5. Art. 14.

THE Church of Montauban made a Remonſtrance againſt this, and pleaded that it had been an ancient Cuſtom with them for Elders to deliver the Cup, and therefore they deſired Licence to continue their ancient Practice. But the Synod refuſed, and peremptorily commanded all Paſtors without Exception to conform to the eſtabliſhed Order. Synod of Alez, Cap. 14. Art. 37.

THE two following Synods of Charenton and Caſtres reinforced the ſaid Decree, " Expreſsly " enjoyning all the Churches to obſerve moſt " uniformly the Canon of the Synod of Alez." See the Synod of Charenton, 1623. cap. 6. Art. 3. and Caſtres, 1626. cap. 14. Art. 5.

AND whereas in the next Synod of Charenton, 1631, a Complaint was made againſt the Churches of Niſmes and Montpellier, for Non-execution of the Canon of Alez, about Delivering the Cup at the LORD's Table by Paſtors only; that Synod " judged the Pro- " vince of Lower Languedoc to have incurred " a Cenſure for their over-much Indulgence " to thoſe Churches: And it highly cenſured " the Conſiſtories of thoſe Churches alſo, and " enjoyned them for the future to follow the " Practice of the other Churches of the King- " dom, on Pain of being proſecuted with all " Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures." See the Second Synod of Charenton, cap. 19. Art. 28.

THE Church of Niſmes not conforming for all this, another Decree paſſed in the following Synod of Alanſon, 1637. cap. 8. Art. 4. " En- " joyning them to ſubmit, and conform them- " ſelves to the Canon of their Diſcipline, " which Orders all Churches to be informed, " That it belongeth to Miniſters only to Ad- " miniſter the Cup, and this for the avoiding " many evil Conſequences."

THESE Canons I preſume will be owned to run full in as high and peremptory Terms, as the Rubrick of the Church of England, which enjoyns the Miniſter to deliver the Elements to every Communicant's Hand, and uſe a Form of Words particularly to every one at the Diſtribution of them. Our Diſſenters call this an Act of Diſobedience to CHRIST, and a ſtudying to be wiſer than our Maſter: But the French Synods ſay, many evil Conſequences would attend the contrary Practice, and therefore they univerſally and ſeverely prohibit it, and ſubject the Tranſgreſſors to all Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.

I HAVE one Thing more to add upon this Head, That whereas Lay-Elders in the Church of Geneva, were wont ſometimes to aſſiſt the Paſtors in the Delivery of the Cup: In the Year 1623, the Paſtors of the Church and Profeſſors of the Univerſity, ſent Letters to the National Synod of Charenton, telling them, " That now they had reſolved for the fu- " ture that it ſhould be done by the Paſtors " only." Synod of Charenton, 1623, cap. 5.

AND long before this they had declared their Willingneſs to comply with this Cuſtom. For in the National Synod of Lyons, 1563, the Brethren of Geneva being demanded, Whether at the LORD's Table Paſtors only ſhould diſtribute the Bread and Wine to the People? They gave this Anſwer, " That it were cer- " tainly beſt, if it might be conveniently done " at all Times; but where it would be im- " practicable and too great a Burden for the " Paſtor, as it would be in ſome Churches, " there the Elders and Deacons might come " in to his Aſſiſtance, and diſtribute the Ele- " ments unto thoſe who were more remote " from him." Synod of Lyons, 1563. p. 53.

SO that here we have the concurring Judgment both of France and Geneva, not only for the Lawfulneſs but alſo the Expediency of the Engliſh Way of diſtributing the Elements to the People; which Rule is never to be broken but in Caſes of abſolute Neceſſity, when they allow Elders and Deacons to diſtribute, but never the People to receive from one another. This either juſtifies the Church of England, or condemns the French Church for diſobeying the Law of CHRIST. Let thoſe now who are concerned, tell us, whether of the Two it does, for we can ſee no Difference between them.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Doxology in the Communion-Office, which ſpeaks of Archangels in Heaven.

I FIND another Objection made againſt the Communion-Office, by the Authors of the Book called, The Neceſſity of Reformation, 1660, becauſe in the Doxology a little before the Prayer of Conſecration, there is mention made of Archangels as well as Angels in Heaven. Now they ſay, " This is an Uncertainty, if not an " Untruth; for the Scripture never ſpeaks " of more Archangels than one, Dan. x. 21. " 1 Theſ. iv. 16. Jude 12. Rev. xii. 7. This one

" is

" is Michael, to wit, CHRIST the Prince of " his People." So thoſe Reformers, p. 29.

TO which I anſwer, 1. That ſuppoſing there was but one Archangel, yet this Expreſſion might be juſtified by many Paſſages of Scripture, where the Plural Number is uſed, when only a ſingle Perſon is meant. As Matth. xxvii. 44. The Thieves alſo that were crucified with him, caſt the ſame in his Teeth: When yet it appears from Luke xxiii. 39. that it was but one of the Thieves that railed on him. See the like Inſtances, Matth. xxvi. 8. Heb. xi. 33, 37. Matth. xxi. 2. cited in Mr. Pool's Synopſis, on Matth. xxvii. 44. To which may be added, John i. 5. Judg. xii. 7.

NOW as St. Matthew ſpeaks Truth, when he ſays, Men of all Sorts mocked CHRIST, to wit, The Chief Prieſts, the Scribes, the People, the Soldiers, and even the Thieves that were crucified with him, though it was but one of the Thieves that did ſo: In like manner our Church ſpeaks Truth, when ſhe ſays, With Angels and Archangels, and all the Company of Heaven, we laud and magnify thy Glorious Name; though it could be certainly proved, that there was but one Archangel in Heaven. For ſtill it will be true, that Heavenly Spirits of all Sorts, Angels, Archangels, &c. Praiſe the Name of GOD in Heaven.

BUT Secondly, it is a Miſtake in the Objectors, when they ſay, The Scripture never ſpeaks of more Archangels than one. For Dan. x. 13. Michael the Archangel is called one of the chief Princes: Which I think, plainly ſignifies that there are more than one. And ſo St. Auſtin ſays expreſsly in his Enchiridion, c. 58. Sint tamen & illic Archangeli, That there are Angels and Archangels in Heaven; though he will not undertake with Dionyſius and the Schoolmen to diſtinguiſh them into Nine Orders, and tell what is the exact Difference between them. Rivet commends St. Auſtin's Modeſty, and does not diſlike his Opinion of more Archangels than one. Rivet. Cathol. Orth. Tract. 2. ℣ 46. n. 3.

AND Peter Martyr ſays, " The Names of " Archangel, Cherubim, and Seraphim do " denote, that there are both different Or- " ders and different Offices among the Cele- " ſtial Spirits." And he thinks Principalities and Archangels in Scripture mean the ſame Order, to wit, thoſe higher Spirits, to whoſe Care only is committed the Protection of Provinces, Empires and Kingdoms.

" THIS, he ſays, was Daniel's Meaning, " when he wrote of the Prince of the Grecians, " Perſians, and Michael the Prince of the Peo- " of GOD, Dan. x. 13, and xii. 1." Pet. Mart. Loc. Com. Par. 1. cap. 12. n. 20, 21.

SO that in his Opinion, the Prince of Græcia and the Prince of Perſia are of the ſame Order with Michael the Prince of the People of GOD.

AND that ſhews that he did not believe Michael to be CHRIST, nor the only Archangel that is mentioned in Scripture.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm, how far juſtified by the French Church.

THE next particular Office that is found fault with, is the Office of Baptiſm, againſt which Nonconformiſts have ſeveral Exceptions. That which has made the moſt Noiſe, with the leaſt Reaſon, is the Rubrick, which enjoyns the Miniſter to Sign the Child after Baptiſm with the Sign of the Croſs. Some ſay, it is Superſtition, others that it is Popery: But Mr. Baxter has two new Charges againſt it. Firſt, He ſays it is inventing a new Sacrament, and Secondly, it alters the Terms of CHRIST's Covenant, and directly contradicts the Fundamental Law of Chriſtianity. Eng. Nonconform. cap. 13.

LET us hear the Judgment of the French Church, whether that be ſo ſevere as this. They neither enjoyn this Ceremony nor uſe it, I own, but neither do they condemn it as ſuperſtitious, or ſimply unlawful, nor give our Church thoſe hard Names for enjoyning it as Mr. Baxter and ſome others do.

BEZA was not for enjoyning it; yet he gives this Advice to the Brethren of England, that wrote to him about this and many other Ceremonies. " That for as much as they were " not idolatrous in themſelves, it was not fit " that Miniſters ſhould leave their Office, or " People forſake the Communion becauſe of " it." Beza. Epiſt. 12. p. 107, and 109.

IN another Place he ſays, " I know that " ſome Churches (meaning the Engliſh and Lu- " theran) Renouncing the Adoration of the " Croſs, do ſtill retain the Uſe of this Sign: " Utantur igitur ipſi ſicuti par eſt ſua Libertate; Let " them therefore uſe their own Liberty as " it is meet they ſhould: We in the French " Churches for ſundry Reaſons do not per- " mit it to be uſed." Beza cont. Baldwin. cited by Mr. Sprint in his Caſſander Anglicus. p. 149.

THIS is ſpoken Candidly with a juſt Moderation and Temper: Every Church may uſe her own Liberty in this Matter, and therefore as the Church of England does not condemn the French for not retaining this Ceremony, ſo neither does the French condemn the the Engliſh for retaining it. For they are both agreed that it is not in itſelf unlawful.

PETER Martyr ſays, "The Sign of the Croſs "is worn by Kings upon their Crowns with- "out Superſtition, becauſe by that Sign they "only profeſs and declare, that they Reve- "rence and Maintain the Chriſtian Religion. "And if it be lawful for a Man to bear "the Coat of Arms belonging to his Fami- "ly, it is lawful alſo to profeſs ourſelves "Chriſtians by the Sign of the Croſs." Loc. Com. Part 2. c. 5. n. 20.

WHAT does the Church of England more than this, when ſhe uſes this Sign only as a Token of profeſſing the Chriſtian Religion; that we are not aſhamed to own the Faith of CHRIST crucified, &c. May we not as innocently uſe this Sign in Baptiſm, as a Prince wears it on his Crown, in Token that he reverences and maintains the Chriſtian Religion? A Diſputing Head, I confeſs, may work a new Sacrament out of either; but Peter Martyr was not ſo quick-ſighted as to diſcern any ſuch Myſtery in them.

NOR ſurely did the National Synod of St. Maixant ſee any Harm in it, when they reſolved, "That Proteſtant Soldiers, to re- "ceive the Relief granted by his Majeſty "unto thoſe who had been maimed in his "Service, might wear the Croſs on their "Cloaks, not as a Badge of Superſtition; but "as a Mark and Cognizance of their afflict- "ed Condition, and that they ſhould not "therefore be excluded from the Communion "at the LORD's Table." Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. Cap. 6. Art. 11.

BUT it may be ſaid, That though the French Church did allow it to be lawful, yet they did not like the Impoſing it. Suppoſe they did not: What follows from thence? That therefore to impoſe it was to make a new Sacrament, and alter the Terms of CHRIST's Covenant, and deſtroy the Fundamental Law of Chriſtianity, as Mr. Baxter words it? No ſuch Thing: For how then could Beza perſuade Miniſters to comply with it, if it was ſo manifeſtly repugnant to the Chriſtian Religion? Would he have exhorted both Paſtors and People to have ſubmitted to it, had he thought it a new Sacrament, or that it altered the Terms of the Covenant of GOD? Beza knew too well that the enjoyning ſome Indifferent Circumſtance or Ceremony was not to alter the Terms of the Covenant: Otherwiſe the French Church had been as guilty as any other. For though they do not enjoin the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm, yet they do ſome other Things which CHRIST has no more commanded than the Sign of the Croſs.

AT Geneva it is enacted by a Law, for ſome Reaſons of State, That no Miniſter ſhall baptize a Child with the Name of Balthaſar; And though this ſometimes occaſions Troubles and Tumults, yet the Miniſters are bound preciſely to obſerve it, as Beza himſelf informs us in the Life of Calvin. "In Gervaſii "Templo tumultum non parvum eo prætextu excita- "runt, quod Miniſter Infanti ad Baptiſmum oblato, "indere Balthaſaris nomen, quoniam id diſerte Le- "ges Scriptæ ob certam cauſam prohibebant, recu- "ſaret." Beza Vit. Calvin. p. 84.

IN the other Churches of France Miniſters are enjoined by Canon "not to baptize "any Child with any Name that is aſcribed "to GOD in Scripture, as Immanuel, and "others of the like Nature." So their Book of Diſcipline. cap. 11. Art. 14.

AND the Synod of Orleans, 1562. cap. 2. Art. 21. ſays expreſsly, "Miniſters ſhall re- "ject the Names of old Paganiſm; nor ſhall "they give unto Infants ſuch Names as are "attributed to GOD; nor Names of Office, "ſuch as Baptiſt, Angel, Archangel." See alſo the Synod of Niſmes, 1572. cap. 2. Art. 3. Synod of Figeac, 1579. cap. 2. Art. 4. Synod of Vitre, 1583. cap. 3.

THEY are farther obliged not to baptize any Children but upon a Sermon-day. The Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 6. Art. 7. "It "ſhall not be lawful to celebrate Baptiſm, "unleſs there be a Sermon either before or "after." The ſame was decreed in the Synod of St. Maixant, 1609. cap. 3. Art. 10. and the Synod of Privas, 1612. cap. 6. Art. 7.

NOW the Queſtion to be asked upon all this is, Whether any of theſe Things be Conditions of Baptiſm enjoined by CHRIST? If not; (for no one, I preſume, will ſay they are) then by what Authority does the Church of France enjoin them? Why muſt no Child be baptized but on a Sermon-day? Why not with an Heathen Name, or the Name of Balthaſar, or Immanuel, or Baptiſt, or Angel, &c. Hath CHRIST made any of theſe Things Conditions of Baptiſm? No, but at Mr. Baxter's Rate of Arguing, the French Canons do. For they ſay, No one ſhall be baptized, unleſs the Parents will firſt agree not to call him by the Name of Balthaſar, or Immanuel, or Baptiſt, &c. Now what if the Parents inſiſt upon it and require the Child to be named ſo, and plead as Mr. Baxter does, that CHRIST required none of theſe Conditions, and therefore if the Miniſters refuſe to baptize, they are guilty of altering the Terms of CHRIST's Covenant and Sacrament: Would this Charge at all affect the Church of France? If not, how comes it more to affect the Church of England, which only requires Submiſſion to her Injunction in the ſame manner as the Church of France does to hers? Judge not according to Appearance, but judge righteous Judgment; excuſe the one, or condemn both.

IF it be ſaid, that the French Canons do not deprive any of Baptiſm: I anſwer, they do as much as the Church of England does, ſuppoſing Men to be ſo weak or ſuperſtitious, as to think them an Encroachment upon their Chriſtian Liberty, and an Altering of the Terms of CHRIST's Covenant; for whilſt whilſt they are under that Prejudice, they will think it unlawful to comply with them, and that they are obliged to ſhew their Chriſtian Liberty by ſtanding ſtiff againſt them; in which Caſe they can have no Baptiſm, unleſs the Canons are tranſgreſſed, or elſe give way to their Weakneſs or Stubbornneſs, call it what you will: So that the Caſe is the ſame in both Churches, only the one has been ſo happy as ſcarce ever to have met with any Oppoſition upon ſuch Points, whilſt the other has felt the ſad Effects of inveterate Prejudice to her great Sorrow and Diſtraction.

BUT then Experience, you will ſay, ſhould make Men wiſe, and teach them at laſt to take this Stumbling-block out of the Way, and leave every one at Liberty whether he would uſe the Croſs or not. I anſwer, this belongs to Convocations and Synods, and not to private Men to alter. The French Church ſaw Reaſon to alter one of the forementioned Conſtitutions. For the Synod of Caſtres, 1626. cap. 25. Art. 15. does not confine Men to baptize only on Sermon-days, but allows Baptiſm to be celebrated "on any "Day when Common-Prayer is ſaid without "Sermon." And it was finally determined by the following Synod of Charenton, 1631. cap. 19. Art. 22. "That every Church ſhould "be left to their own Uſage and Cuſtom, "to baptize with or without a Sermon as "they thought convenient." But ſo long as the former Conſtitution continued in Force, Private Men were not to contemn, but pay a due Reſpect and Obedience to it. And that is our Caſe here in England. When the Wiſdom of our Superiors ſhall think it expedient to make any Alteration in this Matter; Miniſters may baptize with, or without the Croſs, as now is done in private Baptiſm: But till then Rubricks muſt be their Rule, and not Humour or Fancy. Mean while Diſſenters have been often told, That if taking away the Croſs, or leaving it at Liberty, would cure the Schiſm, the Church of England could as eaſily diſpenſe with it, as the French Church does with a Sermon, and go many Steps farther for the Sake of Peace and Union, [f] if ſuch Conditions would procure it.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the ſaving Regeneration of Infants, that it is a Doctrine of the French Church, as much as of the Church of England.

THE next Thing that is ſcrupled in the Office of Baptiſm, is the Rubrick at the End of it, which ſays, "It is certain by "GOD's Word, that Children which are bap-"tized, dying before they commit actual Sin, "are undoubtedly ſaved." Mr. Baxter is ſo offended with this, that he ſays, were there but this one Thing, it would oblige them to Nonconformity, whatever they ſuffer for it. Caſe of Engliſh Nonconformiſts, cap. 9.

SURE there muſt be ſome extraordinary Evil in it then, which makes it ſo frightful: Yes, he ſays, it is a new Article of Faith, and a dangerous adding to the Word of GOD, and a Doctrine never heard of till the laſt Alteration of the Liturgy. All which is abundantly proved to be falſe by Dr. Falkner in his Libertas Eccleſiaſtica, pag. 230, &c. whither I refer the Reader for Satisfaction. All I am here concerned to ſhew is, That this Rubrick is agreeable to the Doctrine of the French Church. Which will appear if we compare it with the Thirty-fifth Article of their Confeſſion, which ſays, "That Baptiſm "is adminiſtred to us to teſtify our Adop-"tion, becauſe by it we are ingrafted into "the Body of CHRIST, waſhed by his Blood, "and renewed by his SPIRIT unto Holineſs "of Life." Now are not thoſe, who are waſhed by the Blood of CHRIST, and renewed by his SPIRIT, truly regenerated, and undoubtedly ſaved, if they commit no actual Sin to reverſe and cancel the Benefit of their Baptiſm? How comes the Church of England then to be charged with making a new Article of Faith? Why, becauſe it is not certain by GOD's Word that all Children that are baptized, are ſaved; particularly not the Children of Infidels and Heathens, though they ſhould be baptized. And does the Church of England ſay this? No, but Mr. Baxter ſays ſhe means ſo, and that is enough to charge her with making a new Article of Faith. But why may not the Church of France mean ſo too, ſeeing her Words are as indefinite and without Exception? No, that would ſpoil another Charge of Mr. Baxter's, who ſays, the Church of England preſumptuouſly condemns the Reformed Churches and the Chriſtian World. So that in ſhort, here is no Controverſy upon this Point, unleſs we will allow Mr. Baxter the Liberty of fixing what Senſe he pleaſes upon Words, and let him partially load the Church of England, and excuſe the

the French and other Reformed Churches, when yet they all ſpeak and mean the ſame Thing, which is no more than this; That all Children who have a juſt Right to Baptiſm, and are truly qualified for it, and are lawfully and duly baptized, are thereby put into a ſalvable Condition, in which if they die without committing actual Sin, they will certainly be ſaved. And if this be not Truth, the whole Doctrine of Infant-Baptiſm muſt be falſe and to no Purpoſe, and it is in vain to diſpute with Pelagians and Anabaptiſts any longer about it.

BUT what if the Church of England had ſaid, That All Children that were baptized were undoubtedly Saved, &c. Ought not this in Reaſon by every candid Interpreter to be conſtrued of Children only that had a true Right to Baptiſm, that is, of Children of Believing Parents, and not of Turks and Infidels, as Mr. Baxter will needs underſtand it? And then what is it more than is ſaid by other Churches? Calvin and Beza were for the Salvation of all Infants baptized, if Rivet rightly underſtood their Doctrine: For he ſays in anſwer to a Jeſuit, That it is moſt falſe, that Calvin and Beza ever ſaid that ſome baptized Infants are Damned, dying in their Infancy before they commit any actual Sin.

Rivet. Cathol. Orthod. Tract. 3. Q. 3. Sect. 6. Falſiſſimum eſt eos unquam dixiſſe, quoſdam Infantes jam Baptizatos damnari, ſi in Infantia moriuntur, antequam peccata actualia ſine pœnitentia commiſerint.

AND Peter Martyr's Words are as general as thoſe of our Rubrick, That Children dying with Baptiſm are ſaved, which he proves by Scripture-Arguments, though Mr. Baxter ſays there is no Scripture for it. Pet. Mart. Loc. Com. Par. 4. cap. 8. n. 19.

BUT I have a greater Authority to urge than either Calvin or Beza, which is the Authority of a National Synod held at Charenton, 1623. cap. 26. Art. 17. where they ſay, "That "the Word of GOD teſtifieth that the Chil- "dren of Believers are holy, through the ſin- "gular Benefit of the Covenant of Grace, in "which they are included with their Parents: "Therefore Fathers and Mothers fearing GOD, "ſhould not doubt of their Childrens Election "and Salvation whom GOD, takes unto himſelf "in their Infancy." Now if even the unbaptized Children of the Faithful are ſaved, much more the baptized.

AND it is to be obſerved, that this was one of thoſe Canons, which were made to explain the Decrees of the Synod of Dort, which every French Miniſter ſubſcribes, and ſwears to believe and maintain: So that after all Mr. Baxter's Declamations and Invectives againſt the Engliſh Rubrick, it deſerves them no more than this French Canon, or the Synod of Dort; ſince it ſpeaks only of the Children of Believers, who have a Right to Baptiſm, and no others. And this leads us to another Controverſy raiſed by Mr. Baxter, concerning thoſe who have a Right to Baptiſm by the Rules of the Church of England, which ſhall be the Subject of the following Chapter.

CHAP. XIX.

That the Church of England admits of none to be baptized, but what are allowed Baptiſm in the French Church.

MR. Baxter in his 34th Chapter of Engl. Nonconformity, lays it to the Charge of the Church, "That ſhe obliges all her Mini- "ſters under Pain of Suſpenſion, to baptize "the Children of Atheiſts, Jews, Infidels, He- "reticks, Blaſphemers, or any other that are "brought to Church to them." The only Ground of this Charge are the Words of the Sixty-eighth Canon, which are theſe: "No "Miniſter ſhall refuſe or delay to Chriſten "any Child, according to the Form of the "Book of Common-Prayer, that is brought to "the Church to him upon Sundays or Holy- "Days to be Chriſtened." Whence he infers, That no Miniſter may refuſe to baptize the Children of Jews or Infidels, or ſo much as enquire, whether the Godfathers be Chriſtians, Jews, or Infidels, becauſe it is ſaid, He muſt baptize them without Delay.

I COULD hardly have thought it poſſible for any Man to have put ſuch a perverſe Interpretation upon the Words of an innocent Canon. But this is Mr. Baxter's ordinary Way of Diſputing, to ſtrain Words to an unnatural Senſe, and then fight againſt his own Chimera's. Who beſide him would have thought or ſaid, that the Children of Jews and Infidels as ſuch, were compriſed in this Canon, when it is ſo plain that it ſpeaks only of ſuch as have a juſt Right to Chriſtian Baptiſm? whom the Miniſter is not to refuſe or delay to Chriſten, when they are offered, for any private Reaſons of his own; ſuch Reaſons ſuppoſe as was that of Snape in Queen Elizabeth's Time, who, as Biſhop Bancroft informs us, would not baptize a certain Child, only becauſe the Parents inſiſted upon having him called Richard. Bancroft. Danger. Poſit. Lib. 3. cap. 12.

THIS indeed might have been allowed in a French Miniſter, who (as I have ſhewed) is prohibited by Canon to give any Heathen Name to Children at their Baptiſm; but it was

was no Rule of the Church of England, and therefore probably Biſhop Bancroft, who was Preſident of the Convocation when the Canons were made, might have his Eye upon this very thing, and inſert this Canon on purpoſe to prevent this Abuſe in others of the like Nature. But whether that was the Occaſion of the Canon or not; it is certain it can have no ſuch Senſe as Mr. Baxter puts upon it, that is, to oblige Miniſters to baptize the Children of Jews and Infidels, who have no Right to Baptiſm. It is certain our Church in this Matter goes by no other Rule than all the Reformed Churches, which exclude the Children of Turks, Jews and Infidels from Baptiſm, as being out of the Covenant, and Unclean, except in ſome particular Caſes; as when they are Adopted into Chriſtian Families, either by the voluntary Conſent of the Parents themſelves, transferring their Right of Education to Chriſtians; or Children that are expoſed by their Parents, and taken up in Charity by Chriſtians, to be brought up by them; or are made lawful Captives of War, and by that Means become the legal Poſſeſſion of Chriſtian Maſters. In theſe Caſes, their Adoption into Chriſtian Families, where they are deſigned a Chriſtian Education, gives them a Qualification for Chriſtian Baptiſm. And if in ſuch Caſes, the Church of England admits the Children of Jews, Turks, or Heathens to be baptized; it is no more than what Rivet and Walæus tell us is done by moſt other Reformed Churches, who think that by ſuch Means thoſe Children gain a Right to Baptiſm, after the ſame manner that Abraham's Servants bought with his Money did to Circumciſion, as well as thoſe that were born in his Houſe. And they ſay farther, that this was ſo common a Practice, and ſo beyond all Controverſy in the primitive Church, that St. Auſtin made uſe of it to prove Free Grace and Election againſt the Pelagians. Vid. Synopſ. Pur. Theol. Diſp. 44. n. 49.

WHERE then is the Fault of the Church of England in this Matter, if ſhe acts by the ſame Rule that the Primitive Church and all Reformed Churches go by? If ſhe admits not the Children of Jews and Pagans to Baptiſm, but only in ſuch Caſes as all other Churches do; it is a Slandering her Conſtitution for any Man to ſay, ſhe obliges her Miniſters by Canon, to refuſe none, though they be the Children of Jews or Infidels, if they be but brought to Church to be baptized.

BUT however, ſhe admits the Children of wicked Chriſtians, and commands the Miniſter to baptize them. And where is the Harm of that? Is it not much better, than to perplex her Miniſters, as many Diſſenters do themſelves, with doubting Conſciences and endleſs Scruples about the Parents Godlineſs, which they cannot always, nay very ſeldom certainly know. The forementioned Authors, Rivet and Walæus, tell us in the ſame Place, (n. 50.) That their Churches do not exclude the Children of Chriſtian Parents from Baptiſm, though the Parents have rendred their own Baptiſm Null, as to any Efficacy upon themſelves, by an ungodly Life or impure Faith; and their Reaſon is, becauſe the Son is not to bear the Iniquity of the Father: GOD is ſtill the GOD of thoſe Children.

WHAT then, muſt all Children be admitted, that are brought to Baptiſm? Suppoſe the Children of Atheiſts, Hereticks, Blaſphemers, Inceſtuous, Adulterers, or even Excommunicate Perſons; muſt none of theſe be delayed or refuſed, but be immediately baptized? I anſwer, The Children of the three laſt mentioned are to be baptized by the Rules of the French Diſcipline. For in the Synod of Vitre, 1583. cap. Art. 8. This Caſe was propoſed, "Whe-"ther the uſual Form of Prayer ſhould be "recited at the Baptiſm of Infants born out "of Matrimony, or in Adultery, or Inceſt, "becauſe there are in in thoſe Words, Be-"gotten of Father and Mother whom thou haſt "called into thy Church. And the Synod judged, "that there need be no Diſpute made about "it; becauſe that under the Name of Fa-"ther and Mother are not only compriſed "the more immediate Parents, but alſo their "Anceſtors to a Thouſand Generations; and "this alſo ſhould be conſidered, that though "the Parents be faulty, yet they are not "therefore totally excluded the Covenant of "GOD. See alſo Book of Diſcipline, cap. 11. "Art. 19.

IN the Synod of Rochel, 1607. cap. 10. Art. 35. this other Caſe was propoſed, "Whether a "Child born in Marriage diſallowed by their "Diſcipline, being preſented by Godly Sure-"ties, might be baptized? and Anſwer was "given, That the Parents Fault cannot pre-"judice the Children, ſo that there is no "difficulty at all in the Caſe; nor ſhould "any Scruple in the leaſt be made about "Admitting ſuch Infants unto Baptiſm, eſpe-"cially whenas Godly Perſons will become "Sureties for their Religious Education.

NAY Beza ſays farther, that the Children of Excommunicate Perſons have a Right to Baptiſm. "Charity, ſays he, bids us hope "well of all, and labour to reſtore thoſe who "are taken Captive in the Snare of the De-"vil: Therefore GOD forbid we ſhould con-"clude, that when Parents are Excommuni-"cate, their Poſterity belong not to the King-"dom of GOD. He gives many Reaſons for his Aſſertion, much of the ſame Nature with thoſe of the foreſaid Synod of Vitre, and then infers from them all, "That ſuch Children "ought to be baptized, modo idoneus Sponſor "interveniat, provided ſome fit Surety will "undertake to the Church for their Chriſti-"an Education, which the Miniſters and other "Pious Perſons ought to procure, rather than "the Baptiſm of ſuch ſhould be deferred." Beza, Ep. 10. ad Neocomenſes, p. 97. and the Book of Diſcipline, cap. 11. Art. 4.

BUT what ſhall we ſay to Mr. Baxter's three Inſtances of Atheiſts, Hereticks and Blaſphemers? Why, I ſay, by the ſame Rules, for ought I can ſee, the French Church would determine, that their Children ſhould be baptized, provided ſome Pious Surety would undertake for their Education: For they may have Pious Anceſtors, and then they ſay the Wickedneſs of the immediate Parents does not prejudice the Children: So that whatever is done in England in theſe Matters, it is ſufficiently juſtified by the Rules and Practice of the French Church. As to what concerns Hereticks in particular, they expreſsly put them into the ſame Rank with Excommunicated Perſons, and ſay, their Children may be baptized. "Children, ſays their Book of Diſcipline, "both whoſe Parents are Members of the "Church of Rome (who are Hereticks in their "account) and thoſe of Excommunicated "Perſons, ſhall not be baptized, unleſs the Pa- "rents require it, and reſign up their Au- "thority unto the Sureties, &c. cap. 11. Art. 4. This implies that they might be baptized, if they deſired it, by proper Sureties. And the next Canon ſays, "The Children of Saracens "and Gipſies may be admitted unto Baptiſm "upon the ſame Conditions."

As for Atheiſts and Blaſphemers, I find no particular Canon in the French Church about their Children, and therefore can ſay nothing farther about them. If any one proves they have no Right to Baptiſm, he proves at the ſame Time that no Miniſter is obliged to baptize them; ſince the Canon is only to be underſtood of ſuch Children as have an undoubted Right to be baptized.

CHAP. XX.

That the French Church allows and commends the Uſe of Sponſors or Sureties in Baptiſm.

WE have already heard in the laſt Chapter, that in ſome Caſes the French Church requires Sureties as of abſolute Neceſſity, that is, in Caſe the Parents be Excommunicate or Unfit: Here I ſhall ſhew that in all Caſes ſhe recommends, and ſo far requires the Uſe of them, as to Cenſure thoſe for Contentious Perſons, who refuſe to comply with the received Cuſtom. The only Difference is, that ſhe does not ſo preciſely enjoyn it to all, as the Church of England does: For her Canon in this Point runs in a different Strain from almoſt all the reſt. Book of Diſcipline, cap. 11. Art. 7. "Foraſmuch as "we have no Commandment from the LORD "to take Godfathers and Godmothers, who "may preſent our Children unto Baptiſm, "there cannot be any particular Canon made "which ſhall bind Perſons to do it. But "ſince it is a very ancient Cuſtom, and in- "troduced for a good End, to wit, to te- "ſtify the Sureties Faith, and the Baptiſm of "the Infant, and alſo for that they charge "themſelves with the Care of Educating the "Child, in Caſe it ſhould be deprived of its "Parents by Death; and for that it doth "maintain a ſweet Communion among the "Faithful, by a Conjunction of Friendſhip, "they who will not obſerve it, but will by "themſelves Preſent their own Children, ſhall "be earneſtly entreated not to be contenti- "ous, but to conform unto the ancient and "accuſtomed Order, it being very good and "profitable."

THIS I freely own is no neceſſary Injunction, but it may have very near the Force of one; for the earneſt Exhortation of a Church is next to a Command, and a General Cuſtom and Order falls very little ſhort of a Law. If any Man will be contentious, ſays the Apoſtle, we have no ſuch Cuſtom, neither the Churches of GOD. He thought there was ſome Force in Cuſtom, elſe he would not have drawn it into an Argument to quiet the Contentious.

BUT the Queſtion is not altogether, Whether it be enjoined, but whether Men ought not to comply with the received Order of any Church, whether it be founded on Law, or only on General Cuſtom? And on this Point there is no Difference between the two Churches. Nay, Beza plainly juſtifies the enjoyning it, writing to Biſhop Grindal: "To uſe, ſays "he, a convenient Form of Prayer, and Ex- "plication of the Nature of Baptiſm, and "Sponſors to undertake for the Child's Re- "ligious Education, being Rites of an in- "nocent Simplicity and Gravity, and no ways "Symbolical, and free from giving the leaſt "Occaſion to Superſtition; Quis tandem dam- "nare auſit? Who is there that dares to con- "demn them, unleſs he will incurr the Apo- "ſtle's Cenſure, who commands all Things "to be done decently and according to Or- "der." It ſeems Beza thought the Text of the Apoſtle a ſufficient Ground to authorize the enjoyning of it, though ſome of his Brethren were of another Opinion.

RIVET ſays it is an uſeful Cuſtom, utilis Infantibus, and therefore they retain it: And though it be not abſolutely neceſſary to Salvation, yet he thinks there may be both general and particular Reaſons fetched out of Scripture to perſuade Men to the Uſe of it; and and he derives its Original from the Jewiſh Rites in Circumciſion. Cathol. Tr. 1. Q. 9. n. 21.

BUT now admitting it only to be a Cuſtom and Practice, not a Law in France: Wherein does their Practice differ from ours? Why firſt, Mr. Baxter ſays, we forbid Parents to be Godfathers with the reſt, or to ſpeak one Word, or to dedicate their Children to CHRIST; for which he quotes the Twenty-ninth Canon, which ſays, No Parent ſhall be urged to be preſent, nor be admitted to anſwer as Godfather for his own Child. Caſe of Engl. Nonconf. c. 10. p. 59.

SOME of this is true, and ſome falſe. It is falſe that the Church forbids Parents to be Godfathers with the reſt, or to dedicate their Children to CHRIST. The Church forbids Parents to be ſole Sponſors for their own Children, and requires them to get others to anſwer for them: but this does not ſuperſede the Obligation of Parents, but only ſuperinduces a farther Obligation upon other Perſons for greater Security of Performance, as Biſhop Stillingfleet well words it. The Parent may make an expreſs Compact with the Sponſor, if he will; at leaſt the deſiring him to be Sponſor is an implicit Compact, and a transferring all his Right and Power upon him. The Parent alſo may be preſent at Baptiſm, and there expreſs his Conſent, and dedicate his Child to CHRIST with Sponſors, but not without them. How then are Parents excluded from giving their Conſent, or being Godfathers with the reſt in Effect, when they have ſo many ways to teſtify their Conſent? This is all that is commonly done in the French Churches, and they that will do more are deemed contentious Perſons.

BUT Secondly, Mr. Baxter ſays, Our Church allows Godfathers without any Difference, to bring the Children of any Atheiſts, Sadducees, Jews, Infideis, or open Enemies of CHRIST, without taking them for their own. This I have ſhewn already in the laſt Chapter, to be in a great meaſure a falſe Charge, but ſo far as the Church is concerned in it, ſhe is fully juſtified by the Practice of the French Church, which has no ſuch Condition as Sponſors taking Children to be their own, but only to take care of their Education in caſe their Parents die, which yet is not to be found in all Editions of their Diſcipline, as Mr. Quick himſelf acquaints us.

THIRDLY, but Mr. Baxter ſays farther, Our Sponſors perſonate the Child without Authority. Which is only repeating a falſe Accuſation over again. For they have always the Parents Right and Authority by their Conſent, if they be living; and if they be dead, there is no need of their Authority: For Baptiſm may be Adminiſtred upon other Grounds without it, as a Learned Perſon has unanſwerably proved from the General Conſent and Practice of the Catholick Church. See Stillingfleet's Unreaſonableneſs of Sep. p. 382.

FOURTHLY, He ſays, "Our Sponſors in "Perſonating the Child, do make him ſay "at preſent, I Believe, I Renounce, I De- "ſire, &c. Falſely intimating, that Infants are "bound at preſent to do this by another "—— when as GOD requireth no Faith or "Repentance of Infants, but only that they "be the Seed of Penitent Believers, devo- "ted to CHRIST." But ſure he had not this Doctrine from Calvin, who owns a ſort of Faith in Infants, though not formed as it is in adult Perſons, yet in ſemine, and that wrought by the Operation of the HOLY GHOST. Calvin. Inſt. Lib. 4. cap. 16. n. 19, & 20. Which was alſo the Opinion of Melanchon, Chemnitius, Rivet, and generally of all the Lutheran and French Churches, whoſe Arguments Bellarmin aſſayed to anſwer, though I know not whether Mr. Baxter ever did. Vide Bellarm. de Bapt. Lib. 1. cap. 11.

BUT ſuppoſe there were no ſuch Faith in Infants, yet Mr. Baxter might have known that the Apologiſts of the Church of England juſtify her Practice another way. They ſay, It is ſufficient that the Faith which referreth to Infants, have only ſome general Agreement in its Notion with the Faith of the Adult. Now ſince the Faith of the Adult is an Acceptance of the Covenant of Grace and the Goſpel-Doctrine, with a Submiſſion thereunto, which in their State is an Active Exerciſe of the Soul; when an Infant is ſaid to believe, this muſt conſiſt in ſuch an Acceptance of, and Submiſſion to the Goſpel, as his State is capable of, which is Paſſive. Thus by being baptized he accepteth CHRIST and the Covenant of Grace, and is united to and made a Member of the Church, entering upon the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, which his Sureties declare, and himſelf ſtands obliged to own, when he comes to Years of Underſtanding. So Dr. Falkner and others; and queſtionleſs, this was the Senſe of the Catholick Church, as appears from St. Auguſtin, Ep. 23. and his Book de Peccatorum Meritis, Lib. 1. cap. 19. where he ſays, Infants are called Believers and Penitents, becauſe they do in ſome meaſure make Profeſſion of Faith, and renounce the Devil and the World in the Words of thoſe that carry them. So that whether we conſider the Senſe of the firſt Reformers, or the Senſe of the Catholick Church, the Anſwers given in Baptiſm do not proceed upon ſuch a falſe Intimation, as Mr. Baxter would make it, that Children do at preſent believe, renounce, &c.

AND therefore the Lutheran Churches, as Chemnitius informs us, retain the old Form; and thoſe Churches which changed it, did it not upon Mr. Baxter's Principle, as if it were abſurd to ſay in any Senſe that Children believe, renounce, &c. For they prayed for Faith for them, as it is in the Tigurine Liturgy lately tranſlated into Engliſh, pag. 82. "Let "us pray to GOD to grant Faith unto this "Child,

" Child, that this outward Baptiſm, as it is " adminiſtred outwardly, may alſo be done " inwardly by the internal Power of the " HOLY GHOST."

5. BUT the worſt, he ſays, is yet behind. That is the common Perfidiouſneſs of Godfathers, who either underſtand not what they promiſe, or take no Care to perform it. And muſt the Church bear the Blame of all this, and allow it for a juſt Cauſe of Separation? Yes, becauſe ſhe admits Atheiſts, Infidels, or any wicked Men not excommunicate to be Godfathers: He ſhould have named the Canon that allows Atheiſts and Infidels to be Godfathers. For my Part, I know no ſuch Canon. If they be ſecret Atheiſts or Infidels, no Miniſter can take any Cognizance of them: But if they be profeſſed ones, he may find a Way to refuſe them; for he may reject them from the Communion, and ſuch as he may reject from the Communion, I conceive he may reject from being Sponſors at Baptiſm. As for others who are not under any Cenſure of the Church, they are allowed to be Sponſors in all Nations, particularly in France they have this Canon, " That al- " though the Faithful be ill reported of, yet " in caſe they be not by the Conſiſtory ſuſ- " pended from the LORD's Table, they ſhall be " admitted Sureties for Infants in Baptiſm." Synod of Gergeau, 1601. cap. 5. Art. 9.

AND their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 11. Art. 10. requires no other Conditions, " but that " the Sureties be of ſufficient Age, in their " Fourteenth Year at leaſt, and ſhall have " communicated at the LORD's Table, or if " they be well ſtricken in Years, and have " not yet communicated, they ſhall proteſt " ſeriouſly that they will do it, and in or- " der to it that they will ſuffer themſelves to " be duly catechized." Here we ſee Perſons may be admitted as Sponſors, who want catechizing in order to receive the LORD's Supper themſelves.

THE next Canon excepts Perſons ſuſpended from the LORD's-Supper, " They may " not preſent Children in the Quality of Sure- " ties unto Baptiſm, ſo long as their Suſpen- " ſion ſhall ſtand in Force againſt them."

THE Ninth Canon alſo excepts Strangers that want Teſtimonials. " A Surety coming " from another Church, ſhall not be admit- " ted to preſent a Child unto Baptiſm, un- " leſs he bring with him a Certificate from " his own Church; which is a good Ca- " non."

THESE are all the Rules they give about Sponſors and their Qualifications; the reſt is only Matter of Advice, Can. 12. " That Pa- " ſtors ſhall diligently exhort all Godfathers " and Godmothers to weigh and conſider their " Promiſes made at the Celebration of Bap- " tiſm, and Parents alſo to chuſe ſuch Sure- " ties for their Children, as are well inſtruct- " ed in Religion, and of a Godly Life and " Converſation, and that are as much as may " be of their Acquaintance, and by whoſe " Means, if there ſhould be a Neceſſity for " it in the Courſe of GOD's Providence, it " is moſt likely that their Children will have " a Religious Education."

AND may not the Paſtors of the Church of England do all this, and ſomething more if they pleaſe? Or, why muſt all Neglects, either in Paſtors or Sponſors preſently be charged upon the Church, as if the Inſtitution itſelf were unlawful? There are too many Faults committed in the Exerciſe of it indeed, but that is not the Fault of the Thing itſelf, but the Perſons who are concerned in it: And I believe moſt Churches find Reaſon enough for ſuch Complaints, which they know not how to help. Peter Martyr gives an honourable Teſtimony to the Inſtitution itſelf, " calling it Utile Inſtitutum, " a very uſeful Order, that when Children are " received into the Church by Baptiſm, they " ſhould be committed to the Care of Godfa- " thers and Godmothers to inſtruct them: " But, ſays he, though the Sponſors pawn " their Faith to do this, yet now a-days " there is nothing which they leſs regard." Loc. Com. Par. 4. c. 8. n. 5.

I HOPE I have now made it appear that Mr. Baxter's Exceptions are all either falſe or trifling, and ſuch as would hold againſt the Practice of the Reformed Church of France, as well as the Church of England: And his laſt great Argument, upon which he lays the moſt Streſs, would hold as well againſt Baptiſm itſelf: For there is more Perfidiouſneſs committed by Perſons that break their Baptiſmal Vow, than by Godfathers that break their Covenants as Sponſors; yet we may not lay Baptiſm aſide, or charge Mens Faults upon the Inſtitution.

AFTER all, he owns our Baptiſm with all its Faults to be Valid, and dares not ſay it is Null and Void; though the Arguments are not very good which he uſes to prove it. For he ſays, " If it were no Miniſter, " or one unauthorized, that baptized, it " would not be a mere Nullity, if by Miſtake " it were ſuppoſed well done. Factum valet, " was judged by ſome, when Athanaſius by a " Boy, was baptized in Sport," p. 65. He ſhould have ſaid, when Athanaſius being a Boy, baptized ſome other Boys in Sport; for it was not Athanaſius that was baptized by a Boy, but he was the Boy that baptized others, as Sozomen and Ruffin tell the Story. But that is but a ſmall Miſtake. If Mr. Baxter had been a Miniſter in France, he muſt have recanted, not only his Hiſtory, but his Doctrine alſo. For their Diſcipline requires Men to ſubſcribe and teach the contrary, and repeals all ſuch Baptiſms, as are only adminiſtred by Women, Laymen, or any unordained Perſon. 'Tis a Canon of their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 11. Art. 1. " That Baptiſm adminiſtred by an " unordained Perſon is wholly Void and Null." Therefore in the Synod of Poictiers, 1560. cap. 6. Art. 11. The Queſtion being put,

" What

" What was to be done in Caſe a Child had " been baptized by a private Perſon?" The Anſwer was given, " That the Baptiſm ſhall " be declared Null, and the Child ſhall be " brought publickly into the Church, there " to receive true Baptiſm."

THE ſame Reſolution was given in many other National Synods, as the Firſt and Second of Rochel, the Synod of Gap, and the Synod of Alanſon, 1637. cap. 25. " Where though " the King had ſent them a Letter, requiring " them to reverſe their Decree, and allow of " the Baptiſm of Women and others, accord- " ing as is done in the Romiſh Church, yet " they utterly refuſed to allow of any ſuch " Baptiſm, as a Thing formally contrary to " their Belief. So that this one Thing would " have made Mr. Baxter a Nonconformiſt, had " he lived in the Church of France.

HE that would ſee their Arguments upon this Point, and their Anſwers to Mr. Baxter's Inſtance of Athanaſius, may read Rivet's Cathol. Orthod. Tract. 3. Q. 7. and Chamier. de Baptiſmo, Lib. cap. 14. Beza contra Heſhuſium. Calvin Ep. to Menſo Poppius, &c.

I HAVE but two Things more to obſerve upon this Head. The firſt is, That the French Church allows of Sponſors by Proxy, which Mr Baxter alſo diſlikes, and reckons next to Ridiculous. But the Synod of Montauban thought fit to grant this Privilege, at leaſt, to Kings and great Princes; which ſhews, that they did not think it ſimply unlawful. Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 30. " No Sureties ſhall preſent Children unto Bap- " tiſm by their Proxies, unleſs it be Kings and " great Princes, who by reaſon of their weigh- " ty Affairs cannot always be preſent at the " Time of Baptizing." And the following Synod of Saumur, 1596 took off this very Reſtriction, and left all Sponſors at Liberty to act by Proxy, as Need required, cap. 4. art. 8.

THE other thing I would Remark is, That they require Sponſors for Adult Perſons alſo, and no one can be baptized without them. For in the Third Synod of Charenton, 1645, a Form of Baptizing Pagans, Jews, Mahometans, and Anabaptiſts, was Compoſed and Inſerted into the Acts of that Synod, cap. 9. where among other Things we find it Ordered, That the Miniſter ſhall Addreſs himſelf to the Sureties, who preſent the Catechumen, in theſe Words: " Do you not promiſe be- " fore GOD and this holy Aſſembly, to con- " tinue more and more to ſtrengthen and con- " firm him in the Faith, and to ſtir him up " unto all good Works?" And they muſt Anſwer, Yes. Where I obſerve, that this being Part of the Office preſcribed and enjoyned, Baptiſm cannot regularly be Adminiſtred without it; and the French Miniſters are under the ſame Obligation not to baptize Adult Perſons without Sponſors, as the Engliſh Miniſters are not to baptize Infants publickly without them. And this will ſerve as an Anſwer to Mr. Baxter's other Charge in his Eleventh Chapter of Engliſh Nonconformity; where he ſays, the Church of England makes Godfathers Eſſential to Baptiſm. Which is falſe, unleſs he can prove, firſt, that it is never Adminiſtred without them, and then Secondly, That it is required, not only as an uſeful Order of the Church, but a neceſſary Part of Baptiſm of GOD's appointing; which neither he nor any one elſe have ever done. But admit the Charge had ſomething in it, what does it prove againſt the Church of England, more than the French Church, which made the ſame Order about Sponſors for Adult Perſons? If it be Schiſmatical Impoſing here, I would know by what Name it is to be called in the Church of France.

THE next Publick Office, which is the Form of Catechiſm, I paſs over, as finding no other Objections made againſt it, but what has been conſidered before, or will be conſidered in the next Chapter about Confirmation.

CHAP. XXI.

That the French Church approves of the Engliſh Way of Confirmation, and exacts ſomething equivalent to it, before ſhe admits any Perſon to Communion.

MR. Baxter in his Nineteenth Chapter of Engliſh Nonconformity declares, That he is ſo far from ſcrupling the true Uſe of Confirmation, that he thinks the Want of it is the greateſt Corruption of the Church of any outward Thing he remembers. But then he likes not the Engliſh Way of Confirmation, he ſays, nor can conſent to reject all from the Communion, who deſire not our Epiſcopal Confirmation.

HIS Objection againſt our Engliſh way of Confirmation is, That here it is made impoſſible to be done any otherwiſe ordinarily than as a Ceremony, and Game for Boys, as he modeſtly words it. His Reaſon is, becauſe the Dioceſes are ſo vaſt, that the Biſhop cannot do this and other his Offices for the hundredth part of his Flock. Whence he ſays it follows, 1. That there is not one of an Hundred Confirmed at all. 2. That all the Thouſands that are Unconfirmed, may come to the Sacrament when they will. 3. That Miniſters do not concern themſelves to keep any back from the Sacrament for not being confirmed, Confirmed, or being desirous of it. 4. That it is usually performed as a running Ceremony.

To all which I Answer. 1. That there are many, both Bishops and inferiour Pastors, whose constant Practice proves this to be mere Calumny and Slander in every Instance. 2. Admit there be some Defects or Abuses committed in the Non-administration or Male-administration of it: Upon whom are these Faults to be charged? Upon the Persons, or the Church and her Institution? That they are not to be charged upon the Institution itself, I prove from Mr. Baxter's own Mouth. He says, Dr. Hammond and Mr. Elderfield, and divers others of the highest Episopal Divines, have written as earnestly for the true Use of Confirmation as himself. Now either they wrote agreeably to the Principles and Institution of the Church of England, or against them: That they wrote against them, Mr. Baxter will never persuade any of his Rational Readers to believe: But if they wrote according to them, then there may be a true Use of Confirmation according to the Institution of the Church of England; and all Mr. Baxter's Exceptions are frivolous, because they charge Personal Faults upon the Institution, which the Church may lament, but cannot always help: For all Forms of Government are liable to Abuses; and the putting Confirmation into every ordinary Pastor's Hands would never mend the Failings that are now complained of in the Exercise of it, but rather increase them, unless some diligent Inspectors were appointed to look into their Behaviour, with sufficient Power to correct them. And every private Minister has now a sufficient Power in his Hands (if he will make use of it) by serious Catechizing to qualify Persons under his Charge for Confirmation, and either actually procure it for them, or at least teach them to be desirous of it, which is all that the Rubrick requires: And such a Desire is a Tacit Confirmation of their Baptismal Covenant, when the other more solemn and publick cannot be had.

BUT Mr. Baxter cannot consent to keep any Persons back from the Communion who are not desirous of Episcopal Confirmation. "For many godly Persons scruple it as sinful. 1. Because the Words of the Collect "make it seem to some to be yet made a "Sacrament, which are, Upon whom after "the Example of thy holy Apostles, we have "now laid our Hands, to certify them by "this Sign of thy Favour and gracious Good-"ness toward them. Here he says, is an "outward visible Sign of an inward and "spiritual Grace given to them, said to be "done in Imitation of CHRIST's Apostles, "as a Means whereby they receive the same, "and a Pledge to assure them thereof; which "is the Catechism's Definition of a Sacrament."

MR. Baxter takes any Hint to prove the Church guilty of making new Sacraments, but his Method is absurd, and will prove the French Church and all Protestant Churches as guilty in this Particular as the Church of England. For, 1. No Church does more expressly deny Confirmation to be a Sacrament than the Church of England does, both in her Catechism and Twenty-fifth Article, which says, "Those Five commonly called Sacra-"ments, that is to say, Confirmation, Pe-"nance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme "Unction, are not to be accounted for Sa-"craments of the Gospel." She does not so much as call Imposition of Hands a Temporary Sacrament, though Calvin in his Book De Vera Ratione Reformandæ Ecclesiæ, scruples not to call it by that Name, accusing the Papists of Absurdity for changing a Temporary Sacrament, given peculiarly to the Apostles, into a perpetual one. Pro Sacramento habendum esse fateor, sed ex Temporali imperite Perpetuum faciunt. See Calvin Tom. 8. p. 285. Where he says the same of the Apostolical Unction.

2. IF all Imposition of Hands after the Example of the Apostles, used as a Sign to certify Men of GOD's Favour and Goodness, does thereby become a Sacrament; then both Confirmation, and Ordination, and Reconciliation of Penitents are Sacraments also. For the French Writers refer Confirmation, and the Imposition of Hands used therein, to an Apostolical Original, and say, it is used as a Blessing, as all Prayer accompanied with Imposition of Hands was ever understood to be.

RIVET says expressly, "That the Impos-"tion of Hands, joyned with the Doctrine "of Baptism, Heb. vi. 2. refers to that So-"lemn Benediction of baptized Persons, "which the Ancients so often speak, of and "which was in Use in the Primitive Church. "—— Which was, That when Children who "were baptized in Infancy, could give an "Account of their Faith to the Satisfaction "of the Pastor, he then laid his Hands up-"on them, and blessed them, commending "them to GOD, and thereby confirming "them in the Profession of the Christian "Religion." Which Custom, having been corrupted among the Papists, he says they had restored to its lawful Use, by Catechizing, Instruction, and Benediction of Children in Prayer, before they were admitted to the LORD's-Supper. Rivet. Cathol. Orth. Tract. 3. Q. 9. n. 3.

IN another Place he speaks at once, both the Sense of the French and Dutch Churches. "It is probable, he says, that the Doctrine "of laying on of Hands, joined with the "Doctrine of Baptism, Heb. vi. 2. refers to "that Care which the Primitive Church "used, in bringing Children after they were "catechized, to give an Account of their "Faith in the Church, before they were "admitted to the Communion; when also "they,

" they recommended them to GOD by " Prayer and the ſolemn Rite of Impoſition " of Hands, which was a Geſture uſed in " Prayer and Bleſſing in the Time of the " Patriarchs and afterwards. — If they of " the Church of Rome would be content with " this Prayer and Commendation of Adult " Perſons to GOD, after a ſolemn Examina- " nation, we ſhould willingly acquieſce there- " in; if they would demand no more than " that Rite which Calvin wiſhed to have re- " ſtored, and which for the Subſtance of it " is now religiouſly obſerved in our Church- " es." Synopſ. Pur. Theol. Diſp. 47. n. 13.

HERE, if I miſtake not, Impoſition of Hands is referred to an Apoſtolical Original, and ſaid to be done in Imitation of the Apoſtles, as much as that of the Church of England. And if Benediction and Prayer be Means of obtaining GOD's Favour, then Impoſition of Hands (a Rite accompanying them in the Opinion of theſe Learned Writers) was no leſs an outward Sign of GOD's Favour in that Primitive Confirmation, than now it is in ours. So that if Mr. Baxter's Argument proves any Thing, it proves Confirmation to be made a Sacrament in the Primitive Church as well as the Church of England. For this is the Common Doctrine of Learned French Men, That it is a Benediction by Impoſition of Hands, done in Imitation of the Apoſtles. Calvin in his Comment on the foreſaid Text, Heb. vi. 2. ſays expreſsly, " That this one Place does abun- " dantly prove, that the Original of this " Ceremony came from the Apoſtles. —— " Therefore we ought to retain the Purity " of the Inſtitution, and correct the Super- " ſtition that has been added to it." And Beza is of the ſame Judgment. Annot. in Heb. vi. 2.

BUT if we believe Mr. Baxter, the Superſtition ſtill remains uncorrected amongſt us, merely becauſe we retain that Rite: For we uſe Impoſition of Hands in Confirmation, as an Apoſtolical Rite, and as a Sign of GOD's Favour and Bleſſing; which in his Opinion, is to make a Sacrament of it. And then it follows that Ordination and Reconciliation of Penitents by the ſame Rule are Sacraments alſo: For Impoſition of Hands was uſed in both thoſe Holy Offices, after the Example of the Apoſtles, and as an outward Sign of Benediction. At which Rate, we muſt come to the Number of Seven Sacraments again, though both the French and Engliſh Church utterly diſclaim that Doctrine.

3. I MUST obſerve one Thing farther of Mr. Baxter's Ingenuity in repreſenting the Church's Doctrine. He ſays we make Impoſition of Hands a Means whereby to receive Spiritual Grace, and a Pledge to aſſure Men of it (as the Collects ſhew) which is the Catechiſm's Definition of a Sacrament. But by his Leave, that is but one Part of the Definition; for to make a compleat Sacrament the Catechiſm requires that it be ordained by CHRIST himſelf, which he cunningly omits; and makes the Collects ſay, what they do not ſay, That Impoſition of Hands is a Means to convey Grace: There is not one Word in them tending to this Purpoſe: There are ſome Prayers indeed uſed to implore GOD's Bleſſing upon the Perſons confirmed, and thoſe in ſome Senſe may be ſaid to be Means of Grace: But if that makes a Sacrament, then every Collect in the Liturgy, and every Prayer any Man makes to GOD for his Grace, is a new Sacrament; which I preſume is too abſurd for any Man ſeriouſly to maintain.

BUT Mr. Baxter has Two other Reaſons why Godly Perſons may ſcruple our Confirmation as ſinful. He ſays, " They that are " againſt our Dioceſan Sort of Prelacy, dare " not ſeem to own it, by coming to them " for Confirmation appropriated to them." I ſuppoſe the ſame Perſons will not come to Dioceſan Churches, Prayers, nor Communion neither, for fear of ſeeming to own Dioceſan Prelacy. And what need any Man be concerned for being obliged to deny ſuch the Communion, who will not take it though it were offered them?

" BUT ſome think that a great and holy " Duty is made a mere Mockery to delude " Souls, and corrupt the Church; while every " one in England that will but take this Ce- " remony, is pronounced to GOD in Prayer " to be regenerate by the HOLY GHOST, " and all their Sins forgiven them: Theſe " dare not join themſelves with the Profa- " ners in their deluſory Way."

THIS is ſpoken like Mr. Baxter indeed, in a Strain of Eloquence peculiar to himſelf. To which all I ſhall ſay is, That he had none of theſe Flowers of Rhetorick from Calvin, or any famed Author of the French Church, who deteſt any Man that ſhall beſpatter the Engliſh Epiſcopal Confirmation with ſuch opprobrious Terms, as Mockery, Deluſion of Souls, Corruption of the Church, and Profanation of an Holy Duty. Calvin ſpeaks honourably of the ancient Epiſcopal Confirmation, and any one that will obſerve the Account which he gives of it, will find it exactly agreeable to the Form preſcribed in the Church of England. " It was an ancient " Cuſtom, ſays he, that the Children of " Chriſtian Parents, when they were grown " up, ſhould be preſented to the Biſhop, to " do that Office which was required of Per- " ſons who were baptized at adult Age. —— " For as much as that being baptized in In- " fancy, they could not then make any Con- " feſſion of their Faith before the Church, " they were again brought by their Parents " before the Biſhop, and examined by him in " the Catechiſm, which they had then in a " certain Form of Words. And that this " Act, which ought to be grave and ſacred,

" might have the greater Reverence, the " Ceremony of Impoſition of Hands was uſed " in the Exerciſe of it. And ſo the Youth, " after their Faith was approved, were diſ- " miſſed with a ſolemn Benediction. Now " ſuch an Impoſition of Hands as this, which " is uſed purely as a Bleſſing, I very much " approve of, and wiſh it were now reſto- " red to its pure and primitive Uſe." Calvin. Inſtitut. Lib. 4. cap. 19. n. 4.

HE had no Quarrel againſt it, becauſe it was adminiſtred by Dioceſan Biſhops; much leſs did he think their Adminiſtration of it a deluſive Mockery of Souls, or the Corruption of the Church, or a Profanation of the Inſtitution: Which are Mr. Baxter's Compliments to the Church of England.

BUT Mr. Daille, as a learned [g] Man quotes him, gives her a Compliment of a very different Nature: He ſays her Way of Confirmation is to be preferred before the Practice of the Primitive Church in the Fourth Century. His Reaſon, I preſume was, becauſe in the Primitive Church, as they received Infants to the Communion, ſo in many Places they confirmed them immediately after Baptiſm. If this be true, (as I ſee no Reaſon to queſtion it, though ſome Learned Perſons are of a different Opinion, and refuſe to receive his Compliment) he had very good Reaſon to prefer the Engliſh Way of Confirming Adult Perſons, before that which allowed Infants to be confirmed: For the one much better anſwers the End of the Inſtitution than the other: But if he was miſtaken in his Opinion of the Primitive Church, he however ſhews his Reſpect to the Church of England; whilſt he allows and commends her Way of Confirmation, and ſolemnly proteſts that in the large Volume which he wrote upon that Subject, he never meant to ſpeak one Word in Derogation of it.

IF it be ſaid, That Calvin and Daille and all the French Church think it lawful for Presbyters to confirm: I anſwer, that is not the Queſtion at preſent, but only whether it be lawful in an eſtabliſhed Epiſcopal Church, for Presbyters to ſet up againſt their Biſhops, and take Confirmation out of their Hands. This neither Calvin, nor Daille, nor any other French Author that I know of, will juſtify, but rather condemn as Schiſmatical Uſurpation. The Caſe of Neceſſity, where there are none but Presbyters to confirm, differs very much from ours, where Biſhops retain their Privilege, and either are or ought to be diligent in adminiſtring Confirmation. I ſaid before, if there be any Neglects, Perſonal Faults are not to be charged upon the Inſtitution, which I have proved to be holy and pious in the Judgment of the beſt Writers of the French Church; ſome of which ſay, it agrees with the Practice of the Primitive Church, and others ſay it exceeds it.

YET Mr. Baxter is ſo bold as to call it a Deluſory Profanation, becauſe of thoſe Words in the Collect, " Almighty GOD who haſt " vouchſafed to regenerate theſe thy Servants " by Water and the HOLY GHOST, and haſt " given unto them Forgiveneſs of all their " Sins." This he ſays is pronouncing every one regenerate, that will but take this Ceremony. Which is a manifeſt Slander: For the Words imply no more than a general charitable Preſumption, that ſuch as come to confirm their Baptiſmal Vow, were once truly baptized, and now come in a ſerious and religious Manner to ratify their baptiſmal Covenant in Perſon. Upon which Preſumption they are charitably ſuppoſed to be in a State of Regeneration. Such charitable Preſumptions are frequent in St. Paul's Epiſtles, and almoſt all Publick Offices and Prayers of the Church, which ſuppoſe the Congregation to be holy and ſanctified, though many Particulars may be otherwiſe. Thus it is in the Thankſgiving after the Communion, not only in our Office, but in Calvin's Liturgy, where the Form of Thankſgiving after the Reception of the Euchariſt, runs in theſe Words, " We render Thee our eternal Thanks and " Praiſe, O Heavenly Father, for this great " Benefit which thou haſt beſtowed upon us " miſerable Sinners, in bringing us to the " Participation of thy Son JESUS CHRIST, " whom thou didſt ſuffer to be delivered up " up unto Death for our Sakes, and haſt now " imparted him unto us to be our Food un- " to Eternal Life." Calvin. Formul. Prec. Tom. 8. p. 30.

I ASK now, Whether theſe Expreſſions, Participating of CHRIST, and having him imparted to us as the Food of Eternal Life, be not equivalent and parallel to being regenerate, and having Forgiveneſs of all our Sins? If they be, then either our Confirmation-Office may be juſtified, or the French Liturgy is to be condemned, as a Deluſory Profanation of the Communion-Service. I know Mr. Baxter himſelf would not have ventured to have ſaid this of the French Church, however he makes bold to ſay what he pleaſes of the Church of England.

I HAVE now conſidered all his Exceptions againſt our Confirmation-Office, and ſhewn them to be unreaſonable upon the Principles of the French Church. The Reſult is, That upon the ſame Principles, Communion may lawfully be denied to thoſe who refuſe Epiſcopal Confirmation in an Epiſcopal Church. For not to enquire now either how far Confirmation is neceſſary in itſelf, or neceſſary to be performed by a Biſhop: Thus much is certain and agreed upon, That the Rules and Diſcipline of every Church relating to Communion, [g] Dr. Beverege Cod. Can. Vind. Proœm. n. 11.

Communion, ought to be ſubmitted to by all the Members of it: And it being a Rule in the Church of England, That all Perſons before they be admitted to Communion, ſhall be confirmed by the Biſhop, or be at leaſt prepared for and deſirous of it: It follows, that ſuch Perſons as obſtinately refuſe to ſubmit to this Order, may as lawfully be denied Communion here, as thoſe are in the French Church, who refuſe to ſubmit to their Order of Confirmation. Calvin ſays, "It is "their Law, That no Children ſhall be admitted to the LORD's Table, till they have "firſt given an Account of their Faith, and "are approved by their Miniſters." Defenſ. 2. cont. Weſtphal. p. 678.

AND to this agrees that French Canon in the Book of Diſcipline, cap. 12. Art. 2. "That "Children under Twelve Years of Age ſhall "not be admitted to the LORD's Table; "and when they are above that Age, it is "left unto the Miniſter's Diſcretion to judge "whether they have ſufficient Knowledge to "qualify them for their Admiſſion to it." Now the only Difference between their Rule and ours is, That we oblige all Perſons not only to give an Account of their Faith to their private Miniſter, but to the Biſhop alſo, and receive his Benediction upon it: But if they have no Opportunity to do this, then it is ſufficient to ſatisfy their own Miniſter, that they are prepared for the Communion, and willing to approve their Faith and Preparation before the Biſhop as Opportunity ſhall permit them. And he that will not do this in an Epiſcopal Church, is refractory, and liable to be cenſured, by the Rules and Diſcipline of the French Communion: Which is the Thing I undertook to prove.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the Form of Marriage, Viſitation of the Sick, Communion of the Sick, Burial of the Dead, Thankſgiving after Child-birth, Commination and the Church's Wiſh for the Reſtoration of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

CONCERNING ſeveral of theſe Offices in our Church I need not ſay much in this Place. The Form of Marriage I have conſidered already, in the Chapter about Set Forms of Prayer, and ſhewed the French Manner of Celebrating it to be a ſufficient Juſtification of ours. For the other Offices, I own, they have no Forms: But then they do neither abſolutely Condemn the Uſe of ſuch Forms in General, nor ours in Particular. The Viſitation of the Sick is left to every Miniſter's Wiſdom and Diſcretion; and that is an Office wherein our Church allows ſome Liberty likewiſe, and I meet with no Objections againſt it.

THEY have no Form for Adminiſtring the Communion to the Sick, becauſe the Practice of the Thing itſelf is not in Uſe among them. But the want of it is rather their Misfortune than their Choice, if what ſome of them tell us be true, That they cannot have it, becauſe the Magiſtrate permits them not to Exerciſe the Offices of their Religion, but only in Publick Places. So Mr. Drelincourt, cited by Dr. Durel. Conform. of Ref. Church, p. 50. Calvin alſo in his own Opinion was entirely for the Uſe of it, as appears from his Epiſtle to the Church of Mompelgard, where he gives them this Advice, "My Opinion is, "that the Cuſtom of giving the Communion to the Sick ought readily to be admitted, when the Sick Man's Caſe and "Opportunity will allow it. But with this "Proviſo, That it be a true Communion, "that is, that there be a certain Number "of the Faithful to make it ſome ſort of "Congregation.

So in another Epiſtle written about ſome Rites of the Church. p. 206. "There are many and weighty Reaſons which incline me "to think that the Communion ought not "to be denied to the Sick. Yet I am ſenſible this Practice is very liable to Abuſe. "Therefore there ought always to be ſome "Congregation of the Sick Man's Kindred, "or Acquaintance, or Neighbours, that ſo "Diſtribution may be made according to the "Law of CHRIST." Which is the very Rule of the Church of England in the Rubrick before the Communion of the Sick, That there ſhall be two or three beſides the Sick Perſon to make up a Congregation.

IF it be asked, Why then Calvin did not bring this Cuſtom into the Church of Geneva, ſeeing he ſo much approved of it? He Anſwers for himſelf in his Epiſtle to Olevian, p. 207. "You know what Reaſons I have for "granting the Communion to the Sick: But "I would not have any Diſturbance raiſed "upon that Account. The Cuſtom is otherwiſe in our Church, and I acquieſce, be"cauſe it would not be Profitable to Con"tend about it." See alſo Reſponſ. 2. ad Weſtphal. p. 678.

IT ſeems this was one of thoſe Things, which Calvin freely owns needed a farther Reformation in the Church of Geneva; but he was willing to Tolerate ſuch a Defect, leſt the Danger of Alteration might prove more Fatal in its Conſequence than the Inconvenience itſelf; which may teach ſome Men theſe two Things by the way. 1. That the Peace and Communion of a Church is not to be broken for every Inconvenience or Defect. 2. That they ſhould not call thoſe Things the Corruptions of our Church, which wiſer Men deem the Happineſſes of her Reformation.

But to proceed; The French Church, it is confeſſed, has no Burial-Office, neither with nor without a Form; no, nor ſo much as any Funeral Exhortation, as I have ſhewn before in the Chapter of Liturgies. But then it is not becauſe ſhe thinks ſuch an Office or Form in itſelf unlawful, but becauſe of ſome Inconveniencies and Superſtitions, which ſo long as Proteſtants live mixed among the Papiſts, ſhe preſumed would accidentally attend it. For when the French Miniſters are in other Countries, as in England, &c. where this Reaſon ceaſes, they ſcruple not to uſe a Funeral Office, as others do. Nor do any of them raiſe thoſe Objections againſt our Form of Burial that Diſſenters do. For being brought up in a Church, where Diſcipline by reaſon of continual Synods was kept in Force, they are ſenſible that our Office of Burial is a very excellent Form, ſuppoſing the due Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; upon Preſumption and Hopes of which, it was evidently framed. For allowing the due Exerciſe of Diſcipline, all the Objections made againſt the Office will vaniſh of their own accord: And as the Caſe ſtands now with us, the Office is not ſo liable to Objection as ſome imagine. For as a Learned Perſon [b] obſerves, "There "is one Thing to be ſaid in this Matter, "which, though it be not ordinarily taken "Notice of, ſeems to be of great Moment, "and juſtifies every Miniſter in taking a "Liberty to omit ſuch Paſſages as our Diſ"ſenters except againſt in the Burial of Pa"piſts, Schiſmaticks, or incorrigible Sinners." I add notorious and profeſſed Hereticks, Condemned by the unanimous Vote of the whole Catholick Church.

By the Rubrick, all Excommunicate Perſons are excepted from Chriſtian Burial; "Now there are two ſorts of Excommuni"cation allowed in our Church, Excommu"nicatio ſub judice, & Latæ ſententiæ; The Firſt "is, when Men are formally Excommuni"ted by the Eccleſiaſtical Judge; The Se"cond is that which Mr. Baxter ſo often "talks of, the Excommunication Ipſo Facto, when "by the Canons of the Church, a Man who "is guilty of ſuch Offences as are there ſpe"cified, is declared to be Excommunicate, "before any Judicial Sentence paſſes on him. "Now the Rubrick, which forbids the Bu"rial of Excommunicated Perſons, does not "confine this to any one ſort of Excommu"nication: And therefore if a Miniſter, ei"ther in Viſiting the Sick, or by any other "means, finds any Man under this Sentence, "though not actually inflicted on him by "an Eccleſiaſtical Judge; yet he may, by Vir"tue of this Rubrick, refuſe to Bury him "by that Form preſcribed in our Liturgy, "becauſe by the Canons of the Church, he "is under the Sentence of Excommunicati"on. This Authority is expreſly allowed the "Miniſter, in repelling thoſe from the Com"munion of the Lord's-Suppper, who are "notorious and open evil Livers, and the ſame "Reaſon holds in the Office of Burial, as "that Learned Perſon delivers his Opinion, "with Submiſſion to the Judgment of his "Superiours.

Admitting the truth of this Diſcourſe, which I find none of our Superiours to have diſapproved; it follows, that every Miniſter is impowered to deny the Uſe of that Office, in whole, or in part, to all who have rendred themſelves uncapable or unworthy of it. And ſuch a Limitation does abundantly clear the ſeeming Difficulty that appears at firſt in aſſenting to the Uſe of it. Yet becauſe the Uſe of it, even with this Reſtriction, may create great Troubles and Hatred to Miniſters, and ſometimes vexatious Law-Suits to their utter Undoing: I cannot but ſay, with the fore-named Author, "I wiſh with all "my Heart, that ſome Expreſſions were al"tered, to prevent any Scandal to the Scru"pulous or the Profane; or, which is more "deſirable, that Diſcipline were revived, which "would ſoon anſwer all theſe Objections. "Mr. Baxter himſelf ſays the ſame, That if "true Diſcipline in the Church did make a juſt "Separation of the Capable and Uncapable, "he could like all the Office very well, and "even thoſe Words which are moſt except"ed againſt." Eng. Nonconform. cap. 16.

But our Adverſaries tell us, this is another of our Church's Faults, That ſhe wants Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. That ſhe has not the Exerciſe of Diſcipline in that Perfection which were to be wiſhed, I freely own, and the Church herſelf both owns and laments it: But that ſhe wholly wants Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, I utterly deny; for her Rubricks, and Injunctions, and Canons, which ſome ſo much Clamour againſt, are nothing elſe but what in other Churches are called Rules of Diſcipline. And for that particular Branch of it, which is called Abſtention from the Euchariſt and Excommunication, our Church is not without Rules for the Exerciſe of that neither. Every Miniſter, as was but juſt now obſerved, has Power to repel thoſe from the Communion, who are notorious and open evil Livers, and the Biſhops have Power to proceed to Excommunication. If theſe Things are are not always done, or not so happily and effectually as it were to be wished, other Reasons may be assigned for it; among which I reckon the Factions and Schisms that divide the Church, to be none of the least: For they loosen the Bands of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and make it impracticable in its true Perfection; whilst Men who are excluded from one Communion, can be received and caressed in another. And is it not hard, for Men first to cast Blocks in the Way, and then charge it as a Fault upon the Church, which is her Misfortune, and chiefly owing to the Iniquity of the Times, that it is not remedied?

BUT admit the Decay of ancient Discipline were wholly the Fault of the Church, or her Ministers: To what does this Charge amount? That therefore there is no Discipline in our Church, because it is not in its utmost Perfection? Or that Men may Lawfully desert her Communion, because there is not such Exactness observed in the Administration of it as were to be wished? Neither of these, I am confident, were the Sentiments of Calvin or Beza; though Beza looked upon the Face of Discipline to be the worst Aspect of the Church of England; yet he owns that she was tolerably well Reformed in that Point also, in comparison of other Churches; and all he desires more is, Plenam Ecclesiasticæ Disciplinæ instaurationem, the perfect Restoration of Ecclesiastical Discipline, which is the Wish of the Church and all good Men in it. See Beza, Epist. Dedicat. to Queen Eliz. Before his New Test. Cited above Chap. ii.

SURELY he did not think the want of Discipline then altogether so great as some imagine, much less a just Cause of Separation from the Church of England, whose Reformation in all Respects he so highly extolls above most other Protestant Churches.

BUT suppose there were a total Want of Discipline in our Church, either through Necessity, or Want of Zeal in the Ministers, or by some Defect in our Constitution: Yet Calvin will by no means allow any of these to be reasonable Causes of Separation. It was the common Case, he says, of the first Reformers in all Places; when they came to the Point of Discipline, they could only express their Wishes and their Groans, but it was not in their Power to mend it. For so he expresses himself in a Consolatory Letter to Farel upon this Subject, who had complained to him that he could not get Discipline settled in his Church. To shew him that his Case was not singular, he tells him, Melancthon and the rest were under the same unfortunate Necessity. "When Discipline comes to "be talked of: Melancthon after the Manner "of others, only sighs and mourns about it. "For the most he can do, is rather to de- "plore the miserable Condition of the Church "in this Matter, than correct it: That you "may not think you are the only Persons "that labour under this Misfortune." Calv. Ep. Farello, p. 6.

HIS Advice is not that the Ministers should forsake their Calling, or the People forsake their Ministers and the Church for Want of Discipline; but to be content to take Part in a common Calamity, which was their Misfortune, not their Fault, so long as they had no Power to redress it.

IN another Place, he owns that Discipline was not rightly exercised at Geneva, but he charges himself with no Fault upon that Account, because it was not he, but others, that hindered it. "And yet they had the Face, "he says, to object the Want of Disci- "pline to him, though they themselves were "the Causes of it. Dissipationem, cujus ipsi cau- "sa sunt, probri loco nobis objectant." Calv. de Necess. Reform. Eccl. T. 8. p. 56.

SOME Protestant Churches have no Use of Excommunication at all, as the Churches of Helvetia and the Palatinate: Yet Calvin is so far from condemning their Communion for this Defect, that he rather makes a soft and kind Apology for them, presuming they had Reasons for what they did; That they set up such a Discipline as the Times and Place, or Magistrates and People would admit of. Thus writing to the Ministers of Zurich, where Excommunication was laid aside, he says, "All Men have not ex- "actly the same Sentiments of Excommuni- "cation at present: I know there are some "pious and learned Men, who think it not "necessary under Christian Princes; though "I hope no sober Man disallows the Use of "it. For my part, I believe it to be a Doc- "trine of CHRIST. But if a People cannot "be prevailed with to take this Yoke of "CHRIST upon them, after the Pastors have "done their Endeavour to get it settled, "they are excusable, though we are not, if "we suffer it to be pulled down where it once "obtains." Calv. Ep. Minist. Tigur. p. 75.

HE that thought the Communion of a Church lawful, where Excommunication was wholly laid aside, as unnecessary under Christian Magistrates, would doubtless not condemn a Church where the Use of Excommunication is settled by Law, though there may be some Imperfections in the Exercise of it.

'TIS generally agreed, That there are some Cases in which the exact Rigour of Discipline would do more Harm than Good to the Church; as where it would be attended with a general Revolt of the People, or a severe Persecution: In such Cases, it has ever been thought a Point of Christian Prudence, rather to relax a little the Reins of Discipline, than use that which was designed for the Church's Edification, to her Destruction. St. Augustin pleads this above Twenty times in his Epiſtles and Writings againſt the Donatiſts, which it is none of my Buſineſs to recite at preſent; I may perhaps have a more convenient Occaſion to do it hereafter, in an Hiſtorical Account of the Exerciſe of Ancient Church-Diſcipline: At preſent I only obſerve, that the French Church, which is famed for the Exactneſs and Rigour of Synodical Diſcipline, approves St. Auguſtin's Doctrine, and allows of a Mitigation of Diſcipline in the forementioned Caſes. Thus in the Synod of Rochel, 1571. cap. 11. Art. 1. "The Queſtion being put, What Courſe ſhould "be taken in the Cenſuring of Revolters in "Times of Perſecution? It was anſwered in "the Words of St. Auguſtin, concerning a numerous Church of Drunkards, That it were "much better to have a vicious Church than "none at all."

THE following Synod of Niſmes, 1572. cap. 3. Art. 5. reſolves another Caſe concerning Apoſtates to the Romiſh Religion, who were alſo become Enemies and Perſecutors of the Church; "That they ſhould not be for-"mally and publickly by Name excommu-"nicated in the Church, becauſe this would "only make them rage more bitterly againſt "her, and do her more and greater Miſ-"chief." There was no Need to excommunicate ſuch, who had already abandoned the Church's Communion. Private Notice to the People to beware of them, was ſufficient in ſuch Caſes. "Therefore all Miniſters and "Conſiſtories are warned in Procedures of "this Nature, to uſe all manner of Modera-"tion and Prudence; becauſe that Church-"Cenſures and Canons of Diſcipline are "only uſed for Edification, and not for De-"ſtruction; remembering always that Saying "of St. Auguſtin, That Medicines which are "more hurtful than profitable, ſhould be "wholly forborn."

IF St. Auguſtin ſpake the Senſe of the Catholick Church, and theſe Synods the Senſe of the French Church: Then there are ſome allowed Caſes, in which the Rigour of Excommunication is to be abated, when either Delinquents are become very numerous or formidable within the Church, or Deſerters very malicious and powerful without it; when more Harm than Good will accrue to the Church by the Uſe of it, and the Remedy prove worſe than the Diſeaſe.

SO that here are Three Things fairly ſuggeſted by the French Writers, in Anſwer to this Objection about Want of Diſcipline in the Church of England. 1. That for the main, it is a falſe Charge: Becauſe Excommunication and other Parts of Diſcipline are in Force by our Laws, and when Occaſion requires, reducible to Practice. 2. Suppoſing Excommunication were wholly laid aſide, that would no more make our Communion unlawful than it does in the Helvetian and Palatine Churches. 3. There may be particular Reaſons for mitigating the Rigour of Diſcipline in ſome Churches, and at ſome Seaſons, more than others: And it ſhould be conſidered whether that has not for a long Time been, and ſtill is the Caſe of the Church of England: Whether the Sects and Schiſms that are among us do not greatly hinder the Exerciſe of Diſcipline; and whether a formal Excommunication of all that deſerve it, might not raiſe a greater and more dangerous Schiſm than any yet among us, and inſtead of purging the Bad from the Good, only inrage a Party to contrive her Ruin and Deſtruction; whether in ſuch a Caſe, it be not better to ſuffer the Tares to grow among the Wheat, and patiently bear with ſome corrupt Members of the Church, rather than expoſe her to ſo great Inconveniencies; remembring that Saying of St. Auguſtin's and the Synod of Niſmes, That when Medicines will do more Harm than Good, they are to be forborn? Whether this be actually the Caſe of the Church of England, I leave wiſer Men to determine: If it be, her Practice is her Prudence, and what others call her Fault, is properly ſpeaking, the Effect of her Charity and Diſcretion: But if it be otherwiſe, if ſhe might have an exact Diſcipline and will not, though that be a Fault, yet it will not juſtify a Separation from her, as I have proved from the Principles of the French Church. And ſo I think I have fully anſwered this Objection about Want of Diſcipline in the Church of England.

AS to the Commination-Office, which was appointed to be uſed, till Diſcipline could happily be reſtored, it is ſo uſeful and innocent, that I do not find many Perſons that have any Thing to object againſt it. Only the Authors of the Neceſſity of Reformation in 1660, bring ſome railing Accuſations againſt it. They ſay, Pag. 31. "It is a Neceſſita-"ting People to curſe themſelves, and em-"ploying Miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe Of-"fice it is to be the Meſſengers of Peace, "in Curſing the People as Part of their Of-"fice: Which is an inhuman and unchriſtian-"like Invention, that has no Warrant from "the Word of GOD, nor from the Prac-"tice of the Primitive Church, but is a "latter Spawn of Antichriſt in his Popiſh "Services."

SOME Men have uſed their Tongues and Pens ſo much to opprobrious Language, that they can ſcarce ſpeak of any thing they diſlike, but under the reviling Names of Popiſh and Antichriſtian. I would ask ſuch Men, Whether it be not Part of the Miniſter's Office to declare GOD's Threatnings, as well as his Promiſes? Or, whether the Goſpel be all Promiſes, and no Revelation of the Wrath of GOD againſt the Ungodlineſs and Unrighteouſneſs of Men? As St. Paul ſays it is, Rom. i. 18. If there be Declarations of GOD's Judgments in the Goſpel, as well well as Promiſes of Pardon and Peace; how comes the one to be the Miniſter's Duty more than the other? Or why muſt the Declaration of GOD's Judgments be called Curſing the People, or the Peoples Conſenting to the Truth and Equity of them be called Curſing themſelves, as Curſing ſignifies Imprecation of Evil upon Men? Concerning which there is not one Word in the Commination-Office. But if by Curſing, they mean only Denunciation of GOD's Judgments againſt unrepenting Sinners, then their Charge of Popiſh and Antichriſtian is not ſo much againſt our Office, as the Goſpel itſelf. Perhaps the Primitive Church had no ſuch ſet Form in her Liturgy, nor has the French Church any that I know of: But doubtleſs the Miniſters both of the one and the other did frequently do the ſame thing in their Sermons and Homilies; notwithſtanding that they were Miniſters of the Goſpel of Peace. And I challenge any Perſon to ſhew us any Paſſage in a French Writer, where ſuch an Office is called Popiſh and Antichriſtian.

BESIDES the Office of Thankſgiving after Child-Birth, (which I remember not any Objection made againſt) there remains but one Office more in the Liturgy to be ſpoken to, which is the Form of Ordaining Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons; againſt which Mr. Baxter has a great many Objections in ſpeaking of the Eighth Canon of our Church, which becauſe they will be more properly conſidered under that Title, I refer the Reader to the next Book, and here put an End to this Part of my Diſcourſe: Having made it appear, that there is no Office in our Liturgy, in ordinary Uſe among us, nor any particular Rubrick or Preſcription in any Office, but may be aſſented to, and juſtified upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France. In ſome Things our Liturgy exceeds theirs, as in the Form of Abſolution and Communion of the Sick, the Want of which Calvin confeſſes to be Defects in his Liturgy, which he could not help; in other Forms they exactly agree, and in ſuch Forms as we have more than they, or they more than we, it is ſo far agreed, that there is nothing repugnant to the Word of GOD in either. Whence it follows, that they are unreaſonable, who ſeparate from our Church upon Account of the Liturgy, becauſe it is not Reformed according to the Example of the beſt Reformed Church.

The Objections againſt the Canons of the CHURCH of England conſidered, and anſwered upon the Principles and Practice of the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. I.

Of Ordinaries and Chancellors, and that as ſtrict an Oath of Canonical Obedience is required in the French Church, as in the Church of England.

BEFORE I ſpeak of the Canons in particular, it will be neceſſary to ſay ſomething of the Promiſe and Oath of Canonical Obedience, which refers to them all in general. In the Form of Ordination, this Queſtion is put to every Prieſt and Deacon: Will you Reverently Obey your Ordinary and other chief Miniſters, to whom is committed the Charge and Government over you; following with a glad Mind and Will their godly Admonitions, and ſubmitting yourſelves to their godly Judgments? And the Anſwer is, I will do ſo, the LORD being my Help. In like manner every Beneficiary, when he is Inſtituted into any Benefice, Swears, That he will pay true and Canonical Obedience to the Biſhop and his Succeſſors in omnibus Licitis & Honeſtis. Now we have no Controverſy with Diſſenters, about the meaning of this Promiſe or Oath: It is agreed on both ſides, that Canonical Obedience in Effect, is no more than Obedience to the Orders and Canons of the Church, and does not ſubject Men to any unlimited Power, or require any new Duty from them, but ſuch as the Biſhop may require by Virtue of the Canons: So that if the Canons be Lawful, one would think the Oath of Canonical Obedience ſhould be Lawful alſo. Yet Mr. Baxter has ſeveral Objections againſt it. Eng. Nonconform. cap. 6.

1. HE likes not the Word, Succeſſors: "Little know we of what Religion their Succeſſors will be, or who will have the Chooſing of them. I will not Swear to I know not who." But here he forgot what was juſt now ſaid and agreed upon, That Canonical Obedience in effect, is Obedience to the Canons, and the Biſhops Succeſſors are as much obliged to rule by the Canons, as the Biſhop in Being; ſo that if Obedience be due to the one, ruling by the Canons, it is with the ſame Proviſo due to the other alſo. In the French Church, their Oath of Canonical Obedience is taken to the Canons, or Book of Diſcipline, and Decrees of their National Synods, of which I have given a full Account in the firſt Book, Chap. iii. Where the Reader may obſerve, That though neither Conſiſtories, Claſſes, nor Provincial Synods be expreſly mentioned in the Oath, yet Obedience to them and their Succeſſors is implied: For they are the Ordinaries, which are to ſee the Canons executed by every particular Miniſter, and have Power to puniſh Delinquents, which they could not have, unleſs by their Rules Canonical Obedience was due to them. Nor is the Miniſter's Oath ſuppoſed to be taken only to the preſent Conſiſtories, Claſſes, or Synods, but to all that ſhall ſucceed in their Place and Office, during the Miniſter's whole Life, ſo long as they exact no other Obedience from him but what is due by the Canons. So that, for ought I can ſee, the Word Succeſſors does not at all make our our Oath of Canonical Obedience difficult to any, but ſuch as are willing to make a Stumbling-Block of Diſobedience of it. If Mr. Baxter could not Swear to he knew not who: how would he have done in the French Church, to have Sworn to he knew not what? I mean to the Decrees and Canons of their National Synods before they were made, as I have ſhewed, [*] the French Miniſters did: When they ſent any Deputies to a National Synod; "They promiſed before GOD to "ſubmit themſelves to all that ſhould be Con- "cluded and Determined in their Holy Aſ- "ſembly, and to obey and execute it to the "utmoſt of their Power, &c." as the Oath runs in expreſs Terms in the Form preſcribed in the Second Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 2. Art. 1. We have no ſuch Oath of Canonical Obedience in England, and I cannot but think this one Thing would have made Mr. Baxter a Nonconformiſt in the Church of France.

2. BUT he ſays, ſuppoſe our Oath of Canonical Obedience to imply only Obedience according to the Canons: "Yet there are "abundance of Things in the Canons, "which he thinks greater Sins than he "thinks meet to call them." It would have done well, if Mr. Baxter had but kept to this Degree of Modeſty, which he here profeſſes; but I believe I ſhall ſhew, that he ſpeaks as bad Things of them as he could think of, and with as little Reaſon as Modeſty, forgetting both the Rules of Decency and Argumentation too: But of this more by and by in the following Chapters.

2. HE ſays, "Biſhops Rule by their Chan- "cellors, and ſuffer Laymen to exerciſe the "Church-Keys, by decretive Excommunica- "tions and Abſolutions: which wiſe Men "think to be Sacrilegious Uſurpation, and a "Profanation of a dreadful Part of CHRIST'S "Government." Here he begins immediately to exalt his Style, and give the Church as hard Words as he could think of. But Firſt, How does he prove that Lay-Chancellors and Civilians uſe the Keys for Excommunication and Abſolution? Why that he takes for granted, which others tell us is a great Miſtake. For though Civilians are uſed to declare what is Law, yet the Sentence of Excommunication and Abſolution is the Act of a Miniſter, both in Court and Church-Aſſembly: And if any Thing be declared as Law, which is contrary to Canon, the Miniſter is not bound by his Oath to execute the Sentence. But then perhaps he may ſuffer for it, and be Ruined, and the Biſhop cannot help him. I know of no ſuch Caſes at preſent; but if there be any, they concern not the Oath of Canonical Obedience, which obliges a Miniſter only to keep a good Conſcience, but it may be cannot always ſecure him from Suffering.

BUT Secondly, Suppoſe Civilians were allowed to uſe the Keys in England: Are there no Lay-Elders allowed in France to exerciſe Church Diſcipline, neither Separately, nor Conjunctly with others? He is a great Stranger to the Affairs of that Church, who knows not that Lay-Elders have a Deciſive Voice both in Conſiſtories, Claſſes, and Synods, whether it be to make New Rules of Diſcipline, or Puniſh Delinquents by the Old ones with Suſpenſion and Excommunication. I will not ſo much as trouble the Reader with a ſingle Proof of this, becauſe it is ſo plain and known a Caſe: But I will acquaint him with one Thing, which I believe is not ſo commonly known, which is, That Lay-Elders by the Canons of Three National Synods ſucceſſively, had Power granted them to Exerciſe Diſcipline, without, or againſt the Will of the Paſtor, ſo far as to Suſpend from the LORD'S Table. In the Synod of Privas, 1612. cap. 5. Art. 11. A Caſe was moved, "Whe- "ther in thoſe Churches, where there is but "one Paſtor, and an Appeal is brought againſt "him, the Elders may judge of this Con- "troverſy. And the Synod determined, that "Elders may judge of all emerging Diffe- "rences, yea, ſo far as of Suſpenſion from "the LORD'S Table, Matters of Doctrine "and of Excommunication only excepted; in "which two Points Elders may not judge "without their Paſtor."

THIS Canon was Confirmed in the next Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 6. Art. 3. Where it is ſaid, "In reading that Article, which "gives leave unto Elders, the Paſtor being "refuſed and excepted at, to judge of ſome "emergent Differences, yea, even of Suſpen- "ſion from the LORD'S-Supper, the Province "of Lower Languedoc demanded that there "might be ſome Mitigation of its Rigour. "But the Aſſembly judged that the Article "ſhould abide as it was conceived, without "any Alteration at all." The ſame Article being by ſome means omitted in the Tranſcript of the Acts of that Synod, was inſerted by the following Synod of Vitre, both into their own Acts, and the former Synod of Tonneins, with an Order, That it ſhould abide in thoſe very ſelf-ſame Words in which it was couched at firſt. Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 5. Art. 2.

Now let any one judge, whether this does not put the Exerciſe of Church-Diſcipline more into Laymens Hands, than can be pretended in the Church of England? And whether the French Miniſters, whilſt thoſe Canons were in Force, were not obliged by their Oath of Canonical [*] See Book I. Chap. iii.

Canonical Obedience, to grant Lay-Elders this Power, and ſubmit to their Deciſions and Judgment.

IT is true, the following Synod of Alez, 1620, a little moderated the Rigour of this Canon: For they Decreed, cap. 6. Art. 2. "That in ſuch a Caſe, where the Paſtor was "excepted againſt, the Elders only by themſelves ſhould not proceed to ſuſpend any "Perſon from the LORD's Table, without "the Preſence and Approbation of a Neighbour-Paſtor." But ſtill it ſeems the Paſtor was to be concluded by their Act, if a Neighbour-Paſtor did but conſent to it. Whence it follows, that in ſuch Caſes every Paſtor was obliged by Canon to take his Neighbour-Paſtor for his Ordinary, and pay Canonical Obedience to his Admonition and Judgment, in ſuch Things as related to the Exerciſe of Church-Keys: And yet Mr. Baxter makes this alſo an Objection againſt the Church of England, That Miniſters promiſe at their Ordination to obey their Ordinary, and other Chief Miniſters, to whom is committed the Charge and Government over them, that is, Arch-Deacons, Surrogates, &c. As if Perſons impowered with Authority by Canon, to oblige others to ſubmit to their Judicial Acts, were not the ſame Things in France that they are in England, whatever Names they are called by.

"BUT if ſo, then we muſt confeſs that "the Power of the Keys is not proper to "a Biſhop, but may be validly uſed by a "Prieſt." We confeſs it: All Prieſts by our Laws and Canons have the ordinary Uſe of the Keys in many Caſes: They admit Perſons to Baptiſm, and ſuſpend them from the LORD's Table, &c. by Virtue of this Power, and they are Judges, though not ſole Judges, in theſe Caſes, but under the Direction of the Canons: Other Prieſts are entruſted with a larger Share of this Power, by a more extraordinary and particular Commiſſion and Delegation from the Biſhop and the Laws, to proceed againſt Delinquents, even to Excommunication, &c. Now what follows from hence? Nothing that I can ſee, but only that it is lawful to promiſe Obedience to any Chief Miniſters thus legally impowered, ſo far as the Canons require it. Which is the direct contrary to what Mr. Baxter by his Argument intended.

BUT he ſays ſtill, "It is the Layman that "decreeth the Excommunication, which is "the Judicial Act; and when we uſe a Surrogate Prieſt, it is but as an Hireling-"Servant to pronounce the Decree, to mock "the Church with a Formality." This is a very modeſt Character of the Church and Surrogate Prieſts together! Every Rule of the Church, and every Act of a Prieſt is but a Formality, when it ſtands in the Way of a keen Objector. But be it what it will, I have ſhewed that his Cenſures hitherto fall as heavy upon the French Church, as they do upon the Church of England.

4. HIS next Reaſon againſt the Oath is taken from the Nature and Frame of Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, "which, he ſays, is unlaw-"ful, Tota ſpecie, and they dare not juſtify it "and its ſeveral Abuſes by Confederacy in "ſuch an Oath." But I ſhall ſhew, the French Church had another Opinion of Dioceſan Epiſcopacy and our Engliſh Biſhops, when I come to ſpeak of the Seventh Canon in the Fourth Chapter of this Book; and therefore I need not ſay any Thing farther here of this Objection.

5. "BISHOPS are not elected by the Cler-"gy and People, as by ancient Canons they "ought to be: Therefore they are Uſur-"pers: We cannot conceive how any Man "can be the Paſtor of thoſe that conſent "not; therefore though we can ſubmit to "theſe and live peaceably; we cannot ſwear "Obedience to them." By this Rule all the Paſtors of France are made Uſurpers: For none of them are Elected by the People, but by Claſſes or Provincial Synods, as I ſhall evidently make it appear in the Fifth Chapter of this Book.

HIS remaining Arguments are ſuch as theſe, which equally affect the French Church: "1. It is the Prerogative of Kings in all "Nations to have Subjects ſwear Allegiance "to them, and dangerous to make them "ſwear Obedience to every Juſtice or infe-"rior Officer. 2. Subjects may be intangled "between their Oath to the King and ſuch "Officers. 3. Many Oaths make Govern-"ment a Snare to the Conſcientious. 4. "Much Swearing makes Oaths contemptible "and bring in Perjury." Theſe would have been excellent Reaſons in a French Synod, where every Deputy ſware for himſelf and his Province, to ſubmit to the Canons of the Church, and where ſo many Oaths of Canonical Obedience (notwithſtanding theſe Dangers) were ſtill appointed. But perhaps the French Canons are more innocent than ours, as to the Matter of them. That is the only Plea that can bear the Face of an Argument: But I ſhall ſatisfy that by examining and comparing the particular Canons, in the following Chapters of this Book.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

That the French Church allows no one to call in Queſtion the Lawfulneſs of any Part of her Liturgy, or Book of Common-Prayer and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, agreeably to the Fourth Canon of the Church of England.

THE Firſt Canon which is commonly objected againſt, is in Order the Fourth, made againſt the Impugners of the Publick Worſhip of GOD eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, in theſe Words, "Whoſoever "ſhall hereafter affirm, That the Form of "GOD's Worſhip in the Church of England, "Eſtabliſhed by Law, and contained in the "Book of Common-Prayer and Adminiſtra-"tion of Sacraments, is a corrupt, ſuperſti-"tious, or unlawful Worſhip of GOD, or "containeth any Thing in it that is repug-"nant to the Scriptures: Let him be Ex-"communicated ipſo facto, &c."

MR. Baxter in his Caſe of Engliſh Nonconformity, cap. 23. gives the Church very hard Words upon the Account of this Canon; he charges it with no leſs Crimes than Puritaniſm, Phariſaiſm, and Popery. "Theſe Men, "ſays he, that call themſelves the Church of "England, do not only juſtify a large Volume "of Forms, Orders, Rubricks and Kalendars, "but alſo force all other Men to juſtify it "all as ſinleſs; and he ſhall be no Miniſter "that will not do it, nor a Chriſtian Member "of the Church that denieth it: As if the "Perfection of their Works were an Article "of the Creed, and neceſſary to Salvation "to be believed. Is not this Puritaniſm, "Phariſaical, and a Juſtification of Works?"

IT were a much modeſter Queſtion, to ask, Whether this be not ſuch a Rant, and Run of boiſterous Style, as any good Man that had looked over his Writings in ſober Thoughts a ſecond Time, would have thought fit to have ſoftned and corrected? But be the Charge what it will, it holds no more againſt the Church of England, than it does againſt the Reformed Church of France, and it may be, all other ſettled Proteſtant Churches. So that at this Rate of Arguing, all National Reformed Churches ſhall be Phariſees, Puritans and Papiſts together.

AS to the Church of France, I have already proved, that they oblige every Miniſter not only to ſubſcribe, but many Times ſwear to their Liturgy, or Book of Common-Prayer, Catechiſm, Adminiſtration of Sacraments, &c. Now I hope they would not make Men ſwear to that which they did not at leaſt believe to be agreeable to the Word of GOD, and were ſatisfied that it contained nothing in it repugnant to the Scriptures. But if ſo, then they were Puritans, Phariſees, and Papiſts in Mr. Baxter's account, for forcing Men to juſtify a large Volume of Forms, Orders, Rubricks, &c. all as ſinleſs. But the Church of England forces the People as well as the Miniſters to be modeſt, and not rail at the Liturgy, as a corrupt, ſuperſtitious, unlawful Worſhip, repugnant to the Word of GOD, under Pain of Excommunication. And is it not fit ſuch Mens Mouths ſhould be ſtopped, who traduce and ſpeak evil of the Worſhip of GOD, to the Diſturbance of the Peace of the Church, and Detriment of Piety and Religion? Such were the continued Declamations of Goodman, Gilby, Penry, and the reſt of that Strain, which may be ſeen collected by Biſhop Bancroft, in his Book called Dangerous Poſitions, &c. Lib. 2. and which probably might give Occaſion to the making of this very Canon. But whatever was the Occaſion of it, it is the very ſame in Subſtance with a Canon of the French Church in their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 5. Art. 31. which is in theſe Words: "If one or more "of the People ſtir up Contention, and do "thereby break the Church's Union in any "Point of Doctrine or Diſcipline, or about "the Form of Catechizing, or Adminiſtra-"tion of Sacraments, or Publick Prayers, or "the Celebration of Marriage, and that pri-"vate Admonitions have not been effectual "Remedies to appeaſe them; the Conſiſtory "of that Place ſhall endeavour to compoſe "the whole Affair, and in Caſe the Diſſen-"ters do not acquieſce therein, the Con-"ſiſtory ſhall entreat the Claſſis to aſſemble "at a convenient Time and Place, they ha-"ving firſt engaged the ſaid Diſſenters in "expreſs Terms and upon Record to promiſe, "that they will not ſpread their Opinions in "any Manner or Way till the Meeting of "the Claſſis, upon Pain of being cenſured "as Schiſmaticks. And if they refuſe to "give the ſaid Promiſes, they ſhall be cen-"ſured for Rebels according to our Diſci-"pline. Then it is ordered, That if the Claſ-"ſis cannot bring them to be quiet and "conform, they ſhall be referred to a Pro-"vincial Synod, and from that to a National "Synod; unto which if they refuſe to yield "full Obedience, and in expreſs Terms to "diſclaim their recorded Errors, they ſhall "be cut off by Excommunication from the "Body of our Church."

DOES not this Canon denounce Excommunication againſt obſtinate Traducers of the French Liturgy, in as full Terms as the Canon of the Church of England? The only Difference is, that the one orders a long Proceſs againſt them, the other proceeds more ſummarily with them, as ſuppoſing the Things in Controverſy to have been ſufficiently argued and handled already, and that there need not be recourſe to a Provincial or National Synod upon every ſuch Occaſion. Mean while all proper Methods may be uſed to inſtruct or convince Gainſayers, notwithſtanding this Excommunication ipſo facto denounced againſt them. And it is farther to be obſerved, That this Canon is not intended againſt thoſe who have Scruples in their own Minds, or modeſtly propoſe their Scruples to their Spiritual Guides, in order to obtain Satisfaction: But againſt ſuch only as ſpeak evil of the Liturgy with Scandal and Offence, and with a Malicious Deſign to viliſy and diſparage it.

CHAP. III.

That the French Church cenſures Impugners of her Articles, and Diſcipline, and Rites and Ceremonies, according to the Fifth and Sixth Canons of the Church of England.

THE Fifth Canon is in theſe Words: "Whoſoever ſhall hereafter affirm, That "any of the Nine and Thirty Articles are "in any part Superſtitious, or Erroneous, "or ſuch as may not with a good Conſci- "ence be Subſcribed: Let him be Excom- "municated, &c."

THE Sixth is this, "Whoſoever ſhall affirm, "That the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church "of England by Law Eſtabliſhed, are Wicked, "Antichriſtian, or Superſtitious, or ſuch as "being Commanded by Lawful Authority, "Men who are Zealouſly and Godly Affected, "may not with any good Conſcience approve "them, uſe them, or as occaſion requireth, "ſubſcribe unto them: Let them be Excom- "municated ipſo facto, &c."

THESE Canons are to be underſtood in the ſame Senſe and Latitude as the former. Every Man does not deſerve Excommunication that has any Scruples about any of the Articles or Ceremonies, or modeſtly and ſeaſonably propoſes his Scruples for Information: But the Factious and Turbulent may deſerve it, who declaim againſt every Thing they like not, as Wicked, Superſtitious, and Antichriſtian, and thereby Scandalize the Weak, and diſturb the Peace of the Church, and deſtroy its Union. Admit that ſome Things in the Articles and Ceremonies are Matters of ſmall Moment: Yet it is not a Thing of ſmall Moment to break the Church's Peace by raiſing Contention about them. Suppoſe they be not Articles of Faith, nor neceſſary to Salvation; yet Peace is a neceſſary Duty, and Strife and Contention great Sins, be the Matters never ſo ſmall which Men contend about. Therefore though Men ſhould not deſerve to be caſt out of the Church for their bare Diſſent, yet they may for their factious and turbulent Spirits, for their Bitterneſs and Clamours, and Evil-ſpeakings, for their Strifes and Seditions and Contentious Humours: For theſe Things will exclude them from the Kingdom of Heaven. And it can be no Crime to Excommunicate ſuch, who firſt by their Strife and Contention Excommunicate themſelves. Or if it be a Crime, it is ſuch a one as the National Church of France has always been guilty of, who by that Canon of their Book of Diſcipline which I but now mentioned, Decree, "That if one or more of the "People ſtir up Contention, and do thereby "break the Church's Union in any Point of "Doctrine or Diſcipline, or about the Form "of Catechizing, or Adminiſtration of Sacra- "ments, or Publick Prayers, &c. and can- "not be wrought upon in expreſs Terms to "diſclaim their Errors, they ſhall be cut off "by Excommunication from the Body of the "Church.

Is not this to make Matters of ſmall Moment and dubious, Articles of the Creed, and neceſſary to Church-Communion, as much as the Church of England does? Are not all Men caſt out of the Church that Diſſent from them? Does not this Excommunication extend to Laymen in France, as well as England? Is it not as harſh there, to lay ſo great Streſs on every Ceremony of the Church, as to Excommunicate every one that calleth any one of them unlawful? Does the Church of England equal her Conſtitutions to the Ten Commandments and the Creed, any more than the Church of France does? And yet thus Mr. Baxter argues againſt theſe two Canons of our Church, Chap. 24, & 25. of his Eng. Nonconform. and then cries out, What is Phariſaical, if this be not?

HE might as well have ſaid, it was Turciſm, Popery, and Paganiſm. For what is Calumny, if this be not? The Church of England requires all her Members, as the Church of France does, to raiſe no Contentions about her Doctrine or Ceremonies, not to impugn or traduce them as Antichriſtian or Unlawful, and thereby raiſe Schiſms and Diviſions about them. And this he calls equalling them to the Creed and Ten Commandments, as if the Church of England required Men to take them all for neceſſary neceſſary Points of Faith and Terms of Salvation; when yet ſhe does not forbid a modeſt Diſſent from them, but only Mens expreſſing their Diſſent in ſuch a Way as tends to create Diviſions, and draw them off from her Communion. It is one Thing to diſſent and err in Opinion, and another to expreſs that Diſſent with Contempt and Diſdain either by Word or Action. The one may deſerve Pity, whilſt the other calls for Cenſure and Rebuke. And if the Church cenſure ſuch with Excommunication, ſhe does no more than what the Primitive Church did, and all other Settled Churches now do, and what ſhe ſeems authorized to do by an Apoſtolical Canon, Mark thoſe that cauſe Diviſions among you, and avoid them.

DR. Sutcliff obſerved long ago, before our Canons were made, that the Practice of France and Geneva was very ſevere in this Particular. "For that John Morelly Diſputed in "a certain Treatiſe, that the Words Tell the "Church belonged not to the Conſiſtory; his "Book was Burnt, and the Man Excommunicated. Two Miniſters at Geneva were "depoſed and baniſhed for ſpeaking againſt "Uſury allowed in that State. And another "was glad to fly, for ſpeaking againſt Unleavened Bread. Sutcliff. of Eccl. Diſcipl. c. 7. "ſect. 5. p. 132.

MONSIEUR Amyraut Profeſſor of Divinity at Saumur delivers it as his Opinion from the Chair, "That that Man is not to be reputed a Chriſtian, who deſpiſes and tramples "on the Laws of the Church. For as much "as they derogate nothing from Chriſtian "Liberty, and ought not to be eſteemed a "Slavery, being but few in number, where "the Church is rightly Governed, and ſuch "as recommend themſelves to the Conſciences of Men; ſo that the Faithful obſerve "them with a willing Mind." Amyrald. Theſ. de Libert. Chriſt. n. 13. inter Theſ. Salmur.

BY this Rule then, to Rail at the Doctrine of the Twentieth Article, which ſpeaks of the Church's Power to Decree Rites and Ceremonies, may be a Crime deſerving Excommunication.

CALVIN in one of his Epiſtles to Viret p. 61. ſpeaks of a certain petulant Preacher, called Mauriſius, who was uſed to vent in his Sermons bitter Invectives againſt the Miniſters of Geneva, and more eſpecially Calvin himſelf; ſaying, that they were worſe than the Papiſts, and taught falſe Doctrine contrary to the Word of GOD, &c. Now it came to be a Queſtion among Calvin and his Collegues, What Courſe ſhould be taken with him? Calvin was not very forward to have him Cenſured, becauſe of ſome Perſonal Reflections made upon himſelf; but the reſt were urgent for it, ſaying, "It was not to be any "longer endured, that the Common Doc"trine of the Church ſhould publickly be "traduced and condemned, and they ſee and "hear and take no Notice of it. Non ulterius "ferendum, ut publice nobis videntibus & ſcien"tibus damnetur Communis Eccleſiæ noſtræ Doc"trina."

CALVIN ſays in another of his Epiſtles, That it is one Rule in the Geneva-Diſcipline, "That if any one ſpreads Opinions contra"ry to the received Doctrine of the Church, "and perſiſts obſtinately in them, he is to "be ſuſpended from the LORD's Table, and "complained of to the Senate alſo." And then the Senate may proceed againſt him as a Contumacious Rebel, and Deſpiſer of the Church's Cenſures. Ep. ad Magiſtr. Genevens. p. 76, & 77.

THIS, I am ſure, is as much, if not ſomething more than the preſent Canons ſpeak of, which are ſo diſliked in the Church of England.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Seventh Canon of the Church of England: That the French Church allows of the Engliſh Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, and thinks it lawful to ſubmit to the Authority and Juriſdiction of Biſhops, and condemns thoſe who call them Antichriſtian.

THE Principal Thing in which the Church of France ſeems to differ from the Church of England, is in the Point of Church-Government. They allow no Paſtor to have any Primacy or Superiority over another, but by the Thirtieth Article of their Confeſſion, declare them all to be of equal Authority and Power. But then they do not condemn other Churches which have this Inequality among their Miniſters; nor do they refuſe to communicate with them, nor ſubmit to Epiſcopal Government in thoſe Churches were it is legally Eſtabliſhed, if we may believe either their Synods or the beſt Advocates of their Cauſe.

THE Synod of Tonneins, 1614. has a whole Chapter about Expedients for re-uniting the Proteſtant Churches into one entire Body and Communion with one another: One of theſe Expedients is this, "That concerning "Ceremonies and Church-Government, a "mutual Declaration ſhall be made by the "Deputies " Deputies appointed to Treat of this Union, by which in the Names of their Principals they ſhall declare, That the Churches ſhall not Judge or Condemn one another for this Difference; it not hindering our mutual Agreement in the ſame true Faith and Doctrine, and that for all this, we may cordially embrace each other as true Believers and Joint-Members of one and the ſame Body. And as a Pledge of this their mutual Concord, the LORD's-Supper ſhall be celebrated, wherein the Paſtors from England and the other Nations ſhall all mutually communicate together." Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 18. Art. 7.

PETER du Moulin was an eminent Profeſſor of the French Church about this Time, and he wrote an Apology for the Confeſſion of Faith againſt Arnoux the Jeſuit, where he delivers his Judgment to the ſame Purpoſe in theſe Words: " As touching Eccleſiaſtical Polity, we do not refuſe to acknowledge thoſe for pure and true Churches, where Equality of Miniſters is not obſerved: Becauſe we eſteem not this Order to be a Point of Faith, nor a Doctrine tending to Salvation. We live (GOD be praiſed) in Brotherly Concord with the Neighbouring Churches, which obſerve another Form, and where Biſhops have ſome Superiority."

" I KNOW, that under Pretence that the Church of England hath another Form of Diſcipline than ours is, our Adverſaries (the Papiſts) charge us that our Religion is divers. But Experience confuteth this Accuſation; for we Aſſemble with the Engliſh Men in their Churches, we participate together in the Holy Supper of our LORD: The Doctrine of their Confeſſion is wholly agreeable unto ours. The moſt excellent Servants of GOD in our Churches, Peter Martyr, Calvin, Zanchius, Beza, &c. have often written Letters full of Reſpect and Amity to the Prelates of England.

" HE abuſeth himſelf, who believeth that the Word Biſhop, uſed in the Holy Scripture, is odious in our Churches. And our Adverſaries unjuſtly accuſe us to be Enemies of the Epiſcopal Order. For we muſt be altogether ignorant in Hiſtory, if we do not know that Antiquity ſpeaks honourably of that Degree. Euſebius in his Chronicle witneſſeth, That a Year after our LORD's Death, James our LORD's Brother was eſtabliſhed Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and that Ten Years after, Euodius was created Biſhop of Antioch, and that after James ſucceeded Simon in the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem, from whence deſcended the Succeſſion of Biſhops in Jeruſalem. St. Jerom in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, ſaith that Polycarp St. John's Diſciple was by that Apoſtle made Biſhop of Smyrna. In the ſame Book he ſaith, That St. Paul eſtabliſhed Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus, and Titus Biſhop of Crete. And Tertullian in the Thirty-ſecond Chapter of the Book of Preſcriptions, calleth thoſe Churches Apoſtolical Churches, and Buds and Spriggs of the Apoſtles, whoſe Biſhops were eſtabliſhed by the Apoſtles, &c."

AFTER a deal more to the ſame Purpoſe, he concludes thus: " All theſe Allegations, ſays he, tend to ſhew that notwithſtanding the Diverſity of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, two particular Churches may live in Peace and Concord under the Band of one Faith and Religion; and that if ſometimes we ſpeak againſt the Authority of Biſhops, we condemn not Epiſcopal Order in itſelf, but ſpeak only of the Corruption which the Church of Rome has induced into it, &c." Moulin's Buckler of Faith, p. 345. Ed. Lond. 1631.

IF this Learned Perſon rightly underſtood and repreſented the Doctrine of the French Church, in whoſe Name he ſpeaks, their Doctrine is, That though Epiſcopal Superiority be not expreſsly commanded in the New Teſtament, yet there are ſome Inſtances of it in Apoſtolical Practice; and that it is agreeable to the Practice of all Antiquity; That it is not to be condemned in thoſe Churches which retain it; and that they would willingly and heartily have ſubmitted to Biſhops, had Biſhops been their Reformers.

THIS Inclination of theirs to ſubmit to Epiſcopal Government, is farther evident from their ready Compliance to ſome Motions of this Kind that were actually made to them; particularly to that Propoſal made by the Biſhop of Troyes, of which Peter Martyr gives us an Account in an Epiſtle to Beza at the End of his Common Places. It is as remarkable a Paſſage as any occurs in the whole Hiſtory of the Reformation, and therefore I will inſert it in his own Words: Trojæ numeroſa eſt admodum Eccleſia & indies augetur. Epiſcopus jam Chriſti regnum ſerio promovet; nec tantum ſuas oves ipſe pure docet, ſed quia ei gravis ſcrupulus injectus eſt de ſua Vocatione, quod in ea Eccleſiæ & Populi Electionem ſeu Confirmationem non habuerit, ideo Seniores Eccleſiæ Reformatæ accerſivit, rogavitque ut pie ac prudenter diſpicerent, an eum vellent eligere, confirmare ac pro Epiſcopo habere? Quod ſi judicarent faciendum, ſe daturum operam, ut ſicut cœpit ita pergeret Eccleſiam ſibi commiſſam docendo & hortando pro viribus ædificare & augere. Sin vero exiſtimarent illum minus idoneum ad tantum munus, libere atque aperte dicerent, ſe autem paratum eſſe loco cedere, modo ei liceat in Eccleſia Reformata vivere juxta Sanctam Evangelii Diſciplinam. Rogavitque ut ea de re mature cum Eccleſia deliberarent: Quod cum factum eſſet, ab omnibus unanimiter ut Verus Epiſcopus agnitus eſt & receptus. Quare illius authoritas & pietas multum Eccleſiæ Chriſti commodat: Deus laudetur qui ad hunc modum Filii ſui regnum gubernat & dirigit. Pet. Mart. Ep. 57. ad Bezam An. 1561. p. 1143.

" THE

" THE Church of Troyes is very great and " increaſes daily: The Biſhop thereof is now " become a zealous Promoter of the King- " dom of CHRIST, and inſtructs his Flock " in the Purity of the Goſpel. But having " a Scruple upon him about his Calling, be- " cauſe he had not the Election and Con- " firmation of the Church and People con- " curring to it, he therefore ſent for the " Elders of the Reformed Church, and de- " ſired them to conſult among themſelves " prudently and piouſly, whether they might " Elect, Confirm, and Accept of him for " their Biſhop? If they did, he would then " go on, as he had begun, to edify and " augment to the utmoſt of his Power the " Church committed to his Charge. But if " they thought him not qualified for ſo great " a Work, they ſhould deal freely and plain- " ly with him: For in that Caſe, he was " reſolved to reſign his Biſhoprick and live " as a private Chriſtian among them. He " preſſed them again to deliberate upon the " Matter with the whole Church, and take " their moſt mature Advice upon it. Which " when they had done, he was unanimouſ- " ly Acknowledged and Received by them " all as a true Biſhop: And his Authority " and Piety did great Service to the Church " of CHRIST: Praiſed be GOD, who takes " theſe Methods to govern and advance the " Kingdom of his Son."

CAN we have a fuller Teſtimony, either of the Uſefulneſs of Epiſcopal Authority, or of the Willingneſs and Readineſs of the French to have ſubmitted to it, could they have been ſo happy as to have it quietly ſettled among them? But it was their Misfortune at firſt, that they could not have it, though their Inclinations led them to embrace it. For no ſooner did the Popiſh Party hear of the leaſt Suſpicion of any Biſhop's Leaning towards the Proteſtant Cauſe, but immediately the whole Power both of France and Rome was armed againſt them. Thuanus tells us, That this Example of Caraccioli (for that was the Biſhop's Name) was looked upon by the adverſe Party to be a Matter of ſuch dangerous Conſequence, that they laboured with all their Might to ruin him, and never ceaſed till they had prevailed with the King to force him to quit his Station. Thuan. Tom. 2. An. 1561. Lib. 28. p. 48.

THE Popiſh Authors themſelves tell us, there were about this Time ſeveral other Biſhops in France, who were Well-wiſhers to the Reformation, ſuch as Odet, Colinius, Cardinal Caſtilion the Admiral's Brother, Johannes Monluc Biſhop of Valence, Sanromanus Biſhop of Aix; Johannes Barbanſon Biſhop of Pamiers, Johannes de Sangelaſio Biſhop of Utica, Francis de Noailles Biſhop of Aquæ Auguſtæ, Carolus Gillarius Biſhop of Chartres, together with Lewis d'Albert and Claudius Reginus, Two Biſhops of the Territory of Bern, under the Proteſtant Queen of Navarre. But no ſooner did they in the leaſt ſhew themſelves Favourers of that Way, but they were preſently accuſed of Hereſy, and cited to appear before the Conſiſtory of the Inquiſition at Rome; where three of them were deprived, and the reſt ſuſpended, till they ſhould make their perſonal Appearance, and clear themſelves of the Hereſy laid to their Charge. This Oppoſition made moſt of them draw back and recant, and ſo they kept their Biſhopricks: But Cardinal Caſtilion and Sangelaſius, with the Biſhop of Troyes turned Proteſtants, and continued for ſome Time to act as Biſhops, but at laſt were forced by the Secular Power to withdraw, and betake themſelves to a private Station.

SPONDANUS is our Author for all this, An. 1563. n. 21. And ſome Intimations of the ſame Thing are given by Thuanus, Lib. 35. Homerus Tortora Hiſt. Franc. Lib. 3. Gabutius Vit. Pii 5. Lib. 2. cap. 4. Catellus Hiſt. Occitan. & Onuphrius Vit. Pii 4. Out of whom Spondanus collects his Hiſtory.

BY this we ſee, it was not any Averſion the French Proteſtants had to Epiſcopacy in general, but rather the Iniquity of the Times, that hindered Biſhops from being ſettled among them. And Dr. du Moulin, Son of the famous Peter before-mentioned, confirms this by another Inſtance in the Caſe of the Biſhop of Meaux and ſome others. Preface to his Father's Book, called, The Novelty of Popery, p. 3. " How ſoon, ſays he, both Paſtors and Peo- " ple may be brought to ſubmit to Biſhops, " hath been tryed by the Biſhop of Troyes, " and that of Meaux, who, as ſoon as they " began to forſake the Errors of Popery, were " acknowledged by the Proteſtant Churches " within the Verge of their Juriſdiction for " their Dioceſans. The Archbiſhop of Vienna " and Biſhop of Orleans were once about to have " done as much, and would have found the " like Obedience from the Proteſtant Party; " but the great Stream of the State proved " too ſtrong for them to ſwim againſt."

HE tells us farther, " There was a Time " when ſome of their prime Men feeling the " Inconveniences that follow the Want of " Eccleſiaſtical Subordination, moved Cardi- " nal Richelieu to place it among them by his " Authority, pretending that it would bring " them nearer to the Roman Church: But he " flatly denied to give Way to it, and told " them, If you had that Order, you would " look too like a Church." Ibid. p. 2.

THE ſame Author gives us there alſo the Judgment of that Eminent Lord du Pleſſis Mornay, whoſe Learning and Government made him equally famous in the French Church. His Opinion was, " That though Presbyteri- " an Government might agree very well with " Popular States, ſuch as Geneva and Switzer- " land; yet in Kingdoms and Monarchies, " Epiſcopal Government was rather to be " choſen to ſuſtain the Dignity of the Church, " and ſhelter it from Oppreſſion, &c. Ibid. " p. 8.

ALL

ALL which proves, that though the French Proteſtants were willing to juſtify their own Government as an allowable Thing among themſelves: Yet they were far from crying down Epiſcopacy as Antichriſtian, or pulling down Biſhops merely to ſet up themſelves. Calvin himſelf was as far from this as any Man, witneſs that ſolemn Declaration of his in his Book de Neceſſitate Reformandæ Eccleſiæ. Talem ſi nobis exhibeant Hierarchiam, in qua ſic emineant Epiſcopi, ut Chriſto ſubeſſe non recuſent—ut ab illo tanquam Unico Capite pendeant, & ad ipſum referantur—tum nullo non Anathemate dignos fateor, ſi qui erunt qui non eam reverenter, ſummaque obedientia obſervent: "Give us ſuch an "Hierarchy, ſays he, in which Biſhops preſide, who are ſubject to CHRIST, and him "alone as their only Head; and then I will "own no Curſe too bad for him that ſhall "not pay the utmoſt Reſpect and Obedience to ſuch an Hierarchy as that." Tom. 8. p. 60.

BEZA was of the ſame Mind, with relation particularly to the Biſhops of England: "The Church of England, ſays he, after the "Reformation, was ſupported and ſtood by "the Authority of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, "of which Order ſhe had many, not only "famous Martyrs, but excellent Doctors and "Paſtors; and may ſhe for ever enioy that "ſingular Bleſſing of GOD upon her. Fruatur ſane iſta ſingulari Dei Beneficentia, que utinam ei ſit Perpetua. Beza Reſp. ad Sarav. cap. 18.

THE Truth is, Calvin and Beza and the French Church ſet up ſuch a Government and Diſcipline at the Reformation, as the State of their Affairs would bear; but they never abſolutely condemned Epiſcopacy, or thought their own Model ought to be a Rule to other Churches. Beza expreſly diſclaims that as a Falſe and Slanderous Imputation in any that ſhould ſay, "They pre-"ſcribed their own Example to be followed "by any other Church, like thoſe Ignorant "Men who think nothing right done but "what they do themſelves. Beza Ibid. cap. 21.

So that if any Zealots among the French have either condemned Epiſcopal Government as unlawful, or ſought to impoſe their own Form as neceſſary upon other Churches: They had no Authority for ſo doing either from their firſt Reformers, or their National Synods, or the beſt Writers in their own Church, who (as I have ſhewn) have always ſpoke honourably of the Engliſh Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, and expreſſed themſelves ready to ſubmit to ſuch a Form of Government, if ever it could have been ſettled among them. Let but the ſame Temper and Moderation be ſhewn by our Engliſh Diſſenters, and then this Controverſy about Biſhops muſt needs have an End: But whilſt they continue to decry Epiſcopacy as Antichriſtian, and ſeek to deſtroy the Order as unlawful, and invade the Power of Biſhops by Ordaining Miniſters againſt their Authority legally ſettled among us; they may not flatter themſelves to think their Caſe is the ſame with that of the French Church: For if there be any Truth in what I have now diſcourſed, their Practice in every Point does manifeſtly contradict it. Calvin himſelf would not have ſcrupled to ſubſcribe the Seventh Canon of our Church, which ſays, "Whoſoever ſhall here-"after affirm, That the Government of the "Church of England under his Majeſty by "Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdea-"cons, and the reſt that bear Office in "the ſame, is Antichriſtian or repugnant to "the Word of GOD: Let him be Excommu-"nicated, ipſo Facto, &c." For what does he ſay leſs in thoſe Words which I have cited before, Nullo non Anathemate dignos fateor, &c. "I confeſs no Excommunication too bad for "them, that will not pay the utmoſt Re-"ſpect and Obedience to ſuch an Hierarchy "as that." If it be ſaid, that Calvin mentions neither Archbiſhops, Deans, nor Archdeacons, nor the reſt that bear Office in the Church of England: It is true; but he that approves of Biſhops as ſettled in England, does virtually and conſequentially approve of all the reſt mentioned in that Canon, and may with a ſafe Conſcience ſubmit to their Government, as not repugnant to the Word of GOD.

IT is certain the French Authors themſelves thus underſtand Calvin, as ſpeaking of the Engliſh Hierarchy. Monſieur de l' Angle, Miniſter of the French Church at Charenton, in his Letter to the Biſhop of London 1680, cites his Authority to the ſame Purpoſe that I have done. "Since the Church of England, "ſays he, is a true Church of our LORD; "ſince her Worſhip and Doctrines are pure, "and have nothing in them contrary to the "Word of GOD; and ſince that when the "Reformation was there received, it was re-"ceived together with Epiſcopacy, and with "the Eſtabliſhment of the Liturgy and Ce-"remonies, which are there in Uſe at this "Day; it is without doubt the Duty of all "the Reformed in your Realm, to keep them-"ſelves inſeparably united to the Church. "And thoſe that do not this, upon Pretence "that they deſire more Simplicity in their "Ceremonies, and leſs Inequality among the "Miniſters, do certainly commit a very great "Sin. For Schiſm is the moſt formidable "Evil that can befal the Church: And for "the avoiding of this, Chriſtian Charity obli-"ges all good Men to bear with their Bre-"thren, in ſome Things much leſs tolerable "than thoſe now in diſpute ought to ſeem, "even in the Eyes of thoſe that have the "moſt Averſion for them. This was ſo much "the Opinion of our great and excellent "Calvin, that in his Treatiſe of the neceſſi-"ty of the Reformation, he makes no diffi-"culty to ſay, That if there ſhould be any "ſo unreaſonable, as to refuſe the Commu-"nion of a Church that was pure in its

"Worſhip

" Worſhip and Doctrine, and not to ſubmit " himſelf with reſpect to its Government, un- " der Pretence that it had retained an Epiſ- " copacy qualified as yours is; there would " be no Cenſure nor Rigour of Diſcipline " that ought not to be exerciſed upon them." [a]

To this I add the Teſtimony of Monſieur Daille (ſhewed me by the kind Information of a Learned and Worthy Perſon of that Church) in his Book called, Replique a Meſſieurs, Adam & Cottiby. " Part 3. c. 20. p. 261, he ſays, " Calvin himſelf honoured all Biſhops that " were not Subjects of the Pope, and that " taught the pure and ſincere Doctrine of " the Apoſtles, purged from the Leaven of " Humane Traditions; ſuch as were the Pre- " lates of England, Cranmer, Archbiſhop of " Canterbury, Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter and " others. We ourſelves alſo have ever main- " tained, and do ſtill maintain, the ſame Chri- " ſtian Communion in Faith and Charity with " their Succeſſors, notwithſtanding the diffe- " rent manner of Eccleſiaſtical Government, " that is found betwixt them and us. — We " confeſs that the Foundation of their Charge " is good and lawful, eſtabliſhed by the Apo- " ſtles, according to the Command of CHRIST, " in the Churches which they founded." And this he ſays is the Difference betwixt Biſhops, and the Pope and Monks, " That the " latter were never inſtituted by JESUS " CHRIST, nor by his Apoſtles; nor can " there any Foot-ſteps of their Order be " found, either in the Word of GOD, or " the Genuine Monuments of the Ancient " Church.

THE Title of the Chapter has the ſame Words: " There is this Grand Difference " between Biſhops and the Pope and Monks, " Que l' Epiſcopat eſt inſtitue de Dieu, That " Epiſcopacy is inſtituted of GOD; but Popes " and Monks are the Inventions of Men, " and are the Authors of Diſorder and Abu- " ſes.

THIS plainly refers the Original of Epiſcopacy to Apoſtolical and Divine Inſtitution. Some others, I confeſs, among whom is Lud. Capellus and Rivet, do not carry it ſo high, but derive it only from Eccleſiaſtcal Order: Yet they all agree in this, That to make a Separation in a Church upon the Account of Epiſcopacy, where it is regularly ſettled, and reformed according to the Model of the ancient Church, is criminal Schiſm, and a Breach of the Unity and Peace of the Church. Dr. Rivet ſays expreſly, " That if Aerius ſe- " parated from the Church for the Diſtinc- " tion of Superiors and Inferiors, he was " a bold and Schiſmatical Man; becauſe ſuch " Diſtinction was introduced into the Church " at leaſt by Humane Order, upon very juſt " and reaſonable Cauſes, and is no ways con- " trary to the Faith. Audax fuit & Schiſ- " maticus Aerius, ſi ob Inferiorum ac Superiorum " diſtinctionem, Fidei non contrariam, ac æquis de " cauſis humana Inſtitutione introductam, ſe ab Ec- " cleſia ſeparavit." Rivet. Cathol. Orth. Tract. 2. Q. 23. n. 6.

I LEAVE thoſe who are concerned, to make the Application.

CHAP. V.

Of the Eighth Canon: That the French Church does not impugn our Form of Ordaining Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, or ſay they are not true Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, who are ordained by it, untill they have ſome other Calling: That they allow not the People in France to chooſe their own Paſtors, &c.

THE Words of the Eighth Canon are, " Whoſoever ſhall affirm or teach, That " the Form and Manner of making and con- " ſecrating Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, " contains any Thing in it that is repugnant " to the Word of GOD; or that they who " are made Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons in " that Form, are not lawfully made, nor ought " to be accounted either by themſelves or " others, to be truly either Biſhops, Prieſts, " or Deacons, until they have ſome other " Calling to thoſe Divine Offices, let him be " excommunicate, &c."

THE Doctrinal Part of this Canon is the very ſame with the Thirty-ſixth Article, which ſays, " The Book of Conſecration of Arch- " biſhops, and Biſhops, and ordering of " Prieſts and Deacons, ſet forth in the Time " of Edward VI, and confirmed at the ſame " Time by Authority of Parliament, doth " contain

" ſecration and Ordering: Neither hath it
" any Thing that of itſelf is ſuperſtitious or " ungodly. And therefore whoſoever are Con-
" ſecrated or Ordered according to the Rites
" of that Book —— or hereafter ſhall be Con-
" ſecrated or Ordered according to the ſame
" Rites, we decree all ſuch to be rightly and " orderly and lawfully Conſecrated and Or" dered."

So that every one who can ſubſcribe the Doctrine of this Article, muſt needs allow the ſame to be true in the Canon alſo. But I have proved before in the Second Book, Chap. i. &c. That the French Church allows our Articles, both in general and particular, as lawful to be ſubſcribed; and I have made it appear in the very laſt Chapter before this, that the French have no Exception againſt our Dioceſan Biſhops, or their Ordination. So that the only Difficulty which ſeems to remain, is as to Practice: Whether it be fit to excommunicate ſuch as vent their Diſlike of our Biſhops, Prieſts, or Deacons, in ſuch a Way as the Canon ſpecifies; that is, who ſay they are ſo unlawful and repugnant to the Word of GOD, as that they ought not to be taken for Lawful Biſhops, Prieſts, or Deacons, until they have ſome other Calling to their reſpective Offices? We ſay, They deſerve Excommunication; but Mr. Baxter ſays, No; and undertakes their Apology, and offers Reaſons againſt the Canon. I will firſt ſhew briefly, what Reaſon there was for making the Canon, and then examine his Reaſons againſt it.

BISHOP Bancroft, in his Book, called, Dangerous Poſitions, tells us, It was become a common Practice in Queen Elizabeth's Days, among thoſe who liked not the Diſcipline and Government of the Church of England, " to " renounce the Calling which they had from
" the Biſhops, and take it from the Appro" bation of the Claſſis: They were content " to accept Orders from the Biſhop, as a " Civil Matter, but did not thereby account
" themſelves Miniſters, until the Brethren of " ſome Claſſis had allowed them: They taught,
" That all Miniſters, who were called accord" ing to the Order of the Church of England,
" were unlawful; and therefore urged as " many as they durſt truſt, to ſeek at their " Claſſis a new Approbation, which they
" termed the LORD's Ordinance." Danger. Poſit. Lib. 3. cap. 14. p. 113.

NOW when we conſider, that Biſhop Bancroft was Preſident of the Convocation when the Canons were made, we cannot doubt but that this Hiſtory points out to us the plain Reaſon of the preſent Canon. A Deſign was formed to nullify all the Orders of the Church of England, and ſubvert its whole Diſcipline, Government, and Conſtitution, by pretending that her Miniſters were no Lawful Miniſters, nor could officiate as ſuch, until they had another Calling, more conſonant to the Ordinance of GOD. And was it not high Time to give a Check to ſuch a Pretence as this? Could any Eſtabliſhed Church in Prudence ſuffer ſuch dangerous Poſitions and Practices to go uncenſured? Can any Man think, the National Synods of France would have tamely ſuffered unreaſonable Men thus to have ſtruck at the Foundation of their Miniſtry, and call in Queſtion the Legality of their whole Order and Conſtitution, without ſo much as threatening them, in Caſe of Obſtinacy, with Excommunication? They who roſe up ſo ſeverely againſt the Independent Principles, as I have ſhewed they did, [*] becauſe they thought them pernicious and deſtructive of their Claſſical and Synodical Conſtitution, would doubtleſs much more have exerted themſelves againſt any, that ſhould preſume to Null their whole Miniſtry and Manner of Ordaining.

BUT it may be, the Form and Manner of Ordaining in the French Church is not ſo liable to Exception as the Forms of the Church of England. To which I ſay, ſuppoſing our Forms to be Lawful (as the French Church in Subſcribing our Thirty-ſixth Article owns them to be) there can be no Difference, at leaſt no material Objections againſt the one, which will not equally hold againſt the other. And if we examine Mr. Baxter's Arguments, we ſhall plainly find it ſo. In his Twenty-ſeventh Chapter of Eng. Nonconform. he offers Five Arguments to prove it lawful to call our Ordinations ſinful. His firſt is, " That
" we thereby obtrude Paſtors on the Church" es, upon the bare Choice of a Patron, with" out, or againſt the Peoples Wills." But if the Nomination of the Patrons muſt be called Obtruding, then Paſtors might have been obtruded upon the Churches in France. For by ſeveral of their Canons, Patrons are allowed the ſame Liberty of Preſenting and Right of Nomination, as they have in England. The Synod of Vitre 1583. c. 2. Art. 15. ſays expreſsly, " Gentlemen and others en" joying Right of Patronage, ſhall not be " urged to forſake their juſt Titles." The Synod of Montauban ſays farther, " That Lay-" Patrons may enjoy their Privilege of lay" ing Claim by Proteſtation unto their Rights
" and Emoluments, that ſo their Title to " them may be preſerved, though they could " not at preſent collate, becauſe none but
" Papiſts might be collated, and it was againſt
" their Conſcience and Religion to collate
" them." But this I think plainly implies, that by the Laws of the Church they had Liberty to collate Proteſtant Miniſters, whenever the Laws of the Realm would give Way to it. See Synod of Montauban, cap. 4. Art.

[*] See Book I. Chap. i.

Art. 44. and Book of Diſcipline, Cap. 14. Art. 3.

BUT whatever became of the Right of Patrons, it is certain the People had no Right of Nominating or Electing; no nor yet of Conſenting, any otherwiſe than they have in England. For the Right of Probation and Election belonged wholly to Claſſes and Synods, and all that the People had Power to do, was only to object againſt the Nominated Party; but if they had nothing material to object againſt him, their Silence was taken for Conſent, and the Miniſter was immediately ordained without asking any other Vote or Conſent of the People. He is much miſtaken, who thinks that Paſtors in France were choſen by Poll or Popular Election.

THEIR Book of Diſcipline, cap. 1. Art. 4. refers the Election of Miniſters wholly to Claſſes, or Provincial Synods. "A Miniſter "of the Goſpel (unleſs in Times of Diffi- "culty, and Caſes of very great Neceſſity, "in which he may be choſen by three Pa- "ſtors, together with the Conſiſtory of the "Place) ſhall not be admitted into this Holy "Office, but by the Provincial Synod, or a "Claſſis compoſed of Seven Paſtors. — And "the Miniſter Elect ſhall be Preſented with "good and valid Teſtimonials, not only from "the Univerſities, and particular Churches, "but alſo from the Claſſis of that Church, "where he hath been moſt converſant."

HERE we ſee Miniſters are called Elect, not from the Election of the People, but from the Choice of Provincial Synods, or Claſſes: And though in Caſes of great Neceſſity, three Paſtors and the Conſiſtory of the Place were allowed to chooſe, yet the Election is never referred to the Vote of the People.

THE next Canon ſays, "After the Synod "or Claſſis hath examined any Miniſter Elect, "they ſhall notify his Election by their Act "or Letters, to the Church whither he is "to be ſent, and their Letters ſhall be de- "livered or read to them by a Paſtor or "Elder." This again plainly ſhews, that the Election is made, before the People have any Knowledge of it.

THEN follows in the Sixth Canon what it is the People are allowed to do: "He whoſe E- "lection ſhall be declared unto the Church, "ſhall preach publickly on three ſeveral Sab- "baths in the Audience of the whole Congrega- "tion, and the ſaid Auditory ſhall be expreſsly "charged, That if any one of them do know "any Impediment, for which his Ordination, "who ſhall be then mentioned by his Name, "may not be compleated, or why he may not "be accepted, that they do then come and "give Notice of it unto the Conſiſtory, which "ſhall patiently hear the Reaſons of both "Parties, that ſo they may proceed to Judg- "ment." The Peoples Silence ſhall be taken for a full Conſent. This was all the People had to do in the Election of their Paſtors, which can no more be called Election, than in our Congregations, the People may be ſaid to Elect Husbands and Wives for Perſons to be married, becauſe whenever the Banns are publiſhed, they are charged, "That if any one of them do know any "Cauſe or juſt Impediment, why thoſe Per- "ſons ſhould not be joined together in Ho- "ly Matrimony, they ſhould declare it." Only in the French Canon, leſt eternal Quarrels and Animoſities ſhould riſe between Paſtor and People, in Caſe they were obſtinately, though wrongfully ſet againſt him, there is this Proviſo made, "That although "the Miniſter Elect be juſtified in Synod "againſt all Impeachments brought againſt "him by the People, yet ſhall he not be "given as Paſtor to that People againſt their "Will, nor to the Diſcontentment of the "greateſt Part of them." And there may be ſomething of Prudence in this, for which Reaſon it is alſo commonly practiſed in England: But ſtill I ſay, this does not give the People Power of Election. For at moſt, it is but an Indulgence of their Weakneſs and Paſſions in ſome particular Caſes, when Differences cannot otherwiſe be compoſed; which is far from granting them a proper and inherent Right of Chooſing their Paſtors.

AND I muſt add, That at Geneva, there is no ſuch Regard had to the Peoples Moroſeneſs; but they muſt have ſome real Objections, of which the Magiſtrates make themſelves Judges. Their Manner of Electing and Calling Miniſters, as Beza deſcribes it, is thus: "Firſt they are examined, both as to "Learning and Morals, by a Claſſis of both "City and Country, which meet Weekly on "Fridays at Geneva. Then ſuch as are Ap- "proved by the Miniſters, are preſented to "the Senate. The Senate again examines "both their Doctrine and Morals, and if "they like them, they give them their Ap- "probation: If not, the Miniſters proceed "to a new Examination of other Perſons. "When the Examination is ended, the Sunday "following the Probationer's Name is pub- "lickly mentioned in every Church of the "City, and particularly that Church of the "City or Country, where he is deſigned to "Serve; and if any one knows any Impe- "diment, which may render him unfit for "the Miniſtry, he is required within Eight "Days to give Notice of it to the Magi- "ſtrate: If nothing be objected againſt him, "he is then immediately ordained, and ſent "to take Poſſeſſion of his Cure." See Beza's Ep. 20. p. 139. and Calvin's Ep. to Olevian, p. 142.

IN this whole Affair, the Peoples Conſent is not ſo much as asked; but only if they have any Thing to object, they may give Information to the Magiſtrates, who have Power with the Claſſis to hear and judge of the Reaſonableneſs of their Objections. And the very ſame Liberty is allowed the People in the Church of England.

BUT Mr. Baxter thinks this is againſt ancient Canon, and the Privilege of the People in the Primitive Church. A great many Learned Perſons not only think, but prove [c] the contrary. But admit Mr. Baxter were in the right: Does our Practice differ more from ancient Canon than that of France and Geneva does? Beza had the ſame Objection thrown in his Way; and his Anſwer was, Quid vero fuerit in multis locis in Vetere Eccleſia uſurpatum in Epiſcoporum Electionibus, non tam ſpectandum arbitror, quam quo Jure, & quo ſucceſſu fuerit facilitatum. "I do not think we are ſo "much to conſider what was done in ſome "Places, about the Election of Biſhops in "the Primitive Church, as by what Right, "and with what Succeſs they did it." Beza Ep. 83. p. 402.

HIS Meaning is, 1. That the Practice was not general, but only in ſome Parts of the Church. 2. That it was no divine and inherent Right of the People, but only what they had obtained by Cuſtom and Indulgence. 3. That many great Inconveniences did attend it: For popular Elections were commonly accompanied with popular Tumults, as it was too frequently verified in this very Caſe, in thoſe Places where popular Elections were grown into Faſhion. And therefore there was good Reaſon to make Canons, as many of the primitive Councils did, to lay ſome Reſtraint upon this pretended Power of the People. I hope this is a full Anſwer to Mr. Baxter's firſt Argument, whereby he would prove the Ordinations of the Church of England ſinful, becauſe they obtrude Paſtors upon the Churches, without or againſt the Will of the People.

2. HIS next Argument is, "That our "Ordinations are ſinful, becauſe the Church "ordains ſuch as by Canon ſhe forbids to "preach or expound any Doctrine." I preſume he means the Forty-ninth Canon, which ſhall be conſidered in its due Place, Chap. x. Here I only obſerve, that there is no Conſequence at all in this Argument. For admit the Canon he ſpeaks of were faulty: That would not prove our Forms of Ordination ſinful; becauſe they were uſed above Fifty Years before that Canon was made. The Church might be to blame for making ſuch a Canon, if it were faulty; but that would not affect her Forms of Ordination.

3. HE ſays, "We determine that Biſhops, "Prieſts, and Deacons are three diſtinct Or-"ders, which yet is an undetermined Con-"troverſy among even the moſt Learned Pa-"piſts. And what follows hence? Why, "That we damn and cut off Men for that "which the very Papiſts leave at Liberty." I muſt take leave to ſay again, that Mr. Baxter was out in his Argumentation. For our Church does not damn or cut off all that think that Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons are not three diſtinct Orders, in the Senſe in which the Papiſts take Order as diſtinct from Juriſdiction; nor do all that deny them to be three diſtinct Orders in that Senſe, call in Queſtion the Lawfulneſs of our Biſhops, Prieſts, or Deacons, or Nullify our Forms of Ordination. Many French Writers think Biſhops and Prieſts to be the ſame Order; and yet they do not ſay, That our Forms of Ordination are repugnant to the Word of GOD, or that thoſe are no true Biſhops or Prieſts, that are made by them: Nor on the other hand, does the Church of England damn or cut them off from her Communion, becauſe they believe Biſhops and Presbyters to be the ſame Order. Some of our beſt Epiſcopal Divines, and true Sons of the Church of England, have ſaid the ſame, diſtinguiſhing betwixt Order and Juriſdiction, and made uſe of this Doctrine and Diſtinction to juſtify the Ordinations of the Reformed Churches againſt the Romaniſts. So Mr. Maſon [d], Dr. Forbes [e], Biſhop Uſher [f], and others, who yet defend Epiſcopal Superiority and Juriſdiction as of Divine Appointment, at the ſame Time that they ſay Biſhops and Presbyters are but one Order. And will Mr. Baxter's Argument ever be able to perſuade the World, that theſe Men liked not our Forms of Ordination, or that the Church damned her own Sons and Champions, and cut them off from her Communion? Yet this is the Method he takes to prove our Forms of Ordination ſinful; becauſe they damn all that do not ſay, Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons are three diſtinct Orders. Reſpect to Truth and Modeſty, if not to the Church of England, might have engaged a wiſe Man to have dropped this Argument, which makes ſuch a wild Concluſion.

4. BUT he ſays we ordain Men to an Office, which the Scripture maketh no mention of. "For Dr. Hammond ſaith, it cannot be "proved there were any Presbyters ſubject "to Biſhops in Scripture-times, nor any but "Biſhops: None that had not Power of Or-"dination and the Keys; nor any Biſhops "of a Multitude of Churches and Presbyters, "both which are here ordained: Ergo our "Forms of Ordination are ſinful."

BUT, 1. What if Dr. Hammond was miſtaken? What then becomes of this Argument? 2. Admit that there were no Presbyters, ſubject ject to Biſhops, mentioned in Scripture: How does it follow that our Forms of Ordination are ſinful? Does Dr. Hammond ſay ſo? No. Does the French Church ſay ſo? No. Does the Practice of the Primitive Catholick Church condemn our Forms? No; for ſhe ordained Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons after the ſame manner. Only Mr. Baxter will bear us down againſt all Oppoſition and Authority, that our Forms are ſinful. But to lay aſide Authority and anſwer to this Reaſon: Suppoſe in Scripture-Times every Biſhop's Church was but a ſingle Congregation, and that for that Time he had no Need of Presbyters to aſſiſt him: Yet why might not he be then inveſted with a Power to ordain himſelf as many Presbyters or Aſſiſtants as he ſhould need, when the Number of Converts in any City or Dioceſe became too great for a ſingle Congregation? Then it will not follow, that becauſe there were no Presbyters, ſubject to Biſhops in Scripture-Times, that therefore the Scripture makes no mention of the Office; or that becauſe there were no ſuch Presbyters whilſt the Biſhops had no Occaſion for them, that therefore there never ſhould be any, when they ſhould have Occaſion for them. Yet this is Mr. Baxter's Way of proving our Orders of Biſhops and Presbyters to be unlawful: Which is as much contrary to Dr. Hammond's Senſe, to the Senſe of Scripture, to the Senſe of the Catholick Church, and the French Church, as it is to the Church of England.

5. HIS laſt Argument is, "That our Ordinations are ſinful, becauſe they make Biſhops ſwear Obedience to Archbiſhops and their Sees; and Prieſts to covenant Obedience to their Ordinaries." But I have already ſhewed in the Firſt Chapter, that the French Church does the ſame in Effect, requiring an Oath of Canonical Obedience, and Submiſſion to Claſſes and Synods, which anſwer to Ordinaries in the Church of England.

UPON the Whole it appears, That notwithſtanding theſe Objections, our Forms of Ordination are lawful in the Opinion of the French Church; and though Men might have Leave to Diſſent, or expreſs their Diſſent in a modeſt Way, as Mr. Baxter pleads; yet to do it in that dangerous and diſorderly Way, which the Canon mentions, tending manifeſtly to ſubvert and deſtroy the whole Conſtitution, may be a Crime deſerving the Penalty of Excommunication by the French Diſcipline, as well as that of the Church of England, though Mr. Baxter is of a contrary Opinion from both.

CHAP. VI.

That the French Church reckons Schiſmaticks and their Maintainers to be out of the Viſible Catholick Church, and denies Communion to them till they return and make Satisfaction.

THE next Canons which Mr. Baxter finds fault with, are the Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh, againſt Schiſmaticks, and Maintainers of Schiſmaticks, and Maintainers of Conventicles.

CAN. 9. Whoſoever ſhall hereafter ſeparate themſelves from the Communion of Saints as it is approved by the Apoſtles Rules in the Church of England, and combine themſelves together in a new Brotherhood, accounting the Chriſtians who are Conformable to the Doctrine, Government, Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, to be profane and unmeet for them to joyn with in Chriſtian Profeſſion: Let them be Excommunicated ipſo facto, &c.

CAN. 10. Whoſoever ſhall hereafter affirm, That ſuch Miniſters, as refuſe to ſubſcribe to the Form and Manner of GOD's Worſhip in the Church of England preſcribed in the Communion-Book, and their Adherents, may truly take unto them the Name of another Church not eſtabliſhed by Law, &c. Let them be Excommunicated, and not reſtored until they repent.

CAN. 11. Whoſoever ſhall hereafter affirm, That there are within this Realm other Meetings, Aſſemblies or Congregations of the King's born Subjects, than ſuch as by the Laws of this Land are held and allowed, which may rightly challenge to themſelves the Name of true and Lawful Churches: Let him be Excommunicated, &c.

Now there is nothing in theſe Canons but what is agreeable to the Practice and Diſcipline of the French Church, which reckons all Excommunicated Perſons and Schiſmaticks to be cut off and ſeparated from the Communion of the viſible Catholick Church, by being ſeparated from thoſe particular Churches whereof they ought to be Members; and conſequently eſteems all Meetings or Aſſemblies of ſuch Perſons to be illegal Conventicles, not true and lawful Churches, ſince there there can be no ſuch out of the Communion of the viſible Catholick Church.

Among Beza's Epiſtles there is one to the French Church in London, wherein he paſſes his Judgment upon certain Articles, which they had drawn up and ſent to him to deſire his Opinion of them; Two of which are to our preſent Purpoſe. Article Twenty-firſt, "They who are either lawfully Excommunicated, or do unlawfully and with Scandal withdraw themſelves from any Church; for as much as they Baniſh themſelves from the Kingdom of Christ and Salvation, may not be admitted to perform any Publick Offices of the Church, or be allowed the Uſe of the Sacraments in any Church, till they have made legal Satisfaction, &c.

The Thirteenth Article is to the ſame Purpoſe, "That whoever is lawfully Excommunicated in any particular Church, or unlawfully cuts himſelf off from it, does thereby exclude himſelf from all the Privileges of the Catholick Church, and is not to be received into any other particular Church, without making Satisfaction; &c." Beza Ep. 24. ad Eccleſ. Peregrin.

Is not this as ſevere againſt Schiſmaticks, as the Canons of the Church of England are? to ſay, That Schiſmaticks exclude themſelves from all the Privileges of the Catholick Church; that they Exile themſelves from the Kingdom of Christ and Salvation; That they may not be admitted to perform any Publick Offices of the Church, nor be received into Communion with any particular Church, till they have made legal Satisfaction? If ſuch Perſons ſhould have Combined themſelves into a Society, and called themſelves a Church, would Beza or the French Church have allowed them the Name of a True and Lawful Church, whom they did not eſteem Members of the Catholick Church, and thought them unworthy of Communion in any Church, till they repented and made Legal Satisfaction?

The Canons of the French Church are no leſs ſevere againſt Schiſmaticks, whilſt they renew that ancient Canon of the Primitive Church, That no Perſon who forſakes the Communion of his own Church, ſhall be received into another. Their Canons commonly run in this Style, as particularly that of Lyons does, Ann. 1663. Art. 25. "Vagrants, "Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks, ſhall be Notified to all Churches, that they may be "aware of them." That is as I ſuppoſe, that they may not be allowed to perform any Publick Offices as Miniſters, nor be admitted to Communion as Private Chriſtians. Certainly then they would not allow ſuch to ſet up Separate Meetings, and Dignify them with the Name of True and Lawful Churches. And if Mr. Quick [b] has rightly publiſhed the French Confeſſion, in its Twenty-ſixth Article, they have much harder Words given them: For there it is ſaid, "That they "that ſeparate themſelves from the Congregations of God's Saints, do reſiſt the Ordinance of God, and in Caſe they draw "others aſide with them, they do act very "perverſly, and are to be accounted as mortal Plagues."

If it be ſaid, as Mr. Baxter ſays, That we allow the Church of Rome the Name of a true Church, and that Schiſmaticks are at leaſt as true a Church as the Church of Rome: I anſwer, this is only playing with an Equivocal Senſe of the Word, True Church, which may either ſignify a Church with which it is lawful to Communicate in all Points, as the Word True and Lawful Church, is taken in the Canons; or elſe a Church ſo much Corrupted, that a Man cannot Lawfully and with Safety Communicate with it, notwithſtanding there may be ſo much of the Remains of Chriſtianity in it, as that ſhe may bring forth Sons to God by Baptiſm, which need not be repeated: In which Senſe, Proteſtants commonly allow the Church of Rome to be a True Church, [c] and the like may be ſaid of ſome Heretical and Schiſmatical Congregations. But yet for all this, it would not be proper to allow the Church of Rome to be called a True and Lawful Church, as ſet up in Oppoſition to the Legal Eſtabliſhed Church of England: No more can a Schiſmatical Church be called a True and Lawful Church in that Senſe, and that I conceive is all the Canon intended.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

That the French Church requires the Obſervation of ſome Holy-Days, according to the Preſcription of the Thirteenth Canon of our Church.

THE Thirteenth Canon is this, All Perſons within the Church of England ſhall keep the LORD's Day and other Holy-days according to GOD's Will, and the Orders of the Church of England; that is, in hearing the Word of GOD Read and Taught, in Private and Publick Prayers, in Acknowledging their Offences to GOD, and Amendment of the ſame, in Reconciling themſelves Charitably to their Neighbours, where Diſpleaſure hath been, in often Times receiving the Communion of the Body and Blood of CHRIST, in Viſiting of the Poor and Sick, uſing all Godly and Sober Converſation.

THIS Rule for obſervation of Feſtivals cannot poſſibly be charged either with Superſtition or Idolatry. For it orders no Adoration to be paid to the Saints, nor are the Days dedicated to them, but ſet a-part for Divine Service. Only the Saints are Hiſtorically honoured by Commemorating their good Actions, and rehearſing their juſt Praiſes, and giving GOD Thanks for thoſe Gifts and Graces which he beſtowed on them, and by them on his Church; that all Men hereby may remember their Faith, and Life, and Converſation, and be excited to imitate their Examples. It is well known that theſe Days are thus far obſerved in moſt Proteſtant Churches; and in the Palatinate there is one more, which for its Rarity I will here mention, becauſe I believe but few Perſons have taken Notice of it; that is, The Day of Jubilee for the Reformation, mentioned by Philip Paræus in his Epiſtle Dedicatory before Urſin's Catechiſm, where he has theſe Words, Anno 1617. Celebratum Jubilæum Reſtituti Evangelii; This Year was kept a Jubilee for the Reſtoration of the Goſpel.

BUT it is beſides my Purpoſe to enquire farther into the Practice of any other Proteſtant Churches, ſave only the French, concerning which I obſerve three Things.

1. THAT they keep the Feſtivals of our SAVIOUR's Nativity, Circumciſion, Paſſion, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, and Deſcent of the HOLY GHOST, as we do, with Prayers, Sermons, &c.

2. THEY are obliged by the Edict of Nantes to forbear Working on Popiſh Holy-Days: And their Book of Diſcipline takes a due care te ſee that Order of the Edict put in Execution. For there all Miniſters are obliged by an expreſs Canon, " According o his " Majeſty's Edict, to exhort the Faithful to " give none Offence by Working upon Ho- " ly-Days." Diſcipl. cap. 14. Art. 21.

3. THEY are ſo far from condemning the other Feſtivals, as kept in Memory of the Saints in the Church of England, that they allow the ſame Exerciſes mentioned in our Canon, to be performed even on Popiſh Holy-days, and that by the Order of two National Synods.

THE Synod of Gergeau, 1601. cap. 4. Art. 20. " Heard an Appeal of one Mr. Joubert from " the Order of the Provincial Synod of Bur- " gundy, upon this Point; and upon Hear- " ing, Ratifyed the Order of the ſaid Synod, " leaving the Churches at Liberty to have " Publick Prayers and Sermons on the Ro- " miſh Holy-days, if they liked it.

THE Second Synod of Vitre, 1617.. cap. 9. Art. 3. at the Requeſt of diverſe Perſons of Quality renewed the ſame Order. " Foraſ- " much as our Mechanicks are obliged by the " King's Edict to forbear Working on the " Feſtivals of the Romiſh Church, over and " beſides the LORD's Day; it is left to the " Prudence of Conſiſtories to Congregate the " People on ſuch Holy-days, either to hear " the Word Preached, or to joyn in Com- " mon Publick Prayers, as they ſhall find to " be moſt expedient.

BESIDES, the French Writers expreſly Vindicate the Uſe of Holy-days in our Church from the Charge of Superſtition. It was objected to Mr. Daille by his Popiſh Adverſaries, Adam and Cottiby, That the French condemned the Papiſts for the Obſervance of ſuch Things, as they allowed in the Proteſtants of Germany and England; and they Inſtance in the Obſervation of the Feſtivals of the Saints. To this he replies. " Some Holy-days I con- " feſs they obſerve, ſuch as theſe of the Ho- " ly Apoſtles, and it may be a few others, " to perpetuate the Memory of their Piety. " But do they direct their Vows, Prayers, or " Invocations to them, as you do? Do they " exerciſe any other Acts of Religious Wor- " ſhip, which you offer to the Saints? No; " they reject and impugn them as much as " we, and accuſe them as Will-worſhip and " Humane Inventions; that is to ſay, Super- " ſtitious Devotions. But, ſay you, they have " Temples which bear the Names of Saints. " And do not they of Geneva, whom you " cannot deny to be our neareſt Brethren, " call the Places of their Religious Aſſem- " blies by the Names of St. Peter and St. Ger- " vais? But neither the one nor the other " Conſecrate the Relicks of any Saints in " their Churches, nor give any Religious Wor- " ſhip to them; which are properly the " Things

" Things we cannot bear in your Churches." Replique a Meſſieurs Adam & Cottiby. Part. 2. cap. 10. p. 71.

This is an Ample Teſtimony, and Generous Vindication of the Practice of the Engliſh and German Churches from the Charge of Superſtition, Idolatry, and Will-worſhip in the Obſervation of Feſtivals. And it is well obſerved, that if calling a Church by the Name of a Saint, was any Conſecration of it to the Honour of the Saint, or any other ways Superſtitious, as ſome plead among us: Geneva itſelf is as liable to the Charge as any other Place, for calling their Churches or Temples by the Names of St. Peter, and St. Gervais, &c.

Many other Teſtimonies of the like Nature might here be brought, but I will only add the Judgment of Calvin, aud give ſome Account of the Practice of Geneva relating to the Obſervation of Feſtivals.

The Practice of the Church of Geneva has undergone ſome Changes in this Matter, as Calvin tells us in his Epiſtle to Hallerus, a Divine of Zurich, which is written by way of Apology for himſelf, to ſatisfy the Helvetians that he had no Hand at all in Abrogating the Feſtivals, as ſome falſely accuſed him.

" I can ſolemnly Proteſt, ſays he, that " this was done without my Knowledge and " Deſire, Me inſcio ac ne optante quidem.——Be- " fore ever I came to this City, their Cu- " ſtom was to obſerve no Holy-days except " the Lord's Day. But the ſame Decree that " Expelled me and Farel, brought in the Ob- " ſervation of the ſame Holy-days that are " obſerved by you in the Helvetian Church- " es. Which Decree, though it was tumul- " tuouſly and violently obtained againſt us; " yet upon my Return, I obſerved this Mo- " deration in reference to it, that the Feſti- " val of Christ's Nativity ſhould be ob- " ſerved after the ſame manner as it is with " you; and for the reſt, they ſhould be kept " with Prayers extraordinary in the Morn- " ing, the Shops being ſhut till after Dinner, " when Men ſhould be allowed to reſume " their Buſineſs again. But there were ſome " Headſtrong Men, who, through Prepoſte- " rous Malice, would ſtill Diſſent from the " common Cuſtom. Therefore, for as much as " different Uſages in a well-ordered Church " are not Tolerable, and are apt to create " Suſpicion among Foreigners, that People " do not well agree among themſelves: I ex- " horted the Senate that they would find " out ſome convenient way to cure this Diſ- " ſenſion for the future. Shortly after, I was " ſurprized with the News, as a perfect " Stranger, that they had paſſed a Decree " abrogating Holy-days, &c. In this I had " no hand at all, I neither adviſed nor en- " couraged the Paſſing of it, though I am " not much diſpleaſed that it has ſo hap- " pened.——Yet I would have all Men know, " that if it had been put to my Choice, I " would not have given my Opinion for " making ſuch a Decree. And yet I muſt " ſay, there is no Reaſon why Men ſhould " be exaſperated againſt us only for uſing " our Liberty, as the Edification of our " Church may require: On the other hand, " 'tis not fit that our Cuſtom ſhould be a " Rule to other Churches."

We have here Calvin's Judgment upon this Matter, as well as the Practice of the Church of Geneva. Every Church has Power to appoint or abrogate Holy-Days, as She thinks moſt expedient for Edification; and the Rules and Practice of one Church ought not to prejudice or preſcribe to any other. But the Cuſtom of every Church is to be obſerved by its own Members, and they are pervicacious and ſtubborn who refuſe Obedience to it. The firſt Reformation at Geneva allowed of no Holy-Days but the Lord's Day: And whilſt that Decree laſted, Calvin, and the reſt of the Miniſters complied with it. [i] Afterwards the Uſe of Holy-Days was brought in, An. 1537. in Compliance with the Cuſtom of the Helvetian Churches. And then Calvin freely conſented to obſerve them: As appears not only from the fore-cited Epiſtle, but many other Places. For this Decree continued in Force till the Year 1551. during all which Time they had Sermons on Christ's Nativity, and ſolemn Prayers on the other Holy-Days. Calvin in an Epiſtle to Farel, written An. 1551. ſpeaks of his own Preaching on Chriſtmaſs-Day. Die Natali concione habita, &c. And in another Epiſtle, [d] he ſays, " Tho' " he could upon his Return from Baniſh- " ment, in a Moment have diſannulled that " Decree which introduced the Obſervation " of the Feſtivals, (ſo great was his Power " among the major Part of the People) yet " he willingly acquieſced in it: Save only " that he could not but ſay, he thought it " prepoſterouſly ordered, to omit the Day of " our Saviour's Paſſion, whilſt they kept " his Circumciſion."

So that Calvin was ſo far from being againſt the Obſervation of theſe Holy-Days, when ſettled by Law, that he thought it reaſonable one more at leaſt ſhould have been added to them. He ſays in the ſame Place, " He took ſome Pains to ſatisfy and " calm thoſe of the adverſe Party, who ſtill " clamoured, and cried out for the Aboliſh- " ing of them; inſomuch that they accuſed " him

[i] Calvin. Ep. Miniſtro Burenſi. p. 63. Antequam urbem hanc primo adventu ingreſſus eſſem, abrogati erant dies Feſti omnes præter Dominicum. Farello & Vireto hoc utile viſum fuerat. " him for being lukewarm in the Matter. " The Diſpute ran ſo high betwixt the contending Parties, that it came once to the " Drawing of Swords; which immoderate " Heat on both Sides, he endeavoured to " compoſe, by getting a Decree made, that " Holy-Days ſhould only be kept in the " Morning with Shops ſhut, and Men be " allowed to return to their ordinary Work " in the Afternoon. And thus it continued " for Nine Years; but that did not end the " Quarrel: For ſome would have their Shops " ſhut, and ſome open; which ſhewed, that " the old Controverſy was ſtill on Foot " among them. This made Calvin once more " Addreſs the Senate, to take this Evil of " Diſſenſion into Conſideration, and find out " an Expedient for it. But, ſays he, I ſpake " not a Word about Abrogating the Holy-" Days, but rather commended the Senate " for their Moderation, in that for Peace " Sake they had complied with the Cuſtom " of the Helvetian Churches. And when I " heard that theſe Days were abrogated by " an Ordinance of the People, it was ſo un-" expected a Thing to me, that I was almoſt " aſtoniſhed at the News of it."

I HAVE repeated theſe Paſſages more at large, to do Juſtice to Calvin, and ſhew that he had no hand firſt or laſt in Abrogating the Obſervation of Holy-Days at Geneva: But his Opinion was, That in ſuch Matters, all Men ought to comply with the received Laws and Cuſtoms of the Church where they live. This was the Rule he himſelf walked by, and the Advice which he gave to others, as may be ſeen in his Letter to the Church of Mompelgard, p. 25. And that to Menſo Poppius, p. 205. And a Third to Anonymus, p. 218. And his Book, De vera Ratione Reformandæ Eccleſiæ, written againſt the Interim, p. 293. Where he allows of ſuch Feſtivals, as may ſerve to put us in Mind of the Vertues of the Saints, and provoke us to their Imitation. Which is all that is required by any Rule or Canon of the Church of England.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Eighteenth, Twenty-firſt, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-fifth, and Twenty-ſixth Canons: Particularly of Bowing at the Name of JESUS, required in the Eighteenth Canon: That it is not condemned by the French Church.

THE Words of the Canon are, " When " in Time of Divine Service the Lord " JESUS ſhall be mentioned, due and lowly " Reverence ſhall be done by all Perſons pre-" ſent, as it hath been accuſtomed." Where note, 1. That this is not preſcribed as neceſſary by Divine Command, but as a Laudable Cuſtom of the Church. 2. The Reverence is not to be paid to the Name, or Word itſelf, but to the Perſon of the Lord JESUS at the Mention of his Name. 3. If any one cannot think this Lawful, yet he may hold Communion with the Church, and join with thoſe that do, as Chriſtian Brethren. And thus far I am ſure the French Church will go along with us. For though they have no Canon to enjoin this Practice, yet neither have they to condemn it; nor do any of their Writers ſpeak againſt it as ſuperſtitious or unlawful. Peter Martyr ſays a Thing that will fully juſtify it. For he tells us, " It is a " pious Cuſtom among ſome to bow the Knee " and Worſhip, whenever they hear thoſe " Words of St. John, The Word was made Fleſh: " And we cannot, nor ought not to ſay, " they worſhip the bare Words, but the Per-" ſon ſignified thereby." Loc. Com. Claſs. 4. c. 10. n. 50.

IF it be lawful, and a pious Cuſtom to bow the Knee, and do Reverence to CHRIST, at the Hearing of the Name Logos, or Word, which is one of the Names of CHRIST: Is it not altogether as lawful and pious to do the ſame Thing at the Hearing of another of his Names, provided the Reverence be not done to the Name itſelf, but to the Perſon whoſe Name it is? Peter Martyr, no doubt, would have ſaid as much of the one as the other, had his Argument led him to it: But he brings his Inſtance only to juſtify Kneeling at the Euchariſt, of which I have ſpoken more fully before in its proper Place.

BUT ſome ask us, Why the Church enjoyns Bowing at the Name of JESUS, and not as well at the Name of CHRIST or GOD, or the HOLY GHOST, &c. To which I anſwer, If there were no other Reaſon to be given for this, but only the Cuſtom of the Church of GOD, that were ſufficient in this Caſe: But if we look to the firſt Riſe and Original of the Cuſtom, a much more Rational Account may be given of the Reaſon of this Difference, which was this: The Name JESUS was become a Name of Reproach among the Jews, they always Blaſphemed and Reviled him by this Name, terming him, by way of Reproach, Jeſus the Magician, and Jeſus the Impoſtor; which Terms of Infamy and Diſgrace they endeavoured to faſten on him, and propagate, not only in Judæa, but over all the World: For Juſtin Martyr tells us in his Dialogue with Trypho, that immediately after our SAVIOUR's Death, they ſent forth their Apoſtles, or Emiſſaries from Jeruſalem, to all the Synagogues in the World, to tell them, there was a certain Impious, Lawleſs Sect riſen up under one Jeſus, a Galilean Impoſtor. So that the Name of Jeſus was become a Name of Infamy among the Jews; whereas the Name of Meſſias, or CHRIST, and GOD, and HOLY GHOST, were always Names of Reſpect and Honour among them. For this Reaſon, the Church of CHRIST, to do a peculiar Honour to their LORD, took up this decent Cuſtom of expreſſing their Reſpect to him, at the mention of that very Name, by which the Jews Blaſphemed, and Reviled him; to ſhew that that Jeſus whom they hated and reproached, was Honoured by them as their LORD and CHRIST.

NOW if this was the Original of this Cuſtom, as Zanchy [l] and ſome other Learned Perſons own it to be; and the Teſtimony I have cited out of Juſtin Martyr makes it very probable; then it muſt be confeſſed to have been very Pious in its firſt Riſe: And unleſs ſome mighty Superſtition has crept into it by Tract of Time, it cannot now be condemned as Sinful. What Corruption may happen in the Practice of Private Perſons, I know not: If any Worſhip the Name itſelf, or bow the Knee without Devotion to CHRIST in their Hearts, they muſt anſwer for their own Faults; the Church gives no Encouragement to any ſuch Superſtition, or heartleſs Devotion: What ſhe requires is, "That Men ſhould teſtify by this "outward Geſture their inward Devotion, "and due Acknowledgment, that the Lord "JESUS CHRIST, the true Eternal SON of "GOD, is the only SAVIOUR of the World, "in whom alone all the Mercies, Graces, "and Promiſes of GOD to Mankind, for this "Life, and the Life to come, are fully and "wholly compriſed, as the Canon words it." Which Thing the Jews continue ſtill to deny, and not only deny, but Curſe and Blaſpheme Jeſus of Nazareth to this very Day, in their Ritual Books, and Talmudical Writings, as Sixtus Senenſis, and Grotius, [m] and other Learned Perſons, who are acquainted with them, inform us.

WHERE then is the Harm to expreſs our Reverence to CHRIST, at the mention of that Name, which the Jews ſtill continue to Hate and Blaſpheme? Zanchy ſays, "It was "at firſt Conſuetudo non improbanda, a Laudable "Cuſtom, and not to be diſliked, as uſed "againſt the Jews, Arians, and other Here"ticks; but afterwards it degenerated into "Superſtition, as many other Things did, "which were Religiouſly and Piouſly Or"dained." But if it may be freed from all Superſtition, then the Uſe of it may be Laudable ſtill. And ſo Sculteſus prudently determines the Matter, ſaying, "If it be done "with Devotion of Mind, it is Commendable; "but if otherwiſe, Blame-worthy." Idea Concion. in Eſai. 45. 23. Si cum animi devotione id fiat, laudandum; ſin autem, vituperandum.

THERE are ſome other Preſcriptions in this ſame Canon, againſt which ſome take Exceptions, ſuch as the Injunction to be Uncovered all the Time of Divine Service, and Kneeling at the Confeſſion and Litany, and other Prayers, and ſtanding up at the Belief, Goſpel, &c. But of theſe I have ſpoken in the former Book, and therefore need not here repeat them. See Book III. Chap. ix. and xi.

FOR the ſame Reaſon I omit the Exceptions which are made againſt the Twenty-firſt Canon, which obligeth every Pariſhioner to receive the Communion three Times a Year, and the Miniſter to deliver both the Bread and Wine to every Communicant ſeverally. For of theſe I have ſpoken before in treating of the Communion.

THE Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Canons ſpeak of Habits, Surplice, Copes, &c. But I have already diſpatched Mr. Baxter's Arguments about them, in treating of that Rubrick in the Common-Prayer, which ſays all Ornaments ſhall be in Uſe, which were appointed in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward VI. See Book III. Chap. vii.

THE Twenty-ſixth Canon ought not to be omitted, not becauſe I find any Objections againſt it, but becauſe it is ſo plain a Diſproof of the confident and ignorant Pretence of ſome, who ſay our Church allows no ordinary Exerciſe of Diſcipline to private Miniſters, when yet the very expreſs Words of this Canon are, "That no Miniſter ſhall "in any wiſe admit to the Receiving of the "Holy Communion, any of his Cure or Flock "who are openly known to live in Sin no"torious, without Repentance, nor any who "have maliciouſly and openly contended with "their Neighbours, until they ſhall be re"conciled. Nor any Church-wardens, &c. "who break their Oaths in refuſing to Pre"ſent ſuch Enormities, and Publick Offences "as they know themſelves to be committed "in their Pariſhes." This is agreeable to the Rubrick in the Communion-Office, which authorizes the Miniſter to repel notorious and open Evil Livers from the LORD's Table; which is not to be underſtood with that Reſtriction which ſome put upon it, as if it meant meant only Perſons formally and judicially excommunicated, or notorious in Law, but all ſuch Perſons whom the Miniſter certainly knows to be guilty of any publick ſcandalous Crimes, in which they perſiſt without Repentance; as Learned [n] Perſons well expound it.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Twenty-ſeventh Canon, which forbids Schiſmaticks to be admitted to Communion: The Twenty-eighth Canon, which denies Communion to Strangers: The Twenty-ninth, which forbids Fathers to be Godfathers for their own Children: The Thirtieth, which explains the Uſe of the Croſs in Baptiſm. Thirty-ſixth, which requires Subſcription of Miniſters: Thirty-eighth, which cenſures Revolters after Subſcription.

ALL theſe Canons, except the laſt, have been conſidered before. The Twenty-ſeventh, which forbids Schiſmaticks to be admitted to the Communion, unleſs they make Proteſtation of Repentance; and the Twenty-eighth, which remits Strangers back to their own Pariſh to receive the Communion there, have been ſpoken to in the Firſt Book, Chap. vi. where I treat of Occaſional Communion. The Twenty-ninth, which forbids Fathers to be ſole Sponſors for their own Children, is juſtified alſo before, Book II. Chap. xx. where I diſcourſe of the Uſe of Sponſors in the French Church. The Thirtieth, which explains the Uſe of the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm, is treated of in the ſame Book, Chap. xvii. The Thirty-ſixth, which requires Subſcription of Miniſters, is handled at large, Book I. Chap. iii. where I treat of Subſcription in general, and Book II. Chap. i. which treats of Subſcription to the Articles. And Book III. Chap. i, ii, and iii. which handle the Buſineſs of Aſſent and Conſent, and the Uſe of the Forms preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer. And what concerns Subſcription to the Book of Ordering Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, has been conſidered already in this Book, Chap. v. in ſpeaking of the Eighth Canon. The only Canon therefore which I ſhall ſay any Thing farther of in this Chapter, is the Thirty-eighth, which cenſures Revolters after Subſcription, in this manner, "If any "Miniſter, after he hath once ſubſcribed "to the ſaid Three Articles, ſhall omit to "Uſe the Form of Prayer, or any of the "Orders or Ceremonies preſcribed in the "Communion-Book, let him be ſuſpended: "And if after a Month he do not reform, "and ſubmit himſelf, let him be excommu-"nicated: And then if he ſhall not ſub-"mit himſelf within the Space of another "Month, let him be depoſed from the Mi-"niſtry."

"MR. Baxter ſays, this is Excommunicating "Men for Repenting of Sin, and ſuch an "Abuſe of Excommunication, as that our "SAVIOUR ſpeaks of, They ſhall caſt out your "Names as Evil Doers, &c." Engl. Noncon. c. 31.

LET us try whether the French Church does not abuſe Excommunication after the ſame manner, to uſe his Phraſe about it. There is a Canon in the Book of Diſcipline, which I have often had Occaſion to recite, and muſt here make uſe of it once more, which ſays, "A Paſtor or Elder breaking "the Church's Union, ſtirring up Conten-"tion about any Point of Doctrine, or of "the Diſcipline which he had ſubſcribed, or "about the Form of Catechizing, or Admi-"niſtration of the Sacraments, or of our "Common-Prayers, and Celebration of Mar-"riage, and not Conforming to the Deter-"mination of the Claſſis, he ſhall be then "ſuſpended from his Office, and be farther "proſecuted by the Provincial, or National "Synod." Diſciplin. cap. 5. Art. 32.

NOW this I take to be exactly the ſame with our Canon. Revolters after Subſcription are to be ſuſpended by the Claſſis; and if upon that they do not Reform, and Submit themſelves, they are to be farther proſecuted by the Provincial or National Synod. And what can that farther Proſecution be, but Depoſition or Excommunication? And if the Synod excommunicate them, every Miniſter in France is bound by his Oath of Canonical Obedience, to publiſh the Excommunication, if he be required. So that if our Canon deſerves thoſe hard Names, which Mr. B. gives it, when he ſays, It obliges us to excommunicate Men only for Repenting of Sin, meaning meaning their Subſcription; I cannot ſee how the French Diſcipline will be cleared, or their Rules eſcape the ſame Imputation.

But beſides this Canon, they have many Rules of the like Nature. In the ſame Book of Diſcipline, cap. 1. Art. 47. "Among other "Crimes for which a Miniſter may be de- "poſed, rejecting the Counſels of the Con- "ſiſtory is one, and Schiſm another, and "Rebellion againſt the Diſcipline of the "Church a Third." It ſeems, if after Admonition and Suſpenſion, they do not conform to the Order of the Church, then they are to be depoſed.

The Synod of Alez 1620. cap. 10. Art. 22. ſpeaking of Rebels againſt the Diſcipline of the Church, ſays, "Claſſes, Conſiſtories, "and Synods ſhall inflict upon them the "heavieſt Cenſure of Excommunication."

The Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 4. Art. 19. ſays, "Miniſters ſhall make no Al- "teration in the Forms of Publick Prayers, "and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, "the whole having been prudently and pi- "ouſly ordained, and for the moſt part in "plain and expreſs Terms of Holy Scrip- "ture."

Now compare theſe Canons together, and ſee what they amount to. Miniſters muſt make no Alteration in the Forms of Publick Prayers, &c. If they do, they are liable to be ſuſpended; if after that, they perſiſt obſtinate, they are to be deemed Rebels againſt the Diſcipline of the Church, and to be proceeded againſt as ſuch by Depoſition or Excommunication.

They have other Canons which ſuſpend Men for tranſgreſſing their Rules about Preaching, one or two of which it will not be amiſs here to mention. The Book of Diſcipline, cap. 1. Art. 12. gives theſe Directions to Preachers: "They ſhall never preach "without having for Foundation of their "Diſcourſe, a Text of Holy Scripture.—— "They ſhall forbear all needleſs Enlarge- "ments, all ſuperfluous heaping up of Scrip- "ture-Quotations, and vain Recitals of various "and different Expoſitions. They ſhall very "rarely alledge the Writings of the Fathers, "nor at any Time profane Hiſtories and "Authors; that ſo they may reſerve unto "the Scripture entirely, its own Authority. "Moreover, they ſhall not handle any Doc- "trine in a Scholaſtick Way of Diſputation, "nor with a Mixture of Languages. — And "that this Canon may be more carefully ob- "ſerved, Conſiſtories, Claſſes, and Synods "ſhall put to their helping Hand." And what they mean by their helping Hand, is explained in the Synod of Gap, 1603. cap. 3. Art. 4. Which orders them to ſuſpend all that obſerve not the foreſaid Rules. "All Provin- "cial Synods, Claſſes, and Conſiſtories, are "enjoined, as they would avoid the greateſt "Cenſures, to have a ſtrict Eye over ſuch "who act contrary to the Eleventh Article "of the firſt Chapter of our Diſcipline, and "to ſuſpend them from the Miniſtry. And "they alſo ſhall be liable to the ſame Cen- "ſure, who leaving the true and genuine "Senſe of Scripture expounded by itſelf, do "rather pitch upon the Gloſſes of Fathers, "and School-men, and launch out into Alle- "gories; Larding their Sermons with Philo- "ſophical Diſcourſes, quoting the Fathers, "and bringing their Books with them into "the Pulpit; and they alſo who in Time of "Lent, or on ſuch noted Seaſons, do chuſe "the ſelf-ſame Texts with the Popiſh Preach- "ers."

Here it is plain, that all who tranſgreſs theſe Rules about Preaching are to be ſuſpended; and then if they rebell againſt the Diſcipline of the Church, or reject the Counſels of the Conſiſtory, by that Rule of the Synod of Alez and Book of Diſcipline, cap. 1. Art. 47. they are to be depoſed and cenſured with Excommunication. I know not what Mr. Baxter would have thought or ſaid of theſe Canons, or how far he would have complied with them, either in his own Preaching, or cenſuring Tranſgreſſors: But I am ſure, after all his Tragical Out-cries againſt the Canon of the Church of England, there is nothing in it, but what is fully juſtified by theſe Rules of Diſcipline in the Reformed Church of France.

CHAP. X.

Of the Forty-ninth Canon, which forbids Miniſters, who are not Licenſed Preachers, to expound the Scripture, &c. That the ſame Thing in Effect, is done in the Church of France.

The Words of this Canon are, "No "Perſon whatſoever not Examined and "Approved by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, "or not Licenced for a ſufficient or conve- "nient Preacher, ſhall take upon him to Ex- "pound in his own Cure or elſewhere, any "Scripture or Matter of Doctrine, but ſhall "only ſtudy to read plainly and aptly (with- "out gloſſing or adding) the Homilies alrea- "dy ſet forth, or hereafter to be publiſhed "by lawful Authority, for the Confirmation "of the true Faith, and for the good In- "ſtruction

" ple."

MR. Baxter is very angry with this Canon, and after his uſual manner, ſays, " It binds " us to Sacrilege, Perfidiouſneſs, and uncha-" ritable Inhumanity. 1. Men are at once " made CHRIST's Miniſters and forbid to ex-" erciſe that which they are Ordained to. 2. " We are laid under the heinous Guilt of " breaking our Vow, when they have enga-" ged us to make it; and of betraying Mens " Souls, by omitting a vowed Duty. 3. We " are forbidden that which is the Duty of " every Lay-Chriſtian that is able, as if they " would ſuppreſs Religion and Charity it-" ſelf.

THIS is all the Charity Mr. Baxter had for the Religion of the Engliſh Church-Men! I will firſt ſhew what was the Practice of the French Church in this Matter, and then examine his Reaſons againſt the Engliſh Canon.

AS to the Caſe of the French Church, I obſerve that they lay under the ſame unfortunate Neceſſity for many Years after the Reformation, that the Engliſh Church did; that is, that in many Parts of the Kingdom they could not have their Churches ſupplied by fit and able Preachers, who could Compoſe Sermons of their own for the Uſe of the People; but for want of ſuch, they were forced to appoint Calvin's Homilies upon Job to be read publickly in the Churches. And Beza ſays this was done with very great Benefit to ſuch Churches as could not be better ſupplied. Beza Præf. in Calvin. Homil. in Job.

LUDOVICUS Capellus conſiders this Matter particularly, and his Reſolution is this: " That Poſtils, Homilies, and ſuch other ſet " Forms of Preaching, are to be allowed as " little in the Uſe of the Church as may be; " not becauſe they are abſolutely and ſimply " unlawful, or wholly to be prohibited, but " becauſe they would be an Occaſion of Sloth " and Idleneſs, and breed Ignorance in Pa-" ſtors. Yet for as much as in all Places, e-" ſpecially in Country-Villages and Hamlets, " in ſo great a Number and Multitude of " Country-Churches, it would be no eaſy " matter to procure ſo many Learned and " Able Miniſters, that could of themſelves " continually make new Sermons for the Edi-" fication of the People, as their Occaſions " and Neceſſities ſhould require, it is much " better that they ſhould Read and Preach " to the People either Dominical Poſtils, or " whole Homilies compoſed by Learned and " Pious Men, by the Publick Authority of " the Church, rather than ſay nothing at all." To confirm this his Opinion and Judgment, he alledges the Authority and Practice of the Church of England. " This, ſays he, was " heretofore done in England, when the Re-" formation was firſt begun there; together " with the Liturgy, a great Volume of Ho-" milies was Compoſed, which were Read " to the People on every LORD's Day and " Holy-day, by ſuch Paſtors as could not " make Sermons of their own. And Hiſto-" ries tell us, that the ſame Thing was an-" ciently done in France by Charles the Great, " at whoſe Command, his Maſter Alcuin is " ſaid to have Compoſed a Set of Homilies, " which were read in order to the People " on all Sundays and Holy-days, the Year " round. And who knows not, that in all " the Eaſtern, Southern, and Northern Parts " of the World out of Europe, in Aſia and " Africa, there are ſcarce any Paſtors among " the Chriſtians there at this Day, that can " Preach to the People Sermons of their own " Compoſing? And is it not better they " ſhould Preach Sermons of other Mens Com-" poſing than none at all?" Thus far Capellus, in his Diſputation about Liturgies, Par. 3. n. 9, 10. among the Theſes Salmurienſes. p. 659.

WE ſee the Caſe of the French and Engliſh Church was the ſame: It was not Choice but Neceſſity that led them both to take the beſt Meaſures that they could; and the French Writers are ſo far from condemning the Engliſh Church with Mr. Baxter, that they make uſe of her Authority to juſtify their own Church's Practice, in appointing Homilies to be read to the People in ſuch Places, where the Paſtors had not ſufficient Ability and Skill to Preach Sermons of their own Compoſing. And I have ſhewed elſewhere [*] that the Dutch Churches did the ſame, in appointing Bullinger's Decades to be read inſtead of Sermons, from the Beginning of the Reformation.

LET us now hear Mr. Baxter's Arguments againſt our Church's Canon, and conſider what they amount to. 1. He ſays, " Men " are at once made CHRIST's Miniſters, and " forbid to Exerciſe that which they are " ordained to." But are any ordained to Preach Sermons of their own Compoſing, whether they be able to compoſe them or no? Suppoſe Ordination be a Vow and Dedication to the Sacred Office, as both he and we ſay it is: Does the Office conſiſt altogether in Preaching Sermons of the Miniſter's own making? What then becomes of all the Churches of the Eaſt, South, and North in Aſia and Africa, where Capellus tells us the Miniſters are not able to preach Sermons of their own, but only Homilies, to the People? Are ſuch Miniſters guilty of breach of Vow? Or is there no performance of the ſacred Office among them? Where are all thoſe French and Dutch Churches alſo without the Sacred Office of Preaching, who had no other Sermons but Calvin's Homilies, or Bullinger's Decads read to them? Why is not this Preaching the Word of GOD to the People, as well when these Sermons are read out of a printed Book, as when they were first spoken by Bullinger or Calvin, provided it be done by a publick Minister regularly appointed to perform Divine Service? The contrary Notion which Mr. Baxter advances, is so absurd in itself, and so great a Reproach to half the Christian World (Churches that Mr. Baxter upon other Occasions expresses a great Value for, and often appeals to them) That in Complement to them he might have dropped this Argument, though he had no Respect for the Church of England.

2. BUT he says, "This Canon lays us "under the heinous Guilt of Breaking our "Vow, when the Church has engaged us to "make it; and of Betraying Mens Souls, by "omitting a Vowed Duty." This will be best understood by considering the Minister's Promise at his Ordination, which is the Covenant and Vow he talks so much of. For if there be nothing in our Ordination-promise, but what is consistent with this Canon, and agreeable to the Practice of all other Churches, then his whole Argument falls to the Ground.

NOW the Covenant made at Ordination is, I think, the same that is made in other Churches. In our Form, it runs thus: "Quest. Are you determined out of the Scriptures to instruct the People committed to "your Charge? Answ. I have so determined "by GOD's Grace. Quest. Will you give "your faithful Diligence always, so to Minister the Doctrine and Sacraments, and the "Discipline of CHRIST, as the LORD hath "commanded, &c. that you may teach the "People committed to your Care and Charge, "with all Diligence to keep and observe the "same? Answ. I will so do by the Help of "the LORD. Quest. Will you be ready with "all faithful Diligence to banish and drive "away all erroneous and strange Doctrines "contrary to GOD's Word, and to use both "publick and private Monitions and Exhortations, as well to the Sick, as to the "Whole within your Cure, as Need shall require, and Occasion shall be given? Answ. "I will, the LORD being my Helper."

MR. Baxter breaks out into a very indecent and unmannerly Passion upon this; saying, "Is it not Treachery to draw Men in-"to all these Vows, and then to command "them never to preach or expound any "Doctrine, &c. Doth it not come near to "an Atheistical Prohibition of Religion?" I will not answer Railing with Railing, but ask a few more pertinent and reasonable Questions. 1. Whether this Vow obliges Men to preach the Gospel precisely after one and the same Way? 2. Whether Reading the Scriptures and Homilies be not preaching GOD's Word to the People? And if a Man who is not able to do more, do this carefully and diligently, does he not discharge his Ordination-Vow to the best of his Power? If any Man say, No; Then let him answer for the Practice of the French Church. 3. Whether all Preachers, notwithstanding their Ordination-Vow, be not under some certain Rules and Limitations of Ecclesiastical Laws and Discipline, as to the particular Exercise of their Function? I am sure they are in the French Church: For I have proved before in the very last Chapter, that they are limited to a precise Form and Method in their Preaching, which they may not transgress under Pain of Suspension, Deposition and Excommunication. They must also keep to their own Parish-Churches, and not rove about and preach where they please. "Ministers shall not be Vagrants, says their "Book of Discipline, cap. 1. Art. 24. nor have "Liberty to intrude themselves of their own "Authority into any place which best pleas-"eth them." And if they do, they are liable to be deposed. Now this I think, is to tie Men up to some Rules and Orders in Preaching, which unless they observe, they may not preach at all, notwithstanding their Covenant and Vow at Ordination. 4. I ask whether all Preachers be not obliged to conform to those Rules and Orders of any Church, which they themselves have subscribed and promised to observe in Preaching, Praying, Administring the Sacraments, &c. And, 5. If they do not conform to them, whether they may not lawfully be suspended or deposed, as well for their Nonconformity to such Rules, as for Preaching Heretical Doctrine? 6. Whether if they be silenced or deposed by Legal Authority for such Nonconformity, they ought not to submit, and leave off Preaching (till Licensed by the same Authority again) notwithstanding their Vow at Ordination? If any Man says, No, to all these Questions, as Mr. Baxter must do by his Principles, and thinks there is a Necessity laid upon him to preach the Gospel against all Rules and Orders of the Church, that would put any Restraint upon him: Then I desire him to answer and account for the Discipline and Practice of the French Church, which obliges all her Ministers to subscribe to her Rule about Preaching, Praying, Administring the Sacraments, and all other Points of her Discipline; and if they do not conform to those Rules, she suspends and deposes them; and then if they rebell against her Discipline, and preach when silenced, she makes them liable to the heaviest Censure of Excommunication, as I have proved before beyond all Possibility of Contradiction.

THE Result of all is this: Either Men may be under some Limitations as to Preaching, notwithstanding their Ordination-Vow; or else the French Church sins grievously in laying so many Limitations upon her Ministers, as to the Exercise of their Gifts and Talents, after she has ordained them: To use Mr. Baxter's Phrase, she treacherously draws draws Men into Vows to preach, and when ſhe has done that, commands them not to preach. But if this be an unjuſt Character of the French Church, it is no leſs a Slander of the Church of England.

3. WHAT Mr. Baxter urges as a farther Argument, is ſtill a greater Calumny. He ſays, "This Canon forbids that which is "the Duty of every Lay-Chriſtian that is "able, as if they would ſuppreſs Religion "and Charity itſelf." I wonder where Mr. Baxter's Charity was when he uttered this. As if it were the Duty of every Lay-Chriſtian to compoſe Sermons, and Preach them publickly to the People! The Canon forbids not private Inſtructions to any Perſons, whether Licenſed Preachers or not Licenſed; but only confines ſuch as are not thought ſufficiently qualified to compoſe Sermons of their own, to Preach only the Scriptures, and Homilies ſet forth by Authority for the Inſtruction of the People. And the ſame Thing when Neceſſity required it, was done in the Church of France.

4. BUT what a Prieſt, is that who muſt be forbidden to teach the People in the Church? If he means by Teaching, Preaching of Scripture or Homilies, or other publick Forms compoſed by the Church, then it is falſe that any Prieſt is forbidden to teach the People in the Church: but if he meant that nothing is Teaching the People beſides Preaching Sermons of the Miniſter's own Compoſing; I have already proved that to be abſurd, and contrary to the Senſe of the French Church, which in Caſes of Neceſſity, allows ſuch Prieſts as only read Homilies, and yet does not think ſhe forbids them to teach the People.

"5. BUT if Reading the Scripture and Ho-"milies will qualify Men for the Prieſthood, "then one may be a Prieſt, that knows no "more then an Infidel, or Atheiſt; and if "Reading will qualify Men for a Benefice, "many will ſtudy for no more, and the Peo-"ple will value them accordingly." Suppoſe this were true, would it not be as true in France as England? But how does it appear that a Man as ignorant as an Atheiſt, or an Infidel, may be ordained a Prieſt? Mr. B. could not be Ignorant that our Rules admit of no ſuch, if they be profeſſed Atheiſts or Infidels: And if they be ſecret ones, they may have more Knowledge than will qualify them to be made Prieſts, and they may perhaps be made Prieſts too, and no Church know it, or be able to help it. There will be Julians and Judas's in all Communions, after all the Care that is taken to prevent them. "But if Reading will qualify Men "for a Benefice, many will ſtudy for no more, "and the People will value them accordingly." What is this to the Purpoſe? Our Church never allows of bare Readers, but only in Caſes of Neceſſity, as all other Churches muſt, when they can have no better. This, GOD be thanked, is not our preſent Caſe, and therefore there is no ſuch Danger of an idle and ignorant Clergy now: For whilſt the Church is ſupplied with a ſufficient Number of able Preachers, Men muſt ſtudy for a little more than Reading, or elſe the Benefices will hardly fall to their Share. And ſo Mr. B's Fear of the Contempt of the Clergy upon that account, is anſwered.

6. BUT the grand Objection is yet behind, for the ſake of which all the reſt were made. He ſays, "This Canon makes the "Miniſtry Arbitrary to the Biſhop's Will. "He may bind us to the Office, and when "he hath done, keep us from it. As many "are kept from it by the new Act of Uni-"formity, who are denied Licences with-"out new Profeſſions, &c. And heretofore "ſuch Excellent Men as the World is not "worthy of, Ames, Bayn, Parker, Hilderſham, "Dod, &c. have been forbidden to preach."

NOW the Summ of this Charge amounts only to this, That the Biſhops are Arbitrary Men, becauſe they act according to Law and Canon. I had thought Arbitrary Power had ſignified a quite different Thing, and that it was impoſſible for Men to be arbitrary, ſo long as they were tied to act by Rules, as I am ſure our Biſhops are, in granting Licences, and ſuch other Things. If Men be qualified for Licences by the Law, the Biſhop cannot deny them; but if they be not, it is not the Biſhop's Arbitrary Will, but the Law that denies them. And this is the Caſe of Nonconformiſts: It is not the Will of the Biſhop, but the Law that denies them Licences. And the ſame Law denies them Licences in France; as appears from the Caſe of Morelly, and Mr. Welſh, and what I have diſcourſed in the foregoing Chapter, and other Places [*] of this Book. So that if Men were never ſo Excellent in other Reſpects, if they would not conform to the Laws and Diſcipline of France; Claſſes and Synods had as much Arbitrary Power (if we muſt needs call it ſo) to deny them Licences, or take them away by Silencing, or Depoſing them, as any Biſhops in England have. And Miniſters there did not preſume to think this Power unlawful, or that they might lawfully act againſt it. Yea, I muſt add, that thoſe Excellent Men Mr. B. ſpeaks of, were of the ſame Opinion: They had this one excellent Quality (which, though he did not think fit to mention, yet to their Praiſe be it ſpoken) that when they were ſilenced for their Nonconformity, they did not think themſelves obliged by their Ordination-Covenant to ſet up Separate Meetings, or preach againſt the Rules of the Church, and Will of their Superiors. Three of the Five Mr. B. mentions, [*] See Book I. Chap. v. and Book IV. Chap. iii.

I

I am ſure were of this Opinion. Parker wrote againſt the Separation, and wiſhed it had never been made. Utinam, O utinam, nata nunquam fuiſſet! are his Words about it. De Politeia Eccleſ. Lib. I. c. 14. n. 1.

Hildersham was four Times ſilenced during the Reigns of Queen Elizabeth, King James I. and King Charles I. Yet it does not appear by his printed Lectures, that he ever took upon him to preach in the Intervals [o].

Mr. Dod refuſed to preach, when deprived for Refuſal of Subſcription in the Third Year of King James. And to a certain Miniſter urging him with Mr. B's Argument from the Ordination-Vow, "That he was a Miniſter not of Man, but of Jesus Christ; "he replied, 'tis true, he was a Miniſter of "Jesus Christ, but by Man, and not from "Christ, as the Apoſtles only were; and "therefore if by the Laws of Men he was "prohibited Preaching, he ought to obey: "And never did preach till his Patron, Mr. "Knightly, procured him a Licence from "Archbiſhop Abbot." See Sir Hen. Yelverton's Preface to Biſhop Morton of Epiſcopacy, p. 47.

This was not according to Mr. B's Principle, who reckons Preaching without a Licence ſo neceſſary a Duty, by Reaſon of the Ordination-Vow; that not to preach when ſilenced by Authority, is no leſs a Sin with him than Breach of Covenant, and omitting a vowed Duty. Theſe old Nonconformiſts were of another Opinion; and if the Principles and Practice of the preſent Nonconformiſts be more agreeable to Mr. B's Notion, yet they may conſider that they differ as much from the Principles of theſe Excellent Men, as they do from the Rules of the French Church and the Church of England.

Now I hope I have ſatisfied all Mr. B's Objections againſt this Canon, which reſtrains ordained Miniſters from Preaching without a Licence, in ſome certain Caſes, when the Law requires it; having made it appear, that there is nothing ſingular in our Church's Practice, nor any Objection againſt it, but what is equally levelled at the Rules and Diſcipline of the Reformed Church of France.

Chap. XI.

Of the Fifty-fifth Canon, which ſpeaks of Prayer before Sermon: And the Fifty-ſeventh, which forbids Perſons to go for Baptiſm and the Communion from their own Pariſh-Churches, becauſe their own Miniſter is not a Preacher.

The Fifty-fifth Canon I had not here mentioned, but only to juſtify the common Practice of our Miniſters in uſing a Form of Prayer before Sermon, different from any enjoyned in the Common-Prayer-Book. Mr. B. in his Eng. Nonconfor. c. 8. p. 43. charges all Miniſters with breach of Covenant, "Becauſe having Subſcribed, that they will "uſe in Publick Prayer the Forms preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer, and no "other, they yet do in the Pulpits before "Sermons, uſe other Forms." As if the Subſcription of the Thirty-ſixth Canon could not in common Senſe be underſtood any otherwiſe, but ſo as to claſh and interfere with the Fifty-fifth; when yet it is plain enough to any Candid and Ingenuous Reader, that they ſpeak of different Things, which may very well conſiſt with one another. The Thirty-ſixth Canon ſpeaks of ſuch Offices, for which there are Forms preſcribed in the Book of Common-Prayer, and the meaning of Subſcription is, That for ſuch Offices as the Common-Prayer-Book ſpecifies, and there are Forms there preſcribed, the Miniſter will uſe thoſe Forms, and no other: But it does not mean (as Mr. Baxter diſ-ingenuouſly ſtrains it) that in other Offices, for which there is no Form there, the Miniſter ſhall uſe no Form at all, though otherwiſe permitted or enjoyned, as this Office of Praying before Sermon is by the Fifty-fifth Canon. The Canons are to be underſtood according to the Subject Matter they treat of, and limited to that, and then there is no Contradiction between them. Otherwiſe the French Church, and all other Churches which have ſtinted Liturgies, would be guilty of breach of Covenant as well as the Church of England. But of this I have ſpoken enough before. Book. III. Chap. i.

Here I only obſerve farther, That the Fifty-fifth Canon does not confine Miniſters preciſely to a Form, but leaves them at Liberty, either to uſe that Form, or one to the ſame Effect. And therefore if there be ſome little difference in the Miniſters Practice, if ſome uſe theſe very Words here ſet down in the Canon, and others vary a little from them; neither the one, nor the other are to be cenſured, for a modeſt Uſe of that Liberty which the Canon allows them. Which I ſay, leſt any ſhould condemn the one as Formaliſts, [o] See G. G's Hiſtory of the Church of Great Britain, p. 302. and Hilderſham's Lectures on 51 Pſalm.

liſts, and the other as Nonconformiſts. The next Canon againſt which Mr. B. has any Thing to ſay, is the Fifty-ſeventh. Which ſays, The Sacraments are not to be refuſed at the Hands of unpreaching Miniſters. But the Reaſon of making this Canon, does ſufficiently vindicate it from all his Exceptions, which are only a Repetition of ſome Things already anſwered in the former Chapter. The Reaſon of the Canon is aſſigned in the Canon itſelf. "Whereas divers Perſons, ſeduced by "Falſe Teachers, do refuſe to have their "Children baptized by a Miniſter that is no "Preacher, and to receive the Holy Com-"munion at his Hands in the ſame Re-"ſpect, as though the Virtue of thoſe Sa-"craments did depend upon his Ability to "preach: For as much as the Doctrine both "of Baptiſm and the LORD's-Supper is ſo "ſufficiently ſet down in the Book of Com-"mon-Prayer to be uſed at the Adminiſtra-"tion of the ſaid Sacraments, as nothing can "be addded unto it that is material or ne-"ceſſary? We do require and charge every "ſuch Perſon ſeduced as aforeſaid, to reform "that their Wilfulneſs, and to ſubmit to the "Order of the Church in that Behalf; both "the ſaid Sacraments being equally effectual, "whether they be Miniſtred by a Miniſter "that is no Preacher, or one that is a Preach-"er." Upon this Ground, the Canon ordereth Obſtinate Offenders in this kind to be Preſented, Suſpended, and Excommunicated, if they do not amend; and requires Miniſters not to receive any ſuch to the Communion, which are not of his own Pariſh, nor baptize their Children, thereby ſtrengthening them in their ſaid Errors, under Pain of Suſpenſion.

THIS plainly ſhews, that this Canon was only deſigned to prevent a growing Error, which Mr. B. cannot deny to be an Error: "But he thinks, notwithſtanding, all Men "ought to be allowed the Liberty to choſe "better Paſtors than ignorant Readers, as "their Need and GOD's Law oblige them; "and then 'tis their Duty to communicate "with him whom they take for their Pa-"ſtor." Engliſh Noncon. c. 32.

LET us try whether this be agreeable to the French Diſcipline; and in order to it, canvaſs a little their Doctrine and Sentiments upon theſe Three Points: 1. Whether it be lawful for the People to leave their own Miniſters, whom their Superiors ſet over them, and take others for their Paſtors, whom they ſhall think fit to chooſe for their greater Edification? 2. Whether he who refuſes the Sacraments from the Hands of an unpreaching Miniſter, becauſe he is ſuch, be juſtly liable to Cenſure? 3. Whether that Miniſter, who encourages Men in either of thoſe Practices, be not worthy of Suſpenſion?

FOR the firſt Point, it is plainly determined by their Diſcipline, which, as it allows the People no hand in chooſing their Paſtors, as I have evidently proved before; [*] ſo neither does it permit them to leave their own Pariſh-Church and Miniſter, and Aſſemble themſelves conſtantly with any other. "The Faithful (ſays their Book of Diſci-"pline, cap. 12. Art. 13.) that make a Trade "of Hearing the Word of GOD in one "Church, and Receiving the Sacraments in "another, ſhall be cenſured, and by the "Advice of the Claſſis, or Provincial Synod, "they ſhall be appointed to join themſelves "unto that Church which is neareſt, and "moſt convenient for them." This I preſume, means their own Pariſh Church.

ANOTHER Canon ſays, "Miniſters ſhall "not receive the Members of any other "Churches to the LORD's-Supper, without "a ſufficient Atteſtation produced by them, "under the Hands of their Paſtors or El-"ders, if it may be had." Synod of Paris, 1565. cap. 11. Art. 26.

A Third Canon ſays, "Synods and Claſ-"ſes ſhall conſult how to fix the Limits and "Extent of that Church, wherein a Miniſter "ſhall exerciſe his ordinary Calling." Synod of Rochel, 1581. cap. 3. Art. 38. Book of Diſcipline, cap. 5. Art. 3.

IT ſeems they had Pariſh-Bounds, as well as we: And it belonged to Claſſes and Synods to fix them, and chooſe Miniſters for them; and they had Power to confine both Miniſters and People to their own Pariſh-Church, and would not ſuffer any Man to forſake his own Paſtor, and chooſe a better for himſelf, and communicate ordinarily with ſuch a Paſtor in Prejudice of that Paſtor whom they had appointed. All this is as evident from theſe Canons, as the Sun at Noon-Day.

2. HENCE it follows alſo, that where Reading Miniſters were allowed, Men might not leave them, and go to other Pariſhes for Baptiſm, or the LORD's-Supper, on Pretence that ſuch Miniſters were not qualified to Adminiſter the Sacraments; becauſe they read Calvin's Homilies inſtead of Preaching Sermons of their own Compoſing. For the Canons make no Exceptions of Pariſhes which had only ſuch Readers, and conſequently confined the People to receive the Sacraments from them, as well as others.

BESIDES, their Writers tell us, That a Sermon of the Miniſter's own Compoſing is not neceſſary to be preached at the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments; it was ſufficient to read that Homily, or Diſcourſe about Baptiſm, or the LORD's-Supper, which is ſet down in their Liturgy, in a certain Form of Words, which the Miniſter was bound to uſe, containing an Explication of the Nature of each

each Sacrament, and the Words of Inſtitution, &c. which therefore they called, Verbum Concionatorium & prædicatum, The Word Preached, and made it Eſſential to the Sacraments, and a neceſſary Part of their Conſecration. For Prayer, together with this Repetition of the Words of Inſtitution, declaring the Nature and Uſe of the Sacraments, makes up their Form of Conſecration, as it does ours. But the Miniſter's Sermon before the Sacraments might be made, or let alone, without any Detriment to the Sacraments themſelves; or Omiſſion of any Thing material and neceſſary to their Adminiſtration. As Chamier anſwers Bellarmin, who pretended to ſay, That Proteſtants made a Miniſter's Sermon neceſſary to the right Adminiſtration of the Sacraments: He tells him this is falſe, for they diſtinguiſhed between the Miniſter's Sermon, and the Verbum Concionatorium & Conſecratorium, that is, the Form of Conſecration in their Liturgies. The one was uſed, Non propter Eſſentiam Sacramenti, ſed propter Ordinem Eccleſiæ, not becauſe it was of the Eſſence of the Sacrament, but becauſe it was an Order of the Church, &c. But the other did properly belong to the Sacraments, and was ſo Eſſential to them, that they were not, or could not be Sacraments without it.

Chamier, Tom. 4. de Sacram. Lib. 1. c. 15. n. 11. Mitte ergo Concionem: A qua prorſus diſtinctæ ſunt Liturgiæ; in quibus vere continetur verbum illud Conſecratorium ſimul & Concionatorium, proprie pertinens ad Sacramenta. Quod nos quidem tam Eſſentiale ſtatuimus, ut ſine eo nulla omnino eſſe, aut eſſe poſſe Sacramenta certiſſimi ſimus.

THIS is agreeable to the Doctrine of our Canon, That all Things Material, Neceſſary, and Eſſential to the Sacraments, are contained in our Forms of Adminiſtration, and therefore the Sacraments may be rightly and duly Adminiſtred by thoſe Forms, by a Miniſter who makes no other Sermon, but only that which thoſe Forms contain, read audibly and reverently to the People. This is what the French call Verbum Sacramentale Prædicatum, in Oppoſition to the Popiſh Muttering of the Words of Conſecration.

BUT Mr. B. ſays, "If mere Reading will "make a Paſtor, then all this may be done "by a Woman, or a Boy of Twelve Years of "Age, who can read as well as a Paſtor." This may be agreeable to Mr. B's Principles, who, in another place, reckons the Sacraments Valid, though Miniſtred by ſuch a Boy as Athanaſius was; but it is not according to the Principles either of the French, or Engliſh Church, who require not only Reading but a Solemn Ordination, or Vocation, and Miſſion of Miniſters, to qualify them to Adminiſter the Sacraments; and they never grant this Commiſſion to Women, or Boys of Twelve Years old. Therefore Mr. B's Inſtance was not Parallel.

THERE is as little Senſe as Modeſty in his other Compariſon. "A Turk, that be-"lieveth not the Goſpel, may read it: And "you may write it on a Pillar, and that may "teach Men, and yet Pillars and Books are not "Paſtors." Are not theſe very decent Expreſſions for Reading Miniſters, to make Turks, and Pillars, and Poſts of them, after the Church hath made them Readers in Caſes of great Neceſſity, when She cannot be ſupplied with others? But perhaps he thought they were as good Words as they deſerved: For he ſays, "They want Eſſential Abilities "to make them true Miniſters of CHRIST. "Since Eſſential Ability as certainly reach-"eth to the Work of Teaching, as to Ad-"miniſtring Sacraments." Be that ſo, that an Ability to Teach is Eſſential to the Miniſtry; yet the Manner of Teaching, either by Compoſitions of their own, or by Publiſhing the Authorized Compoſitions of the Church, may ſtill be left at Liberty: And it is evident, the French Church by Teaching, does not mean what Mr. B. means; that is, Preaching a Sermon of the Miniſter's own Compoſing, but a Solemn Preaching of thoſe Forms of the Church, which contain the whole Doctrine of the Sacraments, and all that is neceſſary to be ſaid, or done in thoſe Matters, either to perform thoſe Sacred Myſteries aright, or inſtruct the People in the Knowledge of them. They call this Goſpel-Teaching, though Mr. B. is pleaſed to ſay, it is no more than Women and Boys of twelve Years old may perform; nay, Turks, and Pillars, and Books may teach Men as well as this, with Reverence to the French Church be it ſpoken. As if Pillars and Books could ſpeak with the Tongues of Men; or Turks, or Women, or Boys, though they could Speak, and Read, could do it Authoritatively in Publick Offices, without GOD's Commiſſion, and the Church's Ordination. I believe the Diſcipline of the French Church was not ſo remiſs, as to have let ſuch undecent Reflections upon the meaneſt of the Reading Clergy, paſs without a Cenſure: But I am ſure it gave no Encouragement to the People to contemn her Offices of Baptiſm, and the LORD's-Supper, becauſe they were Adminiſtred without a Sermon: For, according to her Doctrine, the very Offices themſelves are an Inſtructive Sermon; and he that goes from his own Pariſh-Church upon the contrary Notion, acts againſt her Diſcipline, and incurrs her Cenſure.

3. AND much more liable to Puniſhment were the Miniſters, if they either encouraged any ſuch Notion, or received Communicants from other Pariſhes, againſt their common Rules and Diſcipline. For all Miniſters were under the Obligation of Subſcription and Oath to obſerve their Diſcipline, and liable to the Cenſure of Claſſes, and Synods, if they tranſgreſſed it: They might be Admoniſhed, Suſpended, Silenced, Excommunicated, and Depoſed, only for receiving Communicants from other Pariſhes, in Contempt of their Laws

Laws and Diſcipline. And if this was no Fault, thus to Cenſure Miniſters in France, it cannot be a Reaſonable Charge againſt the Church of England. Eſpecially, when it is conſidered that there is a good Reaſon for the Canon: For, in Caſes of Neceſſity, when the Church cannot ſupply every Cure with a Preaching Miniſter, it is fitting ſhe ſhould take the beſt Care of them otherwiſe that ſhe can, by placing Miniſters of leſs Abilities to perform Divine Offices, according to the Forms which are Preſcribed for them; and when ſhe has done that, it is as fitting ſhe ſhould ſecure ſuch Miniſters, and their Miniſtry from Contempt, and the People from ſuch erroneous Opinions as that is, That the Virtue of the Sacraments depends upon the Miniſters Ability to Preach. And the preventing theſe Miſchiefs is all that this Canon intended. But the Reaſon of the Canon being now in a great meaſure ceaſed, by GOD's Bleſſing, there is ſeldom or never Occaſion to put the Canon in Execution; and conſequently, as little Occaſion, if Men would be Reaſonable, to clamour againſt it. Beſides that, except in this one Caſe of the Sacraments (the due Adminiſtration of which is ſo well provided for by our Publick Forms) the Canon does not prohibit the People to have Recourſe to other Miniſters upon ſome Occaſions. The Exhortation before the Communion expreſsly allows this Liberty to ſuch as are troubled in Mind, " If there be any " of you, who by this Means cannot quiet " his own Conſcience herein, but requireth " farther Comfort, or Counſel, let him come " to me, or to ſome other Diſcreet and Learned " Miniſter of GOD's Word, and open his " Grief, &c." And the Twenty-eighth Canon only Notes ſuch as come often and commonly from other Pariſhes to hear Sermons; in which Caſe, the Miniſter is bound to take Notice of them, but not upon every ſingle Occaſion, unleſs they offer themſelves to the Communion; in which Caſe, he is to remit them Home to their own Pariſh-Churches. And in this whole Affair, the Church of England goes upon no other Grounds, nor acts by any other Rules, than what I have ſhewed to be agreeable to the Rules and Diſcipline of the French Churches.

CHAP XII.

Of the Fifty-eighth Canon, which Treats of the Hood and Surplice. The Sixty-fifth, which requires Miniſters to denounce Recuſants, and Excommunicate Perſons every ſix Months. And the Sixty-eighth, which enjoyns Miniſters to baptize, and bury without Delay.

TWO of theſe Canons have already been conſidered in preceding Parts of this Diſcourſe: The Fifty-eighth I have ſpoken to in the Third Book, Chap. vii. which Treats of the Ornaments of the Church, uſed in the ſecond Year of the Reign of King Edward VI. And the Sixty-eighth Canon, with Mr. Baxter's Objections againſt it, I have conſidered in the ſame Book, Chap. xix, and xxii. where I treat of the Forms of Baptiſm, and Burial. All that remains therefore to be ſpoken in this Chapter, is of the Sixty-fifth Canon, about Denouncing Recuſants, &c. The Words of the Canon are theſe, " All Ordinaries ſhall, in their ſeveral " Juriſdictions, carefully ſee, and give Order, " that as well thoſe, who for obſtinate re- " fuſing to frequent Divine Service,—as thoſe " alſo, eſpecially of the better Sort and Con- " dition, who for notorious Contumacy, or " other notable Crimes, ſtand Lawfully Ex- " communicate——be every ſix Months en- " ſuing, as well in the Pariſh-Church, as in " the Cathedral Church of the Dioceſe, in " which they remain, by the Miniſter open- " ly in Time of Divine Service upon ſome " Sunday, Denounced, and Declared Excom-

" municate, that others may be thereby both " Admoniſhed to refrain their Company and " Society, and excited the rather to procure " out a Writ, De Excommunicato capiendo, &c."

THE plain Deſign of this Canon is no more than to make obſtinate Offenders known to the Church, after they are once Lawfully Excommunicated, that all Perſons may ſhun and avoid their Company, as by Apoſtolical Precept they are obliged to do. It was the old Rule of the Primitive Catholick Church, and is ſtill the ſtanding Rule of the French Diſcipline. As is evident, 1. From their Form of Excommunication, which runs in theſe Terms: " In the Name, and by the Autho- " rity of our Lord JESUS, by the Advice and " Authority of the Paſtors and Elders As- " ſembled in Claſſis, and of the Conſiſtory " of this Church, We have cut off, and do " cut off N. N. from the Communion of the " Church of GOD: We do Excommunicate and " Deprive him of the Fellowſhip of Saints, " that ſo he may be unto you as a Pagan, " or Publican, and that among True Believ- " ers he may be an Anathema and Execration. " Let his Company be reputed contagious! And " his Example poſſeſs your Souls with Aſtoniſh-

" ment, &c. The Concluſion is, If any Man " love not the Lord JESUS CHRIST, let him " be Anathema Maranatha! Amen! [p] "

2. NEXT after this, they gave Notice of his Excommunication to all other Churches, that he that was Excommunicated in one Church, might be excluded and avoided in all others. Synod of Lyons, 1563. Chap. 9. Art. 25. " Vagrants, Hereticks, and Schiſma- " ticks ſhall be notified unto all Churches, " that they may be aware of them."

NOW, if the Excommunication be Lawful at firſt, and may be Publiſhed in the Congregation once, and Notified to all other Churches; I ſee no harm in Denouncing the ſame Perſons Excommunicate every ſix Months, in caſe they do not Reform, and Obtain Abſolution. Nor has Mr. B. any Thing to ſay againſt that: But his Exceptions are, 1. " That " it makes Miniſters the Agents of Laymens " Excommunicating. And 2. The Inſtruments " of Godly Mens Excommunications, and " Ruins. " Engl. Noncon. c. 22.

To the firſt of theſe I have fully anſwered before in the firſt Chapter of this Book, which diſcuſſes the Point of Canonical Obedience. And I could better have anſwered the ſecond, had he ſpecified whom he means by Godly Men, that Miniſters are obliged by this Canon to Excommunicate, and Ruin. But to make ſome Conjecture, and gueſs at his Meaning: I ſuppoſe, 1. He did not mean Popiſh Recuſants by Godly Men; nor 2. Such as ſtand Lawfully Excommunicated for Notable Crimes: Therefore he muſt mean, 3. Such as are Excommunicated for notorious Contumacy againſt the Orders and Diſcipline of the Church. For none but theſe three ſorts are mentioned in the Canon. Now then the Queſtion is, Whether theſe Men may be Lawfully Excommunicated. And if this be to be determined by the Rules of the French Diſcipline, the Matter is already decided. For they Excommunicate all who either deſpiſe the Admonitions of the Conſiſtory, or rebell againſt the Diſcipline of the Church; of which I have given ſome Proofs before [*] out of the Synod of Alez, cap. 10. Art. 22. and the Book of Diſcipline, cap. 1. Art. 47. I add here two Canons of the firſt Synod of Paris, 1559. (where the firſt model of their Diſcipline was framed) to ſhew that this was ever an invariable Rule among them. In that Synod cap. 2. Art. 29. " Perſons who are to be Excommu- " nicated, and cut off, not only from the " Sacrament, but from all Communion with " the whole Church, are ſpecified under the " Titles of Hereticks, Contentious Perſons, " Rebels againſt the Conſiſtory, Traytors to the " Church, &c."

AND the next Canon ſays, " Such as are " Excommunicate for Hereſy, Schiſm, Trea- " ſon, and Rebellion againſt the Church — ſhall be " Denounced Excommunicate Perſons before " the People, together with the Cauſes of " their Excommunication."

I WILL not ſay whether this was to Excommunicate Godly Men or no; but I am ſure it gives Contumacious Perſons both as hard Names, and as ſevere Treatment, as any they have from the Church of England. And if there be no Writ de Excommunicato capiendo mentioned in the French Synods, yet there is in the Ordinances of Geneva, where the Magiſtrates ſupport the Church, and vindicate her Authority, by Puniſhing Contumacious Perſons with Impriſonment, Baniſhment, and ſometimes Death itſelf. For the Proof of which, we need go no farther than Calvin's Epiſtles; one of which gives us the Heads of their Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, where the firſt Article runs in this Style, " If any one ſpread " Doctrines contrary to the received Doc- " trine of the Church, and upon Admoni- " tion perſiſts Obſtinate, and pertinaciouſly " addicted to his Error, then let him be ſuſ- " pended from the LORD's Supper, and com- " plained of to the Senate." Deferatur ad Senatum. The next Article is in the ſame Style: " If any Perſons neglect the Sacred Aſſem- " blies, and it appear to be done out of Con- " tempt, &c. after three Admonitions let " them be ſuſpended from the LORD's-Sup- " per, and Information be given to the Ma- " giſtrate againſt them. Idque Magiſtratui in- " dicetur." Calvin Ep. Magiſtrat. Genev. p. 76.

Now the Reaſon of giving Information to the Magiſtrate in ſuch Caſes, was, as Calvin words it a little after, " Ut duros & Indomi- " tos homines coerceatis, quibus Contemptui eſt Spi- " ritualis Correctio, That ſuch Obdurate, and " Undiſciplinable Men might be Corrected " with Civil Puniſhments, who contemned " the Spiritual. — After the Conſiſtory has " performed their Part, they are command- " ed to Inform you, the Magiſtrates, Ne Con- " temptores impune adverſus Eccleſiam laſciviant, " that Deſpiſers of the Church ſhould not " wantonly trample upon her Authority. It " is the Conſiſtory's Right to Excommuni- " cate, and in your Power to correct, as " you ſee fit, thoſe that rebell againſt it." Ibid. p. 77. See alſo his Epiſtle to Menſo Poppius, p. 205. Where ſpeaking of ſuch as contemn the Cenſures of the Church, he ſays, " I ſee not what the Elders have more to " do, unleſs it be to move the Magiſtrates " to handle them a little more ſeverely."

THIS I think is Equivalent to a Writ de Excommunicato capiendo, and makes the Geneva Diſcipline as liable to Mr. B's Exception in every reſpect, as the preſent Canon of the Engliſh Church.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Seventy-second Canon, and the Rule for Appointing Publick Fasts in the French Church.

AMONG other Things excepted against by Nonconformists, the Prescription of the Seventy-second Canon is one. That Canon enjoyns, "That no Minister, or Ministers shall without Licence, and Direction "of the Bishop of the Diocese first obtained, and had under his Hand and Seal, appoint, and keep any Solemn Fasts, either "Publickly, or in Private Houses, other than "such as by Law are, or by Publick Authority shall be appointed; nor shall they "be wittingly present at any of them, under Pain of Suspension for the first Fault, "of Excommunication for the Second, and "of Deposition from the Ministry for the "third. Neither shall any Minister (not Licensed as is aforesaid) presume to appoint, "or hold any Meetings for Sermons, — nor "attempt by Fasting and Prayer to cast out "any Devil, &c."

MR. Baxter, in his Scurrilous Way, compares this to the Forbidding Christianity, or Reading Scripture in a known Tongue, and to the Forbidding Law, and the Use of Reason; and asks, Are not these Men over-subject to Prelacy, that will swear Obedience in this, any more than against Preaching the Gospel? Case of Nonconform. cap. 35.

YET as subject as he makes these Men to Prelacy, the Ministers of France are as subject to the Orders of the Presbytery, and swear the same Canonical Obedience to them. For, by a Canon of their Church-Discipline, all Fasts are to be held only at the Appointment and Discretion of the Church. Cap. 10. Art. 3. "In Times of sore Persecution, and "of War, Pestilence, or Famine, or any o-"ther grievous Affliction; as also when Ministers of the Gospel are to be ordained, "and when a Question is moved about Calling a National Synod, one Day or more may "be set a-part for Publick, and Extraordinary Prayers, and Fasting; yet without "any Scruple, or Superstition: And all this "shall be done upon mature Consideration of "the Grounds and Causes of these Providences. And the Churches shall be advised "to celebrate the Fast, as much as possibly "they can, at the same time, &c."

NOW does not this suppose, that it belongs only to the Governors of the Church, and not to every Individual Minister, to appoint the Times of Solemn Fasting? Else why should they Limit particular Churches, both as to the Causes and Times of Fasting, as it is plain they do in this Canon?

BUT there was another Canon made in the Synod of Rochel, 1607. cap. 3. Art. 21. which speaks more expres to the Purpose. It was made by Way of Observation on the afore-said Canon of their Discipline. "There "Licence is given to particular Churches to "Celebrate a Fast, they first consulting with "their Neighbour-Churches, and on great "and urgent Causes, for which they shall "be accountable unto the Classes, and Provincial Synods." It seems they must not do it of their own Head, but by the Advice of a Classis. And is it not as reasonable to have Recourse to a Bishop in an Episcopal Church, as to a Classis in a Presbyterian? Change but a few Terms, and Mr. Baxter's Questions will now hold as well against the Church of France, as the Church of England. "Do you not think that they make very un-"worthy Men Ministers, or that they change "or maim the Pastoral Office, when no Minister, no not the Wisest, may be trusted "to Fast and Pray with his Neighbours? "What Jealousies have such a Clergy of one "another, and of Preaching, and Fasting "and Praying? What if some Neighbours "have some great Temptations, some great "Guilt, some great Danger, by a Plague, or "the like, or some great Affliction; some "Friends near Death, or some important "Business of great Moment, as Marriage, "Travel, Navigation, &c. Must the Bishop "know (must a Classis or the Neighbouring Churches know) all their Secrets that their Pastor "at home must know? Are not those unworthy Ministers, that be not fit to be "trusted to Fast and Pray with their People, while the Law is open to punish all "Abuses of it? (while they stand accountable to "Classes and Provincial Synods for their Abuses of "it? And are not those over-subject to "Prelacy (over-subject to Presbytery) that will "swear Obedience in this, any more than "against Preaching the Gospel?"

WHO sees not that the Church of France is as much involved in this Charge, as the Church of England, for putting unworthy Men into the Ministry, who cannot be trusted to Fast and Pray with their People, without consulting a Classis, or their Neighbouring Churches?

BUT I have one Thing farther to say upon this Point, That the French Canons limit their Ministers to do nothing without Licence, in many other Cases as material as that of Solemn Fasts. They have a general Rule in the Book of Discipline, cap. 6. Art. 2. "That

" no Church ſhall aſſume unto itſelf a Pow" er of undertaking Buſineſs of great Con-
" ſequence, in which the Intereſt or Dam-
" mage of other Churches may be concern" ed, without the Advice and Conſent of " the Provincial Synod, if it may poſſibly
" be convened. And be the Affair never ſo " urgent, it ſhall at leaſt be communicated
" by Letters unto ſome other Churches in " the Province, and they ſhall receive and
" take their Advice about it."

IN the ſame Chapter, Art. 4. This General Rule is particularized in a ſpecial Inſtance of entering upon Diſputes with the Papiſts about Religion, where it is ordered, " That " no Miniſters ſhall attempt a Publick Diſ" putation, but with the Advice of their " Conſiſtory, and a ſelect Number of Pa-
" ſtors, who for this Purpoſe ſhall be choſen
" by the Claſſes, or Provincial Synods. Nor
" ſhall they enter upon any general Confe" rence, without the Advice of all the " Churches Aſſembled in a National Synod;
" upon Pain, if they act otherwiſe, of being " declared Apoſtates, and Deſerters of the " Church's Union."

NOW is it not as proper to take the Advice of the Biſhop before a Man appoints a Solemn Faſt, or goes about to caſt out a Devil, as it is before he enters upon a Solemn Diſputation? And yet we ſee, the Church of France would not allow any private Miniſter to undertake this without conſulting a Claſſis, or Synod, leſt ſome Inconvenience ſhould happen thereby, for which the whole Church would ſuffer in her Reputation. And that I take to be the true Reaſon of the Seventy-ſecond Canon of our Church alſo; and whatever is ſaid againſt it by Mr. Baxter, or others, it is but a reaſonable and proper Caution. For, it is better to have the Ableſt Miniſters under ſome Limitation, than that the Church ſhould be expoſed by the Follies and Indiſcretions of ſome, who have not Ability to judge what is always proper to be done in ſuch Extraordinary Caſes, as appointing of Solemn Faſts, or caſting out Devils.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Reſpect paid to the National Synods in the French Church, and that it is greater than is required by the Hundred thirty-ninth Canon of the Church of England.

THE next Canon Mr. Baxter, and others except againſt, is the Hundred Thirty-ninth, which is in theſe Words, " Whoſo-
" ever ſhall hereafter affirm, that the Sacred " Synod of this Nation, in the Name of " CHRIST, and by the King's Authority
" aſſembled, is not the true Church of En- " gland by Repreſentation, let him be Ex-
" communicate, and not Reſtored till he Re" pent, and Publickly Revoke this his Wick" ed Error."

TWO Things they have to except againſt this: 1. That a National Synod is not the true Church of England by Repreſentation; and ſecondly, If it were, yet they cannot conſent, and ſwear to publiſh an Excommunication againſt any one that denies it, as the Canon requires.

BUT if they were Miniſters of the French Church, they muſt be obliged to conſent to both theſe. For they muſt ſubſcribe, and ſwear to the Confeſſion of Faith, as the Confeſſion of the French Church; to the Diſcipline, as the Diſcipline of the Church; to the Canons of the Synods, as the Synods of the Church. Now, how come all theſe to be the Confeſſion, the Diſcipline, and the Canons of the French Church, unleſs it be, that the Synods in which they were made, were the French Church by Repreſentation? Is it becauſe they are received and confirmed afterwards in particular Churches? No, but becauſe their Paſtors in Provincial Synods chooſe their Deputies, and ſend them in their Name, and with their Commiſſion, to repreſent all their Churches. Whence it is, that a National Synod becomes their Church Repreſentative. And I know no Difference betwixt their Synods and ours in this Reſpect, ſave only, that they ſwear beforehand to Obſerve, and Execute all the Decrees that ſhall be made in the Synod, to which they ſend them, which we do not. For in England we have no ſuch Anticipating Oath, but in France they have, in this Form appointed by the Synod of Vitre, 1617. cap. 2. Art. 1. " We Promiſe before GOD, to " ſubmit ourſelves to all that ſhall be con" cluded, and determined in your Holy Aſ-
" ſembly, to Obey, and Execute it to the ut-
" moſt of our Power; being perſuaded that " GOD will Preſide among you, and lead
" you, by his HOLY SPIRIT, into all " Truth and Equity, by the Rule of his " Word, for the Good and Edification of " his Church, &c." This Oath is always inſerted into the Letters of Diſputation, by the Paſtors which ſend their reſpective Deputies to the National Synod, whereby they acknowledge the Synod not only to be the Church Repreſentative, but next to Infallible.

AFTER

AFTER this, can we think they would allow any Man apertly to call in Queſtion the Authority of a National Synod, and diſpute whether it was the Church Repreſentative or not? And while they decree Excommunication in many particular Caſes againſt thoſe who tranſgreſs but ſome ſingle Canons, ſuffer thoſe to go uncenſured, who ſtrike at the Foundation of their Authority, and deny the very Eſſence of their Conſtitution? If all their Paſtors ſwear to obſerve this Diſcipline, are they not then under Oath to Excommunicate ſuch as refuſe to ſubject themſelves to it? And much more thoſe who ſpeak contemptuouſly of the Synods that made it? And if this be the Caſe of all the Miniſters of France, they could never think (whatever our Diſſenters may) that the requiring Obedience to the Hundred Thirty-ninth Canon was a juſt Cauſe for Separation. For they have declared over and over again, that the Contempt of National Synods is a Crime of very pernicious Conſequence, and by no Means to be endured. Their Book of Diſcipline, cap. 6. Art. 5. orders all Churches to be informed, "That their Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies of Claſſes, and Synods, whether Provincial, or National, were the Bands and Buttreſſes of their Concord and Union againſt Schiſms, Hereſies, and all other Inconveniencies; that ſo they might diſcharge their Duty in the Uſe of Means, for the Continuance, and Upholding of thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies."

AND the Synod of Montauban adds farther to this Canon, "That if any Churches refuſed Payment of their Contributions, to the defraying thoſe Expences, which are unavoidably contracted by Journeys, and Attendance in thoſe Synodical Aſſemblies, that they ſhould be deprived of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, and be reputed Deſerters of that Holy Union which ought to be preſerved among them. And all Miniſters in ſuch Churches are interdicted the Exerciſe of their Miniſtry, upon Pain of being denounced Schiſmaticks." Synod of Montauban, 1594. cap. 3. Art. 10.

NOW what is this but the ſevereſt Excommunication, to lay Churches under Interdict, and deny them the Goſpel-Miniſtry? Yet Miniſters are obliged by this Canon, and their Oath of Obedience, ſo to treat whole Churches for their Contempt of Synods, upon Pain of being denounced Schiſmaticks themſelves.

THERE are many other Decrees of the like Nature in their National Synods: I will only add one more out of the Synod of Rochel, 1607. cap. 9. Art. 1. "Where even a Provincial Synod is ſeverely Cenſured for Tranſgreſſing a Decree of the National Synod of Gap: And it is declared to be a Crime of very dangerous Conſequence; becauſe, if Provincial Synods ſhall ſlight the Authority of the National, they will open the Flood-gates, to let in upon us a Deluge of unſeen Miſchiefs."

IF Provincial Synods may not ſlight National Synods, much leſs may particular Perſons be allowed to ſpeak any Thing Derogatory, or Contemptuouſly of them: And if they do, it may be a Crime deſerving Excommunication, which is all that the Hundred and thirty-ninth Canon aſſerts.

WHAT has there been alledged, will ſerve for an Anſwer alſo to the Exceptions made by Mr. Baxter to the two laſt Canons. The former of which, is Can. 140. "Whoſoever ſhall affirm, that no manner of Perſons, either of the Clergy, or Laity, not being then particularly Aſſembled in the ſaid Sacred Synod, are to be Subject to the Decrees thereof, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, made and ratifyed by the King's Majeſty's Supreme Authority, as not having given their Voice to them: Let him be Excommunicated, &c."

HIS Exception againſt this, is, "That he thinks it unjuſt, to Excommunicate any ſuch Perſon, becauſe even General Councils do not bind the Abſent, till they receive them; the French for a long time received not the Council of Trent, nor many Churches other Councils." Baxter's Caſe of Nonconf. cap. 36.

BUT I have already ſhewn, that the Reformed Church of France had another Notion of their National Synods, (whatever the Papiſts had of the Council of Trent) and thought themſelves obliged to Submit to, and Obey their Decrees, though they were not Preſent, ſave only by their Delegates, at the making of them. They did not ſtay to ſee whether the Churches would receive their Decrees, but peremptorily required every Individual to Obey them. Of which I ſhall only give this one Inſtance, in the Synod of Loudun, 1659. cap. 10. Art. 4. "Provincial Synods are enjoyned to make ſuch Canons as they ſhall judge Needful for the ſtricter Obſervation of the LORD's Day; and every Individual Member of our Churches, ſay they, are moſt ſtrictly Commanded Conſcientiouſly to Obſerve, and Obey them.

I HOPE it will not be thought that every Individual Member of the Church was preſent in their Synods, yet they are bound in Conſcience to Obey them. And if they were bound in Conſcience to Obey them, I ſuppoſe they would not ſcruple to think thoſe worthy of Excommunication, who made no Conſcience to Vilify, and Deride the Power that made them.

THE laſt Canon is, "Whoever ſhall affirm, that the Sacred Synod Aſſembled, as afore-ſaid, was a Company of ſuch Perſons as did Conſpire together againſt Godly and Religious Profeſſors of the Goſpel, and that therefore both they, and their Proceedings in making Canons, and Conſtitutions in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical by the King's Authority,

" rity, ought to be Deſpiſed and Contemn-
" ed; the ſame being Ratifyed, Confirmed,
" and Enjoyned by the ſaid Regal Power,
" Supremacy, and Authority: Let them be
" Excommunicated, &c." Mr. Baxter cannot conſent to this neither.

IT ſeems, Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and Governours may be Deſpiſed and Contemned, Traduced and Reviled at Pleaſure, and yet the Revilers be thought too good Chriſtians to deſerve Excommunication for it. Otherwiſe, why ſhould any one refuſe to Excommunicate ſuch, if required by a Lawful Superior to do it? This is a Scruple in England, but it never was any in the French Church. The Clergy there would not refuſe to obſerve the whole Body of their Diſcipline, and Promiſe and Swear to do it, though there be Canons requiring them to Excommunicate Perſons for leſs Crimes than this of Deſpiſing Dominions, and ſpeaking Evil of Dignities.

BEFORE I cloſe this Point, I cannot but take Notice of Mr. Baxter's Cauſeleſs Quarrel with the Number of the Canons alſo, only becauſe they are 141. " For ſo many Church-
" Commandments we have, ſays he, GOD's " Ten being but a little Part of our Religi" on." Ibid. p. 125.

THERE is nothing ſo Trivial, but if it cannot be made an Argument, may be improved into a ſpiteful Reflection. Something he would inſinuate in this, as if all Church-Canons were an Addition to GOD's Word, and the Ten Commandments. But be it what it will, the Church of France ſtands more accountable for multiplying Canons, than Ours, by far; for her Number is almoſt double in the Book of Diſcipline, which contains Two hundred fifty-four Canons, beſides the Canons of Twenty-nine National Synods, which make up the Body of their Canon-Law, and are the Rule of Governing their Churches. I could alſo have ſaid here, that Mr. Knox's Form of Church-Polity (which may be ſeen in Biſhop Spotſwood's Hiſtory, Lib. 3.) conſiſts of more Canons, but I purpoſely confine myſelf to the French Churches, whoſe Canons, I hope I have made it appear, do ſufficiently juſtify the taking the Oath of Canonical Obedience in the Church of England, in the ſtricteſt Senſe that can be put upon it.

CHAP. XV.

That the French Church allows of Communion with the Lutheran Churches, upon this Principle, That all Defects, which are not our Sins, are to be born with, rather than make a Schiſm in any Church.

I HAVE now gone through all the Parts of the Engliſh Conſtitution, and ſhewed, that the chief Things excepted againſt by Diſſenters, are Juſtifiable upon the Principles and Practice of the French Church. The Inference from all which, is, That either Separation upon the Account of ſuch Things is Unlawful in England, or elſe it is Lawful, and Neceſſary in the Church of France; and they who abſtain from our Communion, muſt abſtain from the other alſo. For if what I have diſcourſed be true, the Rules of France and Geneva would as certainly make Men Nonconformiſts, as the Laws of England, if they lived there, and acted upon the ſame Principles againſt either of thoſe Conſtitutions.

BUT I have one Thing farther to add before I conclude, which is, That ſuppoſing ſome Things to be practiſed in the Church of England, which might be called Faults, Inconveniencies, or Defects in her Conſtitution: Yet all Kind of Faults and Defects, will not Authorize Men to make a Separation, if we regard the Judgment of the French Church.

CALVIN and Beza had often Occaſion to inſiſt upon this Topick, and they do it Pathetically, and Zealouſly, as knowing it to be one of the beſt Arguments againſt Schiſm, and an excellent Preſerver of Peace and Unity in the Church. Multos Defectus tolerandos judico, ubi emendari non poſſunt, ſays Calvin [p], " I think many Defects are to be Tolerated,
" when they cannot be amended. And in " my Opinion, no Brother ought upon that " Account, to withdraw himſelf from that " Church, whereunto he is aſſigned, if the " greater Part of the Church agree upon " any Thing to his Diſliking. In ſuch Caſes,
" it ſeems enough to me, that we ourſelves
" endeavour, as far as we may, after what " we think better. For, though that which " is obtruded on us, may create Scandal,
" and be attended with evil Conſequences;
" yet, becauſe it is not in itſelf repugnant
" to the Word of GOD, it may be yielded
" to: Eſpecially when the greater Number " is for it, and he that is but a Member of " the Body, has no Power to proceed any " farther.

THERE

THERE are many Things remarkable in this Anſwer, and ſeveral of our Controverted Points reſolved in it. 1. We muſt not call all manner of Defects in a Church, down-right Repugnancies to the Word of GOD. 2. We muſt not ſeparate from the Church, whereof we are Members, for ſuch Tolerable Defects as we may comply with without Sin, though they ſhould ſin that Impoſe this Neceſſity on us. 3. Even ſuch Defects as may be attended with Scandal, and other evil Conſequences, will not Authorize us to make a Separation, ſo long as they are not ſimply Evil in themſelves. 4. That our Complying for Peace Sake in ſuch Caſes, does not involve us in any Guilt, nor make us Partakers of other Mens Sins. All which are contrary to the common Notions ſo current among Diſſenters, and deſtroy the main Principles whereby they would eſtabliſh the preſent Separation.

CALVIN wrote after the ſame Healing Way, to Mr. Knox in Scotland: "I hope, ſays "he, your Rigour about Ceremonies, which "is diſpleaſing to many, will keep itſelf with- "in due Bounds of Moderation. We ought "to endeavour, indeed, to Purge the Church "of all its Filth, which owes its Original to "Error and Superſtition: And we are like- "wiſe to be Careful, that the Myſteries of "GOD be not Defiled by Ludicrous, or Inſipid "Mixtures. But theſe Things excepted, you "know ſome Things are to be Tolerated, "though we do not altogether approve of "them. Quædam etſi minus probentur, toleranda "eſſe non ignoras." Ep. Joh. Knox. p. 150.

IN another Epiſtle, ſpeaking about Ceremonies again, he ſays, "They are not Things "of that Nature, as ſhould occaſion us Vo- "luntarily to deny ourſelves the LORD's "Supper upon the account of them. —— If "we cannot obtain what we deſire, yet we "may Tolerate ſuch Defects, not approving "them; ſo long as there is no Impiety, nor "any Thing Repugnant to the Word of "GOD in them. —— Where the Doctrine is "Sound and Pure, and the Cermonies are "uſed for Decency, or Civil Ornament, we "ought rather ſilently to paſs theſe Things "over, than raiſe Contentions, and grievous "Stirs about them." Ep. ad N. N. p. 147.

CALVIN's moderate Counſels would go a great way toward healing our Diviſions, if all Men would think themſelves obliged not only to put this Advice in Practice; but even to Tolerate what they might with Silence, for Peace and Unity's Sake, and raiſe no violent Stirs about them.

I COULD give many Inſtances of the like ſober Advice out of Calvin's Works, eſpecially his Epiſtles, [q] but I will only add one Place more, which I think carries this Matter ſomething farther than any Thing I have yet related. In an Epiſtle to Farel, written during the Time of their Expulſion from Geneva, he tells him, "Some of their Friends in that "Church had ſent to him in his Exile, to "deſire his Reſolution upon theſe two Points: "Whether it was Lawful to receive the "LORD's Supper from the Hands of thoſe "Miniſters who were obtruded upon them "in their ſtead? And whether they might "Communicate, cum tanta hominum Colluvie, "with all that Scum and Dregs of the Peo- "ple, which were then in that Place?" To theſe Queſtions, having conſulted with Capito at Strasburgh, he ſays he returned this Anſwer, "That there ought to be ſo great an "Hatred of Schiſm among Chriſtians, that "they ſhould avoid it as far as ever poſſi- "bly they might. That there ought to be "ſuch a Reverence for the Miniſtry, and "Sacraments, that wherever they perceived "thoſe to be, they ſhould conclude there was "a Church. Since therefore, by GOD's Per- "miſſion, the Church was Governed by thoſe "Miniſters, whatever ſort of Men they were; "if they could find the true Marks of a "Church there, it was better that they ſhould "not withdraw themſelves from its Commu- "nion. Nor might it be any Obſtacle, that "ſome unſound Doctrines (impura quædam "Dogmata) were Taught there: For there is "ſcarce any Church which does not retain "ſome Relicks of Ignorance. It is ſuffici- "ent for us, that the Doctrine whereupon "the Church of CHRIST is Founded, keep "its Place, and Obtain. Nor ſhould it be "any Hinderance, that he who now Mini- "ſtred, could not be called a Lawful Paſtor, "who had not only fraudulently crept, but "wickedly Intruded, into the Place of the "true Miniſter. For there was no reaſon "why every Private Man ſhould perplex, and "moleſt himſelf with ſuch kind of Scruples: "For they Communicate in the Sacraments "with the Church; and bear with the Diſ- "penſation of them at ſuch Miniſters Hands. "It concerns ſuch Miniſters indeed, very "much to conſider, whether they Lawfully, "or Unlawfully Poſſeſs their Places, but others "may ſuſpend their Judgment till they have "a Legal Hearing. Mean while they may "uſe their Miniſtry, without Danger of "ſeeming either to acknowledge, or approve, "or ratify their Uſurpation." Ep. Farello. p. 5.

THIS fully anſwers all thoſe ſeeming Difficulties, and Scruples, which ſome have both againſt the Miniſters, and Communion of the Church of England: For, admit there were not only ſome Failings, but ſome Corruptions in each; yet, ſo long as the true Marks of a Church are to be found in her, and theſe ſuppoſed Corruptions are not of that Nature, as to hinder either the ſincere Preaching of the Word, or due Adminiſtration of the the Sacraments; and Men are not Compelled to Approve, but only ſilently to Tolerate ſuch Failings: In ſuch Caſes, Calvin thinks, there ought to be ſo great an Hatred of Schiſm, that Men ſhould rather bear with ſuch Defects in the Church, than leave her Communion upon the account of them: Since there is ſcarce any Church which has not ſome Relicks of Ignorance, and Failings of this Nature.

BEZA's Judgment was exactly the ſame, as appears from the Anſwers he gave to Perſons who moved theſe very Queſtions and Scruples to him. In his ſecond Epiſtle to du Tillet, he ſays, Some are greatly offended with thoſe Churches, which omit the Ceremony of Breaking the Bread in the Euchariſt, and retain the Cuſtom of putting the Bread into the Communicants Mouths, inſtead of their Hands, as is Practiſed among the Papiſts; and for theſe Failings they Condemned thoſe Churches, as guilty of Profaning the LORD's Supper, and refuſed to Communicate with them. Now to theſe Objectors he returns this Anſwer: "Many Things are right, and "fit to be done, which yet are not ſimply "and abſolutely neceſſary: And therefore "they who ſo urge the Neceſſity of Receiv-"ing the Bread into their Hands, as to think "the LORD's Supper is Profaned in thoſe "Churches, where the other Cuſtom is ſtill "retained without Superſtition, and much more "without Impiety, only by the Careleſneſs, "and Overſight of the Paſtors, and Magi-"ſtrates, or becauſe ſudden Changing would "be dangerous; I fear they themſelves are "rather guilty of ſome Ignorance in theſe "Matters, or of Self-conceit, and Moroſe-"neſs. Vereor ut ipſi potius vel non nulla rerum "iſtarum Ignorantia, vel αὐθαδείᾳ peccent." Beza Ep. 2. ad Joh. Tilium. p. 26.

IF Beza judge right, there may be Inconvenient Cuſtoms and Ceremonies retained in a Church, and that by the Fault of the Paſtors and Magiſtrates too, and yet the Communion of the Church be ſo far from being profaned thereby, that they who Condemn it, and Separate from it upon that account, are rather to be judged Ignorant, and Self-conceited Men.

HE has a great deal more upon this Subject in that Epiſtle, the Concluſion of which is to this Purpoſe: "That they Sin greatly, "both againſt themſelves, and their Brethren, "who, upon the account of ſuch Failings, "or Corruptions, diſquiet their own, and "other Mens Conſciences, as if Chriſtian "Religion lay at Stake, and were ready to "be deſtroyed. ——Admit ſomething is wrong "done in ſome Churches: Are they there-"fore no Chriſtians, nor to be accounted "Brethren? As certainly we do not account "them, if we think it Unlawful to Commu-"nicate with them. But by this means, ſay "they, we ſhall partake in their Sins. No, "this is a wrong Inference. For, to come "rightly prepared to the LORD's Supper, it "concerns not me to enquire with what "Conſcience other Men come, but my Con-"cern is only about my own Conſcience. "Therefore, though I come with Adulter-"ers, and Murderers, and the moſt Profli-"gate Wretches, their Impurity cannot hurt "me that am Pure, and no ways Acceſſory "to their Faults. And what I ſay of Mo-"rals, I ſay alſo of Doctrine, in which both "Preachers and Hearers are many Times "Faulty. Yea, I will ſay one Thing far-"ther, Though a Miniſter ſhould admit a "Turk, or a Jew, wittingly or unwittingly, "the Fault would be only his, and not "mine, and I ſhould come nevertheleſs to "the LORD's Table. —— How then can I "be polluted by any Church's Failing in "ſome Ceremony about the Euchariſt? And "why ſhould we for ſuch Things, deprive "ourſelves of ſo great a Benefit, and diſ-"quiet the Conſciences of others? But, ſay "they, though we be not polluted with their "Sin, yet we ſeem, at leaſt, to cheriſh their "Error. Not ſo neither. For what can be "more abſurd, than to accuſe a Man of fa-"vouring another's Fault, who only bears "with his Brother's Infirmity, in order to "gain his Perſon? If the Bread be given to "you without being Broken, or if it be put "into your Mouth, and not into your Hand, "theſe are Things you cannot commend in-"deed: But as for the Fault, it is not com-"mitted by you, but againſt you. Therefore "you may condemn it Privately in your "own Mind, and alſo Publickly in its proper "Seaſon, when there may be Hopes of Edi-"fying your weak Brethren. But beware you "fly not off from Communion, offended, as "if Chriſtianity lay at Stake, and by your "prepoſterous Rigour, Deſtroy others, and "Rob yourſelf of ſo great an Advantage." Ibid. p. 29.

THESE are thoſe ſober Counſels, and ſeaſonable Advices, with which Calvin and Beza endeavoured to qualify, and poſſeſs the Minds of Proteſtant People, whenever they found in them any the leaſt Tendency toward a Separation. I have before [*] obſerved, that Beza did good Service to the Church of England, in giving the like Advice to ſome Diſcontented Perſons here, who were ſo aggrieved at the Ceremonies, that they had Thoughts of forſaking the Communion of the Church upon it. But Beza being conſulted about that Matter, better adviſed them. He told them plainly, Poſſunt ac etiam debent multa tolerari, quæ tamen recte non præcipiuntur, &c. "Many Things "not only may, but ought to be Tolerated, "which are not rightly enjoyned. Therefore "my [*] Book I. Chap. V.

" my firſt Anſwer is, That though it is not " rightly done, to bring back thoſe Garments " into the Church again, at leaſt, in my " Opinion; yet ſeeing they are not of that " kind of Things, which are Impious in them- " ſelves, they do not ſeem to me to be of " that Moment, as that either the Paſtors " thereupon ſhould forſake their Miniſtry, " rather than wear them, or the Flocks fore- " go their Publick Food, rather than hear " their Paſtors Preaching in ſuch Garments. — " Thoſe Things which the Paſtors have no " Power to alter, let them bear with, ra- " ther than by Deſerting their Churches, give " occaſion to Satan to introduce greater, and " more dangerous Evils, which is the Thing " he ſo earneſtly drives at. And to the Peo- " ple our Advice is, That ſo long as the " Doctrine continues uncorrupt, they ſhould, " notwithſtanding theſe Things, hear it at- " tentively, and uſe the Sacraments religi- " ouſly, &c." Ep. 12. p. 107, 108.

HE gives the ſame Advice, with reſpect to Church-Muſick, the Croſs in Baptiſm; The Interrogatories uſed in Baptiſm; The Uſe of Unleavened Bread, and Kneeling at the LORD's Supper. " Since theſe Things are " not Idolatrous in themſelves, I think the " ſame of them, as of thoſe before menti- " oned:" That is, that neither the Miniſters ſhould forſake their Calling, nor the People the Communion of the Church, though they did not altogether like or approve of theſe Things.

THESE are undeniable Proofs, that, at leaſt, in the Opinion of Calvin and Beza, ſome Defects are to be tolerated in all Churches, and that Separation is not to be made upon the account of ſuch Inconveniencies, as it may be better to bear with, than raiſe a Schiſm in the Church about them.

I MUST farther obſerve, That the French Church upon this Principle, ever profeſſed a Readineſs to joyn in Communion with the Lutheran Churches, notwithſtanding many more, either real, or ſuppoſed Defects, than can be objected to the Church of England. For, we are told, the Lutherans receive the Uſe of Exorciſm in Baptiſm, and the Name of the Maſs for the Euchariſt, and Stone-Altars inſtead of Communion-Tables; that they Celebrate in Unleavened Bread, and have ſome Hymns Sung in the Latin Tongue; that they retain Images for Hiſtory, in their Churches, and require Auricular Confeſſion in ſome ſort, with other Things of the like Nature. Not to mention their Doctrines of Conſubſtantiation, Ubiquity, &c. which are known Errors, commonly embraced by Perſons of that Communion. Yet, notwithſtanding all this, the French Churches are ſo far from encouraging a Separation from the Lutheran Churches, that they themſelves have ever moſt heartily, and readily, as they had Occaſion, Communicated with them. Calvin not only Subſcribed the Augsburgh Confeſſion (as he himſelf tells us in his Epiſtle to Schalingius [r]) but ſays farther, that it was both Bucer's Opinion, [s] and his own, That there was no juſt Cauſe to Divide from Luther upon the Account of thoſe External Obſervances, which he retained in the Church.

AND Alting aſſures us, this was the common Opinion of the Reformed Divines, who followed Bucer and Calvin. For propoſing this Queſtion in his Problems, Whether the Orthodox may Lawfully Communicate in the LORD's Supper with the Lutherans? He reſolves it in the Affirmative, upon theſe four Arguments. 1. Becauſe they all agree in Fundamentals. 2. Becauſe Men ought to preſerve Unity in the Church, and hate Schiſm. 3. Becauſe we have the Example of the Prophets, and of CHRIST and his Apoſtles for Communicating in more Corrupt Churches than the Lutherans are. 4. Becauſe the beſt Divines of the laſt Age have approved it, as Capito, Bucer, Calvin, Martyr, Zanchy, Urſin, Toſſanus, Paræus, Scultetus, and others; ſome of whom, as they had occaſion, did actually Communicate with them. Alting. Theol. Problem. Par. 2. Probl. 18. p. 331.

MR. Quick himſelf tells us, That Monſieur Touſſaint, Paſtor of the Church of Orleance, being driven into Germany by the Heat of Perſecution, joyned himſelf readily with the Churches there, and ſpake honourably of their Communion, even when he was Cited before Brentius, Jacobus Andreas, and other Divines of Stutgard, to give an Account of his Preaching. He told them, The poor Churches of France Breathed after Peace with them, and with all the Churches of the Auguſtan Confeſſion, and had Written for it, and Prayed for it, and theſe laſt Ten Years ſpilt no other Ink but their own Blood in Defence of the Truth. Quick Introduct. to the Synodicon. p. 59.

BUT we have a greater Teſtimony than all theſe, which is the Determination of the National Synod of Tonneins, 1614. cap. 18. Where Treating of Expedients for reuniting the Proteſtant Churches, they ſay, Art. 13. " There " are ſome Points in Difference betwixt us " and the Lutheran Churches, wherein our " Agreement is very eaſy; of this Nature " are the Ceremonies of the Lutheran Church- " es, which may be excuſed, and tolerated, " becauſe they are Matters of Decency, not " Neceſſity.

AND again, Art. 27. " If a Man Commu- " nicate at the LORD's Table with a Perſon " that Errs in the Doctrine of Predeſtina- " tion, [r] Ep. Schalingio, p. 113. Nec vero Auguſtanam Confeſſionem repudio, cui pridem volens ac libens, ſubſcripſi, ſicuti eam Auctor ipſe interpretatus eſt.

[s] Ep. Farello. p. 9. Non patitur Bucerus, ut ob externas illas Obſervatiunculas a Luthero disjungamur. Nec ſane juſtas eſſe puto Diſſidii Cauſas.

" tion, or about the Nature of Jesus Christ, " or, who believes that the Body of our " Lord is every where, in all Places at " once; although this Error be very great, " yet may it not trouble him who is a Com- " municant with him. —— And as for thoſe " External Ceremonies uſed, and practiſed by " the Lutherans, we have no ſuch Difference, " but what may be eaſily Compoſed.

These are true Healing Principles indeed, and Proper Expedients for Peace and Union. And would all Diſſenters from the Church of England but conſent to Govern themſelves by theſe Principles, and Purſue the Methods propoſed by the Synod of Tonneins, I dare be bold to ſay in the Words of that Synod, That the Difference about the Ceremonies uſed, and practiſed in our Church, might eaſily be Compoſed. For they might Excuſe and Tolerate them at leaſt, if not Approve, and Juſtify them. Our Church's Practice, admitting it to be Faulty, is not more Corrupt than the Lutherans, nor her Communion more Unlawful than theirs: And if by the Principles of the French Church, a Man may ſafely Communicate with the Lutherans, notwithſtanding their Errors and Faults, both in Doctrine, and Practice, which are apparently greater than any can be pretended in the Church of England; I ſee not why, upon the ſame Principles it will not follow, that the Communion of the Church of England is by all means to be embraced, and Separation to be avoided, even though it were proved that there were ſome Things Faulty, either in the Church's Doctrine, or Practice, which might admit of a Regular and Seaſonable Reformation. And having ſaid this, I conclude, That whatever way we conſider this Matter, the Communion of the Church of England is Juſtifyed, and the Objections of Diſſenters truly Anſwered, upon the Principles of the French Church; which either herſelf Practiſes the very ſame Things that are Excepted againſt in our Communion (as I have proved in moſt Inſtances ſhe does) or elſe Commends and Approves what ſhe does not Practiſe; or, at leaſt, allows them, as Things Tolerable, and ſuch as may be born with, rather than divide Communion, and break the Churches Peace: Which were the Things I at firſt undertook to ſhew from the Acts, and Decrees of the French National Synods, which are the greateſt Authority of the Reformed Church of France.

The End of the Fourth BOOK.

THE CONCLUSION.

CONTAINING

A Serious Addreſs to Diſſenters, and to the Refugees of the French Church, to joyn in conſtant, and full Communion with the CHURCH of England.

I HAVE nothing more to do, but to cloſe this Diſcourſe with a Serious Exhortation to ſuch Perſons as are concerned in it, who are chiefly ſuch Diſſenters, as make uſe of the Arguments I have Examined in this Book, to Juſtify their Separation from the Church of England. To theſe, whether Laymen, or Teachers, I muſt take leave to ſay, and here once more remind them of it, They act, and go upon ſuch Principles, as would oblige them to ſeparate from the French Church, and perhaps all other Proteſtant Churches.

As to what concerns the Communion of Laymen in Particular, I have plainly made it appear, that ſcarce any Conditions are required of them in the Engliſh Church, but what are as much inſiſted on in the Church of France, as well in the Offices of Baptiſm, and the LORD's Supper, as other Parts of Divine Service. If the Engliſh Church challenge to herſelf a Power to Decree Rites and Ceremonies, requiring all her Members Peaceably to uſe and ſubmit to them; the French Church does the ſame in her Councils, and Synods, making Laws about indifferent Things, and obliging the People Conſcientiouſly to Obey them. By Virtue of that Power, ſhe Commands all Men to Pray Kneeling, to Receive the Communion Standing, to baptize their Children in the Church only on Sermon-Days, to give them no Heathen Names, nor the Names of Angel, Baptiſt, Emanuel, &c. To Receive the LORD's Supper in leavened, and common Bread only, Conſecrated by a Form, Delivered with a Form, and taken from the Miniſter's Hands only: With many other Ceremonies of the like Nature, of which I have given a Particular Account in the foregoing Treatiſe. Now either Men muſt ſay, That the Church of England uſes but a Lawful Power, in Preſcribing ſuch Rites as theſe, and that all Men ought peaceably to comply with her Rules, and joyn Chriſtianly in full Communion with her; or elſe that the French Church abuſes her Power likewiſe, and that there is as great a Neceſſity to ſeparate from her Communion, as from the Communion of the Church of England. But if they cannot conſent to Condemn the French Church, then neither, in Juſtice, ought they to Condemn the Engliſh: Since the Reaſons of Communion and Separation are the very ſame in both, and he that forſakes the Communion of the one, is by his Principles obliged to forſake the other alſo. When Men will take Time to conſider this Impartially (as here they are called upon to do, and directed alſo in this Diſcourſe how to make a true Judgment of the Practice of both Churches compared together) it may then be hoped they will lay aſide their Prejudices againſt the Church of England, and quit thoſe Principles, which, if truly followed, will lead them to ſeparate from the French Church, and, it may be, all the Churches of the Reformation.

I SAY the ſame, with Reſpect to the Teachers alſo: The very ſame Reaſons and Principles that make them keep up, and maintain Separate Meetings in England, would oblige them to do the like in France, were they reſolved to purſue the ſame Meaſures that they do here. For, Conformity, and Uniformity is no leſs ſtrictly required by the Rules of the French Church, than it is by the Engliſh. The ſame Subſcriptions and Oaths, and Aſſent and Conſent, and Vows and Covenants, and Canonical Obedience are exacted of the French Miniſters, as are of us here, and he that will not, or cannot comply with thoſe Conditions, can regularly be no Miniſter of the French Church. He muſt either be debarred from entering into the Miniſtry at firſt, or be Cenſured, Silenced, and Depoſed; if after his Subſcription to their Articles, Liturgy, Diſcipline, or Canons, he acts contrary to his Subſcription, or raiſes any Contention about them. When he is thus Depoſed, he muſt Peaceably ſubmit to the Depoſition, and leave off Officiating as a Miniſter; not ſet up a Separate Meeting, and Preach (when Silenced) againſt the Will of his Superiors. The firſt is agreeable to the Rules both of the French and Engliſh Church, but Nonconformiſts in England call it Sacrilegious Deſertion: And therefore they take the other Way, and ſet up Separate Meetings, and Preach when Silenced by the Law, though that be as contrary to the Rules and Diſcipline of the French Church, as it is to thoſe of the Church of England. Hence it is plain, That they who ſet up, and maintain Separate Meetings in England, muſt, upon the ſame Reaſons and Principles think themſelves obliged to do the ſame in the French Church alſo. For it cannot now be pretended, That the Conditions of the Miniſtry in the Engliſh Church are ſo vaſtly different from the French, that Miniſters are forced to ſet up Separate Meetings here, which they ſhould not be compelled to do there: Since I have ſhewn this Plea to be Groundleſs, by Examining the particular Exceptions made againſt Subſcription in England; and proving that the very ſame, if not much greater Difficulties occur in the Subſcriptions of the French Church.

NOR do I ſee what can be urged farther in this Caſe, unleſs it be the Buſineſs of Reordination, which ſome reckon ſo great a Charge againſt the Act of Uniformity; becauſe it obliges every Beneficiary to receive Epiſcopal Ordination, according to the Form, and Rites of the Church of England. But what harm there is in this, I confeſs, I never yet could ſee, and I am ſure there is nothing in it contrary to the Principles or Practice of Geneva, nor perhaps, of the whole French Church. For 1. At Geneva it is their common Practice, whenever they remove a Miniſter from one Church to another, to give him a new and ſolemn Ordination by Impoſition of Hands, and Prayer. This we learn from an Epiſtle of the Paſtors of Geneva to thoſe of Berne, which is among Calvin's Epiſtles. p. 264. Where ſpeaking of one Camperel, a Miniſter of Geneva, who was Tranſlated to a Country-Pariſh, they ſay, [t] "He ſuffered himſelf to "be ordained there by our Brother Calvin, "&c. And we do not think that to be a "Childiſh Pageantry, when a Miniſter is "Aſſigned to any Church by a ſolemn Rite, "with Publick Invocation of the Name of "GOD." Now if it be lawful by the Rules of the Church of Geneva, for a Miniſter to receive a new ſolmen Ordination, when he is Tranſlated from one Church to another: Why cannot Men in England conſent to receive a New Ordination, when the Law requires it, in order to ſettle themſelves Regularly in any Church? Eſpecially when it is for the Sake of Peace and Union, and to take off all manner of Doubtfulneſs, and Scruples from the People. I Diſpute not now, whether their former Ordinations were Valid: It is certain, they are not more Valid than thoſe of Geneva; nor can they themſelves think them more Valid, than the Miniſters of Geneva think theirs: Wherefore, if it be lawful at Geneva, for a Miniſter to receive a New Ordination, becauſe the Laws require it: I do not ſee what can make it Unlawful in England to ſubmit to the ſame Thing, [t] Paſſus eſt ſe ordinari illic a Fratre noſtro Calvino. — Ludum puerilem eſſe non putamus, quum ſolenni Ritu addicitur uni Eccleſiæ Miniſter, cum publica Nominis Dei Invocatione.

Thing, in Compliance with the Law, when Men have no other Regular Way to ſettle themſelves in any Cure; let their Opinion of their former Ordination be what it will, which comes not into the preſent Diſpute. For, even ſuppoſing their former Ordination to be Valid, I ſhew, they may ſubmit to a New Ordination, without Sin: And if they will be Peaceable, they ought to do it, after the Example of Geneva, rather than ſet up Separate Meetings, and Preach againſt the Will of their Superiors, to the Diſturbance of the Peace of the Church.

2. WHETHER the ſame Thing be Practiſed all over France that is at Geneva, I have not yet obſerved: But this we are certain of, which is more to the Purpoſe, That generally the French Miniſters who come over into England, are ready to Receive Epiſcopal Ordination, when they can have it. Which is an Argument, that they are neither Enemies to Epiſcopal Power and Juriſdiction itſelf, nor think it contrary to the Rules of their Church, or the Rules of the Goſpel, to receive a New Ordination. And if thoſe I am ſpeaking to, will prove to the World, that they are willing to imitate the Practice, and walk by the Rules of the French Church, they muſt imitate their Miniſters in this Particular, as well as Conform in all other Points, wherein I have ſhewed the Agreement of the two Churches. They are here called upon once more to ſhew their Conformity, by Imitating the Practice of the French Church, where it is agreeable to the Church of England. And ſure, they that are Peaceable cannot refuſe to do this, which is according to their own Rule of Reformation. To them, therefore, I Addreſs this Diſcourſe, not to Men who are wholly governed by Intereſt, or Paſſion (on whom it is not likely to make any great Impreſſion) but to the Reaſonable and the Peaceable, who, it is to be hoped, will take it into their moſt Serious Conſideration.

MY laſt Addreſs is to thoſe Gentlemen of the French Church, who are Fled hither for Sanctuary, from the Heat and Fury of the late Perſecution. What I have to ſay to them, is, That as they regard the Venerable Authority of their own National Synods, and the avowed Principles of that Church, into which they were Baptized; whoſe Doctrine they Profeſs, and by whoſe Diſcipline they are willing to be Governed; they ſhould Vigorouſly Maintain, and Aſſert the Cauſe of the Church of England, againſt all that ſet up Diſtinct Communions, and unreaſonably Divide themſelves from Her. The French Church, it is certain, by her Principles, is no Friend to Separation: All her Sons, who may be ſuppoſed to underſtand her Principles, muſt needs here joyn with me: Therefore, if there be any who Act otherwiſe, and either ſecretly, or openly Encourage Separation, or any Principles tending thereto, they muſt be concluded to Act as much againſt the true Intereſt, and Principles of their own Church, as they do againſt the Church of England. I do not, in ſaying this, intend to Accuſe any, but only warn them againſt the Force and Subtilty of a dangerous Temptation, which they may be liable to, for Want of a right Apprehenſion of the Principles and Conſtitution of their own Church, or thoſe of the Church of England. For, ſome perhaps may think, that, becauſe there are different Rites and Ceremonies uſed in the two Churches, that therefore their Principles are different alſo; or that becauſe the Practice of Diſſenters in ſome Things comes nearer the Practice of the French Church, than the Practice of the Church of England does, that therefore the Principles of Diſſenters are the ſame with the French, and their Communion rather to be choſen than that of the Church of England. If any are thus perſuaded, I muſt take leave to tell them, they underſtand not truly the Principles of their own Church, and act directly againſt them. For it is one grand Principle in the French Church, common to her with the Church of England, That every National Church has Power to appoint what Indifferent Rites and Ceremonies ſhe judges Proper, and Expedient for her own Edification; and that all the Members of any ſuch Church, are bound in Conſcience, quietly and peaceably to ſubmit to thoſe her Orders; and that they who raiſe Contention about ſuch Things, and rather Separate than Comply with them, are Guilty of a Cauſeleſs Separation. 'Tis another Principle naturally flowing from the former, that Different Rites in diſtinct National Churches, make no Difference in the Faith, nor ought to hinder the Members of one Church from Joyning in Communion with another; but that every one is bound to uſe the Rites and Ceremonies of that Church with which he communicates, though they be different from his own. A Frenchman is bound to Receive the Communion Kneeling in the Engliſh Church, and an Engliſhman to Receive it Standing in the French Church, becauſe theſe are the Laws, and Cuſtoms of each Communion. Thirdly, It is a farther Principle of the French Church, that they who Separate Cauſeleſsly from their own Church, are not to be Encouraged in their Separation by the Members of any other Church, nor to be received into their Communion, till they have made Satisfaction to their own Church. Now ſuppoſing all this to be true, it is Impoſſible for any, who are true Members of the French Church, whilſt they keep to their own Principles, and act by their own Rules, either to Condemn the Ceremonies of the Engliſh Church, or give any Countenance to the preſent Separation. For, though ſome of our Rites may differ from theirs, yet we are agreed in theſe Common Principles, which Juſtify each other's Rites, and prove it Lawful, yea neceſſary, to Comply with the Cuſtoms of either Church, when we Communicate with them: And they who Separate from either Church upon the Account of ſuch Things, are Juſtly Condemned by the Principles of both. So that the Practice of our Diſſenters ſtands Condemned by the Principles of the French Church, even in thoſe Things in which they pretend to Imitate her Practice: Becauſe they act againſt thoſe common Principles of Union, which oblige all Men to comply with the received Laws and Cuſtoms of their own Church, and not contend about Foreign Rites, to cauſe Diviſions, and needleſs Separation.

WHEN theſe Things are truly Weighed, and Conſidered by thoſe of the French Communion, they cannot but in Juſtice to their own Principles, diſclaim both the Principles, and Practices of Diſſenters, and heartily Eſpouſe the Cauſe of the Church of England againſt the preſent Separation. If any do not, it is either becauſe they underſtand not their own Principles, or elſe act upon Parcicular Intereſt, againſt the common Intereſt, and Principles of their Church; for which they are liable to be Cenſured by their own Diſcipline, and Canons, and much more by their National Synods, if ever it ſhould pleaſe GOD to reſtore them to the free Uſe and Exerciſe of their Religion in their Native Soil again. There is this great Reaſon to engage them to Joyn heartily in Communion with the Church of England, whilſt they Sojourn here; becauſe in ſo doing, they keep ſteady to their own Principles, obſerve their own Diſcipline, and act by the Rules of their National Synods, which teach them to comply with the Laws of the National Church, where-ever they dwell, and more eſpecially the Laws of the Engliſh Church, for which their Synods Profeſs a moſt profound and deep Veneration. By this means, they will do Honour to their own Church, and Vindicate both her, and their own Reputation: They will do great Service, both to the Church of England, and Diſſenters, and themſelves at once, by being happy Inſtruments of Compoſing our moſt unhappy Differences, and Convincing thoſe of the adverſe Party, that their Separation is not grounded upon any Principles, or Parallel Practices of the French Church. To be thus Inſtrumental in doing Good, only by being true to their own Principles and Profeſſion, as it is a juſt Debt they owe to Religion, and their Mother-Church, ſo it cannot want its Reward: Since it is no leſs Glorious, and Meritorious an Act, to lend an helping Hand towards Ending a Schiſm in GOD's Church, than it is to confeſs his Truth in Time of Perſecution. Thus they may cloſe, and unite both ſafely and honourably, with the Church of England, upon their own Principles, and never find Cauſe to Repent of being Juſt and True to their own Rules, whether they continue here, or be reſtored, by GOD's Bleſſing, to the Land of their Nativity again.

WHEREAS, on the contrary, if they unite with Diſſenters of any Denomination, they muſt do it upon ſuch Principles as directly Contradict their own; Principles that are neither Safe, nor Honourable, nor laſting; that tend as much to Deſtroy the Conſtitution, and well-being of the French Church, as of the Church of England. If they cloſe with the Independents, or give any Countenance to that Way, they are already Condemned by one of their own National Synods, [u] which declares againſt the Independent Principles, as utterly Pernicious, and Deſtructive of all Order and Peace, both in Church and State. If they Unite with the Presbyterians, they muſt no longer Maintain the Principles of the French Church, which both allows the Engliſh Dioceſan Epiſcopacy, as Conſonant to the Word of GOD, and Condemns all manner of Separation from the Engliſh Church (whether upon the account of Epiſcopacy, or any other Reaſon) as uttely Sinful, and Unlawful. Theſe Principles cannot poſſibly conſiſt with the preſent Principles, and Practices of the Engliſh Presbyterians, who labour for the Extirpation of Epiſcopacy, as a Thing Repugnant to the Word of GOD, and offer many other Pleas to Juſtify Separation. So that, as all the Members of the French Church regard their own Principles, and Reverence the Authority of their National Synods, and tender the Welfare of their own Conſtitution, they are obliged in Honour, Intereſt, and Conſcience, to Diſtinguiſh themſelves upon this Occaſion, and ſhew their Diſlike of the preſent Separation. Otherwiſe, thoſe very Synods, which now they eſteem their Glory, will only remain laſting Monuments of their Reproach; as Authentick Records, and Bodies of good Laws are but Regiſters of Mens Diſgrace, when when they Confute their Principles by their Practice. I hope there are no French Confeſſors in England, but will take Care to avoid this Cenſure, and have both the Honeſty, and Courage to own their Principles here, as they have done elſewhere upon other Occaſions, in the ſevereſt Times of Perſecution. And then, if ever it ſhall pleaſe GOD to reſtore them to their Ancient Rights add Privileges, they may return triumphant without Blemiſh, or Reproach; having neither Denyed their Faith, nor Deſerted their Principles, nor Cancelled their Diſcipline, nor opened a Way, by a bad Example, for others in like manner to break in upon their Eſtabliſhment, and Deſtroy the Union of their Churches; which it has been the Wiſdom of their National Synods, with ſo great Care, to Maintain, and Preſerve. They might then alſo return with Epiſcopal Dignity, if they pleaſed, more ſtrictly United to us; and that perhaps might make Way for a more General Union of all Chriſtians; which if it could be once accompliſhed, as one of their Synods [x] Words it, "We ſhould then be more "Conſiderable, and Miniſters might Preach "with more Authority, and greater Succeſs than ever." I Pray GOD Proſper all honeſt Deſigns that are uſed to Promote ſo Glorious an End, and give every Man Grace to follow after the Things which make for Peace, and Things wherewith one may Edify another.

DISCOURSE

Concerning the

Mercy of GOD

PENITENT SINNERS:

Intended for the Uſe of PERSONS Troubled in Mind.

By JOSEPH BINGHAM,

Psalm ciii. 13.

As a Father pitieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.

AS there is no Quality in God more Amiable in itſelf, or more Comfortable in its Conſideration to Human Nature, than the Attribute of Mercy: So there is nothing the Scripture ſeems more Emphatically to impreſs upon us a firm Belief and a right Apprehenſion of, than this. It repreſents God as delighting and glorying in this Character, That he is Merciful and Gracious, Long-ſuffering, and abundant in Goodneſs and Truth; keeping Mercy for Thouſands, forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion and Sin, as God proclaimed before Moſes at Mount Sinai, Exod. xxxiv. 6. And the more to make us ſenſible of this, it condeſcends to ſpeak to us in the moſt familiar Way, raiſing Idea's of God's Mercy in us by Things that we are moſt intimately acquainted with; comparing the Actions and Diſpoſition of God to thoſe of a tender and a Compaſſionate Father toward his Children: This is very Pathetically repreſented by our Saviour in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, Luke xv. And here by the Pſalmiſt in the Text, As a Father pitieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

From which Words my Deſign is to ſpeak of the Mercy of God, not in General, as it relates to all his Creatures (for his Mercy is over all his Works) but as it particularly relates to Penitent Sinners, who are here deſcribed under the Character of them that fear him. In doing this I ſhall

I. Give ſome eminent Inſtances of God's ſignal Pity and Mercy toward Penitent Sinners.

II. Obviate and Anſwer ſome Difficulties, which often make Penitent Sinners think they want God's Mercy, when they really enjoy it.

III. Apply the Diſcourſe in ſome Practical and Moral Reflections.

In ſpeaking to the firſt Point, I muſt not now inſiſt, either Firſt upon God's ſending his Son to die for Mankind; though it was a moſt ſingular Act of God's Mercy, recommending his Love towards us, in that whilſt we were yet Sinners, Christ died for us; Nor Secondly, upon God's ſending his Holy Spirit, to Call and Prevent us with his Aſſiſting Grace: Becauſe both theſe are Acts of Mercy antecedent to our Repentance, and offered to Sinners in Order to make them Penitent, and turn them unto God, before they have any Power or Will to turn themſelves. But the Acts of Pity I am to ſpeak of, are ſuch as God ſhews to Penitent Sinners, when they firſt begin to repent, and are actually on their Way to God. And theſe are Three. 1. That he takes Notice of the firſt Eſſays and Beginnings of Goodneſs in them, and bears with their Weakneſs, till they arrive to Strength and a Perfect Reformation. 2. That He helps and aſſiſts them all along in their Progreſs. 3. That He crowns their Endeavours by a kind Reception, and complete Pardon of all their Offences.

1. He takes Notice of the firſt Eſſays and Beginnings of Goodneſs in them, and bears with their Weakneſs, till they arrive to Strength and a Perfect Reformation. A Father does not expect the ſame Manly Service from his Children, whilſt they are Children, as he may require of them when they are arrived to the State of Perfect Men: Nor does he exact the ſame Meaſure of Activity, Labour, or Sagacity from thoſe of a weaker Frame, or meaner Parts and Abilities, as he does from thoſe whom he knows to be of a more bright and lively Genius, or a more Robuſt and Athletick Conſtitution. So in like manner it is with GOD in his Dealings with Penitent Sinners: He does not expect at their firſt Converſion to find in them immediately all the pleaſing Graces and Perfections of Nature and full grown Chriſtians. There is a Weakneſs and Dulneſs, and Prejudices, and a Littleneſs of Faith, which for ſome Time he is willing to bear in them, as CHRIST did in his own Diſciples. So long as they are hearty and ſincere, he does not exact more than they are able to offer him: Only He requires their Prayers, and Endeavours after more Grace, that they may go on to Perfection. He is pleaſed to hear a ſincere Heart Cry, LORD, I Believe, Help thou my Unbelief. He conſiders alſo, that He has not made all his Creatures of the ſame Size and Abilities, nor given equal Meaſures and Portions of his Grace to all alike: Some have more Time and Leiſure, better Opportunities, leſs Encumbrance, Quicker Underſtandings, and more Faithful Memories than others; ſome have an happier Education, and are qualified to conſult the Oracles of GOD themſelves; whilſt others, for the little Inſtruction they get, are forced to be beholden to the Charity of others. He does not therefore exact the ſame Meaſures of Performance from all alike, but only requires Men to be ſincere to what they know, and what they are able: To whomſoever much is given, of him much ſhall be required; but to whom little is given, of him little ſhall be required: Only He expects an Honeſt and Induſtrious Mind, to do what Men are able, according to the Proportion of Grace that He affords them; And then the Widows Mites are as acceptable an Offering, as the Abundance of others; and in all other Caſes, if there be firſt a Willing Mind, it is accepted according to that a Man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For GOD is pleaſed with the firſt Appearances of real Goodneſs in his Children, and not only accepts them, but helps and encourages them to go on to Perfection. The bruiſed Reed he will not break, the ſmoking Flax he will not quench, till he ſends forth Judgment unto Victory. Which brings me to the Second Act of GOD's Mercy toward Repenting Sinners, which is,

2. THAT He not only bears with their Weakneſs, but helps and aſſiſts them all along in their Progreſs, till they come to full Strength and a perfect Reformation. This he does by the various Methods of his Grace; inviting, nay drawing them to himſelf, by the Powerful, though many Times inviſible and undiſcernable Operations of his HOLY SPIRIT. Which SPIRIT illuminates their underſtanding by Degrees, and leads them into all neceſſary Truth; He takes off the Hardneſs of their Hearts, and corrects the Frowardneſs of their Wills; He regulates all their Affections, and fixes them to their right and proper Objects; giving a new Turn and Biaſs to all their Inclinations, till they come to a perfect Conformity to the Will of GOD; He opens their Hearts, and ſtill makes them more and more attentive to the Word of GOD; by the Promiſes whereof He fortifies them againſt Terror and Deſpair, and makes all the ſeeming Difficulties of Religion wear off, by adding new Strength, Succour, and Courage to their firſt Endeavours, and keeping their Minds warm in Devotion, and fixed and intent upon the Buſineſs of another World. This Good SPIRIT omits no Opportunities of doing them Good, but takes all the moſt proper and ſeaſonable Occaſions to inſpire good Thoughts into them. Even a Thouſand ſeeming Accidents of their Lives become Providential Calls and Admonitions to them, whilſt the SPIRIT makes every Thing work together for Good to them that love GOD. By theſe and ſuch like Means (ſtrengthening, not deſtroying our Natural Faculties) a Man who before was Weak, nay Dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins, is not only quickened and ſet at Liberty, but able to ſay with the great Apoſtle, I can do all Things through CHRIST that ſtrengtheneth me. This is the Second Act of GOD's Mercy toward Repenting Sinners, That He helps and aſſiſts them all along in their Progreſs, till they arrive to full Strength and a perfect Reformation. Then

3. HE crowns their Endeavours by a kind Reception into Peace and Favour, and a compleat Pardon of all their Offences. Whenever a Sinner returns again to him from his Evil Ways, he immediately lays aſide his Wrath, cancels his former Diſpleaſure, blots out the Sinner's Ingratitude, forgets his Offences, and remembers his Sins no more. He retains no ſecret Grudge, or Thoughts of Revenge againſt him; never expoſtulates the Matter with him more about his former Life, chides not, upbraids him not with his by-paſt Follies, but paſſes an Act of Oblivion upon all his Offences, and readily receives him into Favour. "If the Wicked will turn from all his Sins "that he hath committed, and keep all my "Statutes, and do that which is lawful and "right, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die. "All his Tranſgreſſions that he hath com-"mitted, ſhall not be mentioned unto him: "In his Righteouſneſs that he hath done he "ſhall live," is GOD's general Promiſe to all repenting Sinners, Ezek. xviii. 21, 22. And Jer. xxxi. 34. I will forgive their Iniquity, and I will remember their Sin no more.

IN which Places we are to take Notice of the Greatneſs and Extenſiveneſs of GOD's Mercy, together with the Readineſs and Quickneſs of it; which are Qualifications that moſt eminently recommend it above any Thing that is ordinarily to be found in Human Goodneſs.

FOR GOD Pardons readily, not only leſſer Faults, but thoſe of the greateſt Magnitude. How great were David's Crimes, Adultery and Murder, Ingratitude to GOD, and Forgetfulneſs of his Mercies towards him? And yet upon his true Repentance GOD readily pardoned him. He could no ſooner make an hearty Confeſſion of his Sins, but the Prophet in GOD's Name gave him a comfortable Abſolution: The LORD hath put away thy Sin, thou ſhall not die, 2 Sam. xii. 13. But there was one Sin greater than all theſe of David put together, which yet GOD pardoned; and that was Murdering CHRIST his own SON, the Prince of Life and Glory. Upon which St. Auſtin makes this Diſcourſe, to comfort the greateſt of Sinners. "Let no Man [a] ſay, "I have done ſuch or ſuch a Thing, and I "fear it will not be forgiven me. What haſt "thou done? What great Sin haſt thou com- "mitted; Tell me, ſome monſtrous, grievous, "horible Crime, which thou art afraid to "think of. Let it be what it will: Haſt "thou killed CHRIST? there is no Fact "worſe than that, becauſe there is nothing "better than CHRIST. How great a Wicked- "neſs is it to Murder CHRIST! But the Jews "did Murder him, yet many of them after- "wards repented and believed, and drank his "Blood; and the Sin which they had com- "mitted was forgiven them."

THIS Diſcourſe is founded upon St. Peter's Sermon to the Jews, which we read of Acts ii. 22. Where he firſt lays before them, the Greatneſs of their Crime: Ye Men of Iſrael, hear theſe Words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a Man approved of God among you by Miracles and Wonders, and Signs, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as ye yourſelves alſo know: Him being delivered by the determinate Counſel and Fore-knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked Hands have crucified and ſlain. What then? Muſt they for ever deſpair of Pardon for this? No: But repent, ſays he, and be baptized every one of you in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt for the Remiſſion of Sins, and ye ſhall receive the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 38. And then it follows, (v. 41.) That they who gladly received his Word, were baptived: And the ſame Day there were added unto them about Three Thouſand Souls. In the next Chapter he Diſcourſed much after the ſame manner, and with the like good Effect. Ye denied the Holy One, and the Juſt, and deſired a Murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the Prince of Life, whom God hath raiſed from the Dead, Acts iii. 14. yet he does not diſcourage them from ſeeking Pardon, but gives them Aſſurance of obtaining it, if they would take the proper Methods to procure it: Which was, Repent and be Converted, that your Sins may be blotted out, when the Times of Refreſhing ſhall come from the Preſence of the Lord. And ſo it was: For many of them which heard the Word, believed; and the Number of the Men was about Five Thouſand, Acts iv. 4.

THESE were ſignal Inſtances of GOD's Mercy, in Pardoning the Murderers of his own SON, left upon Record for our Inſtruction and Comfort; that no one might deſpair of GOD's Mercy, whoſe Sins are not greater than that of Murdering CHRIST.

ST. Paul ſays, he himſelf obtained Mercy for the ſame Reaſon, that he might be an encouraging Example of GOD's Forbearance to all others, 1 Tim. i. 15, 16. This is a faithful Saying, and worthy of all Acceptation, that Jeſus Chriſt came into the World to ſave Sinners, of whom I am chief. For he was before a Blaſphemer, and a Perſecutor, and Injurious, and concerned in the Murder of St. Stephen, and other of GOD's Saints, who when they were put to Death, he gave his Voice againſt them. Howbeit for this Cauſe, ſays he, I obtained Mercy, that in me firſt, or in me the chiefeſt of Sinners, Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all Long-ſuffering, for a Pattern to them which ſhould hereafter believe to Life Everlaſting.

BUT it will be ſaid, all theſe were Sins committed before Baptiſm, which much alters the Caſe: For there is no ſecond Baptiſm for Remiſſion of Sins allowed after the firſt, for thoſe who are once enlightned, and have taſted of the Heavenly Gift, and were made Partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and have taſted the good Word of God, if they ſhall fall away, to renew them again unto Repentance: Seeing they crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open Shame. To which I anſwer. That this does not at all alter the Caſe: For though the Sins of David, and the Jews, and St. Paul were committed before Baptiſm, yet they were not before Circumciſion, which was the ſame Thing to them, as Baptiſm is now unto us, an Entrance into the Covenant of GOD, and the Viſible Seal of it. So that as GOD allowed of a Method of Expiation after Circumciſion, ſo he does now after Baptiſm, though Baptiſm be now no more to be repeated over again, than Circumciſion was. For

For GOD in His Mercy, as St. Auſtin obſerves [b]; has allowed us Three Ways to obtain Remiſſion of Sins. 1. Baptiſm, which cleanſes us from all manner of Sins, Original and Actual, great and ſmall. 2. Prayer and Daily Addreſs to the Throne of Grace for leſſer Sins of daily Incurſion, without which no Man lives. For Pardon of theſe he has taught us to ſay; Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. 3. For greater and more heinous Sins he has allowed us the Expiation of a more ſolemn and particular Repentance; and that either Publick, in Caſe of ſcandalous, flagrant, and publick Crimes, which deſerve Excommunication from the Body of CHRIST; or elſe private Repentance between GOD and ourſelves, for ſuch Crimes as do not bring us under the Publick Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church. So that beſide Baptiſm we have a double Method of obtaining Pardon of Sins, according to their different Quality and Greatneſs. Which Pardon is Confirmed and Sealed to us in the Holy Communion, as it were by a viſible Demonſtration, which gives us, as by a Deed of Conveyance, the Body and Blood of CHRIST, and all the Expiation and Atonement that attends them. So that a Sinner needs not complain of GOD for Want of Mercy, ſince there are ſo many Ways of Diſpenſing Pardon to us after Baptiſm.

BUT ſome, who are Actually pardoned by GOD and in his Favour, cannot think themſelves ſo, becauſe they find his Hand in ſome Meaſure ſtill upon them; either Firſt in Temporal Calamities, which are many Times the Natural Effects of Sin; or, Secondly in Providential Afflictions, which he for Wiſe Reaſons, and their own Good, is pleaſed to lay and continue upon them; Or, Thirdly, becauſe they are ſometimes under freſh Agonies upon the Remembrance of their By-paſt Sins; Or, Fourthly, becauſe GOD's Grace is not ſo powerful in them, as to cleanſe them from all the Relicks of ſinful Frailty and Corruption, and make them Angels before their Time; Or, Laſtly, becauſe they are ſtill liable to Temptations, and troubled with black and ugly Thoughts, darted into their Minds againſt their Wills, by the Power and Subtlety of Satan. Now to remove theſe Scruples and Complaints I proceed to the Second general Thing propoſed, which was,

II. TO obviate and anſwer thoſe Difficulties, which often make penitent Sinners think they want GOD's Mercy, when they really enjoy it. And to theſe I ſhall anſwer both in General and in Particular.

IN General, I ſay, All this proceeds only from a wrong Apprehenſion of the Mercy of GOD, which does not oblige Him to remove all theſe ſeveral Sorts of Afflictions, or Imperfections from Sinners at the Moment that He pardons their Sins. For CHRIST had no Sin; he was Innocence itſelf, that needed no Pardon; and yet he was a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with Grief all his Life: Nay, he was ſubject to Temptations alſo, as we are, yet without Sin, that he might know how to ſuccour them that are tempted. What Wonder then, that any mortal Sinner ſhould be ſubject to ſuch Calamities, as CHRIST himſelf, the Immortal GOD, who knew no Sin, was pleaſed to ſubmit to, as well for our Benefit as Inſtruction.

BUT to anſwer a little more particularly and diſtinctly to the ſeveral Scruples: I obſerved in the firſt Place, That Temporal Calamities were many times only the natural Effects of Sin. And why ſhould any Man wonder, that GOD ſhould permit the natural Effects of Sin to remain upon the Sinner after Pardon, when in many Caſes it could not be otherwiſe without a ſpecial Miracle? If a Man by a drunken or debauched Life, brings upon himſelf a lingring Fever, or a Conſumption, GOD may pardon his Sin upon his true Repentance; but he is not obliged, either by any Promiſe, or by the Nature of his Mercy, to work a ſpecial Miracle in his Caſe, to deliver him from his bodily Diſtemper. Nay, perhaps it is a Mercy not to deliver him from it; ſince without a ſecond Miracle of Preventing Grace, perhaps the Man as ſoon as he was healed, would return to his old Courſe again. It is rather Mercy therefore to let the natural Effects of his Sins remain upon him, even after Pardon.

2. SO again, If GOD ſends ſome Providential Afflictions upon Men; they are not to interpret theſe always as Acts of Anger or Judgment, but Arguments of His Kindneſs and Mercy, deſigned by GOD only to prevent Sin, and keep them humble. As it was in the Caſe of St. Paul, who was a Choſen Veſſel, and and a particular Favourite of Heaven; yet GOD thought fit to afflict him with a Thorn in the Flesh, a Messenger of Satan sent to buffet him, to keep him humble, lest he should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the Revelations that were given him. For this he besought the LORD thrice, that it might depart from him: But he only received this Answer, That GOD's Grace should bs sufficient for him, that GOD's Strength should be perfected in his Weakness. With which Answer he was satisfied, and made no farther Complaints, as if GOD was wanting to him in his Mercy: But, most gladly therefore, says he, will I rather glory in my Infirmities, that the Power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in Infirmities, in Reproaches, in Necessities, in Persecutions, in Distresses for Christ's sake: For when I am weak, then am I strong, 2 Cor. xii. 10. The Afflictions of Job were, in like manner, not Expressions of GOD's Anger, but his Infinite Wisdom and Kindness to him; to approve his Patience to all the World, and give him such a surprizing Victory over Satan, as made even the Adversary himself imagine, there was something more in Human Nature, assisted by Grace, than he before was apprehensive of. So that when GOD sends Providential Afflictions upon penitent Sinners they are not always Scourges, but sometimes Mercies, to try their Patience, or to preserve them from Sin. And if their Prayers for Removal of them are at last heard, as Job's was, they may rejoyce and be thankful. If they are denyed, as St. Paul's was, they may be patient still, and rejoyce in their Infirmities with the great Apostle, that the Power of CHRIST may rest upon them.

3. BUT some Penitents are afraid their Sins are not pardoned, because they are frequently under Fears and Apprehensions of GOD's Anger and Displeasure recurring upon them. Now, if this be for any new wilfull Sins committed after Pardon, they have Reason enough indeed to fear; because of that Saying of our SAVIOUR, Thou art made Whole; sin no more, lest a worse Thing come unto thee. But if it be only for the Remembrance of former Sins, which are already pardoned, such Fears are no Indications of their being out of GOD's Favour, but Tokens of his Mercy, who suffers such Fears to recur upon them, to make their Repentance Commensurate with their Lives, and by the Abhorrence of by-passed Sins, to keep them from future Falling. That it is so, is evident from the Case of David, who after his Sin, was pardoned by the Mouth of the Prophet, and he was infallibly assured of it, yet he lay under great Agonies and Conflicts of Soul upon the Remembrance of his great Transgressions. Hear one or two of his Expressions and Complaints upon this Occasion, Psal. xxxviii. 2. Thy Arrows stick fast in me, and thy Hand presseth me sore: There is no Soundness in my Flesh, because of thy sore Anger, neither is there any Rest in my Bones by reason of my Sin. For my Iniquities are gone over my Head, as a sore Burden, they are too heavy for me. My Wounds stink and are corrupt because of my Foolishness; I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly: I go mourning all the Day long. For my Loins are filled with a loathsome Disease, and there is no Soundness in my Flesh. I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared for the very Disquietness of my Heart. So again, Psal. lxxvii. 2. My Sore ran in the Night, and ceased not; my Soul refused to be comforted. I remembred God, and was troubled: I complained, and my Spirit was overwhelmed. Thou holdst my Eyes waking, I am so troubled that I cannot speak. Will the Lord cast off for ever? And will He be no more entreated? Is his Mercy clean gone for ever? And doth his Promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be Gracious? Hath He in Anger shut up his Tender-Mercies? At last, he recollects, and checks himself for these Complaints; I said, This is my own Infirmity: But I will remember the Years of the Right Hand of the most High. I will call to mind what GOD before has done for me, and then there will be no Room nor Reason for such Complaints as these.

4. BUT Some are afraid their Sins are not pardoned, because they find in themselves still the Remainders of Sin; and Grace is not so powerful in them, as to conquer all manner of Sin whatsoever. Now, if this be meant of Willful, Reigning, Gross, Habitual Sins, they have Reason indeed to fear: For then their Repentance is not sincere, whilst they knowingly cherish any one Reigning Vice in their Souls; For he that keepeth the whole Law, and yet offendeth in one Point, is guilty of all. He that said, Do not commit Adultery, said also, Do not Kill: Now if thou commit no Adultery, yet if thou Kill, thou art become a Transgressor of the Law; and so long thou art not in a State of Grace and Favour with GOD, because thou art a willfull Transgressor of his Law. But if it be meant only of lesser Sins of Ignorance, Inadvertency, sudden Surprize, and Human Frailty, to which all Men are liable, against which they Daily strive, but cannot wholly conquer; these are consistent with a State of Grace and Favour: Because the very best of Men are still liable to them. In many Things we offend all: And in this Sense, there is no Man lives, and sinneth not. But GOD in his Mercy hath provided a Remedy for these, which is our Daily Prayers: Forgive us our Trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us. If it were otherwise, our Condition were very Deplorable! For then no Man could be saved; there being no Man, except CHRIST alone, that ever lived without these. So that if GOD should be extreme to mark what is done amiss, no Man could abide it; If He should strictly enter into Judgment with us for these Things, no Man living could be justified in his Sight.

For this is only the Perfection of Angels, and the Privilege of the Spirits of Juſt Men made Perfect. Whilſt we are in this Body of Fleſh, there will be thoſe Failings and Imperfections in us. GOD has left them in us to exerciſe our Care and Vigilance, and to keep us humble and depending upon his Grace, and to quicken our Addreſſes to Him for more and more Strength to overcome them. Therefore we ought to Watch and Strive indeed againſt them as much as we can, and pray, That his Will may be done in Earth as it is done in Heaven. But, if after all our Prayers and Endeavours, we cannot wholly free ourſelves from them, we are not to Deſpond, becauſe we are only in the Condition of all Mankind. We ought alſo to grieve and ſorrow for theſe Imperfections, as well as all others, and to aſpire after the Place that will ſet us at Liberty from them: But we muſt not expect to be Angels before our Time, but whilſt we are in this Vale of Miſery, be content to bear theſe as part of our Afflictions which nothing but Death, or rather a Victory over Death and Mortality, will wholly conquer. In the mean Time, we have Aſſurance, that GOD will not impute them to us to our Condemnation, but pity us, and pardon us upon our conſtant Prayers and daily Repentance. And in this Senſe it is, that St. Auſtin [c] calls theſe Venial Sins; not becauſe any Sin is not Mortal in its own Nature, but becauſe they are ſuch as GOD will not impute to his Servants, that ſincerely love Him, to their Condemnation.

5. BUT ſome Penitents are afraid their Sins are not pardoned, becauſe they are ſtill liable to Temptations, and troubled with black and ugly Thoughts, darted into their Minds againſt their Wills, by the power and ſubtilty of Satan. Now in this Caſe Two Things are always diligently to be enquired into. 1. Whether Temptations are of Mens own procuring, either by Idleneſs and want of ſome honeſt Employment, or by putting themſelves in the way of Temptation, by engaging in any unlawful Buſineſs or Diverſion? And 2. Whether a Man cheriſhes the Temptation, or gives way and conſent to it? If either of theſe be his Caſe, he is guilty of Sin. For he that by Idleneſs, or Negligence, or any unlawful Employment puts himſelf in the Way of Temptation, tempts the Tempter, as it were to tempt him. Tertullian [d] tells us of a certain Chriſtian in his Time, who went to the Roman Theatre, or Stage-Plays, and returned poſſeſt with a Devil: And the unclean Spirit being asked by the Exorciſt, how he durſt preſume to attack a Chriſtian? Anſwered confidently, that he had a Right to do it, becauſe he found the Party upon his own Ground. So that if Men are engaged in any unlawful Buſineſs, and a Temptation then befalls them; the very Temptation itſelf is their Crime, becauſe they make themſelves beforehand Parties, and Acceſſories to it. Or if it befall them without their Sin, yet if afterwards they give way, and conſent, and yield to the Force of it; they make it their Crime by their ſinful Compliance with it. But ſetting aſide theſe Two Caſes, it is no Crime to be tempted, whilſt we are merely Paſſive in the Temptation. Of which we have this infallible Proof and Demonſtration, That CHRIST Himſelf was tempted of the Devil, yet without Sin in any but the Tempter. And ſo long as we keep ourſelves pure after the ſame Example; that we neither be Acceſſory in Calling the Temptation on ourſelves, nor by any ſlaviſh Cowardiſe in the Spirit of Bondage, yield a baſe Compliance to it; but as ſoon as we find it, reject it with Indignation and Abhorrence, as our SAVIOUR did, Get thee behind me, Satan, for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and Him only ſhalt thou ſerve: So long, I ſay, as it makes no farther Impreſſion on us, but to raiſe our Anger, or Zeal, or Reſolution againſt it; while we do not receive it with Pleaſure, nor give any Conſent, or Acceſs, or Encouragement to it; ſo far we are ſecure: It is the Devil's Crime, not ours: It may be our Affliction, but it is not our Sin. It may raiſe in us Horror and Aſtoniſhment, as any ſudden Surprize is apt to do; and it may perhaps create us Anguiſh and Trouble, to think how we are expoſed to the Aſſaults of Satan, who has Power to work upon our Imaginations, and thereby diſturb our Fancies, and raiſe unaccountable Thoughts in us. But ſo long as our Wills, over which he has no Power, yield no Conſent, the moſt fiery of all his Darts, the ſubtileſt of all his Devices cannot hurt us. Whilſt we reſiſt the Devil, he muſt at laſt fly from us, and yield the Victory: And then we may rejoyce in the Conqueſt, though perhaps we could not in the very Engagement. For no Chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be Joyous, but Grievous: Nevertheleſs afterward it yieldeth the peaceable Fruit of Righteouſneſs to them that are exerciſed thereby, Heb. xii. 11. In which Reſpect one Apoſtle bids us, Count it all Joy when we fall into divers Temptations, knowing this, That the Tryal of our Faith worketh Patience. Only let Patience have her perfect Work, (Jam. i. 2.) And then it will be Joy in the End, when we have baffled the Adverſary, and gained the Victory. And ſays another Apoſtle, We glory in Tribulations alſo; knowing that Tribulation worketh Patience, and Patience Experience, and Experience Hope, and Hope maketh maketh not aſhamed, becauſe the Love of God is ſhed abroad in our Hearts by the Holy Ghoſt that is given us, Rom. v. 3. We do but love God the more in ſuch Caſes, the more we are tempted by Satan to deſert or forſake Him. It quickens our Zeal, redoubles our Care and Watch, invigorates our Faith, and inflames our Devotion, to make us fly with greater Frequency, and greater Ardency to the Throne of Grace, to find Help in Time of Need. So the very Temptations of Satan turn to our Advantage, whilſt we reſiſt and repel them; and we are more than Conquerors over him, becauſe we Invert his wicked Deſigns, and turn thoſe Things to our Health and Strength, which he deſigned ſhould be an Occaſion of Falling. Therefore we have Reaſon to ſuppoſe in ſuch Caſes, that God permits Satan to tempt us only for our Advantage: And it is not only a Demonſtration of his own Wiſdom and Power, ſo to Countermine the Wiles of Satan, and draw Good out of Evil; but alſo an Argument of his Mercy to us, to make our Graces more Illuſtrious, and our Victory more Glorious; whilſt He perfects his Strength in our Weakneſs, and makes us Triumph over all the Power of the Enemy and the very Gates of Hell, which cannot prevail againſt us.

I suppose, now it appears plainly to every one, that theſe Things are no Impeachments of God's Mercy: Though he Firſt ſuffers Temporal Calamities, and Death among theſe, as the Natural Effects of Sin, to befall the Penitent Sinners after Pardon; though he ſometimes Secondly ſends Providential Afflictions on them; though Thirdly He viſits them ſometimes with Fears and Tremblings upon the Remembrance of their By-paſt Sins; though Fourthly He leaves them ſtill under the Remains and Struglings of Humane Infirmity, and leſſer Failings and Corruptions; though Fifthly He permits them to be liable to Temptations, and to be troubled with black and ugly Thoughts darted into their Minds againſt their Wills, by the Power and Subtilty of Satan; yet for all this He is a Merciful Father to them: And, As a Father pitieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that Fear Him.

I cannot cloſe this Diſcourſe without making theſe few Moral Reflections on it, by Way of Inference from what has been ſaid.

1. That the Senſe of God's Mercy in Pardoning the greateſt of Sinners, ſhould encourage all others to return to Him, in the Sincerity of their Hearts, with Hopes of Mercy. There can be no Sin greater than that of Murdering Christ, and yet God was pleaſed to pardon it, for the Encouragement of others, who ſhould repent in future Ages. There can be no Service leſs than that of the Widow's two Mites, and yet God was pleaſed to accept it, becauſe it proceeded from a willing Mind, and was anſwerable to the Ability which God had given her, who never requires of any Man more than He firſt enables him to perform.

2. The Conſideration of God's leaving ſometimes Temporal Afflictions upon Men after He pardons their Sin, ſhould teach us to entertain right and honourable Thoughts of God's Mercy; not to repine at his Hand or Dealings with us in any other Reſpect, if He grants us the Remiſſion of our Sins; but to be patient and content under any other Afflictions, when we are aſſured they are not Arguments of his Wrath, but rather Indications of his Goodneſs and Mercy, who knows what is moſt convenient for us; as Moſes told the Iſraelites, Thou ſhalt remember, that as a Father chaſteneth his Son, ſo the Lord thy God chaſteneth thee.

3. The Senſe of God's Mercy in Pardoning our Sins, ſhould raiſe in us the higheſt Affections of Love and Gratitude to Him again. For what a Raviſhment is it for a deſponding, poor, afflicted Soul to be delivered from the Fears of Hell, and to hear Christ ſay, as it were, To Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe! What Thanks can any Man render to God for ſuch a Bleſſing, leſs than the Obedience of his whole Life? What Zeal can be too great in ſerving ſuch a Master! If we offer our Bodies and Souls a living Sacrifice to God, and ſerve and glorify Him in both continually, it is but a Reaſonable Service to Him, who hath Redeemed both from Hell. Let all thoſe therefore, who have the Senſe of God's Favour in the Pardon of their Sins, be as ſenſible of their own Obligations to glorify Him both in Body and Soul continually, that they may ſhew forth the Praiſes of Him, who hath called them out of Darkneſs into his marvellous Light.

4. Laſtly, The Conſideration of God's Mercy and Pity to us, ſhould teach us, in every Inſtance of it, to imitate his bleſſed Example; To put on Bowels of Mercy, to be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's Sake hath forgiven us: To pity thoſe who know not their own Miſery, nor have any Power or Will to help themſelves: To have Compaſſion on the Ignorant, and them that are out of the Way: To bear with their Infirmities, and even their Prejudices, and Dulneſs, and Obſtinacy, as God many Times does with ours; meekly inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, if God peradventure may give them Repentance to the Acknowledgment of the Truth. Here every Man is allowed to have his Share in the Chriſtian Prieſthood, to call, and convert, and ſave as many he can, by his private Inſtructions, and publick Example; that he may in this Way alſo ſhew forth the Praiſes of Him that hath called him out of Darkneſs into his marvellous Light. None are better qualified for this Office, than they who have ſignally experimented GOD's Mercy themſelves. They muſt needs be the beſt Monitors to others, who have felt the Miſery and Slavery of Sin in their own Hearts, and know the Happineſs of Pardon and Deliverance in their own Perſons. It was therefore our SAVIOUR's Admonition to St. Peter, upon the View of his Falling and Riſing again, When thou art converted, ſtrengthen thy Brethren. And there are infinite Reaſons to engage Penitent Converts to this. Firſt, Compaſſion to Humane Nature, to relieve Men from that Thraldom, which they themſelves were once engaged in. Then again, Gratitude to GOD, to promote his Glory; which is chiefly done by the Converſion of Sinners, whilſt our Light ſo ſhines before Men, that they may ſee our good Works, and glorify our FATHER which is in Heaven. Which is a Zeal that ought to be in every true Convert, and commonly is in thoſe who have been themſelves great and eminent Sinners. For they to whom GOD forgives much, commonly love Him the more, and labour more abundantly in his Service; as St. Paul did, in Conſideration that he had obtained Mercy of GOD, who had been once the greateſt of Sinners. Add to this, the Honour of the Office and Employment, than which nothing can be more Glorious: For it makes us Workers together with GOD, and a ſort of Under Saviours to Mankind. For, ſays St. James, Brethren, if any of you do err from the Truth, and One convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a Sinner from the Error of his Way, ſhall ſave a Soul from Death, and ſhall hide a multitude of Sins. Finally, It is moſt Beneficial and Advantageous to ourſelves, as it gives us a Title to a greater Degree of Glory in another World. For they that be Teachers, ſhall ſhine as the Brightneſs of the Firmament, and they that turn many to Righteouſneſs, as the Stars for ever and ever. It is impoſſible to give greater Encouragement: GOD grant us his Grace to obtain it, through JESUS CHRIST our Lord.

To whom with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be aſcribed, as is moſt due, all Honour, Might, Majeſty and Dominion, both Now and for Evermore. Amen.

The Propitiatory Oblation in the Holy Euchariſt, truly ſtated and defended, from Scripture, Antiquity, and the Communion-Service of the Church of England: In which ſome Notice is taken of Dr. Hancok's Anſwer to Dr. Hickes.

The Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar unveiled and ſupported; in which the Nature of the Euchariſt is explained according to the Sentiments of the Chriſtian Church in the Four firſt Centuries, proving that the Euchariſt is a proper material Sacrifice, that it is both Euchariſtical and Propitiatory, that it is to be offered by proper Officers, that the Oblation is to be made on a proper Altar, that it is properly conſumed by Manducation. To which is added, A Proof, that what our Saviour ſpeaks concerning eating his Fleſh and drinking his Blood, in the ſixth Chapter of St. John's Goſpel, is principally meant of the Euchariſt: With a Prefatory Epiſtle to the Lord Biſhop of Norwich; Animadverſions on the Reverend Dr. Wiſe's Book which he calls the Chriſtian Euchariſt rightly ſtated; and ſome Reflections on a ſtitched Book, entituled an Anſwer to the Exceptions made againſt the Lord Biſhop of Oxford's Charge.

Part II. Shewing, the Agreement and Diſagreement of the Euchariſt, with the Sacrifices of the Ancients, and the Excellency of the former; the great Moment of the Euchariſt both as a Feaſt and Sacrifice; the Neceſſity of frequent Communion, the Unity of the Euchariſt, the Nature of Excommunication, and the Primitive Method of Preparation, with Devotions for the Altar.
